NATIONAL UNIVERSITY LIBRARY
SAN DIEGO

NON-CIRCULATING

Cabrillo Pacific University
College of Law
3620 AERO COURT, SAN DIEGO, CA. 92123

CALIFORNIA REPORTER

Covering Cases Reported in

PACIFIC REPORTER

35 P.—37 P.

Cite by Volume and Page

of the

PACIFIC REPORTER

Thus:

35 P. 73

ST. PAUL, MINN.
WEST PUBLISHING CO.
1956

COPYRIGHT, 1894, BY WEST PUBLISHING CO.
Pacific Reporter, Vol. 35, Nos. 1-11; Vol. 36, Nos. 1-3, 5-15; Vol. 37, Nos. 2, 4-16.

COPYRIGHT, 1956, BY WEST PUBLISHING CO.

Cal.Rep. 35-37 P.
2-1967

CASES REPORTED

Vols. 35–37 P.

	P. Vol.	Page
Abbott; People v.	36	129
Abbott v. 76 Land & Water Co.	36	1
Abbott v. 76 Land & Water Co.	37	527
Abbott; Taylor v.	37	408
Adams v. Burbank	37	640
Adams v. Farnsworth	37	221
Afflerbach v. McGovern	36	839
Ah Cue, Ex parte	35	556
Ahern, Ex parte	37	390
Allen v. Pockwitz	36	1039
Allison Ranch Min. Co. v. Nevada County	37	875
Allman; Lake County v.	36	767
Almstead; Groome v.	35	1021
Altschul; Ryan v.	37	339
Ames v. City of San Diego	35	1005
Anaheim Union Water Co. v. Parker	35	1048
Ancker; Porphyry Paving Co. v.	37	1050
Anderson; City and County of San Francisco v.	36	1034
Anderson; Harper v.	37	926
Andrada; Field v.	37	180
Anglo-American Gas Control Co.; Bradley v.	36	1011
Anthony v. Grand	35	859
Armstrong v. Luco	36	674
Arrowhead Hot Springs Hotel Co.; Conrad v.	37	386
Arrowhead Hot Springs Hotel Co.; Conrad v.	37	388
Arrowhead Reservoir Co.; Porter v.	35	146
Arrowhead Reservoir Co.; Talmadge v.	35	1000
Asbill, In re	37	863
Ashworth; Butler v.	36	922
Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co.; Palmer v.	35	630
Austin; Walser v.	37	869
Auzerais v. Superior Court	36	6
Ayers; Blythe v.	36	522
Ayres; Blythe v.	36	588
Babcock; Baines v.	37	767
Bacigalupi v. Cadamartori	36	398
Bailey v. Cox	36	650
Bailiff v. Powers	37	508
Baines v. Babcock	37	767
Baker v. Brickell	36	950
Bakewell; Tibbets v.	35	1007
Baldwin; McCormick v.	37	903
Baldwin; Oullahan v.	35	310
Baldwin v. Temple	35	1008
Banbury; San Francisco & Fresno Land Co. v.	37	801
Bank of Commerce; High v.	37	508
Bank of Oroville v. Lawrence	37	936
Bank of San Luis Obispo v. Pacific Coast Steamship Co.	37	499
Bank of Ukiah v. Petaluma Sav. Bank	35	170
Banks v. Yolo County	37	900

	P.
	Vol.	Page
Banning v. Marleau	35	772
Barclay v. Severance	35	865
Barker v. Maskell	35	641
Barling; McKenzie v.	36	8
Barnett v. Barnett	37	1049
Barney; Green v.	36	1026
Barrett; Wetmore v.	37	140
Bartlett; Dougherty v.	35	431
Bartlett v. O'Connor	36	513
Bartlett; Wengant v.	36	417
Bates; Hamilton v.	35	304
Bates v. Tower	37	385
Baumann; Churchill v.	36	93
Baxter v. Hart	37	941
Bean v. Stoneman	37	777
Beck; Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co. v.	35	169
Becker; Grosse-Becker v.	36	433
Beecher; San Joaquin Land & Water Co. v.	35	349
Behlow v. Fischer	36	509
Belding; San Joaquin Land & Water Co. v.	35	353
Bell v. Peck	37	766
Bell; People v.	36	94
Bell; People v.	36	95
Bennett v. Morris	37	929
Benson v. Shotwell	37	147
Bequette v. Patterson	37	917
Berkhout; Mietzsch v.	35	321
Bertz v. Turner	36	1014
Beverly v. Blackwood	36	378
Biscailuz; Leonis v.	35	875
Black v. Sharkey	37	939
Blackwood; Beverly v.	36	378
Blaisdell v. Leach	35	1019
Blanchard; La Point v.	36	98
Blanchard v. Pacific Rolling Mill Co.	36	584
Blasingame; Humphreys v.	37	804
Bliss v. Sneath	36	1029
Bloom v. Hazzard	37	1037
Blum v. Weston	36	778
Blyth v. Robinson	37	904
Blythe v. Ayers, two cases	36	522
Blythe v. Ayres, eight cases	36	588
Blythe v. Savage	36	844
Blythe's Estate, In re	37	392
Board of Education of City of Pomona; Brown v.	37	503
Board of Education of City of San Jose; Malloy v.	36	948
Board of Police Com'rs of City and County of San Francisco; Foster v.	37	763
Board of Sup'rs of City and County of San Francisco; Brickell v.	35	357
Board of Sup'rs of City and County of San Francisco; Wulzen v.	35	353
Board of Sup'rs of Glenn County; Johnston v.	37	1046
Board of Sup'rs of San Bernardino County; Kumler v.	37	383
Board of Sup'rs of Yolo County; Martin v.	37	758
Bode v. Lee	36	936
Boehm v. Gibson	35	1014
Booth; Modoc Land & Live-Stock Co. v.	36	431
Borba; Matts v.	37	159
Bouche v. Louttit	37	902
Boulon; Merley v.	37	931
Boulware; La Point v.	37	927

	Vol.	Page
Bowen v. Wendt	37	149
Bowie; Santa Cruz Rock Pavement Co. v.	37	934
Bradbury; Kelly v.	37	872
Bradley v. Anglo-American Gas Control Co.	36	1011
Brady; People v.	36	949
Brandenstein v. Hoke	35	562
Brandon; Rialto Irrigating Dist. v.	37	484
Braverman v. Fresno Canal & Irrigation Co.	36	386
Braynard; Lange v.	37	868
Brenot v. Brenot	36	672
Brewer; Redondo Beach Co. v.	35	896
Brickell; Baker v.	36	950
Brickell v. Board of Sup'rs of City and County of San Francisco	35	357
Brieg; Schmidt v.	35	623
Brilliant; Kahn v.	35	309
Broder v. Superior Court of Mono County	37	143
Broder v. Superior Court of Mono County	37	191
Broderick; Hunt v.	37	1040
Bronner v. Jahant	36	118
Brooks; Coburn v.	37	202
Brown v. Board of Education of City of Pomona	37	503
Brown v. Campbell	35	433
Brown; Chapin v.	35	1051
Brown v. Fresno Raisin Co.	35	639
Brown; Haber v.	35	1035
Brown v. Kling	35	995
Brown; Priest v.	35	323
Bryan; Splivalo v.	36	780
Bryon; People v.	37	754
Buckley; Mulcahy v.	35	144
Buckley v. Superior Court of San Francisco County	36	360
Buckman v. Cuneo	36	1025
Bullion & Exchange Bank of Carson City v. Spooner	36	121
Bunnell; Symons v.	35	770
Burbank; Adams v.	37	640
Burbank v. Dennis	35	444
Burness v. W. R. Strong Co.	36	396
Burnett; Savings & Loan Soc. v.	37	180
Burnham v. Stone	35	627
Burr; City and County of San Francisco v.	36	771
Burr v. Navarro Mill Co.	35	990
Burris, In re	36	101
Burris v. People's Ditch Co.	37	922
Butler v. Ashworth	36	922
Butler; Tevis v.	37	223
Butte County; Lynch v.	36	806
Buttner v. Smith	36	652
Bygum v. Southern Pac. Co.	36	415
Cadamartori; Bacigalupi v.	36	398
Cadman; Northern Counties Inv. Trust v.	35	557
Cady; Spooner v.	36	104
Caffrey v. Omilak Gold & Silver Min. Co.	36	388
Caffrey v. Omilak Gold & Silver Min. Co.	36	652
Caldwell; Little v.	36	107
California Loan & Trust Co. v. Hammell	35	765
California Nat. Bank of San Diego; First Nat. Bank of Chicago v.	35	639
California St. Cable R. Co.; Cross v.	36	673
California Sav. Bank; Kennedy v.	35	1039
Callahan v. Loughran	36	835

	P. Vol.	Page
Campbell; Brown v.	35	433
Campbell; Krumb v.	36	664
Carnall-Hopkins Co.; Hart v.	35	633
Carnall-Hopkins Co.; Hart v.	37	196
Carpenter; McCabe v.	36	836
Carriger's Estate, In re	37	785
Carter; Jacob v.	36	381
Caruthers School Dist.; People v.	36	396
Casaccia; Merced Security Sav. Bank v.	37	648
Casey; Fiske v.	36	668
Cassassa; Domico v.	35	1024
Castle v. Siegfried	37	210
Castle v. Smith	36	859
Castro v. City and County of San Francisco	35	1035
Central Pac. R. Co.; Kenna v.	35	332
Chadbourne v. Stockton Sav. & Loan Soc.	36	127
Chalmers; Sheehy v.	36	514
Chapin v. Brown	35	1051
Chapman; Dennison v.	36	943
Chapman v. Hughes	37	1048
Chase v. High	35	1035
Chatfield, Ex parte	36	948
Chavez; People v.	37	389
Childs v. Lanterman	37	382
Christensen v. McBride	36	398
Christian; People v.	35	1043
Chung Kee v. Davidson	36	519
Churchill v. Baumann	36	93
City and County of San Francisco v. Anderson	36	1034
City and County of San Francisco v. Burr	36	771
City and County of San Francisco; Castro v.	35	1035
City and County of San Francisco v. Wangenheim	37	221
City Carpet-Beating, etc., Works v. Jones	36	841
City of Coronado; People v.	35	162
City of Los Angeles v. Cohn	35	1002
City of Los Angeles; Los Angeles Cemetery Ass'n v.	37	375
City of Pacific Grove; Vincent v.	36	773
City of Sacramento v. Dillman	36	385
City of San Diego; Ames v.	35	1005
City of San Diego; Gordon v.	36	18
City of San Jose; Riehl v.	35	1013
City of San Jose; Riehl v.	35	1014
City of San Luis Obispo; Wilcoxon v.	35	988
City of San Pedro v. Southern Pac. R. Co.	35	993
City of Santa Ana; Marquis v.	37	650
City of Santa Rosa; Sonoma County v.	36	810
Clark; Merrill v.	37	238
Clark v. Svea Fire Ins. Co.	36	587
Clarke, Ex parte	37	230
Clarke v. Mead	36	862
Clarkson v. Hoyt	36	382
Clemens v. Luce	35	1032
Clement; People v.	35	1022
Clugston v. Garretson	37	469
Clunie; Sutliff v.	37	224
Coburn v. Brooks	37	202
Coburn v. Josselyn	37	202
Coburn v. Towsend	37	202
Coffee v. Williams	37	504

	P.
	Vol.	Page
Cohn; City of Los Angeles v.	35	1002
Colgan; Sawyer v.	36	580
Colgan; Sawyer v.	36	834
Colgrove v. Smith	36	411
Collins; People v.	36	669
Conner v. Southern California Motor Road Co.	35	990
Conniff; Dowling v.	36	1034
Conrad v. Arrowhead Hot Springs Hotel Co.	37	386
Conrad v. Arrowhead Hot Springs Hotel Co.	37	388
Conradt; Macomber v.	37	382
Conradt; Macomber v.	37	901
Conroy v. Dunlap	37	887
Cook v. Fowler	35	431
Cooper v. McCarthy	36	2
Corker; Pellissier v.	37	465
Cornwell; People v.	35	566
Cosgrove v. Pitman	37	232
Coulterville & Y. Turnpike Co. v. State	37	1035
Cox; Bailey v.	36	650
Craddock v. O'Brien	37	896
Craig v. San Bernardino Inv. Co.	35	558
Cramer v. Kester	36	415
Creditors; McDowell's Estate v.	37	203
Crews; People v.	36	367
Crittenden; Wickersham v.	37	513
Crosier; Eames v.	35	873
Cross v. California St. Cable R. Co.	36	673
Crowley; People v.	35	84
Crystal Soda-Water Co.; Schmidt v.	35	855
Cuneo; Buckman v.	36	1025
Currier v. Howes	37	521
Curry; People v.	37	503
Curtis v. Underwood	36	110
Curtis v. Underwood	36	397
Dalzell v. McGill	37	145
Dare; Gay v.	37	466
Daugherty v. Daugherty	37	889
Davidson; Chung Kee v.	36	519
Davis v. Eames	35	566
Davis v. Hart	37	486
Davis v. Lamb	35	306
Davis v. McNear	36	105
Davis; Mathews v.	36	358
Davis; People v.	36	96
Daw v. Niles	37	876
Decker v. Perry	35	1017
Deetz; Martin v.	36	368
De Leon's Estate, In re	35	309
De Leon's Estate, In re	36	864
De Long v. Warren	36	1009
Dennis; Burbank v.	35	444
Dennison v. Chapman	36	943
Dennison; Fletcher v.	35	868
Dennison; McCartney v.	35	766
Dierssen; Gwynn v.	36	103
Dillman; City of Sacramento v.	36	385
Dimond v. Sanderson	37	189
Dinsmore; People v.	36	661
Dixon v. Pluns	35	1030

	P.
	Vol.	Page
Dixon v. Pluns	35	1047
Dolbeer v. Livingston	35	328
Domico v. Cassassa	35	1024
Donnells v. Martin	35	437
Donovan v. Oakland & Berkeley Rapid-Transit Co.	36	516
Dooley v. Seventeen Thousand and Five Hundred Head of Sheep	35	1011
Dorman v. Soto	36	588
Dorman; Treat v.	35	86
Dorris; Sorensen v.	37	870
Dougall v. Schulenberg	35	635
Dougherty v. Bartlett	35	431
Dow v. Nason	37	656
Dowling v. Conniff	36	1034
Dreher; People v.	35	867
Drew v. Hicks	35	563
Duff v. Duff	35	437
Duff; Randall v.	35	440
Duff; Randall v.	37	803
Duffy v. Wilhoit	35	651
Dugan; Robinson v.	35	902
Dulin v. Pacific Wood & Coal Co.	35	1045
Dulin v. Pacific Wood & Coal Co.	37	207
Duncan v. Hawn	37	626
Dunlap; Conroy v.	37	887
Dunlap; Stewart v.	36	2
Dunlop v. Kennedy	36	765
Dyerville Manuf'g Co. v. Heller	36	928
Eachus v. Los Angeles Consolidated Electric R. Co.	37	750
Eames v. Crosier	35	873
Eames; Davis v.	35	566
East Riverside Irrigation Dist.; Sanford v.	35	865
Ede; Martin v.	37	199
Edwards v. Hellings	37	218
Edwards; People v.	36	7
Egener v. Juch	35	432
Egener v. Juch	35	873
Egger v. Rhodes	37	1037
Eichhoff v. Eichhoff	36	11
Eldred v. White	36	944
Elliott; Jacobs v.	37	942
Ellis; Smith v.	35	764
Ellis; Smith v.	37	400
English; Payne v.	35	348
Erzgraber; Perine v.	36	585
Eshelman v. Henrietta Vineyard Co.	36	579
Eshelman v. Malter	36	579
Eshleman v. Henrietta Vineyard Co.	36	775
Eshleman v. Malter	35	860
Eshleman v. Malter	36	775
Esrey v. Southern Pac. Co.	35	310
Esrey v. Southern Pac. Co.	37	500
Evans v. Paige	36	406
Exempt Fire Co. of San Francisco; Robinson v.	36	955
Fairbanks v. Lampkin	36	6
Fairchild v. King	36	649
Fair's Estate, In re	37	406
Farmer; Levee Dist. No. 9 v.	35	569
Farng v. Keefer	36	1032
Farnsworth; Adams v.	37	221

	P.
	Vol.	Page
Faulkner v. Rondoni	37	883
Fehrenbach; People v.	36	678
Felton v. West	36	676
Felts; San Luis Obispo County v.	37	780
Ferguson v. McBean	35	559
Fette v. Lane	37	914
Field v. Andrada	37	180
Fink; Keller v.	37	411
Finnell; Mitchell v.	36	123
First Nat. Bank of Chicago v. California Nat. Bank of San Diego	35	639
First Nat. Bank of San Luis Obispo v. Henderson	35	899
Fischer; Behlow v.	36	509
Fisher; Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co. v.	35	77
Fiske v. Casey	36	668
Fitzgerald v. Fitzgerald	36	947
Flagg v. Puterbaugh	36	95
Fleckenstein v. Placer County	37	931
Fletcher v. Dennison	35	868
Fletcher v. Prather	36	658
Flood; People v.	36	663
Foss, Ex parte	36	669
Foster v. Board of Police Com'rs of City and County of San Francisco	37	763
Fountain v. Hoppe	36	389
Fountain v. Hoppe	37	894
Fowler; Cook v.	35	431
Frandzen v. San Diego County	35	897
Fraser v. San Francisco Bridge Co.	36	1037
Fratt; Smith v.	37	1033
Freeman v. Kiefer	35	767
Fresno Canal & Irrigation Co.; Braverman v.	36	386
Fresno Canal & Irrigation Co.; Fresno Milling Co. v.	36	412
Fresno Canal & Irrigation Co.; Richter v.	36	96
Fresno Milling Co. v. Fresno Canal & Irrigation Co.	36	412
Fresno Raisin Co.; Brown v.	35	639
Frost v. Grizzly Bluff Creamery Co.	36	929
F. Thomas Parisian Dyeing & Cleaning Works; Warner v.	37	153
F. Thomas Parisian Dyeing & Cleaning Works; Warner v.	37	213
Gallagher, Ex parte	35	449
Gallagher v. Montecito Val. Water Co.	35	770
Gallagher; People v.	35	80
Garms v. Jensen	37	337
Garretson; Clugston v.	37	469
Gay v. Dare	37	466
Gay; St. Louis Nat. Bank v.	35	876
Gebhart; Roberts v.	37	782
Gibson; Boehm v.	35	1014
Gillett; Quigley v.	35	1040
Gleason; La Fetra v.	35	765
Gleeson; Murray v.	35	88
Glenn County; People v.	35	302
Glover; Raymond v.	37	772
Glover; Raymond v.	37	918
Godfrey v. Monroe	35	761
Godfrey; Neary v.	36	655
Godfrey; Wheelock v.	35	315
Godfrey; Wheelock v.	35	317
Godfrey; Wheelock v.	35	320
Goetz v. Goldbaum	37	646
Goldbaum; Goetz v.	37	646

	Vol.	Page
Goldbaum; Paden v.	37	759
Gordon v. City of San Diego	36	18
Gordon; People v.	37	534
Gorner; Thompson v.	36	434
Gorner; Thompson v.	37	900
Gould v. Monroe	35	763
Gould v. Stafford	35	429
Grand; Anthony v.	35	859
Grand Lodge of I. O. G. T. of State of California v. Markham	36	423
Grand Lodge of Legion of the West; Perpoli v.	36	936
Grangers' Bank of California v. Superior Court of City and County of San Francisco	35	642
Grannis v. Lordon	37	375
Grant v. McPherson	37	864
Grant; Santa Cruz Fair-Building Ass'n v.	37	1034
Gray v. Long	37	380
Green v. Barney	36	1026
Green v. Green	37	188
Greenberg; Johnson v.	37	141
Greene; Walkerly v.	37	890
Greenebaum v. Taylor	36	957
Greening; People v.	36	665
Greenzweig v. Strelinger	37	398
Gregory v. Gregory	36	364
Griffith v. New York Life Ins. Co.	36	113
Grizzly Bluff Creamery Co.; Frost v.	36	929
Grogan v. Nolan	36	397
Groome v. Almstead	35	1021
Groppengiesser v. Lake	36	1036
Grosse-Becker v. Becker	36	433
Gruss v. Robertson	37	772
Gulliver; McSherry v.	36	1010
Gutierrez v. Hebbard	37	749
Gwynn v. Dierssen	36	103
Haake; Schmidt v.	35	855
Haber v. Brown	35	1035
Hackett v. State	37	156
Hall; Huffman v.	36	417
Hamilton v. Bates	35	304
Hamilton; Le Mesnager v.	35	1054
Hamilton; People v.	37	627
Hammell; California Loan & Trust Co. v.	35	765
Hancock; Natoma Water & Min. Co. v.	35	334
Hancock; Natoma Water & Min. Co. v.	36	100
Hanna; Webster v.	36	421
Hansen; Wagner v.	37	195
Harper v. Anderson	37	926
Harrington; Holbrooke v.	36	365
Harris; White v.	37	502
Harrison v. Hebbard	35	555
Hart; Baxter v.	37	941
Hart v. Carnall-Hopkins Co.	35	633
Hart v. Carnall-Hopkins Co.	37	196
Hart; Davis v.	37	486
Hartman; People v.	37	153
Hassey v. South San Francisco Homestead & Railroad Ass'n	36	945
Hawley v. Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co.	36	926
Hawn; Duncan v.	37	626
Hazzard; Bloom v.	37	1037

P.

	Vol.	Page
Healy v. Visalia & T. R. Co.	36	125
Hebbard; Gutierrez v.	37	749
Hebbard; Harrison v.	35	555
Heller; Dyerville Manuf'g Co. v.	36	928
Hellings; Edwards v.	37	218
Helm; Merced County v.	36	399
Hellman; Temple St. Cable Ry. Co. v.	37	530
Helvetia Swiss Fire Ins. Co.; Stewart v.	36	410
Henderson; First Nat. Bank of San Luis Obispo v.	35	899
Hendy; Steen v.	36	1021
Henrietta Vineyard Co. v. Eshelman	36	579
Henrietta Vineyard Co. v. Eshleman	36	775
Herman v. Santee	37	509
Hertwick v. National City	36	667
Hewitt; Jefferson v.	37	638
Hewlett; San Joaquin Land & Water Co. v.	35	353
Hickman's Estate, In re	36	118
Hicks; Drew v.	35	563
Hicks v. Masten	36	130
High v. Bank of Commerce	37	508
High; Chase v.	35	1035
Hill; Merritt v.	37	893
Hilton; Pierce v.	36	595
Hitchcock; San Joaquin Land & Water Co. v.	35	353
Hoffman; Quint v.	37	514
Hoffman; Quint v.	37	777
Hofmann; Schaeffer v.	37	932
Hoke; Brandenstein v.	35	562
Holbrooke v. Harrington	36	365
Holladay; People v.	36	927
Holland v. Zollner	36	930
Holland v. Zollner	37	231
Hollenbach v. Schnabel	35	872
Hooper; O'Connor v.	36	939
Hoppe; Fountain v.	36	389
Hoppe; Fountain v.	37	894
Hoppe v. Hoppe	36	389
Hoppe v. Hoppe	37	894
Horton v. Jack	37	652
Houghton; Treanor v.	36	1081
Houghton v. Trumbo	37	152
House v. Los Angeles County	37	796
House v. Meyer	35	308
Houser; Stockton Combined Harvester & Agricultural Works v.	37	179
Howard v. McChesney	37	523
Howard; Ontario Land & Imp. Co. v.	37	465
Howell v. Howell	35	443
Howell v. Howell	37	770
Howell v. Howell	37	772
Howes; Currier v.	37	521
Hoyt; Clarkson v.	36	382
Huberty; Toon v.	37	944
Hudson, In re	36	812
Huffman v. Hall	36	417
Hughes; Chapman v.	37	1048
Humphreys v. Blasingame	37	804
Hunt, In re	37	206
Hunt v. Broderick	37	1040
Hupp; Richard v.	37	920

	Vol.	Page
Irvine's Estate, In re	36	1013
Jack; Horton v.	37	652
Jackson; McConoughey v.	35	863
Jacob v. Carter	36	381
Jacobs v. Elliott	37	942
Jacoby; Quill v.	37	524
Jacques; Ryan v.	37	186
Jaffe v. Lilienthal	35	636
Jahant; Bronner v.	36	118
Jefferson v. Hewitt	37	638
Jennings v. Jennings	37	794
Jensen; Garms v.	37	337
Johnson v. Greenberg	37	141
Johnson v. Johnson	35	637
Johnson; Kings County v.	37	870
Johnson v. La Grave	36	651
Johnson; McCrea v.	37	902
Johnson v. Yuba County	37	528
Johnston v. Board of Sup'rs of Glenn County	37	1046
Jones, In re	37	385
Jones; City Carpet-Beating, etc., Works v.	36	841
Jones v. Los Angeles & P. R. Co.	37	656
Jones; People v.	37	650
Jones v. Sanders	37	649
Josselyn; Coburn v.	37	202
Juch; Egener v.	35	432
Juch; Egener v.	35	873
Kahn v. Brilliant	35	309
Kappeler; Malville v.	37	934
Keefer; Farng v.	36	1032
Keller v. Fink	37	411
Kelley v. Plover	36	1020
Kelly v. Bradbury	37	872
Kelly; Taylor v.	37	216
Kendall v. Parker	37	401
Kenna v. Central Pac. R. Co.	35	332
Kennedy v. California Sav. Bank	35	1039
Kennedy; Dunlop v.	36	765
Kennedy's Estate, In re	36	1030
Kenyon v. Western Union Tel. Co.	35	75
Kern County; Orr v.	37	649
Kester; Cramer v.	36	415
Kiefer v. Freeman	35	767
Kilvington; People v.	36	13
Kilvington; People v.	37	799
King; Fairchild v.	36	649
Kings County v. Johnson	37	870
King's Estate, In re	36	806
Kling; Brown v.	35	995
Knickerbocker; Western Granite & Marble Co. v.	37	192
Kodiac Packing Co.; Livingston v.	37	149
Kowalsky, In re	35	77
Kraft v. Wilson	37	790
Kruger; People v.	35	88
Krumb v. Campbell	36	664
Kumler v. Board of Sup'rs of San Bernardino County	37	383
Lacey v. Porter	37	635
La Fetra v. Gleason	35	765
La Grave; Johnson v.	36	651

P.

	Vol.	Page
Lake; Groppengiesser v.	36	1036
Lake County v. Allman	36	767
Lamb; Davis v.	35	306
Lampkin; Fairbanks v.	36	6
Lancaster v. Maxwell	36	951
Lancaster v. Maxwell	37	207
Landman; People v.	37	518
Lane; Fette v.	37	914
Lane; People v.	36	16
Lang; People v.	37	1031
Lange v. Braynard	37	868
Lankershim; Los Angeles County v.	35	153
Lankershim; Los Angeles County v.	35	556
Lanterman; Childs v.	37	382
La Point v. Blanchard	36	98
La Point v. Boulware	37	927
Lash; Spieker v.	36	362
Laumeister; Nichol v.	36	925
Lavigne; Palmer v.	37	775
Lawrence; Bank of Oroville v.	37	936
Leach; Blaisdell v.	35	1019
Lee; Bode v.	36	936
Lee v. McCarthy	35	1034
Lee v. Southern Pac. R. Co.	35	572
Le Mesnager v. Hamilton	35	1054
Leonard; People v.	37	222
Leonis v. Biscailuz	35	875
Levee Dist. No. 9 v. Farmer	35	569
Levi; Numsen v.	36	657
Liberty Soda-Works Co.; Schmidt v.	35	856
Lilienthal; Jaffe v.	35	636
Lippman, Ex parte, two cases	35	557
Little v. Caldwell	36	107
Littlehal v. Wilhoit	35	651
Livermore v. Waite	36	424
Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co.; Hawley v.	36	926
Livingston; Dolbeer v.	35	328
Livingston v. Kodiac Packing Co.	37	149
London, Paris & American Bank v. Smith	35	1027
Long; Gray v.	37	380
Long v. Superior Court	36	807
Lord v. Thomas	36	372
Lordon; Grannis v.	37	375
Los Angeles Cemetery Ass'n v. City of Los Angeles	37	375
Los Angeles Consolidated Electric R. Co.; Eachus v.	37	750
Los Angeles County; House v.	37	796
Los Angeles County v. Lankershim	35	153
Los Angeles County v. Lankershim	35	556
Los Angeles Nat. Bank v. Wallace	36	197
Los Angeles, P. & G. R. Co. v. Rump	37	859
Los Angeles Terminal R. Co.; Raub v.	37	374
Los Angeles & P. R. Co.; Jones v.	37	656
Loughran; Callahan v.	36	835
Louttit; Bouche v.	37	902
Loveren v. Loveren	35	87
Lowenstein; San Diego Sav. Bank v.	36	387
Lowenthal, In re	37	526
Luce; Clemens v.	35	1032
Luce; Sainsevain v.	35	1033

	Vol.	Page
Luce v. San Diego Land & Town Co.	37	390
Luco; Armstrong v.	36	674
Lux's Estate, In re	35	341
Lux's Estate, In re	35	347
Lux's Estate, In re	35	639
Lux's Estate, In re, two cases	35	345
Lynch v. Butte County	36	806
Lynch; People v.	35	860
Lynn v. Southern Pac. Co.	36	1018
Lyon; Tapscott v.	37	225
McAdam; Woodward v.	35	1016
McBean; Ferguson v.	35	559
McBride; Christensen v.	36	398
McCabe v. Carpenter	36	836
McCann v. Pennie	35	158
McCarthy; Cooper v.	36	2
McCarthy; Lee v.	35	1034
McCartney v. Dennison	35	766
McChesney; Howard v.	37	523
McCloskey; Shaffer v.	36	196
McConoughey v. Jackson	35	863
McCormick v. Baldwin	37	903
McCrea v. Johnson	37	902
McDonald v. Southern California R. Co.	35	643
McDonald v. Southern California R. Co.	35	646
Macdonough; McNamara v.	36	941
McDowell's Estate, In re	35	1031
McDowell's Estate v. Creditors	37	203
McEwen; Schmidt v.	35	854
McGill; Dalzell v.	37	145
McGill; Warren v.	37	144
McGovern; Afflerbach v.	36	839
McHarry v. Stewart	35	141
McIntyre v. Southern California Motor Road Co.	35	991
McKenzie v. Barling	36	8
McKenzie; Wallace v.	37	859
McLaughlin v. McLaughlin	37	865
McLaughlin v. Perkins	36	839
McLaughlin's Estate, In re	37	410
McMichael; Ritchey v.	35	151
McMullin; Quint v.	37	381
McNamara v. Macdonough	36	941
McNear; Davis v.	36	105
Macomber v. Conradt	37	382
Macomber v. Conradt	37	901
McPherson; Grant v.	37	864
McReynolds; People v.	36	590
McSherry v. Gulliver	36	1010
Maier, Ex parte	37	402
Mallon; People v.	37	512
Malloy v. Board of Education of City of San Jose	36	948
Malter; Eshleman v.	35	860
Malter; Eshelman v.	36	579
Malter; Eshleman v.	36	775
Malville v. Kappeler	37	934
Marceau v. Travellers' Ins. Co. of Hartford	35	856
Marceau v. Travellers' Ins. Co. of Hartford	36	813
Marin County; People v.	37	203
Markham; Grand Lodge of I. O. G. T. of State of California v.	36	423

	P.
	Vol.	Page
Markham; People v.	37	918
Marleau; Banning v.	35	772
Marquis v. City of Santa Ana	37	650
Marsicano; Steele v.	36	920
Martin v. Board of Sup'rs of Yolo County	37	758
Martin v. Deetz	36	368
Martin; Donnells v.	35	437
Martin v. Ede	37	199
Martin; People v.	36	952
Martin; Todd v.	37	872
Maskell; Barker v.	35	641
Mason, Ex parte	36	401
Masten; Hicks v.	36	130
Mathews v. Davis	36	358
Matts v. Borba	37	159
Maxwell; Lancaster v.	36	951
Maxwell; Lancaster v.	37	207
Mead; Clarke v.	36	862
Mead; Weir v.	35	567
Meade; Owen v.	37	923
Merced County v. Helm	36	399
Merced Security Sav. Bank v. Casaccia	37	648
Merguire v. O'Donnell	36	1033
Merley v. Boulon	37	931
Merrill v. Clark	37	238
Merrill v. Merrill	35	768
Merrill v. Merrill	36	675
Merrill v. Merrill	37	392
Merritt v. Hill	37	893
Meyer; House v.	35	308
Mietzsch v. Berkhout	35	321
Millbrae Co. v. Taylor	37	235
Mills v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co.	36	772
Mitchell, In re	36	840
Mitchell v. Finnell	36	123
Modoc County; Spears v.	35	869
Modoc County v. Spencer	37	483
Modoc Land & Live-Stock Co. v. Booth	36	431
Monaghan; People v.	36	511
Monroe; Godfrey v.	35	761
Monroe; Gould v.	35	763
Montecito Val. Water Co.; Gallagher v.	35	770
Monterey County v. Seegleken	36	515
Montgomery v. Santa Ana & W. R. Co.	37	786
Moore; People v.	37	510
Moore v. Sleeper	36	593
Moore; Wyman v.	37	230
Morris; Bennett v.	37	929
Morrison v. Stone	37	142
Morstadt; People v.	35	1007
Morton; Seculovich v.	36	387
Mountaineer Gold Min. Co.; Williams v.	36	388
Mowry v. Mowry	37	398
Muersing's Estate, In re	37	520
Mulcahy v. Buckley	35	144
Mulgrew; Murphy v.	36	857
Munroe; People v.	35	326
Murphy, Ex parte	37	468
Murphy v. Mulgrew	36	857

	P. Vol.	Page
Murray v. Gleeson	35	88
Naftzger; Williams v.	37	411
Nason; Dow v.	37	656
National City; Hertwick v.	36	667
Natoma Water & Min. Co. v. Hancock	35	334
Natoma Water & Min. Co. v. Hancock	36	100
Navarro Mill Co.; Burr v.	35	990
Neary v. Godfrey	36	655
Neary; People v.	37	943
Nesbitt; People v.	36	654
Nevada County; Allison Ranch Min. Co. v.	37	875
Nevin v. Thompson	35	160
Nevin v. Thompson	35	161
New York Life Ins. Co.; Griffith v.	36	113
Nichol v. Laumeister	36	925
Niles; Daw v.	37	876
Nixon v. Selby Smelting & Lead Co.	36	803
Nolan; Grogan v.	36	397
Northern Counties Inv. Trust v. Cadman	35	557
Noyes v. Wood	36	766
Numsen v. Levi	36	657
Oakland & Berkeley Rapid-Transit Co.; Donovan v.	36	516
O'Brien; Craddock v.	37	896
O'Connor; Bartlett v.	36	513
O'Connor v. Hooper	36	939
O'Donnell; Merguire v.	36	1033
Ogden v. Packard	35	642
Ogier's Estate, In re	35	900
Omilak Gold & Silver Min. Co.; Caffrey v.	36	388
Omilak Gold & Silver Min. Co.; Caffrey v.	36	652
Ontario Land & Imp. Co. v. Howard	37	465
Oregon R. & Nav. Co.; Mills v.	36	772
Orford, Ex parte	36	928
O'Rourke v. Vennekohl	37	930
Orr v. Kern County	37	649
Oullahan v. Baldwin	35	310
Owen v. Meade	37	923
Pacific Bank; Smith v.	36	410
Pacific Coast R. Co.; Patchett v.	35	73
Pacific Coast R. Co. v. Ramage	37	532
Pacific Coast Steamship Co.; Bank of San Luis Obispo v.	37	499
Pacific Coast Steamship Co.; San Diego Water Co. v.	35	651
Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Beck	35	169
Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Fisher	35	77
Pacific Rolling Mill Co.; Blanchard v.	36	584
Pacific Wood & Coal Co.; Dulin v.	35	1045
Pacific Wood & Coal Co.; Dulin v.	37	207
Packard; Ogden v.	35	642
Paden v. Goldbaum	37	759
Paige; Evans v.	36	406
Painter v. Painter	36	865
Palmer v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co.	35	630
Palmer v. Lavigne	37	775
Pare; Toulouse v.	37	146
Park Nursery Co.; Sherer v.	37	412
Park & Lacy Co. v. White River Lumber Co.	35	442
Parker; Anaheim Union Water Co. v.	35	1048
Parker; Kendall v.	37	401
Parker; Wittenbrock v.	36	374

P.

	Vol.	Page
Patchett v. Pacific Coast R. Co.	35	73
Patterson; Bequette v.	37	917
Patterson; People v.	36	436
Payne v. English	35	348
Pearsons' Estate, In re	36	934
Peck; Bell v.	37	766
Pellissier v. Corker	37	465
Pennie; McCann v.	35	158
Pennie; Welsh v.	37	392
People v. Abbott	36	129
People v. Bell	36	94
People v. Bell, two cases	36	95
People v. Brady	36	949
People v. Bryon	37	754
People v. Caruthers School Dist.	36	396
People v. Chavez	37	389
People v. Christian	35	1043
People v. City of Coronado	35	162
People v. Clement	35	1022
People v. Collins	36	669
People v. Cornwell	35	566
People v. Crews	36	367
People v. Crowley	35	84
People v. Curry	37	503
People v. Davis	36	96
People v. Dinsmore	36	661
People v. Dreher	35	867
People v. Edwards	36	7
People v. Fehrenbach	36	678
People v. Flood	36	663
People v. Gallagher	35	80
People v. Glenn County	35	302
People v. Gordon	37	534
People v. Greening	36	665
People v. Hamilton	37	627
People v. Hartman	37	153
People v. Holladay	36	927
People v. Jones	37	650
People v. Kilvington	36	13
People v. Kilvington	37	799
People v. Kruger	35	88
People v. Landman	37	518
People v. Lane	36	16
People v. Lang	37	1031
People v. Leonard	37	222
People v. Lynch	35	860
People v. McReynolds	36	590
People v. Mallon	37	512
People v. Marin County	37	203
People v. Markham	37	918
People v. Martin	36	952
People v. Monaghan	36	511
People v. Moore	37	510
People v. Morstadt	35	1007
People v. Munroe	35	326
People v. Neary	37	943
People v. Nesbitt	36	654
People v. Patterson	36	436
People v. Ross	37	379

P.

	Vol.	Page
People v. Royce	37	630
People v. Sands	35	330
People v. Sands	36	404
People v. Sherman	37	388
People v. Shorb	35	163
People v. Smith	37	516
People v. Stokes	36	834
People v. Stokes	37	207
People v. Strybe	36	3
People v. Temple	37	414
People v. Temple	37	416
People v. Thomas	36	9
People v. Tomlinson	36	506
People v. Town of Berkeley	36	591
People v. Union High School Dist. of Solano County	36	119
People v. Vital	37	215
People v. Waite	36	431
People v. Waite	36	518
People v. Wallace	35	862
People v. Wells	37	529
People v. Whitaker	36	109
People v. Wyman	36	932
People v. Young	36	770
People's Ditch Co.; Burris v.	37	922
People's Home Sav. Bank v. Superior Court of City and County of San Francisco	36	1015
Perine v. Erzgraber	36	585
Perkins; McLaughlin v.	36	839
Perkins v. Superior Court of Fresno County	37	780
Perpoli v. Grand Lodge of Legion of the West	36	936
Perry; Decker v.	35	1017
Perry v. Ross	37	757
Perry; Woodruff v.	37	526
Petaluma Sav. Bank; Bank of Ukiah v.	35	170
Peterson; Redmond v.	36	923
Phillips v. Winter	37	154
Pierce v. Hilton	36	595
Pierce v. Willis	36	1080
Pitman; Cosgrove v.	37	232
Pixley; Southern Pac. R. Co. v.	37	194
Placer County; Fleckenstein v.	37	931
Plover; Kelley v.	36	1020
Pluns; Dixon v.	35	1030
Pluns; Dixon v.	35	1047
Pockwitz; Allen v.	36	1039
Poly v. Williams	36	102
Porphyry Paving Co. v. Ancker	37	1050
Porter v. Arrowhead Reservoir Co.	35	146
Porter; Lacey v.	37	635
Powers; Bailiff v.	37	508
Prather; Fletcher v.	36	658
Prentice; Sefton v.	37	641
Priest v. Brown	35	323
Puterbaugh; Flagg v.	36	95
Quackenbush v. Reed	37	755
Quigley v. Gillett	35	1040
Quill v. Jacoby	37	524
Quint v. Hoffman	37	514
Quint v. Hoffman	37	777

P.

	Vol.	Page
Quint v. McMullin	37	381
Ramage; Pacific Coast R. Co. v.	37	532
Ramboz v. Stowell	37	519
Randall v. Duff	35	440
Randall v. Duff	37	803
Raskin v. Robarts	35	763
Raub v. Los Angeles Terminal R. Co.	37	374
Raymond v. Glover	37	772
Raymond v. Glover	37	918
Reclamation Dist. No. 542 v. Turner	37	1038
Redmond v. Peterson	36	923
Redondo Beach Co. v. Brewer	35	896
Reed; Quackenbush v.	37	755
Reid v. Robrecht	36	875
Rhodes; Egger v.	37	1037
Rialto Irrigating Dist. v. Brandon	37	484
Richard v. Hupp	37	920
Richter v. Fresno Canal & Irrigation Co.	36	96
Riehl v. City of San Jose	35	1013
Riehl v. City of San Jose	35	1014
Ritchey v. McMichael	35	151
Roach, Ex parte	37	1044
Robarts; Raskin v.	35	763
Roberts v. Gebhart	37	782
Robertson; Gruss v.	37	772
Robinson; Blyth v.	37	904
Robinson v. Dugan	35	902
Robinson v. Exempt Fire Co. of San Francisco	36	955
Robinson; Shea v.	35	1023
Robinson; Streeten v.	36	946
Robrecht; Reid v.	36	875
Roggenkamp; Russ Lumber & Mill Co. v.	35	643
Rondoni; Faulkner v.	37	883
Ross; People v.	37	379
Ross; Perry v.	37	757
Ross v. Wellman	36	402
Royce; People v.	37	630
Ruggles v. Superior Court of City and County of San Francisco	37	211
Rump; Los Angeles, P. & G. R. Co. v.	37	859
Russ Lumber & Mill Co. v. Roggenkamp	35	643
Ryan v. Altschul	37	339
Ryan v. Jacques	37	186
Sainsevain v. Luce	35	1033
St. Louis Nat. Bank v. Gay	35	876
Saldunbehere; Watterson v.	35	432
Samuels; Wilson v.	35	148
Samuels; Wilson v.	35	559
San Bernardino Inv. Co.; Craig v.	35	558
Sanders; Jones v.	37	649
Sanderson; Dimond v.	37	189
San Diego County; Frandzen v.	35	897
San Diego Land & Town Co.; Luce v.	37	390
San Diego Sav. Bank v. Lowenstein	36	387
San Diego Water Co. v. Pacific Coast Steamship Co.	35	651
Sands; People v.	35	330
Sands; People v.	36	404
Sanford v. East Riverside Irrigation Dist.	35	865
San Francisco Bridge Co.; Fraser v.	36	1037
San Francisco & Fresno Land Co. v. Banbury	37	801

	Vol.	Page
San Francisco & N. P. R. Co.; Stevens v.	35	165
San Francisco & N. P. R. Co.; Stevens v.	37	146
San Joaquin Land & Water Co. v. Beecher	35	349
San Joaquin Land & Water Co. v. Belding	35	353
San Joaquin Land & Water Co. v. Hewlett	35	353
San Joaquin Land & Water Co. v. Hitchcock	35	353
San Luis Obispo County v. Felts	37	780
San Pedro Lumber Co.; Webster v.	35	871
Santa Ana & W. R. Co.; Montgomery v.	37	786
Santa Cruz Fair-Building Ass'n v. Grant	37	1034
Santa Cruz Rock Pavement Co. v. Bowie	37	934
Santa Rosa Nat. Bank; Ullrich v.	37	500
Santee; Herman v.	37	509
Savage; Blythe v.	36	844
Savings & Loan Soc. v. Burnett	37	180
Sawyer v. Colgan	36	580
Sawyer v. Colgan	36	834
Sayre, In re	36	813
Schaeffer v. Hofmann	37	932
Scherrer, Ex parte	37	1046
Schmidt v. Brieg	35	623
Schmidt v. Crystal Soda-Water Co.	35	855
Schmidt v. Haake	35	855
Schmidt v. Liberty Soda-Works Co.	35	856
Schmidt v. McEwen	35	854
Schmidt v. Steinke	35	855
Schmidt v. Welch	35	626
Schnabel; Hollenbach v.	35	872
Schulenberg; Dougall v.	35	635
Schultz; Spence v.	37	220
Seculovich v. Morton	36	387
Seegleken; Monterey County v.	36	515
Sefton v. Prentice	37	641
Selby Smelting & Lead Co.; Nixon v.	36	803
Seventeen Thousand and Five Hundred Head of Sheep; Dooley v.	35	1011
76 Land & Water Co.; Abbott v.	36	1
76 Land & Water Co.; Abbott v.	37	527
Severance; Barclay v.	35	865
Shaffer v. McCloskey	36	196
Shanahan v. Tomlinson	36	1009
Sharkey; Black v.	37	939
Shea v. Robinson	35	1023
Sheehy v. Chalmers	36	514
Sheehy v. Shinn	37	393
Sherer v. Park Nursery Co.	37	412
Sherman; People v.	37	388
Shinn; Sheehy v.	37	393
Shorb; People v.	35	163
Shotwell; Benson v.	37	147
Siegfried; Castle v.	37	210
Silvester; Wilhelm v.	35	997
Sims; Visalia Gas & Electric Light Co. v.	37	1042
Skelly v. Westminster School Dist. of Orange County	37	643
Sleeper; Moore v.	36	593
Sloss; Valentine v.	37	326
Sloss; Valentine v.	37	328
Sloss; Valentine v.	37	329
Sloss; Valentine v.	37	410
Smith; Buttner v.	36	652

	P.
	Vol.	Page
Smith; Castle v.	36	859
Smith; Colgrove v.	36	411
Smith v. Ellis	35	764
Smith v. Ellis	37	400
Smith v. Fratt	37	1033
Smith; London, Paris & American Bank v.	35	1027
Smith v. Pacific Bank, three cases	36	410
Smith; People v.	37	516
Smith v. Waite	37	232
Sneath; Bliss v.	36	1029
Snow; Solari v.	35	1004
Solari v. Snow	35	1004
Sonoma County v. City of Santa Rosa	36	810
Sorensen v. Dorris	37	870
Soto; Dorman v.	36	588
Southern California Motor Road Co.; Conner v.	35	990
Southern California Motor Road Co.; McIntyre v.	35	991
Southern California R. Co.; McDonald v.	35	643
Southern California R. Co.; McDonald v.	35	646
Southern Pac. Co.; Bygum v.	36	415
Southern Pac. Co.; Esrey v.	35	310
Southern Pac. Co.; Esrey v.	37	500
Southern Pac. Co.; Lynn v.	36	1018
Southern Pac. Co.; Stephenson v.	36	407
Southern Pac. R. Co.; City of San Pedro v.	35	993
Southern Pac. R. Co.; Lee v.	35	572
Southern Pac. R. Co. v. Pixley	37	194
South San Francisco Homestead & Railroad Ass'n; Hassey v.	36	945
Spears v. Modoc County	35	869
Spence v. Schultz	37	220
Spencer; Modoc County v.	37	483
Spieker v. Lash	36	362
Splivalo v. Bryan	36	780
Spooner; Bullion & Exchange Bank of Carson City v.	36	121
Spooner v. Cady	36	104
Stafford; Gould v.	35	429
State; Coulterville & Y. Turnpike Co. v.	37	1035
State; Hackett v.	37	156
State Investment & Ins. Co. v. Superior Court of City and County of San Francisco	35	549
Steele v. Marsicano	36	920
Steen v. Hendy	36	1021
Steinke; Schmidt v.	35	855
Stephan; Sutton v.	36	106
Stephens; Wyatt v.	36	586
Stephenson v. Southern Pac. Co.	36	407
Stevens v. San Francisco & N. P. R. Co.	35	165
Stevens v. San Francisco & N. P. R. Co.	37	146
Stewart v. Dunlap	36	2
Stewart v. Helvetia Swiss Fire Ins. Co.	36	410
Stewart; McHarry v.	35	141
Stewart v. Superior Court	35	156
Stewart v. Superior Court	35	563
Stewart v. Superior Court of San Diego County	36	100
Stockton Combined Harvester & Agricultural Works v. Houser	37	179
Stockton Sav. & Loan Soc.; Chadbourne v.	36	127
Stokes; People v.	36	834
Stokes; People v.	37	207
Stone; Burnham v.	35	627

P.

	Vol.	Page
Stone; Morrison v.	37	142
Stoneman; Bean v.	37	777
Stowell; Ramboz v.	37	519
Streeten v. Robinson	36	946
Strelinger; Greenzweig v.	37	398
Strong Co.; Burness v.	36	396
Strong Co.; Trezevant v.	36	395
Strybe; People v.	36	3
Stump; Wilson v.	37	151
Superior Court; Auzerais v.	36	6
Superior Court; Long v.	36	807
Superior Court; Stewart v.	35	156
Superior Court; Stewart v.	35	563
Superior Court of City and County of San Francisco; Grangers' Bank of California v.	35	642
Superior Court of City and County of San Francisco; People's Home Sav. Bank v.	36	1015
Superior Court of City and County of San Francisco; Ruggles v.	37	211
Superior Court of City and County of San Francisco; State Investment & Ins. Co. v.	35	549
Superior Court of City and County of San Francisco; Tapi v.	36	781
Superior Court of Fresno County; Perkins v.	37	780
Superior Court of Mono County; Broder v.	37	143
Superior Court of Mono County; Broder v.	37	191
Superior Court of San Diego County; Stewart v.	36	100
Superior Court of San Francisco County; Buckley v.	36	360
Sutliff v. Clunie	37	224
Sutro; Watson v.	37	201
Sutton v. Stephan	36	106
Sutton v. Symons	35	158
Svea Fire Ins. Co.; Clark v.	36	587
Symons v. Bunnell	35	770
Symons; Sutton v.	35	158
Talmadge v. Arrowhead Reservoir Co.	35	1000
Tapi v. Superior Court of City and County of San Francisco	36	781
Tapscott v. Lyon	37	225
Taylor v. Abbott	37	408
Taylor; Greenebaum v.	36	957
Taylor v. Kelly	37	216
Taylor; Millbrae Co. v.	37	235
Temple; Baldwin v.	35	1008
Temple; People v.	37	414
Temple; People v.	37	416
Temple St. Cable R. Co. v. Hellman	37	530
Tevis v. Butler	37	223
Thomas, Ex parte	37	514
Thomas; Lord v.	36	372
Thomas; People v.	36	9
Thomas Parisian Dyeing & Cleaning Works; Warner v.	37	153
Thomas Parisian Dyeing & Cleaning Works; Warner v.	37	213
Thompson v. Gorner	36	434
Thompson v. Gorner	37	900
Thompson; Nevin v.	35	160
Thompson; Nevin v.	35	161
Thompson's Estate, In re	35	991
Thompson's Estate, In re	36	98
Thompson's Estate, In re	36	508
Tibbets v. Bakewell	35	1007
Tillman; Vallens v.	37	213

	P. Vol.	Page
Todd v. Martin	37	872
Tomlinson; People v.	36	506
Tomlinson; Shanahan v.	36	1009
Toon v. Huberty	37	944
Toulouse v. Pare	37	146
Tower; Bates v.	37	385
Town of Berkeley; People v.	36	591
Towsend; Coburn v.	37	202
Travellers' Ins. Co. of Hartford; Marceau v.	35	856
Travellers' Ins. Co. of Hartford; Marceau v.	36	813
Treanor v. Houghton	36	1081
Treat v. Dorman	35	86
Trezevant v. W. R. Strong Co.	36	395
Trierweiler; Young v.	35	773
Trumbo; Houghton v.	37	152
Tully v. Wilhoit	35	651
Turner; Bertz v.	36	1014
Turner; Reclamation Dist. No. 542 v.	37	1038
Ullrich v. Santa Rosa Nat. Bank	37	500
Underwood; Curtis v.	36	110
Underwood; Curtis v.	36	397
Union High School Dist. of Solano County; People v.	36	119
Usher v. Usher	36	8
Valentine v. Sloss	37	326
Valentine v. Sloss	37	328
Valentine v. Sloss	37	329
Valentine v. Sloss	37	410
Vallens v. Tillman	37	213
Van Aken; Van Loo v.	37	925
Van Loo v. Van Aken	37	925
Vennekohl; O'Rourke v.	37	930
Vincent v. City of Pacific Grove	36	773
Visalia Gas & Electric Light Co. v. Sims	37	1042
Visalia & T. R. Co.; Healy v.	36	125
Vital; People v.	37	215
Wagner v. Hansen	37	195
Wagner v. Wagner	37	935
Waite; Livermore v.	36	424
Waite; People v.	36	431
Waite; People v.	36	518
Waite; Smith v.	37	232
Walkerly v. Greene	37	890
Walkerly's Estate, In re	37	893
Wallace; Los Angeles Nat. Bank v.	36	197
Wallace v. McKenzie	37	859
Wallace; People v.	35	862
Walser v. Austin	37	869
Wangenheim; City and County of San Francisco v.	37	221
Warner v. F. Thomas Parisian Dyeing & Cleaning Works	37	153
Warner v. F. Thomas Parisian Dyeing & Cleaning Works	37	213
Warren; De Long v.	36	1009
Warren v. McGill	37	144
Watkins v. Wilhoit	35	646
Watson v. Sutro	37	201
Watterson v. Saldunbehere	35	432
Webster v. Hanna	36	421
Webster v. San Pedro Lumber Co.	35	871
Weir v. Mead	35	567
Welch; Schmidt v.	35	626

	Vol.	Page
Wellman; Ross v.	36	402
Wells; People v.	37	529
Welsh v. Pennie	37	392
Wendt; Bowen v.	37	149
Wengant v. Bartlett	36	417
West; Felton v.	36	676
Western Granite & Marble Co. v. Knickerbocker	37	192
Western Union Tel. Co.; Kenyon v.	35	75
Westminster School Dist. of Orange County; Skelly v.	37	643
Weston; Blum v.	36	778
Wetmore v. Barrett	37	140
Wheelock v. Godfrey	35	315
Wheelock v. Godfrey	35	320
Wheelock v. Godfrey, two cases	35	317
Whitaker; People v.	36	109
White; Eldred v.	36	944
White v. Harris	37	502
White River Lumber Co.; Park & Lacy Co. v.	35	442
Wickersham v. Crittenden	37	513
Wilcoxon v. City of San Luis Obispo	35	988
Wilhelm v. Silvester	35	997
Wilhoit; Duffy v.	35	651
Wilhoit; Littlehal v.	35	651
Wilhoit; Tully v.	35	651
Wilhoit; Watkins v.	35	646
Williams; Coffee v.	37	504
Williams v. Mountaineer Gold Min. Co.	36	388
Williams v. Naftzger	37	411
Williams; Poly v.	36	102
Williams v. Williams	37	784
Williams' Estate, In re	36	6
Williams' Estate, In re	36	407
Williams' Estate, In re	36	805
Willis; Pierce v.	36	1080
Wilson; Kraft v.	37	790
Wilson v. Samuels	35	148
Wilson v. Samuels	35	559
Wilson v. Stump	37	151
Winter; Phillips v.	37	154
Wittenbrock v. Parker	36	374
Wolff v. Wolff	36	767
Wolff v. Wolff	36	1037
Wolff v. Wolff	37	858
Wood; Noyes v.	36	766
Woodruff v. Perry	37	526
Woodward v. McAdam	35	1016
W. R. Strong Co.; Burness v.	36	396
W. R. Strong Co.; Trezevant v.	36	395
Wulzen v. Board of Sup'rs of City and County of San Francisco	35	353
Wyatt v. Stephens	36	586
Wyman v. Moore	37	230
Wyman; People v.	36	932
Yoakam's Estate, In re	37	485
Yolo County; Banks v.	37	900
Young; People v.	36	770
Young v. Trierweiler	35	773
Yuba County; Johnson v.	37	528
Zollner; Holland v.	36	930
Zollner; Holland v.	37	231

CALIFORNIA REPORTER

35 PACIFIC REPORTER

100 Cal. 505

PATCHETT et al. v. PACIFIC COAST RY. CO. (No. 19,240.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 26, 1893.)

LIMITATION OF ACTIONS—TRUSTS—INFANCY.

An action barred by limitation against a trustee is also barred against the beneficiaries, though they were under the disability of infancy, under Code Civil Proc. § 369.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Luis Obispo county; V. A. Gregg, Judge.

Action by John A. Patchett and others against the Pacific Coast Railway Company to quiet title. Plaintiffs had judgment, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Wilcoxon & Bouldin, for appellant. W. H. Spencer and Venable & Goodchild, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. This action was instituted in November, 1892, by John A. Patchett and his four children, to have their title quieted to a tract of land in San Luis Obispo county. The defendant corporation, by its answer, alleged title in itself to a strip 60 feet wide across the said tract, and pleaded in bar of the action the statute of limitations. The court below gave judgment against the defendant, from which it has appealed on the judgment roll.

The facts found are, in substance, as follows: The plaintiff John A. Patchett and one Amanda Patchett were husband and wife, and on December 9, 1880, were divorced. The land described in the complaint was community property owned by them, the title standing in the name of the husband, but no division or disposition of it was made by the decree. After the divorce, and on the same day, John A. executed to Amanda a deed of the said property, which was duly acknowledged and recorded on the day of its date. It recited "that whereas, the parties hereto have heretofore been husband and wife; and whereas, a decree of divorce has been this day made and entered in the superior court of the county of San Luis Obispo, state of California, dissolving the marriage between the parties, and awarding the care, custody, and control of the minor children of the parties hereto to said party of the second part; and whereas, certain property of the party of the first part was and is the community property of the parties hereto: Now, as a full and complete settlement of all property rights as between the parties hereto, and to make provision for the support and education of the said minor children of the parties hereto, and said party of the first part, in consideration of the premises and of one dollar lawful money of the United States to him in hand paid by the said party of the second part, has granted, bargained, sold, conveyed, and confirmed, and does hereby grant, bargain, sell, convey, and confirm, unto the said party of the second part, and her heirs and assigns, forever, all those certain tracts, pieces, or parcels of land, [describing the property,] to have and to hold, all and singular, the said premises, with the appurtenances, unto the said party of the second part, her heirs and assigns, forever, in trust for the use and benefit of herself and Mary Alice Patchett, now aged ten years, Benjamin E. Patchett, now aged nine years, Bertha Mabel Patchett, now aged five years, and Minerva Emma Patchett, now aged two years, the minor children of the parties hereto; to collect the rents, and to receive the rents, issues, and profits, of the said premises, and apply the same to the maintenance and support of herself and said minor children, until the youngest of said children has attained her majority; and, when the youngest of said children is of legal age, the said trustee to convey to each of said children the one-fifth (1-5) part or interest in and to the said premises, and every part thereof, and to have and take the one-fifth (1-5) part thereof to herself in fee, free from the trust aforesaid; the intention hereof being that the said property shall be kept together, managed, and controlled by the said party of the second part until the youngest of said children is eighteen years of age, and then divided equally between the said party of the second part and said children, share and share alike." On September 8, 1881, Mrs. Patchett, by a deed duly executed and recorded, and expressing a consideration of one dollar, conveyed to a railway company a right of way for a railroad across the said tract of land, the strip described being 60 feet wide, etc., and the same strip now claimed by the defendant. Shortly after the execution of the last-named deed the defendant succeeded to all the interest acquired by the grantee thereunder, and ever since 1882 it has had the said strip of land "fenced on each side, and during all said time has used the same for the purposes mentioned in said conveyance of September 8, 1881, placing valuable improvements thereon, and the entire length thereof, consisting of railroad ties and iron rails, over which, daily, the freight and passenger cars of said defendant are propelled by its steam engines, and has thus used, exclusively, continuously, openly, peaceably, and notoriously, the same, under a claim of right to said easement, and with the knowledge of all the parties to this action and said Amanda and one Wm. Sandercock, hereinafter named, since 1882, and has paid all taxes assessed against said easement and the railroad constructed thereon." Afterwards, Mrs. Patchett mortgaged her interest in the land, and the mortgage was foreclosed. At the sale under the decree of foreclosure, John A. Patchett became the purchaser, and thereby acquired all the interest of the mortgagor in the property, except in so far as it was affected by her conveyance of September 8, 1881. Mrs. Patchett continued to act under the deed to her of December 9, 1880, until May, 1890, when, by a decree of the superior court, she was removed from her trusteeship, and one William Sandercock was appointed in her place. The latter accepted the position, and acted as trustee, until June, 1891, when he resigned, and the plaintiff John A. Patchett was duly appointed trustee in his place and stead. At the time of the trial the children were of the ages, respectively, of 22, 21, 17 and 14 years.

Upon these facts the court found, as conclusions of law, that the deed made by Mrs. Patchett to the railroad company on September 8, 1881, was void and conveyed nothing, for the reason that the grantor was the trustee of the estate, and the conveyance was in violation of the terms of the trust, and also that the plaintiffs' cause of action was not barred, and an easement in favor of the defendant railway company had not been created by adverse possession and user, "because four of the cestuis que trustent, owners of the equitable estate in the land, were within the age of majority at the time of the entry of the defendant company, and during all the time of the occupation and user of the claimed way." The principal question for decision is, was the conclusion of the court that the action was not barred, and the defendant had acquired no easement by adverse possession and user, justified by the facts found?

That a private right of way over land is an easement and an interest in the land which may be acquired by limitation—in such case ordinarily called "prescription"—is a question which does not admit of debate, and in support of which no authorities need be cited. Here the findings show that everything was done by the defendant necessary to create a prescriptive right, if such right could be acquired against the minor children, for whom the title to four-fifths of the property was held in trust. Our Code provides that an executor or administrator, or trustee of an express trust, may sue without joining with him the persons for whose benefit the action is prosecuted. Code Civil Proc. § 369. There has been some conflict in the decisions as to the rights of minors in cases like this, but the weight of authority seems to be contrary to the conclusion of the court below. In a note to Moore v. Armstrong, 36 Amer. Dec. 68, it is said: "There is also diversity of opinion on the question as to how far the rights of an infant are affected when his property is in the hands of a trustee, executor, or guardian; and the tendency of the decisions is to support the position that when the right of action vests in an executor, guardian, or trustee, who is under no legal disability, the statute will commence to run despite the disability of the minor, and, if the claim is lost by the neglect of the representative to sue, the minor is barred;" citing numerous cases. So in Perry, Trusts, (4th Ed.) § 858, it is said: "It was said in one case that 'forbearance of the trustees in not doing what it was their office to have done should in no sort prejudice the cestui que trust;' that is, that if the trustee does not bring an action to recover the estate within the statutory period the cestui que trust is not barred. But this is not the rule of law. Lord Hardwicke said: 'The rule that the statute of limitations does not bar a trust estate holds only between cestui que trust and trustee, not as between cestui que trust and trustee on one side, and strangers on the other; for that would make the statute of no force at all, because there is hardly any estate of consequence without such trust, and so the act would never take place. Therefore, where the cestui que trust and his trustee are both out of possession for the time limited, the party in possession has a good bar against them both.' * * * Where the trustee is barred, so is the cestui." And see, also, 13 Amer. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 740, and cases cited. Following the rule thus declared, it was said by this court in McLeran v. Benton, 73 Cal. 342, 14 Pac. 879: "If the entry of the defendants was wrongful, the devisees of Harmon could not maintain an action, for that right existed exclusively in the executors, who, in all suits for the benefit of the estate, represented both the creditors and the heirs. Cunningham v. Ashley, 45 Cal. 493; Halleck v. Mixer, 16 Cal. 579. It would seem to follow, therefore, that when the executor is barred of his action the heir is barred, although the heir or devisee be laboring under a disability. Wilmerding v. Russ, 33 Conn. 68. The general rule is that when a trustee is barred by the statute of limitations the cestui que trust is likewise barred, even though an infant. Hill, Trustees, 267, 403, 504." If the law is correctly stated in the authorities above cited and referred to,—and we think it is,—then it is apparent that the court below was mistaken in its conclusions, and its judgment was erroneous. We advise, therefore, that the judgment be reversed and the cause remanded, with directions to enter judgment upon the findings in favor of the defendant corporation.

We concur: VANCLIEF, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, it is ordered that the judgment be reversed and the cause remanded, with directions to enter judgment upon the findings in favor of the defendant corporation.

---

100 Cal. 454

KENYON v. WESTERN UNION TEL. CO.

(No. 19,320.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 21, 1893.)

TELEGRAPH COMPANIES — FAILURE TO DELIVER MESSAGE — DAMAGES — NOMINAL DAMAGES—DE MINIMIS NON CURAT LEX.

1. In an action against a telegraph company for failure to deliver a message, by reason of which plaintiff failed to receive an appointment as deputy assessor, damages for loss of the salary he would have received are too speculative, since a deputy only holds office at the pleasure of the officer appointing him.

2. Where a complaint shows that plaintiff is only entitled to nominal damages, and such a judgment will not carry costs, and no permanent right will be determined, a demurrer is properly sustained under the maxim "de minimis non curat lex."

3. A judgment for defendant will not be reversed merely because plaintiff was entitled to recover nominal damages, where such a judgment would not entitle him to costs, and no permanent right is involved.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; W. L. Pierce, Judge.

Action by A. S. Kenyon against the Western Union Telegraph Company. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Callen & Neale, for appellant. Cassius Carter, for respondent.

HAYNES, C. Appeal from a judgment in favor of defendant upon its demurrer to plaintiff's complaint. The complaint, in substance, alleges that on January 2, 1893, the plaintiff delivered to the defendant at San Diego, for transmission and delivery, the following message: "Col. A. G. Gassen, 501 Geary Street, San Francisco: Rennie will appoint. You wire him, please. Urgent. A. S. Kenyon." That through the gross negligence of the defendant the address as received at San Francisco read, "Collag Massen," and that it was not delivered for 10 days thereafter, though defendant informed plaintiff on January 3, 1893, that it had been delivered. That said Rennie was then, and since, the city assessor of the city of San Diego. That Gassen was an alderman of San Diego. That he was fully advised and understood the contents and importance of the message. That plaintiff was an applicant for an appointment as deputy of said city assessor at a salary of $75 per month; and that, if said message had been promptly delivered, plaintiff would have received the said appointment; and that he had sustained damage in the sum of $375, for which sum he prayed judgment. The demurrer is that the complaint does not state a cause of action.

The negligence of defendant, and that plaintiff would have been appointed as such deputy but for such negligence, are sufficiently averred. Respondent claims, however, that the damages alleged are too remote, and that is said by respondent to be the ground upon which the demurrer was sustained. In his brief, counsel for respondent also insists that the character and importance of the message were not disclosed, and that hence it could not be inferred therefrom that the loss of the sender's appointment to an office, or other employment, might result from a failure to deliver it. Upon both these points the authorities are, or appear to be, conflicting; but upon both questions the facts involved in the cases are so various and diverse that a careful consideration of each is required before it can be certainly said that they are in point upon the one side or the other. That there was a breach of its contract on the part of the defendant is not disputed, nor can it be contended that the plaintiff is not entitled to recover all damages he sustained from the defendant's breach of contract, provided such damages are not too remote, and are capable of being ascertained with sufficient certainty. The case principally relied upon by appellant is Telegraph Co. v. Fenton, 52 Ind. 1. There the owner of a steamboat plying upon the Ohio and Mississippi rivers telegraphed from Cincinnati to Fenton, at Aurora, as follows: "Will you go on Argosy with me for one hundred and fifty dollars. Answer immediately." Fenton was a pilot, and the telegram was sent in consequence of a previous conversation, and meant that he would pay $150 per month. The delivery of the telegram was delayed, whereby Fenton lost the employment. The court held that the damages were neither remote nor speculative. In the case at bar it is not necessary to consider whether the damages claimed were too remote, since it is clear they were speculative and uncertain. The allegation is that plaintiff would have been appointed deputy, and that the salary paid a deputy in that office is $75 per month. But it is not alleged that the city assessor would have contracted to employ him for any definite length of time. A deputy is appointed to hold during the pleasure of the officer appointing him. Pol. Code, § 878. The power of appointing deputies is in the officer, and not in the man. Hubert v. Mendheim, 64 Cal. 220, 30 Pac. 633; Pol. Code, § 876. An appointment as deputy does not imply a contract for his employment for any length of time, nor otherwise than at the pleasure of the officer making the appointment. The allegation, therefore, that he would have received the appointment, is not an allegation that he would have been retained for any definite length of time; nor could such allegation be made. He might have received the appointment and been discharged the same day, either for cause or without cause; and, as damages or compensation must be measured by the loss sustained, where that loss cannot be ascertained damages cannot be recovered. In Telegraph Co. v. Fenton, supra, an answer which Fenton would have sent, accepting the offered employment, if the message had been delivered to him when it should have been, would have constituted a contract for at least one month's service at the specified sum of $150, and this much, at least, it was clear he had lost. It is therefore not necessary to discuss or decide whether the damages, if they were ascertainable, and were in fact sustained, were too remote, nor whether the defendant would otherwise have been relieved because not informed of the nature of the transaction to which the telegram related; since, if both these points were decided against the respondent, the plaintiff could still recover nothing more than nominal damages.

Appellant contends, however, that he was, at the least, entitled to nominal damages, and that, as the judgment was for defendant, he is entitled to a reversal. The failure to perform a duty required by contract is a legal wrong, independently of actual damage sustained by the party to whom performance is due; and in general, where a contract right is violated, the maxim "de minimis non curat lex" has no application, and nominal damages will be given. But where a judgment is erroneous only because it fails to give nominal damages, it will not be reversed unless nominal damages in the given case would carry costs. Suth. Dam. § 11, and cases there cited. If, however, as said by the author just cited, the object of the action is to determine some question of permanent right, the fact that he can only recover nominal damages will not prevent a reversal. In this case nominal damages would not entitle the plaintiff to costs, and would, therefore, not justify a reversal, even if it be conceded that the judgment is erroneous. But I think the judgment was right. The question arose upon demurrer. If the demurrer had been overruled, it must have resulted in an issue of fact and a trial, and in the end a judgment for plaintiff for nominal damages which would not even impose costs upon defendant. No question of "permanent right" existed between the parties to be settled by a trial and judgment, and, in view of these facts, I think the maxim above quoted was properly observed, and that the judgment should be affirmed.

We concur: SEARLS, C.; VANCLIEF, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

PACIFIC MUT. LIFE INS. CO. v. FISHER et al. (No. 19,361.)

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 26, 1893.)

APPEAL—STAY OF PROCEEDINGS—NECESSITY OF BOND.

On appeal by a mortgagee from a judgment declaring the lien of the mortgage subordinate to certain mechanics' liens, and directing the sale of the mortgaged property to satisfy the liens, no undertaking save the ordinary one is necessary to stay the execution of the judgment; Code Civil Proc. § 945, requiring undertakings for the payment of any deficiency arising upon the sale of property, referring only to liens created by mortgage.

In bank.

Action by the Pacific Mutual Life Insurance Company against John C. Fisher and others to foreclose a mortgage. A number of actions to foreclose mechanics' liens on the mortgaged property were consolidated with it. There was judgment foreclosing the mortgage, but making the lien of the mortgage subordinate to certain of the mechanics' liens. Plaintiff appealed. Pending the appeal the lienholders threatened to sell the property, because plaintiff had given only the bond of $300 to cover costs on appeal, and no stay bond. Plaintiff petitioned the supreme court for a stay, on the ground that no stay bond was required. Petition granted.

PER CURIAM. The facts stated in the petition herein bring this proceeding within the rule declared in Painter v. Painter, (Cal.) 33 Pac. 483,[1] and upon the authority of that case the application of plaintiff and appellant for a stay of proceedings under the judgment appealed from must be granted. So ordered.

(4 Cal. Unrep. 377)

In re KOWALSKY. (No. 15,329.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 22, 1893.)

ATTORNEYS AT LAW—MISCONDUCT—DISBARMENT.

The judge of department 9 of the superior court of San Francisco, who had directed a guardian not to pay out any of the trust fund except on order of the court, refused to grant an attorney an order allowing payment for services, because not properly itemized. This judge had, in fact, never had jurisdiction of the matter, and the attorney was so told by the judge of department 10, where the same was pending, and who promised to sign the order. The attorney thereupon, in good faith, obtained the money from the guardian, after telling him the facts. Held no ground for disbarment.

Proceedings to disbar Henry I. Kowalsky. Dismissed.

Robert Y. Hayne, for petitioner. Frank M. Stone, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This proceeding was instituted here by a written accusation charging Henry I. Kowalsky, an attorney of this court, with certain professional misconduct, and praying that he "be removed from the office of attorney and counselor at law." Kowalsky filed a written answer to the accusation, and the proceeding was referred to Hon. Niles Searles, now one of the commissioners of this court, to take evidence in the matter, "and to report the facts adduced therefrom to this court." The commissioner took, in writing, the evidence introduced by the parties to the proceeding, and returned the same to the court. He also reported, made, and filed his findings of facts, which are as follows:

"Filed June 3, 1893.

"In the Supreme Court of the State of California.

"Proceedings to remove Henry I. Kowalsky from the office of attorney and counselor at law. (No. 15,329.)

"The undersigned, heretofore appointed a committee to take depositions in the above-entitled proceeding, and to report the facts deduced therefrom to the supreme court, begs leave to report that the parties appeared before him by their respective attorneys,—John A. Wright, Esq., appearing for and on behalf of the prosecution, and Frank M. Stone, Esq., on behalf of Henry I. Kowalsky, the accused; whereupon the testimony offered by the respective parties was received, reduced to writing, and is herewith reported to the court. From the testimony so taken, and from the admissions in the pleadings, and after argument of counsel for the respective parties, I find the following facts:

---

[1] Code Civil Proc. § 945, provides that if the judgment appealed from direct the sale of real property, the execution of the same cannot be stayed unless a written undertaking be executed on the part of the appellant, with two or more sureties, to the effect that during the possession of such property by the appellant he will not commit any waste and that, if the judgment be affirmed, or the appeal dismissed, he will pay the value of the use and occupation of the property from the time of the appeal until the delivery of possession thereof. When the judgment is for the sale of mortgaged premises, and the payment of a deficiency arising upon the sale, the undertaking must also provide for the payment of such deficiency.

"(1) Henry I. Kowalsky is, and all the times mentioned in the proceedings herein was, an attorney and counselor at law, regularly admitted to practice as such attorney and counselor, in all the courts of the state of California.

"(2) On the 27th day of March, 1890, one P. J. Corbett, by an order of the superior court in and for the city and county of San Francisco, state of California, made in department No. 10 thereof, by Hon. Walter H. Levy, one of the judges of said court, and judge of said department No. 10, was duly appointed guardian of the person and estate of a certain minor named Henry MacDonald, and duly qualified as such guardian, giving a bond in the sum of one hundred dollars, being the amount fixed by the court, whereupon letters of guardianship issued to him, and he entered upon the discharge of his duties as such guardian, and continued so to act during the time hereinafter mentioned.

"(3) The minor, Henry MacDonald, at the time of the appointment of the said guardian, asserted himself, or was asserted by his mother, to be the son of one C. E. S. MacDonald, deceased, who was a man of large wealth, and whose estate was then in the course of administration in the said superior court, but the said claim of relationship was denied by the relatives of the said decedent; and the said minor, Henry MacDonald, was possessed of no property, and had no expectation of receiving any during his minority, unless he established, by process of law, his said disputed claim of relationship, and obtained a part of said estate.

"(4) Jeremiah D. Sullivan, Esq., an attorney at law, entered into an agreement with the mother and family of the said minor, Henry MacDonald, by the terms of which, in consideration of one-half of any sum or sums of money which might be recovered for said minor from the estate of C. E. S. MacDonald, deceased, he undertook to conduct, as an attorney, such proceedings as might be necessary to establish the right of said minor to said estate, or to an interest therein. Said Sullivan appeared as the attorney for P. J. Corbett in the matter of procuring for him letters of guardianship of said minor, and the said Corbett, as guardian, assented to the agreement between Sullivan and the family of said minor in reference to the services and compensation of said Sullivan. Some months later, said Jeremiah D. Sullivan, finding that the course of litigation necessary to establish the rights of said minor in and to the estate was likely to be protracted and laborious, employed the respondent, Henry I. Kowalsky, as associate counsel, to assist him therein, and the latter labored for a period of from four to seven months, assiduously, in the accomplishment of the object of his employment.

"(5) The proceedings to establish the claim of Henry MacDonald to be the son of C. E. S. MacDonald, deceased, and to be entitled to a share in his estate, were initiated and prosecuted in the superior court in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and in department No. 9 thereof, of which Hon. J. V. Coffey was and still is the judge.

"(6) The compensation of respondent, Kowalsky, for his services in the matter of prosecuting the claims of said minor, as agreed upon between said Sullivan and respondent, was to be one-half of that which he (Sullivan) might receive under his (the said Sullivan's) agreement.

"(7) Such proceedings were had in the superior court (department No. 9) that prior to October 3, 1892, the status of Henry MacDonald, as the son and heir of C. E. S. MacDonald, was established in his favor; but an appeal to the supreme court had been taken, or was about to be taken, and there being other litigation pending, involving a large share of the estate, it was deemed judicious to compromise the matters in issue, and it was accordingly agreed upon; and on the 3d day of October, 1892, the respondent, Henry I. Kowalsky, appeared before Hon. J. V. Coffey, judge of department No. 9 of the superior court, in company with P. J. Corbett, guardian, and, as attorney for said Corbett, presented a plan of compromise, and an order authorizing said Corbett, as guardian of Henry MacDonald, to settle and compromise the matters of difference touching the estate of C. E. S. MacDonald, deceased. The order was granted by the court, and a compromise made. The estimated value of the estate at the date of the settlement was, say, $120,000, of which Henry MacDonald, by the terms of the compromise, become entitled to, say, $40,000.

"(8) Prior to the 6th day of October, 1892, Hon. J. V. Coffey, judge of department No. 9 of the superior court, advised and instructed P. J. Corbett, guardian of Henry MacDonald, in the presence of Henry I. Kowalsky, to keep the funds of his ward, Henry MacDonald, intact, to deposit the same in bank, and not to make any payments therefrom except upon order of the court. The advice so given to Corbett was in unison with a practice which prevailed in the court of Judge Coffey, but which had not been, up to that date, published as a rule of his department of the superior court.

"(9) At the date of the directions so given by Judge Coffey to Corbett, the matter of the guardianship of Henry MacDonald was not, and never had been, pending in the department of Hon. J. V. Coffey, judge in department No. 9 of the superior court, but had been, was, and for some weeks thereafter continued to be, pending in department No. 10 of the superior court, presided over by Hon. W. H. Levy, Judge. Judge Coffey at that time supposed, and all the parties supposed, the matter of guardianship aforesaid was pending in his (Judge Coffey's) department.

"(10) On the 6th day of October, 1892, P. J.

Corbett had in his hands funds of the estate of his ward, Henry MacDonald, paid him by James C. Pennie, Esq., administrator of C. E. S. MacDonald, deceased, amounting to $7,000, less $500 paid to Henry I. Kowalsky by said Pennie, and receipted for as cash by said Corbett, guardian, which funds were on deposit in the German Savings and Loan Society's Bank, except the $500 paid to Kowalsky, as aforesaid. Jeremiah D. Sullivan had, at said last-mentioned date, paid out from his own funds, in the conduct of the case on behalf of Henry MacDonald, and in the support of said minor and his mother and family, the sum of $2,200.

"(11) On said 6th day of October, 1892, Henry I. Kowalsky was about to leave by an evening train for Los Angeles, and both he and said Sullivan were desirous of receiving, as fees and compensation on account of services and expenditures in the MacDonald case, the sum of $3,500, making, with the sum already received, the sum of $4,000. The parties, Corbett, Kowalsky, and Sullivan, met on that day at the office of the latter, when the subject of such payment was broached to Corbett, who was willing to make the payment, but desired an order of the court authorizing the same. An order was drawn, and at about 1 o'clock P. M. Kowalsky repaired with it to the city hall to procure an order of allowance, etc., for $4,000. Before leaving, it was suggested that, as the hour was becoming late, Kowalsky should, upon procuring the order, telephone to Sullivan, that Corbett might procure the funds from the bank before it closed. The order was presented by respondent to Judge Coffey in open court, and by him refused, because not itemized and verified, as required by the rules of his department. Kowalsky then left the court room of Judge Coffey en route for the clerk's office, to procure the data upon which to frame an itemized petition and order. On his way he called in at the court room of Judge Levy, to take leave of the latter before departing for Los Angeles, and, to the question of the latter of what brought him to the city hall, responded, 'To get an order from Judge Coffey in the MacDonald guardianship case,' and received for reply that the guardianship matter was in his (Judge Levy's) department and not in that of Judge Coffey. Kowalsky repaired to the clerk's office, verified the statement of Judge Levy, and then returned to Judge Levy, told the latter he was correct, and asked for the order, which Judge Levy, knowing of the services rendered, was willing to grant, but was then informed by Kowalsky that he had made a like application to Judge Coffey, and that it had been refused, giving the reason therefor. Judge Levy responded that he had no such rule in his department, but that, under the circumstances, he (Kowalsky) had better comply with the rule, and bring it up regularly in court when the order would be granted. Kowalsky then telephoned to Sullivan that the case was not in Judge Coffey's court, but in that of Judge Levy, and that it would be all right. P. J. Corbett, who had remained at Sullivan's office, thereupon repaired to the German Savings Bank, drew $3,500, and brought it to Sullivan's office. On the return of Kowalsky, he explained truthfully what had occurred at the city hall. Banking hours having closed, Corbett asked Sullivan what he was to do with the money. Sullivan replied that he and Kowalsky were good for it, and he could pay it to them, and they would get the order from Judge Levy. The money ($3,500) and Kowalsky's receipt for $500 were then handed over; Corbett receiving the joint receipt of Sullivan and Kowalsky for $4,000. A petition and order were then dictated by Kowalsky for the allowance by the court of the $4,000, and written out by a typewriter. The money was divided,—respondent, Kowalsky, receiving $1,500 and his receipt for $500 previously paid him, and Sullivan $2,000. Kowalsky then departed to make preparation for his intended trip of that evening for Los Angeles, wrote a note to Judge Coffey, explaining the mistake in supposing the matter to be in his department, and apologizing for the trouble, etc. He also saw Judge Levy in the evening before starting, and told him the money had been paid over. Kowalsky was absent thereafter for some ten days to two weeks.

"(12) Neither Sullivan nor Kowalsky sought or intended to cheat, defraud, deceive, or mislead P. J. Corbett, the guardian, in any way in the premises, but acted in good faith, believing, and having good cause to believe, that, upon presenting the petition and order in proper form in the court of Judge Levy, the said order would be granted, and the guardian authorized to make the payment to them of $4,000, and, had the same been presented in open court, it would have been allowed.

"(13) P. J. Corbett, the guardian, believed the order would be granted by the court upon presentation, and would not have made the payment but for such belief.

"(14) Immediately after Kowalsky left the office, Sullivan and Corbett repaired to the city hall with the petition and order allowing the payment of the $4,000. The court of Judge Levy was not in session, but Sullivan found Hon. W. H. Levy, the judge thereof, in his chambers, and presented to him the papers for an order of allowance, as aforesaid. Judge Levy declined to sign the order until it should be regularly brought to a hearing in open court.

"(15) The value of the services rendered by Sullivan and Kowalsky as attorneys in the case of Henry MacDonald, hereinbefore mentioned, were at least equal to the amount of $4,000, and probably greatly in excess of that sum; but no order of any court or judge authorizing the guardian to pay any sum of money to them, or either of them, had been obtained or made, prior to October 6, 1892, or prior to the payment of the money on said last-mentioned day.

"(16) The respondent Kowalsky has not, as charged, evaded or disobeyed any lawful or other direction of any judicial officer, except as hereinbefore stated in reference to the instructions of Hon. J. V. Coffey, as to deposit of trust fund in bank by the guardian, and as to the payment of the same out only on the order of the court. Such instructions having been given in a case in which Judge Coffey had then no jurisdiction, and to a guardian over whom he had no authority, it becomes a question as to the binding force and effect thereof.

"(17) The matter of the guardianship by P. J. Corbett of Henry MacDonald was prior to December 12, 1892, transferred to department No. 9 of the superior court, and on or about the last-mentioned date, the account of the said Corbett coming before the court for settlement, the item of $4,000 contained therein, on account of moneys paid to the respondent and Sullivan, was disallowed by the court, and charged to P. J. Corbett as guardian.

"Respectfully submitted,

"Niles Searles, Committee."

We think that the foregoing findings of the commissioner are fully justified by the evidence, and present a correct and fair statement of the facts in the case; and, after a careful consideration of the matter, we are satisfied that these facts would not warrant us in rendering any judgment against the accused. The prayer of the accusation is denied, and the proceeding dismissed.

---

100 Cal. 466

PEOPLE v. GALLAGHER. (No. 20,972.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 22, 1893.)

EMBEZZLEMENT—CRIMINAL LAW — CROSS-EXAMINING ACCUSED.

1. A company's secretary, authorized to draw and sign checks, (to be signed also by the vice president,) who, receiving from the vice president two blank checks, signed by him, to pay two certain bills, fills out said checks for much larger sums, draws the money from the bank, and absconds, obtains control of it "by virtue of his employment," within Pen. Code, § 508, defining "embezzlement by servants."

2. Since the checks were drawn against an existing balance, the bank had no option but to pay them, and the money embezzled was the company's not the bank's.

3. Defendant, accused of abetting B. in embezzling money drawn by B. from the bank on his employer's account, with which money they two had gone by train to S., testified that he had been with B. most of the day before the crime, and had agreed to meet B. near noon next day at a bar opposite the bank, with no special purpose; that they had agreed to go by a certain train to S.; that they did not agree to take the money with them; that defendant had never advised B. to take his employer's money, agreed with him to go off with it, nor consented to his doing so. Held, that the state could ask him, as "matters about which he was examined in chief," (Penal Code, § 1323,) whether, the day the money was drawn, he went with B. and the money to a neighboring city, helped B. to change part of it, returned with B. and the same money, and left B., and went to the depot with part of it.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county; W. E. Green, Judge.

B. F. Gallagher, convicted of embezzlement, appeals. Affirmed.

W. F. Aram, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Hart, for the People.

PER CURIAM. The appellant was convicted of the crime of embezzlement, and has appealed from the judgment, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial. The indictment charges that, at the county of Alameda, one Richard C. Beggs. a clerk, agent, and servant of the Oakland Consolidated Street Railway Company, a corporation, embezzled $8,500, the personal property of said company, and that the defendant, B. F. Gallagher, did aid and abet said Beggs in such embezzlement.

The first point made by appellant is that Beggs did not commit the crime of embezzlement, as charged in the information. "Embezzlement is the fraudulent appropriation of property by a person to whom it has been intrusted." Pen. Code, § 503. Section 508 of the Penal Code is in the following language: "Every clerk, agent or servant of any person who fraudulently appropriates to his own use, or secretes with a fraudulent intent to appropriate to his own use, any property of another which has come into his control or care by virtue of his employment as such clerk, agent or servant, is guilty of embezzlement." The crime of embezzlement is a statutory offense, and was unknown to the common law. It is said that in the common-law definition of "larceny" there were two gaps through which, in the expansion of business, many criminals escaped. The first of these gaps was caused by the rule that, to sustain a charge of larceny, it was necessary that the stolen goods should have been at some time in the prosecutor's possession. The second was in the assumption that when possession of goods was acquired by a bailee, no subsequent fraudulent conversion constituted larceny while the bailment lasted, save in a few excepted cases. It was to meet these defects in the common law that statutes have been passed in most if not all of the states of our Union, in some of which an offense is created known as "embezzlement larceny," and in others, as in our own statute, designating the offense as "embezzlement." The case at bar relates to the remedy for the first defect mentioned in the common law, viz. a case in which the personal property alleged to have been fraudulently converted had not been in the prosecutor's possession.

These preliminary remarks, with a view to the better understanding of the initial points in the case, and we proceed to a review of the contention of appellant, the underlying theory of which is that the money alleged to have been embezzled did not come into the control or care of Beggs by virtue of his employment as a clerk, agent, or servant. The uncontradicted evidence was to the effect that the Oakland Consolidated Street Railway Company, a corporation, was doing business at Oakland, in the county of Alameda; was indebted to two companies in several sums of money aggregating, say, $2,500; that Richard C. Beggs was secretary of the corporation, and as such secretary his duties were, among other things, to keep the books of the company, to receive all the coin due the company, and deposit it (except small sums kept to pay off discharged workmen) in the First National Bank of the city of Oakland; to draw and sign checks as secretary, which checks were also to be signed by the president or vice president; that the corporation had in the bank aforesaid some $8,000 to $10,000, and credit for an overdraft of $10,000; that on or about June 3, 1892, J. E. McElrath, vice president of the corporation, for the purpose of paying off the indebtedness of the corporation to the two companies aforesaid, and not knowing the precise amount thereof, signed and delivered to Beggs two checks payable to his (Beggs') order on said bank, leaving the amount to be paid thereon, and on each of them, in blank. The evidence is contradictory as to whether Beggs was to indorse the checks and deliver them to the creditors, or to draw the money thereon from the bank and pay them. As there was evidence to that effect, we must, in favor of the verdict, assume the latter theory to have met the approbation of the jury. On the 6th day of July, 1892, Beggs filled up the checks,—one for $4,000, and the other for $4,519.20,—signed them as secretary, drew the full amount thereof, aggregating $8,519.20, from the First National Bank, converted $1,300 thereof into currency, left $2,500 with his wife, and fled with the residue to the northern part of the state, where he was arrested two or three days later, and thereupon confessed his guilt. The connection of defendant with the transaction is not here mentioned, for the reason that the contention under this head relates only to the receipt of the money by Beggs in the course of his employment. The argument that the money received by Beggs was that of the bank, and not that of his corporate employers, cannot be maintained. The corporation had funds in the bank. The checks were duly signed by the authorized officer of the corporation, and countersigned by Beggs, its secretary. Under such circumstances, it was not only the privilege but the duty of the bank to pay the checks to Beggs, who was the payee and holder thereof, upon presentation, and, when paid the amount of payment, was a proper charge against the corporation. This being so, the money, when received by Beggs, was as much the property of the corporation as though collected by the former for it upon a lawful account against any other debtor of the corporation. It is further urged that Beggs had no authority to draw the money from the bank, and hence it did not "come into his control or care by virtue of his employment," within the purview of the statute. The earlier English authorities are not uniform on this proposition. In Rex v. Snowley, 4 Car. & P. 390, the prisoner was hired to perform certain services, and was authorized to receive not less than 20 shillings in each case; in a single instance, he charged only 6 shillings, which he received, and did not account for. Held, that there was no embezzlement of the 6 shillings, inasmuch as it was his duty to take no sum less than 20 shillings, and therefore the 6 shillings were not received by the prisoner in the course of his employment. There are other English cases of like import, while perhaps an equal number of cases in the same courts hold a contrary doctrine. Bishop, in his work on Criminal Law, in commenting upon Rex v. Snowley, uses the following language: "That in reason, whenever a man claims to be a servant while getting into his possession, by force of this claim, the property to be embezzled, he should be held to be such on his trial for the embezzlement. Why should not the rule of estoppel, known throughout the entire civil department of our jurisdiction, apply in the criminal? If it is applied here, then it settles the question; for by it, when a man has received a thing from another under a claim of agency, he cannot turn round, and tell the principal, asking for the thing, 'Sir, I was not your agent in taking it, but a deceiver and a scoundrel.'" Bish. Crim. Law, (3d Ed.) § 367. In the seventh edition of the same work, like language, with some additions, is used, at section 364 of volume 2. In Ex parte Hedley, 31 Cal. 109,—a case involving the same question, and in many respects similar to the one at bar,—this court quoted with marked approval the foregoing extract from Bishop, and, in an opinion regarded as conclusive of the question here, held that if an agent obtains the money of his principal in the capacity of agent, but in a manner not authorized, and converts the same to his own use, with intent, etc., it is money received "in the course of his employment" as agent. The evidence shows that it was within the course of the employment of Beggs to draw, upon like checks with those in question, the money of the corporation from bank, and to pay its debts. In the present instance he held the two checks with authority to fill them up in amounts aggregating about $2,500, and, according to his evidence, to draw the money, and pay the creditors of the corporation, or, according to the evidence of the vice president, to indorse and deliver them to the creditors. It was as the secretary, and in the course of his employment as such, that he received the checks and filled them up, but in a manner different from his instructions, in that he filled them for larger amounts than he was authorized. Under such circumstances, he comes within the rule laid down by Bishop, supra, as interpreted in Ex parte Hedley, supra.

Appellant further insists that there is no evidence whatever that defendant aided and abetted in the appropriation and conversion of the money. In the light of the testimony, this claim seems somewhat extraordinary. There was testimony tending to show that, by previous appointment, defendant repaired to a saloon in the vicinity of the bank, while Beggs procured the money. That they immediately met, and came to San Francisco with the funds; procured a private room at the Lick House, where defendant registered under a fictitious name. That he procured currency for $1,300 of the coin; took all of the funds, except $2,500, in a valise to the Oakland station; procured tickets for himself and Beggs to Sacramento, paying therefor from the appropriated fund; had access to and carried the money at least a portion of the time, and when arrested had fifty or sixty dollars of the money on his person,—coupled with the fact that they did not pursue the usual course of travelers, in procuring through tickets to their destination, but only for short distances, and in various ways acted unlike men with money in hand honestly acquired, intent upon a journey, taken in connection with the statements of defendant when arrested, and subsequently, lead irresistibly to the conclusion that the two men were particeps criminis. Waiving, therefore, the evidence that it was the defendant, who, previous to the commission of the crime, had "advised and encouraged" it, we think the evidence against defendant was ample to warrant a conviction. The very fact that the embezzlement was determined upon before the money was drawn from the bank detracts nothing from the guilt of defendant as an aider and abetter, under such circumstances. Mere intention to commit a crime does not constitute an offense. Had Beggs, after procuring the money from the bank, honestly appropriated it to the legitimate uses of his employer, then, although the amount was in excess of the sum he was authorized to draw, his offense would have been incomplete. It was the subsequent wrongful appropriation of the funds that constituted the crime, and in this the defendant participated, under circumstances clearly indicating guilty knowledge and criminal intent. He was not simply an accessory after the fact, but a co-worker in the performance of the acts constituting the corpus delicti.

The defendant offered himself as a witness in his own behalf, and testified that he was not sure whether he saw Beggs on the Saturday next before the 6th of June or not, but that on the following Sunday he did see him; that he met him about 1 or 2 o'clock on that day, and was with him until 11 o'clock in the evening; that when they separated that night they made an appointment to meet on the following day, Monday, June 6, 1892, between 11 and 12 o'clock in the morning, at a certain saloon in Oakland, across the street from the First National Bank; that there was nothing said about Beggs drawing money from the bank; and that there was no particular purpose for which they were to meet. He also testified: "I did not on this Saturday just referred to, or at any other time, or ever, advise him to take the funds of the bank or corporation of which he was secretary, and appropriate them to him own use, nor did I, then or ever, suggest to him that he might do that, or that he and I might do that, or that we might go to Canada, or to some place, or that we would divide the funds equally after we got away. I did not ever, at any time, advise him to draw this money from the bank, and go off with it, nor did he ever suggest doing so, and I consent to it, nor did I ever agree with him to go off with the money of the bank, or of the corporation on deposit in the bank." Upon his cross-examination he was asked: "Q. Did not you and Beggs, at or previous to the time you met in the saloon, on the 6th day of June, 1892, agree to take this $8,500 which Beggs had drawn out of the bank, and go to San Francisco? A. No, sir. Q. Did you not further agree that you should take this money to San Francisco, and change it into currency? A. No, sir. Q. And did you not agree that after the money was changed into currency you should take the train which goes at seven o'clock towards Portland, Or., and take the money with you, and go to Sacramento? A. He spoke about going to Sacramento on the seven o'clock train. Q. I am asking you if you did not agree with him to do that before one o'clock of June 6th? A. We agreed to go to Sacramento, yes, but did not agree to take the money." The counsel for the prosecution then asked the following questions: "Q. I will now ask if you did not go to San Francisco with Mr. Beggs on Monday afternoon, Monday, the 6th day of June, 1892, and take with you $8,500 which Mr. Beggs had drawn from the First National Bank of the city of Oakland, belonging to the First Oakland Consolidated Street Railway Company?" to which the witness answered, "Yes." "Q. Did you not, when you arrived in San Francisco, assist Mr. Beggs in changing about $1,300 of that money into currency? A. I changed $1,300 of that money into currency. I did not do so in order to make it easier for Mr. Beggs and myself to flee with this money. Q. Did you not return to Oakland, bring back this same money with Mr. Beggs, and leave Mr. Beggs somewhere near Oakland Point, and you go to the Sixteenth street station, taking with you $6,000 of this money? A. We returned to Oakland, and I went to Sixteenth street station with the money, at Begg's dictation." These last three questions were objected to by the defendant's counsel upon the ground that they were not proper cross-examination, not having reference to any matter testified to by the witness in his examination in chief. The court overruled the objection, and, upon the witness declining to answer the questions on the further ground that the answers would tend to criminate him, the court peremptorily ordered him to answer, and thereupon the above answers were given. These rulings of the court were properly excepted to, and are now assigned as error.

We are of the opinion that the court did not err in overruling the objections. Section 1323 of the Penal Code provides: "A defendant in a criminal action or proceeding cannot be compelled to be a witness against himself; but if he offer himself as a witness he may be cross-examined by the counsel for the people as to all matters about which he was examined in chief." The effect of the latter clause of the above is to take from the court any discretion which it might ordinarily exercise in allowing the range of a cross-examination to extend beyond the matter brought out upon the direct examination, (see People v. Rozelle, 78 Cal. 84, 20 Pac. 36,) and to prevent the prosecution from questioning the defendant upon the case generally, and in effect making him its own witness, (People v. O'Brien, 66 Cal. 602, 6 Pac. 695.) The statute does not, however, place any limitation or restriction upon the extent or character of his cross-examination "as to all matters about which he was examined in chief," and upon those matters he may be cross-examined as fully as any other witness. Any question which would have the tendency to elicit from him the whole truth about any matter upon which he had been examined in chief, or which would explain or qualify or destroy the force of his direct testimony, whether it be to give the whole of a conversation or transaction of which he had given only a part, to show by his own admissions that he had made contrary statements, or that his conduct had been inconsistent with the statements given in his direct testimony, and thus throw discredit upon them, would be legitimate cross-examination. The "matter" about which the defendant had been examined in chief was whether he had co-operated or acted in concert with Beggs in appropriating to his own use and converting the money in question; and, although he had stated in categorical terms that he had not done so, his answers were not conclusive in his favor, nor did they prevent the prosecution from showing through the medium of a cross-examination that they were false; and for this purpose the prosecution was not limited to a repetition of the questions propounded upon the direct examination, or to asking him whether his answers to those questions were correct or not. Neither was the right of cross-examination limited to the mere questions that his counsel had asked him upon the direct examination, or to the replies which he had made to those questions, but it extended to the entire matter "about" which he had been examined in his own behalf, viz. whether he had given to Beggs any advice or suggestion or aid in appropriating the money. By offering himself as a witness he waived all objection to his constitutional right to claim exemption from giving testimony against himself upon all the matters about which he should volunteer to testify, and as to those matters he opened the door for the most searching investigation by cross-examination as to the accuracy of his testimony, as fully as any other witness who might have given the same testimony. The right of cross-examination affords the most effective mode of testing the accuracy or credibility of a witness, and should not be restricted beyond the requirements of the statute. It was not the intention of the legislature to give to a defendant the opportunity of making any statement upon his direct examination which he might choose, in reference to the issue before the court, and to preclude the prosecution from showing out of his own mouth that such statement is false. In People v. Rozelle, 78 Cal. 84, 20 Pac. 36, it was held that the defendant might be cross-examined upon a letter which he had written, and about which no questions had been asked him upon the direct examination, upon the theory that the letter tended to contradict the denials which he had made on his direct examination. The statute of Missouri authorizing the defendant to be a witness in his own behalf contains a restriction upon his cross-examination in the same language as our own. In State v. McKinzie, 102 Mo. 620, 15 S. W. 149, there had been evidence on the part of the prosecution tending to show that the defendant had provoked a controversy by striking the deceased with a cane, and the defendant offered himself as a witness, and testified in his own behalf that he had no cane with him at the time of the killing, nor did he strike the deceased with a cane. Upon his cross-examination he was asked whether he did not have a cane with him in a certain saloon which he and the deceased had left a short time before the killing. This question was objected to upon the ground that the defendant had only been questioned about what occurred after he left the saloon, and that he could not be questioned as to what had occurred prior thereto; but the court held that the question was proper cross-examination, upon the ground that he had been asked about having a cane with him and using it in the homicide, and that his possession and use of the cane were the matters referred to in the examination in chief, and that he might be cross-examined fully with reference to such possession and use. The testimony of the defendant that he had been with Beggs during the greater portion of the preceding day, and until a late hour in the night, and that they had parted with an agreement to meet in a saloon across the street from the bank between 11 and 12 o'clock on the next day without any particular purpose for so meeting, taken in connection with his testimony that they had agreed to go to Sacramento by the 7 o'clock train, made the questions proper cross-examination for the purpose of throwing discredit upon the accuracy of his statements that they did not also agree to take the money with them, and that he had never advised Beggs to take the funds of the corporation of which he was the secretary, and had never agreed with him to go off with the money, or consented to his doing so. If the defendant and Beggs did in fact, on the 6th of June, after they had met at the saloon according to their previous appointment, go to San Francisco together, with this money, and after their arrival there the defendant changed a portion of it into currency, and thereafter returned to Oakland, and went to the Sixteenth street station with this same money, where he met Beggs, and they thereafter took tickets and went to Sacramento, taking this money with them, these facts would tend to show concerted action and a prior agreement between them to do the acts. For this purpose it was proper to permit the prosecution to show these facts by the cross-examination of the defendant. We find no error in the record, and the judgment and order are affirmed.

(100 Cal. 478)

PEOPLE v. CROWLEY. (No. 21,028.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 23, 1893.)

BURGLARY—INDICTMENT AND PROOF—DEFENDANT AS WITNESS — CROSS-EXAMINATION — IMPEACHMENT—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

1. One may be convicted of attempted burglary under an indictment alleging an attempt to enter a house with intent to commit larceny, though the proof shows an attempt to enter with intent to commit robbery.

2. Though Pen. Code, § 1323, authorizes the cross-examination of defendant in a criminal case only as to matters about which he was examined in chief, still, under Code Civil Proc. § 2051, providing that, for the purpose of impeaching "a witness," it may be shown by the examination of the witness that he has been convicted of a felony, a defendant in a criminal case may, on cross-examination, be asked if he has been convicted of a felony.

3. In a criminal case the sufficiency of the evidence cannot be reviewed, where it does not appear by the bill of exceptions that the point was raised below.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Mendocino county; R. McGarvey, Judge.

Phil. Crowley was convicted of attempted burglary, and appeals. Affirmed.

J. Q. White, J. E. Pemberton, Dist. Atty., Carroll Cook, and Geo. A. Sturtevant, for appellant. W. H. H. Hart, Atty. Gen., for the People.

McFARLAND, J. The appellant was informed against, and convicted of the crime of an attempt to commit burglary; and he appeals from the judgment, and from an order denying a new trial. There are only two points made by appellant which need special notice,—which points, by the way, are not discussed in the brief of respondent.

1. The charge is that appellant feloniously attempted to enter the house of one Patrick Kenny with intent to commit larceny; and it is contended that the court erroneously refused to give an instruction to the jury to the effect that if he attempted to enter the house forcibly, with the intention "of forcibly taking personal property from the immediate presence or possession of said Patrick Kenny, and against his will, and by means of force or fear," then he could not be convicted of the crime charged in the information. We do not think that the court erred in this ruling. A charge that the attempted entry was with intent to commit a certain offense would not be sustained by proof of an intent to commit an entirely different sort of offense; as, for instance, the charge of intent to commit larceny would not be sustained by proof of an intent to commit rape. But larceny and robbery are generically the same,—the one being merely an aggravated form of the other. Each is the felonious taking of the personal property of another, although in robbery the felonious taking is accomplished by force or threats. The text-books speak of robbery as "an aggravated species of larceny." 2 Russ. Crimes, p. 101. In East's Pleas of the Crown, the author, after speaking of certain larcenies from the person, says, "The next species of aggravated larceny from the person is robbery;" and, indeed, the distinction between certain larcenies from the person and robbery is often hard to draw. It has been held here that robbery necessarily includes larceny, and that under an indictment for the former there may be a conviction of the latter. People v. Jones, 53 Cal. 58; People v. Gilbert, 60 Cal. 111. In People v. Jones, supra, the court say that "an indictment for robbery must aver every fact necessary to constitute larceny, and more." This being so, if the appellant had the intent to commit robbery, that intent included all the elements of an intent to commit larceny. The information in the case at bar, therefore, sufficiently complies with the reason of the rule that a defendant must be informed of the charge against him. We have been referred to no case to the contrary.

2. The information charges that appellant had been previously convicted of a felony, and by his plea appellant confessed the prior conviction. While on the stand as a witness for himself, the appellant testified to some things which occurred on the night of the alleged burglary, and on cross-examination he was asked by counsel for the prosecution if he had not been previously convicted of a felony. Appellant objected to the question, and his objection was overruled, and he contends that this ruling was erroneous. The first legislation about the testimony of a defendant in a criminal case, except the general provision that he could not be compelled to testify against himself, was that on a preliminary examination he might make a statement, if he so desired; but he could not be asked any question, except by the magistrate, who could ask him only a few questions expressly enumerated in the statute. Hitt. Gen. Laws, pars. 1742–1746. It was afterwards enacted that on the trial of a person charged with crime "the person so charged shall, at his own request, but not otherwise, be deemed a competent witness, the credit to be given to his testimony being left solely to the jury." When the Codes were adopted, section 1323 of the Penal Code simply provided that "a defendant in a criminal action or proceeding to which he is a party is not, without his consent, a competent witness for or against himself." Thus far there was no provision about the cross-examination of the defendant when he offered himself as a witness, although it was always provided that he could not be compelled to testify against himself. In some of the states he is allowed to make a statement before the jury, but cannot be cross-examined at all. But in 1874 the present statutory law upon the subject was enacted by an amendment to said section 1323 of the Penal Code, which made it read as follows: "A defendant in a criminal action or proceeding cannot be compelled to be a witness against himself. But if he offer himself as a witness he may be cross-examined by the counsel for the people as to all matters about which he was examined in chief."

The proper construction of section 1323, as it now stands, has not been definitely settled. In People v. Rozelle, 78 Cal. 84, 20 Pac. 36, there is some general language in the opinion of the majority of the court to the effect that the same rule applies to a defendant as to other witnesses, but that language is immediately qualified in the next sentence. The only thing decided there was that after a defendant, as a witness, "had denied, in general terms, that he aided, abetted, counseled, or encouraged the commission of the offense charged," he might be asked on cross-examination if he had written a certain letter showing that he had so aided, etc. Of the cases cited in the opinion, People v. McGungill, 41 Cal. 431; People v. Dennis, 39 Cal. 634; People v. Reinhart, Id. 449; and People v. Russell, 46 Cal. 121,—were all decided before section 1323 was enacted, and therefore afford no aid in its construction. In People v. Beck, 58 Cal. 212, there was no question as to the cross-examination of a defendant, the only thing there decided being that he could be impeached as a witness by showing his bad character for truth. People v. Johnson, 57 Cal. 571, which will be noticed hereafter, is in point as to one phase of the question. We have been referred to no case decided since the present condition of the statutory law on the subject, which holds that the cross-examination of a defendant may be as wide as that of any other witness. On the other hand, in People v. O'Brien, 66 Cal. 602, 6 Pac. 695, Morrison, C. J., delivering the opinion of the court, after quoting section 1323 as it now stands, says of a defendant in a criminal action, that "when he is called on his own behalf, and examined respecting a particular fact or matter in the case, the right of cross-examination is confined to the fact or matter testified to on the examination in chief," and that "such is the express language of the statute." It is not correct to say that section 1323 merely states the common-law rule as to the cross-examination of witnesses generally; for witnesses under the general rule can, for various purposes, be asked concerning matters about which they had not been examined in chief. 2 Phil. Ev. p. 895 et seq. And in People v. O'Brien, 96 Cal. 171, 31 Pac. 45, the court say that, "so far as the defendant is concerned, the court is not allowed that discretion as to the extent of the scope of the cross-examination which it is permitted to exercise in the examination of the other witnesses." But, with respect to the precise point made in the case at bar, this court, in People v. Johnson, 57 Cal. 571, ruled against the contention of appellant. In that case the defendant was asked on cross-examination if he had not been convicted of a prior felony, and it was held that the trial court had not erred in allowing the question. The decision was based upon the ground that section 2051, Code Civil Proc., is the governing section as to such question; and that section provides that, for the purpose of impeaching "a witness," it "may be shown by the examination of the witness * * * that he had been convicted of a felony." Counsel for appellant contends very forcibly that, as in a case like the one at bar, the part of the information charging a prior conviction cannot be read to the jury, there should be no evidence allowed on that subject, and that such rule cannot be evaded through the form of cross-examining the defendant. But those were the very facts presented in People v. Johnson, and upon the authority of that case we must hold that the contention of appellant cannot be maintained.

Counsel for appellant makes the point in his brief that the verdict is not sustained by the evidence, but no such point appears in the record. The bill of exceptions shows upon its face that it does not contain all the evidence. Only enough of the evidence to illustrate the points made is presented. It is true that in a criminal case it is not necessary for the appellant to state the particulars in which the evidence was insufficient to sustain the verdict, but it must appear somewhere in the record that the point of the insufficiency of the evidence was made. Where no such point is made, the prosecution is not called upon to see to it that all the evidence is put into the bill of exceptions. In the case at bar it does not appear from the bill of exceptions that insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict was one of the grounds upon which the motion for a new trial was based. The point, therefore, is not before us.

Since writing the above our attention has been called to the fact that appellant, under a suggestion of diminution of the record, has filed here a certified copy of a motion for new trial. But a notice of motion for a new trial is no part of the judgment roll, and can be made part of the record only by a bill of exceptions. However, we have examined the evidence; and, while it is clear that neither party intended that all the evidence should be put into the bill of exceptions, still we think that there is sufficient of it to support the verdict. We do not think that either of the other points made by appellant is tenable, or requires special notice. In People v. Gallagher, 35 Pac. 80, (No. 20,972, this day decided,) the right to cross-examine a defendant is quite fully discussed. The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: FITZGERALD, J.; DE HAVEN, J.

---

100 Cal. 623

TREAT v. DORMAN et al. (No. 15,391.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 30, 1893.)

MORTGAGES—LIEN—GROWING CROPS.

A mortgage of land, with the rents, issues, and profits thereof, is a lien on the crop growing when suit is begun to foreclose, superior to a junior chattel mortgage on said crop.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Contra Costa county; Jos. P. Jones, Judge.

Action by Webster Treat against Asenath Dorman and the Earl Fruit Company to foreclose a mortgage. Decree for complainant. The Earl Fruit Company appeals from part of the decree. Affirmed.

Holl & Dunn, for appellant. W. S. Tinning and Cary Howard, for respondents.

SEARLS, C. This action was brought to foreclose a mortgage for $35,000 and interest, executed July 8, 1891, in favor of plaintiff, by Emery D. Howe and Ellen D. Thurber, upon a ranch situate in Contra Costa county. The mortgage purported to convey the land, etc., with the "rents, issues, and profits thereof," and was acknowledged and duly recorded July 10, 1891. The Earl Fruit Company (a corporation) held a subsequent chattel mortgage, executed in due form, July 20, 1892, upon the "crops of fruits and grapes now growing and to be grown, during the seasons of 1892 and 1893," upon the same ranch, and which was recorded July 21, 1892. The Earl Fruit Company was made a defendant in the action, and filed an answer and cross complaint, in the latter of which it set up its chattel mortgage, and averred there was due thereon $882.65, for which sum it prayed judgment against the mortgagor defendants, and that it be declared a lien upon the fruit and grape crops of 1893; and prayed, further, that, if plaintiff's mortgage be declared a lien, the premises be sold separately from the fruit and grape crops of 1893, and that the said fruit and grape crops be next sold, and the proceeds thereof, after the payment of any deficiency due the plaintiff, be paid to this cross complainant upon the said indebtedness, etc. On the application of the plaintiff, a receiver was appointed in the case January 19, 1893, to take charge, etc., pending the litigation. The court, upon a trial of the cause, found in favor of the plaintiff, and also in favor of the Earl Fruit Company, and entered a decree for the sale of the real property to satisfy the plaintiff's mortgage; found the lien of plaintiff's mortgage on the fruit crop of 1893, prior to the chattel mortgage; and decreed the proceeds thereof to be applied—First, to satisfy any deficiency due plaintiff after a sale of the real property; and, second, to the satisfaction of the sum found due said Earl Fruit Company, and secured by said chattel mortgage. The Earl Fruit Company appeals from so much of the decree as requires the receiver to pay, out of the proceeds of the crop of 1893, the deficiency, if any, due to plaintiff, and the residue to said company, etc. The appeal is presented on the judgment roll.

It is not often that a party appeals from a judgment granting him all that he asked, and yet in this case just that thing has happened. The contention of appellant is that it is entitled, under section 580 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to any relief consistent with the case made by its cross complaint, and embraced within the issue. This is true. Still, every intendment is in favor of the regularity of the judgment, and where, as in the present case, the cause comes up on the judgment roll, with no bill of exceptions or statement, and nothing to show that appellant ever even asked for any other or further relief than that which he prayed for and received, it is not perceived on what principle he can be heard to complain. Waiving all this, however, and the judgment appealed from should be affirmed. The prior mortgage of the plaintiff, in express terms, was made to cover the "rents, issues, and profits" of the mortgaged premises. In Montgomery v. Merrill, 65 Cal. 432, 4 Pac. 414, as here, the mortgage was made to cover the rents, issues, and profits, and, as here, a receiver had been appointed, during the pendency of the action, who had harvested and sold a crop grown upon the land, and held the proceeds. At the foreclosure sale the mortgaged premises did not bring a sum sufficient to satisfy the debt secured by the mortgage, and the plaintiff applied for an order that the money received from the sale of the crop be applied to the payment of the deficiency; and this court held that, under the mortgage thus worded, "not only the land described in the complaint, but the rents, issues, and profits thereof, were mortgaged, so that the crop which the receiver took possession of was a part of the mortgaged property." The contest there was between the mortgagee and mortgagor, but, upon principle, the lien which is valid as against the mortgagor is equally valid as against a subsequent mortgagee with notice. In the present case the plaintiff had an abstract right to have the entire property sold, and its value would have been enhanced by so much as the value of the growing crops of grapes and fruit; but as between plaintiff and defendant, the latter of whom had a lien on the crops only, it was proper, at the request of the latter, to segregate the crops in order that the surplus, if any, after satisfying the sum secured by the mortgage to plaintiff, might be applied to the extinguishment of the subsequent mortgage to defendant. The judgment appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: VANCLIEF, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

(100 Cal. 493)

LOVEREN v. LOVEREN. (No. 15,343.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 23, 1893.)

DIVORCE—ALIMONY PENDENTE LITE.

Money raised on the wife's own credit, and paid for expenses already incurred, is not reimbursable pendente lite, at the court's discretion, as money necessary to enable her to prosecute the action. Civil Code, § 137.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Humboldt county; G. W. Hunter, Judge.

In the suit of Mary J. Loveren against S. S. Loveren for a divorce, defendant appeals from an order for alimony pendente lite. Reversed.

J. N. Gillett, J. F. Coonan, and E. W. Wilson, for appellant. Chamberlin & Wheeler and Frank McGowan, for respondent.

FITZGERALD, J. This is an appeal from an order made by the court below during the pendency of an action for divorce requiring the defendant to "pay the plaintiff the sum of $799.68 for the purpose of defraying the costs and expenses of this action incurred by her up to this date." The only question to be determined here involves the power of the court to make such order. The power of the court to grant alimony pendente lite in an action for divorce is derived solely from that part of section 137, Civil Code, which reads as follows: "While an action for divorce is pending the court may, in its discretion, require the husband to pay as alimony any money necessary to enable the wife * * * to prosecute or defend the action." The plain object of this statute was to empower the court during the pendency of an action for divorce, upon a proper showing made by the wife for that purpose, to compel the husband to provide her with the means necessary to enable her to prosecute or defend the action. If the expenses of the action have been incurred or paid by her with means derived from her separate estate, or upon her credit, then there can be no necessity for an allowance by the court to enable her to do that which she has already done, and without such necessity the court has no authority under the statute to make such an order. And no better evidence can be adduced of her ability in this respect than the fact that she has been able, as the record shows, to incur these expenses and to pay them with money borrowed by her entirely upon the strength of her own credit. Expenses so incurred and paid may be, where it is proper to do so, taxable as costs in the case, but they cannot be made the basis of an order, within the meaning of this statute granting an allowance therefor, and compelling the husband to pay them. Such an allowance can only be granted as to expenses necessary to be incurred in the future prosecution or defense of the action, and cannot be made for the payment of past expenses, except where such payment is necessary to be made in order to enable the wife to further prosecute or defend her case. Section 1769 of the New York Code, which is substantially the same as section 137 of our Code, above quoted, was so construed by the court of appeals of that state in Beadleston v. Beadleston, 103 N. Y. 402, 8 N. E. 735. The appeal in that case was also from an order granting an allowance pending an action for divorce to pay expenses previously incurred. This case was subsequently approved in McCarthy v. McCarthy, (N. Y. App.) 33 N. E. 550. In Bohnert v. Bohnert, 91 Cal. 430, 27 Pac. 732, which was an action for divorce, the appeal was taken by the husband from two orders made after judgment. The first order was for an allowance of "$87.50, to be paid out forthwith as expenses for transcribing the testimony on the part of the defendant already incurred." It appears that the allowance for past unpaid expenses for transcribing the testimony referred to was necessary to be made, in order to enable the wife to further prosecute or defend her case in perfecting her appeal to this court. This allowance was clearly authorized by the statute. The second order appealed from required the husband to "pay to the clerk of said court the amount of $269.90 to be by said clerk retained, and to await further action herein." This order was affirmed by the court, on the ground that the husband was not injured by it. That case is neither in conflict with the views herein expressed nor with the New York cases cited; but is, so far as it goes, in line with them. The order appealed from herein shows upon its face that the allowance was made to pay expenses theretofore incurred; and, as it does not appear, and is not claimed, that it was made upon the ground that it was necessary to enable the wife to further prosecute or defend the action, it follows that the order should be reversed. So ordered.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; DE HAVEN, J.; McFARLAND, J.; GAROUTTE, J.; PATERSON, J.; HARRISON, J.

100 Cal. 523

PEOPLE v. KRUGER. (No. 21,023.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 26, 1893.)

BURGLARY—INSTRUCTIONS AS TO DEGREE—IMPEACHING WITNESS.

1. One jointly indicted with defendant for burglary, and who had pleaded guilty, as a witness for the state testified that defendant had nothing to do with the robbery. Held that, for the purpose of laying a foundation for showing that he had made contradictory statements, the state was properly allowed to ask him if, when he pleaded guilty, he did not, in the presence of the court, its officers, and others, state that defendant was one of the parties to the robbery, there being no purpose to impeach him by his written testimony, so that it should have been first read to him.

2. It being clear that a burglary, if committed at all, was in the nighttime, there can be no injury in an instruction that, if defendant is found guilty, it should be of burglary in the first degree.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; James M. Trout, Judge.

Adolph Kruger was convicted of burglary, and appeals. Affirmed.

Robert Ferral, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Hart, for the People.

McFARLAND, J. The information charges appellant, jointly with one Oman, with the crime of burglary. He was convicted, and appeals from the judgment, and from an order denying a new trial.

Oman, who had pleaded guilty, was called as a witness for the prosecution, and testified that appellant had nothing to do with the commission of the alleged crime. The prosecuting attorney was allowed, on the ground of surprise, to ask the witness if, at the time he pleaded guilty, he had not stated, in the presence of the court, the clerk, the shorthand reporter, the prosecuting attorney, and others, that appellant was one of the parties who committed the crime, and had climbed over the roof through the skylight, etc. To this, counsel for appellant objected, not upon the ground that it was not a genuine case of surprise, but upon the ground that, if he made such a statement, he should first have the testimony read to him. We do not think that the court erred in overruling the objection. The purpose was not to impeach the witness by a written instrument, but simply to lay a foundation for showing that he had made contradictory statements. It does not even appear that the statement referred to was in the shape of testimony.

Objection is made to the last paragraph of the court's charge to the jury, to the effect that if the jury were convinced from the evidence, beyond a reasonable doubt, that appellant was guilty of the crime charged, then their verdict should be, "Guilty of burglary in the first degree." It is true that a court should not often hazard such an instruction; but it is so clear in the case at bar that the burglary charged was committed, if at all, in the nighttime, that no possible injury could have been done by the instruction. The instructions, as a whole, stated the law applicable to the case correctly, and were not at all unfavorable to appellant.

The most direct evidence against appellant came from accomplices, but we think that their testimony was sufficiently corroborated. There are no other points made by appellant. Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: DE HAVEN, J., FITZGERALD, J.

100 Cal. 511

MURRAY v. GLEESON. (No. 15,395.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 26, 1893.)

DISMISSAL—FAILURE TO SERVE SUMMONS.

Under Code Civil Proc. § 581, subd. 7, which provides that an action shall be dismissed "unless summons shall have been issued within one year, and served, and return thereon made within three years," it is error to dismiss an action, because the summons was not served within one year after suit brought.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Contra Costa county; Joseph P. Jones, Judge.

Action by William F. Murray against John Gleeson to foreclose a mortgage. From a judgment dismissing the action, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

J. W. Harding, for appellant. A. H. Griffith and G. W. Bowie, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. This is an action to foreclose a mortgage on real property. The complaint was filed and the summons issued on December 26, 1891. The summons was served upon the defendant on April 3, 1893, and on the 12th of that month defendant served notice upon the plaintiff that he would, on May 1, 1893, move the court to dismiss the action on the ground that the summons was not served within the time required by law. At the time named the motion was heard by the court, and taken under advisement until the 15th of the same month, when the motion was granted, and judgment entered dismissing the action solely "on the ground that the summons was not served within one year after the commencement of the action." From this judgment the plaintiff appeals.

The action of the court was based upon subdivision 7 of section 581, Code Civil Proc., which was added to the Code by an amendment made in 1889, and reads as follows: "And no action heretofore or hereafter commenced shall be further prosecuted, and no further proceedings shall be had therein, and all actions heretofore or hereafter commenced shall be dismissed by the court in which the same shall have been commenced on its own motion, or on the motion of any party interested therein, whether named in the complaint or not, unless summons shall have been issued within one year, and served, and return thereon made within three years after the commencement of said action, or unless appearance has been made by the defendant or defendants therein within said three years." The respondent contends that this language, when properly construed, means that the summons must be both issued and served within one year after the complaint is filed; and whether this be so or not is the only question presented for decision. Prior to the amendment in question, the statute provided that the summons must be issued within one year after filing the complaint, but there was no express limitation as to the time within which service and return must be made. It was, however, held that the service must be made within a reasonable time, and, if not so made, that it was ground for a dismissal of the action. Grigsby v. Napa Co., 36 Cal. 585; Carpentier v. Minturn, 39 Cal. 450; Eldridge v. Kay, 45 Cal. 49; Lander v. Fleming, 47 Cal. 614; Diggins v. Thornton, 96 Cal. 417, 31 Pac. 289. In the case first cited the summons was served about two years and eight months after it was issued. A motion to dismiss the action for want of prosecution was made and granted on the ground that the delay was unreasonable. On appeal the order was affirmed. In the case last cited the complaint was filed about nine years before the summons was served. A motion to dismiss was made and denied. On appeal it was held that the delay was grossly unreasonable, and was ground for dismissing the action, in the absence of a showing of the proper exercise of diligence in the service of the summons. The order was reversed. If respondent's construction is correct, then, while the summons must be issued and served within a year, the return may be delayed for two years or more thereafter. But this, in our opinion, is not the meaning of the statute, and was never intended by the legislators who passed it. Section 406, Code Civil Proc., provides that the summons may be issued at any time within one year after the complaint is filed. It may therefore be issued on the last day of the year, and at that time the defendant may be at a distance, or may conceal himself to avoid service. When the defendant is found and actually served, the court acquires jurisdiction of his person, and thereafter no great length of time can be required for making the return. To construe the statute, therefore, as requiring the service to be made within a year, and the return within three years, would be unreasonable and absurd. In our opinion, one of the obvious purposes in adopting the amendment was to fix three years as the limit of time beyond which no service or return could be made, thus meeting and removing an uncertainty which had before existed. The question, however, as to whether there has been reasonable diligence in making the service within the time limited is left an open one, to be considered and decided by the court upon the facts of each particular case. See Kreiss v. Hotaling, (Cal.) 33 Pac. 1125. It follows that the court erred in granting the defendant's motion, and that the judgment should be reversed, and the cause remanded.

We concur: SEARLS, C.; TEMPLE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded.

(4 Cal. Unrep. 408)

McHARRY v. STEWART. (No. 15,187.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 30, 1893.)

HOMESTEAD OF WIFE AND HER CHILDREN—CONVEYANCE OF PART BY WIFE TO HUSBAND—TITLE OF HUSBAND—GOVERNMENT LAND CONTESTS—QUESTIONS DETERMINED ON APPEAL—REVIEW BY STATE COURT.

1. Code Civil Proc. § 1468, provides that, if deceased left also a minor child or children, one-half the real estate of which deceased died seised shall "belong" to his widow, and the remainder to the child or children. Section 1485 provides that persons succeeding to the title of "successors to homesteads" have all the rights of the persons whose interests they acquire. Held, that a wife, having minor children by a former, deceased husband, could convey to her second husband a certain 60 acres of 175 acres of land which were set apart to her and her children as a homestead out of the lands of her deceased husband.

2. Code Civil Proc. § 764, provides that when it appears, in an action of partition, that one or more of the tenants in common has conveyed in fee to another person a specific part of the common land, the land so conveyed shall be allotted in partition to such purchaser, etc., if such tract can be so allotted without material injury to the other cotenants. Held, that such purchaser's right to file upon an "adjoining farm homestead" under Rev. St. U. S. §§ 2289, 2290, cannot be defeated by the possibility that, on the partition, other land not adjoining that filed upon may be allotted him, instead of the specific part conveyed to him.

3. Rev. St. U. S. § 2273, provides that all questions as to the right of pre-emption, arising between different settlers, shall be determined by the register and receiver of the district within which the land is situated, and for "appeals from the decision of the district officers." Held that, in the absence of any statute limiting the power of the commissioner of the land office and secretary of the interior on appeal, the power will not be denied to the commissioner and secretary to decide questions arising on evidence, which were not decided by such district officers.

4. Where the secretary of the interior, in a land contest, decided on the evidence that the residence of a claimant of land as an "adjoining farm homestead," under Rev. St. U. S. §§ 2289, 2290, on his own land adjoining the tract claimed, was not such as to entitle him to such tract, the supreme court of California has no jurisdiction to review such question in ejectment against such claimant by one claiming the same land under the pre-emption laws of the United States.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Contra Costa county; Joseph P. Jones, Judge.

Action of ejectment by Daniel S. C. McHarry against James Stewart. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Theo. Wagner and G. W. Bowie, for appellant. Charles E. Wilson and Wm. Wells, for respondent.

HAYNES, C. The complaint is in ejectment, in the usual form, and the plaintiff's title is evidenced by a patent from the United States. Defendant answered, denying all the allegations of the complaint except that alleging defendant's possession, and filed a cross complaint setting out facts upon which he claims that plaintiff should be adjudged a trustee of the legal title for his benefit, and be required to convey the same to him. Plaintiff's demurrer to the cross complaint was sustained, and judgment thereon, as well as upon the issues raised by defendant's answer, which were tried by the court, was rendered against the defendant, who now appeals from the judgment; and the only question presented is as to the sufficiency of the cross complaint.

On December 10, 1883, the defendant filed upon the demanded premises as an "adjoining farm homestead," under sections 2289 and 2290, Rev. St. U. S., defendant then claiming to be the owner of about 60 acres of adjoining lands, upon which he resided. On December 13th of the same year, the plaintiff, claiming a residence upon a subdivision of government lands adjoining the demanded premises, filed a pre-emption claim including the demanded premises. Upon these conflicting claims, a contest arose before the local land office, and testimony was taken. The cross complaint sets out the facts which defendant claims were proven upon the hearing, and, by exhibits attached thereto, sets out the decision of the register and receiver thereon, the decision of the commissioner of the general land office upon appeal, the decision of the secretary of the interior upon appeal from the commissioner, and also the decision of the secretary upon a petition for review. The land which defendant claimed to own, and upon which he claimed to reside at the time he filed upon the demanded premises, was formerly a part of the Pinole rancho, in which one James McClellan owned an undivided interest, which, after his marriage, was set off to him in that part of the rancho adjoining the demanded premises. McClellan died in December, 1871, leaving his widow, Getta, and two minor children, surviving him. In February, 1876, a homestead containing 175 acres was set apart by the probate court, for the use of the widow and minor children, in that part of the land partitioned to McClellan which adjoined the demanded premises. Afterwards, in March, 1876, the widow married the defendant, Stewart. On October 2, 1882, Mrs. Stewart conveyed to her husband (the defendant) a portion of the homestead, containing about 60 acres, adjoining the demanded premises, the children being still minors. Upon these facts, and without considering the other evidence before them, the register and receiver held that defendant acquired no right or title by his purchase from his wife, and therefore was not entitled to an "adjoining farm homestead" under the statute, and awarded the land to McHarry. On appeal to the commissioner, this decision was reversed, and the land was awarded to Stewart; and, upon appeal to the secretary, the commissioner's decision was reversed, and the land again awarded to McHarry. The evidence taken before the register and receiver principally related to two points, viz. Stewart's ownership and title to the land conveyed to him by his wife, and his residence thereon. It is conceded that, after Stewart filed upon the demanded premises, his residence was principally at Martinez, where he had gone into business. He claimed, however, that he left the land in consequence of assaults made upon him by the McHarrys, and threats which put him in fear. The register and receiver did not pass upon this evidence, but rested their decision solely upon want of title to the adjoining lands, while the commissioner held his title sufficient, and that his absence from the land was excused by the acts of McHarry. The secretary held against Stewart on both points. So far as questions of fact are concerned, all courts are bound by the decision of the land department, unless such decision has been obtained by fraud or imposition. In this case we find nothing to justify a review of questions of fact. Shanklin v. McNamara, 87 Cal. 371, 26 Pac. 345; Lee v. Johnson, 116 U. S. 48, 6 Sup. Ct. 249, and cases there cited. The principal questions are therefore—First, whether Stewart's ownership and title were sufficient to entitle him to an additional farm homestead; and, if that is answered in the affirmative, second, whether his residence on the land conveyed to him by his wife was such as the law required for the purpose of securing such additional homestead.

The land set apart by the probate court as a homestead was the separate property of the deceased, James McClellan. Such homesteads, when not community property, can only be set apart for a limited time. The estate in the lands so set apart vests, however, in those declared by the statute to be entitled to it, but subject to the assignment of such homestead by the court, and at the expiration of the time limited for its existence is subject to partition as though no homestead had been created. Section 1468, Code Civil Proc., (act of March 24, 1874, as well as the act of 1881,) provides: "If the deceased left also a minor child or children, the one-half of such property shall belong to the widow or surviving husband, and the remainder to the child, or in equal shares to the children if there be more than one." In Estate of Moore, 57 Cal. 444, it was said: 'The right to have a homestead set apart is no estate, either in law or in equity." It was accordingly there held that the deed of the widow, made before the homestead was set apart, did not nor could convey away the right to a homestead; but it was not held that the deed was not operative to convey all her interest in the estate which she took by succession, such interest being subject to the power of the court to set apart a homestead. Her grantee therefore took the estate, and was the owner of it, but subject to the homestead afterwards set apart by the court. If this were doubtful under the provisions of the Code above referred to, section 1485, Code Civil Proc., makes it clear. It is there provided: "Persons succeeding by purchase or otherwise to the interests, rights and title of successors to homesteads, or to the right to have homesteads set apart to them, as in this chapter provided, have all the rights and benefits conferred by law on the persons whose interests and rights they acquire." The obvious intent of this section is to confirm to purchasers of the estate all the rights and interests which the grantor had or could enjoy, subject to the homestead right, and, at the termination of the homestead, the unincumbered estate. The words "successors to homesteads" certainly imply this. Stewart therefore had title to the land, and was the owner. But it is contended by respondent—and the secretary of the interior seems principally to have relied thereon—that he took but an undivided interest in the homestead, and, when the land came to be partitioned, the land set off to him might not adjoin the demanded premises. Section 764, Code Civil Proc., provides, among other things, as follows: "Whenever it shall appear, in an action for the partition of lands, that one or more of the tenants in common, being the owner of an undivided interest in the tract of land sought to be partitioned, has sold to another person a specific tract by metes and bounds, out of the common land, and executed to the purchaser a deed of conveyance, purporting to convey the whole title to such specific tract to the purchaser in fee and in severalty, the land described in such deed shall be alloted and set apart in partition to such purchaser, his heirs or assigns, or in such manner as shall make such deed effectual as a conveyance of the whole title to such segregated parcel, if such tract or tracts of land can be so allotted or set apart without material injury of the rights and interests of the other co-tenants who may not have joined in such conveyance." To defeat Stewart's right upon this ground, it must be assumed that partition cannot be made so as to give him the part of the land conveyed to him, or some part of it, adjoining the public lands in question, or that the bare possibility of such result is sufficient to defeat the right to an adjoining homestead. It will hardly be contended that, if Stewart's ownership and title were otherwise unquestioned, the existence of a mortgage upon it would defeat his right to an additional homestead, because his title, at some time in the future, might be taken away by foreclosure and sale; yet respondent's contention, carried to its logical conclusion, would seem to lead to that result. The contingency in question does not destroy or affect Stewart's ownership for the purposes of the homestead right, and the register and the receiver and the secretary erred in so holding.

The question of Stewart's residence is one of greater difficulty. It may be conceded that the cross complaint shows that his residence upon the land purchased from his wife was not continuous; but facts are alleged which, if satisfactorily proved, would excuse his absence from it. The cross complaint, however, sets out in full, as exhibits, the decision of the commissioner of the general land office in his favor upon that question, and the decision of the secretary of the interior reversing that decision, thus presenting the question of the jurisdiction of the court to re-examine it. It is contended by appellant that all the questions presented by the contest before the register and receiver, upon which evidence was introduced, should have been decided by them, and that the commissioner and secretary had no power to pass upon questions of fact not passed upon by the register and receiver; that it was the duty of the commissioner, when he reversed those officers upon the only question passed upon by them, to send the case back with instructions to pass upon all the other questions. And this contention is placed by appellant upon section 2273, Rev. St. U. S., which provides that "all questions as to the right of pre-emption arising between different settlers shall be determined by the register and receiver of the district within which the land is situated," and which provides for "appeals from the decision of the district officers" to the commissioner; and this right to have all the questions of fact decided by the local officers, he insists, is an important and substantial one, as the weight to be given the testimony of the different witnesses can be better estimated by them than by those who had no opportunity to observe the witnesses while giving their testimony. Prior to the act of July 4, 1836, (5 Stat. 107,) there seems to have been no express power given to the commissioner of the general land office to revise the decisions of the local land officers; but where an entry was made on ex parte affidavits, which were impeached before the commissioner by another claimant, the course was to return the proofs to the local office, and direct that the parties be notified, and after proofs taken to report the proceedings to the general land office, with their opinion as to the effect of the proof. See Barnard's Heirs v. Ashley's Heirs, 18 How. 44. By section 11 of the act of September 4, 1841, (5 Stat. 456,) all questions arising between different settlers were required to be "settled by the register and receiver of the district within which the land is situated, subject to an appeal to, and a revision by, the secretary of the treasury;" and by the act of June 12, 1858, (11 Stat. p. 326, § 10,) the latter clause of section 2273, Rev. St., was enacted. The power of the commissioner and secretary upon appeal to decide all questions arising upon the evidence taken by the register and receiver is not limited in any of the statutes relating to appeals, and the practice of so deciding all questions upon appeal is too well settled to justify us in denying them that power. That the error of law committed by the register and receiver, and affirmed by the secretary of the interior, had a far-reaching effect cannot be disputed. Stewart had been in possession of the demanded premises many years before the township plat was filed, and the same was fenced in with the land upon which he resided, and he filed his adjoining homestead claim thereon the day the township plat was filed. No question seems to have been made as to his place of residence at the time of his filing, nor at the time McHarry filed, which was but three days thereafter. That being true, McHarry's filing was illegal, the land being then in the rightful possession and occupation of Stewart. But if Stewart, by reason of his failure to reside on the adjacent land, was not entitled to it, the question whether McHarry was entitled was one between him and the government, in which appellant is not concerned. The question of residence being one of fact, and having been litigated before the land department, we would not have jurisdiction to examine it, even if the evidence was before us, in the absence of a clear showing that the decision was procured by fraud or imposition, and we find no such allegation of fraud or imposition in the cross complaint as would justify the submission of the question of residence to a court of justice.

It is argued by appellant, however, that in the case of an adjoining homestead, the requirements of the law applicable to other homesteads upon the public lands do not apply. The rulings of the land department have been otherwise, and we think correctly. Carnes v. Smith, 10 Dec. Dept. Int. 100; Box v. Cochran, 3 Dec. Dept. Int. 394. Residence upon the public land filed upon is excused because that, with the land owned, is regarded as one homestead, and residence upon any part is sufficient; but residence is essential to a homestead of either kind. The judgment appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: SEARLS, C.; VANCLIEF, C.

PATERSON, J. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, it is ordered that the judgment appealed from be affirmed.

HARRISON and GAROUTTE, JJ. We concur in the judgment upon the ground that the decision of the land department that Stewart was not residing upon the premises at the time he made the homestead entry is a conclusive determination against his claim to the land. Whether the conveyance by the widow of McClellan of her interest in a portion of the premises that had been set apart as a homestead for the benefit of herself and her minor children during the existence of the homestead transferred to her grantee any title therein is a question which does not arise in this case, and is of too much importance to be unnecessarily determined. See Gagliardo v. Dumont, 54 Cal. 496; Phelan v. Smith, (Cal.) 34 Pac. 667.

100 Cal. 484

MULCAHY v. BUCKLEY. (No. 14,669.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 23, 1893.)

MECHANICS' LIENS—PLEADING—INFORMATION AND BELIEF—PUBLIC RECORDS—ATTORNEY'S FEES—FINDINGS.

1. Code Civil Proc. § 437, permitting a defendant who has no information or belief sufficient to answer an allegation of the complaint to place his denial on that ground, does not authorize such a denial of a public record to which he has access, he having the means of information.

2. Under Code Civil Proc. § 1195, providing that in actions to enforce mechanics' liens the court must allow as part of the costs the money paid for filing and recording the lien, and reasonable attorney's fees, averment of the amount thereof in the complaint is not necessary.

3. The allowance being for attorney's fees "in the superior and supreme court" does not include the amount paid for preparing claim of lien.

4. In an action on a contract for doing work and furnishing material for the reasonable value, an answer denying conjunctively that plaintiff agreed to do the work "and" furnish the material, and denying that he did "all" the work, raises no substantial issue.

5. A finding that plaintiff agreed to do certain work and furnish certain material, and that, in pursuance of the contract as in the complaint mentioned, he did the work, and furnished the material, is a substantial finding as to the agreement.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; William T. Wallace, Judge.

Action by James Mulcahy against C. F. Buckley to enforce a mechanic's lien. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Sullivan & Sullivan, for appellant. Reddy, Campbell & Metson, for respondent.

VANCLIEF, C. This is an appeal from a judgment enforcing a mechanic's lien for the value of labor performed and materials furnished in repairing and altering certain buildings and structures on two lots of the defendant, situate in the city and county of San Francisco, and comes here on the judgment roll without any bill of exceptions. The cause was tried by the court without a jury, and the only points made by appellant are that the court erred in that it failed to find on certain alleged issues.

1. In paragraph 8 of the complaint it is alleged in due form that plaintiff filed and recorded his claim of lien in the recorder's office in the city and county of San Francisco, "in the words and figures following," (here follows a copy.) The only answer to this paragraph of the complainant is that defendant "has no information or belief upon the subject sufficient to enable him to answer the allegations or any allegation contained in paragraph eight of said complaint; and, placing his denial upon that ground, he denies each and every allegation in said paragraph contained." The court disregarded this part of the answer, holding that all the material allegations of the eighth paragraph of the complaint should be deemed admitted; but appellant contends that this answer was sufficient to put in issue every material allegation of the paragraph to which it relates. I think the court did not err in this respect. Section 437 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides: "If the defendant has no information or belief upon the subject sufficient to enable him to answer an allegation of the complaint, he may so state in his answer, and place his denial on that ground." But a defendant is not at liberty to answer an allegation in this form, when he may be presumed to know, or when he is aware, before answering, that he has the means of ascertaining whether or not such allegation is true. In this case it appears, at least, that the defendant knew before answering that he could certainly ascertain whether or not plaintiff had recorded his claim of lien as alleged in the complaint by examining a public record in the city and county in which his lots, upon which the lien is claimed, were situated. Hathaway v. Baldwin, 17 Wis. 616; Goodell v. Blumer, 41 Wis. 444. I am unable, however, to find that the provision of the Code above quoted has ever been held inapplicable to a case in which the defendant was merely conscious of having the means of obtaining knowledge as to whether the allegation denied was true; nor have I found anything to the contrary. The question seems to be open in this state. The case of Read v. Buffum, 79 Cal. 77, 21 Pac. 555, cited by appellant, is not in point. In that case the allegation denied for want of information or belief was that of an assignment to plaintiff of the account on which the action was brought, and there is nothing indicating that defendant had any knowledge or means of ascertaining whether the account had been assigned to plaintiff or not, and that the question was not mooted. The corresponding provision in the Codes of other states generally is that a denial of "any knowledge or information" of the allegation controverted, "sufficient to form a belief," without expressly denying it, will raise an issue. Speaking of these, Mr. Bliss, in his work on Code Pleading, (section 326,) says: "The obligation to verify the pleading implies an obligation to state the truth; hence the permission to deny any knowledge or information, etc., is not absolute. If the fact charged is evidently within the defendant's knowledge,—as, an act done by himself and within the period of recollection, or where he has the means of information,—a denial of information in the language of the statute would be clearly false or evasive, and such an answer should be disregarded." In Goodell v. Blumer, 41 Wis. 444, the complaint alleged the execution and recordation of a deed, and set it out in haec verba. The defendants traversed the allegation by averring "that they have not sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief, and therefore deny the same." The court, by Cole, J., said: "It seems to us that when a party is pointed to the record of an instrument in the pleadings, he is not permitted to answer that he has no knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief whether there is such an instrument or not. There is a public record which he can consult, and which it was intended he should resort to in order to inform himself upon the subject, [citing cases.] The principle of these decisions is that a party cannot plead ignorance of a public record to which he has access, and which affords him all the means of information necessary to obtain positive knowledge of the fact. We therefore hold that the answer practically admitted the execution of the deed of Samuel Stout and wife to the plaintiff, and that no proof of it was necessary." The practice act of 1851 of this state (section 46) authorized the traverse of an allegation by denial "of any knowledge thereof sufficient to form a belief;" but this was repealed in 1854, and was not re-enacted until it was incorporated in section 437 of the Code of Civil Procedure, in July, 1874. In speaking of the repeal of this provision of the practice act, Mr. Justice Field, in Curtis v. Richards, 9 Cal. 38, said: "In practice, this mode of denial was found to furnish a convenient pretext for evading the statute. In some instances defendants became critical in their judgments as to the extent of knowledge sufficient to form a belief, and would, without hesitation, deny, in that form, facts upon the existence of which they did not hesitate to act in other matters. In 1854 the forty-sixth section was amended to the present language, and the wisdom of the amendment is well illustrated by the present case." In the interim between 1854 and 1874 there were but two forms in which the allegations of a verified complaint could have been controverted so as to raise an issue: First, positively, when the facts were within the knowledge of the defendant; and, second, upon information and belief, when the facts were not within his personal knowledge. During that interim, and since, it has been decided that an allegation of a verified complaint could not be controverted on information and belief when the alleged fact was presumably within the knowledge of the defendant, nor when the defendant had the means of ascertaining whether or not it was true. San Francisco Gas Co. v. San Francisco, 9 Cal. 467; Loveland v. Garner, 74 Cal. 298, 15 Pac. 844. In the first of these cases Mr. Justice Field said: "But the statute imposes upon the defendant, if a natural person, and, if a corporation, upon its officers and agents, the duty of acquiring the requisite knowledge or information respecting the matters alleged in the complaint, to enable them to answer in the proper form." Is not the same duty imposed upon a defendant who proposes to deny an allegation on the ground that he has "no information or belief?" I think it is, under the circumstances and facts disclosed by the record upon which this appeal is presented. Beyond this it is unnecessary to express an opinion.

2. In paragraph 10 of the complaint it is alleged that plaintiff had paid, as necessary expenses, $25 for preparing his claim of lien, and $3.25 for recording it; and that $250 would be a reasonable attorney's fee for prosecuting his suit in the superior court. This paragraph also was denied on the ground that defendant had no information or belief in regard to it; and it is claimed that the court improperly disregarded this denial, and made no finding on the issue raised by it. As a conclusion of law, the court found that plaintiff was entitled to a lien "for said sum of $691.20, together with the further sums of $100 attorney's fee and $28.25 for preparing and recording said lien." Section 1195 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that in actions to enforce liens of mechanics "the court must also allow, as a part of the costs, the money paid for filing and recording the lien, and reasonable attorneys' fees in the superior and supreme courts, such costs and attorneys' fees to be allowed to each lien claimant whose lien is established," etc. The averments in the complaint as to what had been paid by plaintiff for filing and recording the claim of lien, and as to what sum would be a reasonable attorney's fee, were unnecessary. The right to recover these, like the ordinary right to recover costs, was a necessary incident to the judgment establishing plaintiff's lien, and did not depend upon any averment in the complaint, except such as were necessary to establish the lien. Carriere v. Minturn, 5 Cal. 435; Rapp v. Gold Co., 74 Cal. 532, 16 Pac. 325; Lumber Co. v. Newkirk, 80 Cal. 275, 22 Pac. 231. In this last case this court, upon affirming the judgment foreclosing a mechanic's lien, directed the court below "to allow plaintiff, under section 1195 of the Code of Civil Procedure, a reasonable fee for services of its attorney in this court." As to the averment in the tenth paragraph of the complaint that plaintiff had paid $25 for preparing his claim of lien, I think he was entitled to recover nothing upon it, in any event, whether it was denied or not. That averment should have been stricken from the complaint, and probably would have been, had defendant moved the court to strike it out. The attorneys' fees paid by a party can be recovered from the defeated party only in exceptional cases, of which it is true an action to enforce a mechanic's lien is one; but the exception provided for in this class of cases does not extend to fees for services not pertaining to such action "in the superior" or "supreme court." The preparing of a claim of lien to be recorded is no more nearly related to an action to foreclose the lien than is the drafting of a contract for the performance of the labor upon which such action may be partly founded.

3. It is contended that the court failed to find the contract set forth in the complaint. It is alleged in the complaint that "plaintiff entered into a contract with said defendant, under and by which said plaintiff agreed to perform the labor and furnish the brick, lumber, lime, cement, hardware, and other materials necessary to repair and alter both of said above-described buildings or structures and premises in the following particulars." Here follows a minute description of the repairs and alterations to be made, namely, to build a brick wall and fence on the rear line of such lots, and a division fence between them; to construct entrances in said brick walls, and hang doors thereon; to build stairs on each of said above-described buildings or structures; to repair windows and sinks therein; to build a shed attached to one of the buildings; to put down plank walks and repair sidewalks on each side of said lots; and that defendant agreed to pay plaintiff for all of said work and materials the reasonable value thereof. Also alleged that plaintiff fully performed the contract on his part, and that the reasonable value of the work done and materials furnished was $691.20. The answer "denies that at any time plaintiff entered into a contract with defendant, under or by which plaintiff agreed to perform the labor and furnish the brick, lumber, cement, hardware, and other materials necessary to alter the buildings or structures and premises described in said complaint;" but "admits that plaintiff and defendant did enter into a contract for the performance of the brickwork and the furnishing of the materials for such brickwork required in the alteration and repair of the premises described in said complaint. Admits that, pursuant to said contract, said defendant did perform said brickwork and furnish said materials required in the alteration and repair of said premises:" But "denies that, pursuant to said or any contract, plaintiff performed any work or furnished any materials required in the alteration or repair of said premises, other than said brickwork and said materials required in the performance of the same; denies that, under or according to the terms of any agreement between plaintiff and defendant, plaintiff furnished all the materials to be used, or which were actually used, in the alteration or repair of both or either of the buildings described in said complaint, or performed all the labor necessary to complete the same; denies that the reasonable market value of the labor performed and materials furnished by plaintiff in the alteration and repair of said buildings are or were the sum of $691.20; denies that there is or was due from defendant to plaintiff the sum of $691.20, or any greater sum than $——;" but does not deny that plaintiff did the work and furnished the materials as alleged in the complaint. The court found "that plaintiff entered into a contract with defendant, under and by the terms of which plaintiff agreed to perform the labor, furnish the brick, lumber, lime, hardware, and other materials necessary to repair and alter the buildings situate on the premises in the complaint mentioned; that, in pursuance of said contract and agreement as in the complaint mentioned, and with defendant's knowledge and consent, plaintiff did perform the labor upon said premises and did furnish brick, lumber, lime, cement, hardware, and other materials necessary to repair and alter the buildings situated on the premises in the complaint mentioned;" and further found that the value of the labor done and materials furnished, as aforesaid, "is and was the sum of $691.20." (The italicizing in the above quotations is not in the originals.) If the whole substance of the agreement alleged in the complaint was not expressly admitted in the answer, it is obvious that the qualified and copulative denials relating to the contract were insufficient to raise a substantial issue. Besides, I think, the agreement alleged was substantially found. I think the judgment should be modified by deducting therefrom $25, which was allowed for preparing plaintiff's claim of lien, and, as so modified, should be affirmed; neither party to recover costs of the appeal.

We concur: TEMPLE, C.; BELCHER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is modified by deducting therefrom $25, which was allowed for preparing plaintiff's claim of lien, and, as so modified, is affirmed; neither party to recover costs of the appeal.

---

100 Cal. 500

PORTER et al. v. ARROWHEAD RESERVOIR CO. (No. 19,245.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 24, 1893.)

CONTRACTS—BREACH—DEFAULT IN PAYMENT—RESCISSION—QUANTUM MERUIT.

Default in a payment on a contract for work is a breach justifying a rescission and action of quantum meruit by the contractor.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Bernardino county; George E. Otis, Judge.

Action by W. R. Porter and W. E. Van

Slyke against the Arrowhead Reservoir Company. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

C. W. C. Rowell and E. E. Rowell, for appellants. Willis & Cole, for appellee.

GAROUTTE, J. Appellants brought an action of quantum meruit to recover $4,207.04 for labor performed in the building of a wagon road. The defendant filed an answer denying the allegations of the complaint, and also filed a cross complaint alleging, among other things, that plaintiffs had entered into a contract in writing to build a certain wagon road for the sum of $6,000; that plaintiffs entered upon the construction of said road under the contract, and performed labor thereunder until about September 3, 1891; that at such time plaintiffs, without right, and without the consent of the defendant company, ceased work and abandoned said contract; and defendant asked for damages for such alleged breach. Plaintiffs answered the cross complaint, admitting the contract, and that the labor performed was done thereunder, but alleged a rescission thereof by them upon the 3d day of September, 1891, by reason of default on the part of defendant to make a partial payment upon the work, as covenanted in said contract. As disclosed by the writing, the contract price of $6,000 was to be paid as follows: "On the first day of each and every month after beginning of work on said road, in the following manner and proportions, to wit, that, as the amount of work done previous to said first day of the month shall bear according to the lineal feet of the construction of said road to the whole distance between the terminal points mentioned in this contract, which amount is to be ascertained by the engineer of the company, and the payments to be made in such proportion less ten per cent. of said sum due on the first day of each and every month." Judgment was rendered for defendant in the sum of $610.18 and costs of suit, and this appeal is from such judgment, and the order denying a new trial.

The brief of respondent is composed, to a great extent, of the opinion of the learned judge of the trial court, and his position as to the law of the case is there fully and forcibly set forth. We will not enter into a detailed review of the alleged errors relied upon for a reversal of the judgment, for we think the views of the trial court upon the principles of law here involved are not sound, and that a new trial must be ordered for that reason. The error of the court has arisen from a misconception of the legal principles declared in the somewhat historical case of Cox v. McLaughlin, reported in various volumes of our reports,—among others, 54 Cal. 605, and 76 Cal. 60, 18 Pac. 100. We quote from the views of the trial judge, as indicated in his opinion, found in the respondent's brief: "It is evident, without citation of authority, that the plaintiffs' right to maintain this action on a quantum meruit depends on the abrogation of the contract referred to between the plaintiffs and the defendant corporation. If that contract existed, and was in force, it would be a direct answer to plaintiffs' claim to recover in the present form of action. To effect the abrogation of the contract, in the light of the facts presented in this case, there must have been some such substantial violation of its terms on the part of the defendant as would have authorized the plaintiffs to rescind; and such violation must, under the authority of Cox v. McLaughlin, have amounted to either actual or technical prevention." And, again: "After a careful review of the testimony, I am of the opinion that there was no showing of any prevention, either actual or technical, on the part of the defendant, as regards the plaintiffs."

Prior to the decision of Cox v. McLaughlin, reported in 76 Cal., 18 Pac., supra, this court repeatedly and always held that, unless McLaughlin's prevention of the execution of the contract by Cox was alleged and found as a fact, plaintiff was not entitled to recover on the contract; and the court further held that a mere failure or refusal to pay an installment upon the contract price as it became due was not a condition precedent in the contract, was not prevention, and did not authorize the plaintiff to abandon the work, and recover the profits he would have made if the work had been completed under the contract. Under the last decision (76 Cal., 18 Pac.) the complaint had been amended. The contract was no longer relied upon, and for the first time the action was before the court upon a quantum meruit, and it was then sustained. There was no question of "prevention" involved in the case upon that appeal. That element is not considered in the opinion of the court; but a failure to pay an installment of the money due was necessarily held a breach of the contract, for without a breach there could have been no action of quantum meruit, and necessarily no recovery had thereon. There is a wide distinction between "prevention" upon the part of the employer of the further carrying on of the work, and other breaches of the contract. The law says breaches amounting to prevention must be of conditions precedent, and the payment of an installment upon the contract price is not such a condition, as Cox v. McLaughlin repeatedly decides. At the same time, that case conclusively holds that a default in payment is such a breach as to justify a rescission and an action of quantum meruit, and that long litigation was concluded upon that principle. There is no question but that nonpayment, as agreed upon, is a breach of the contract, of some character; and Justice McKinstry said in the 54th Cal., supra: "Assuming that the failure to pay, as alleged, constituted a breach of the contract, the plaintiffs could have treated the specific contract as rescinded, and have brought suit upon the implied promise of defendant to pay the value of the work actually done." And in the very case of Palm v. Railroad Co., 18 Ill. 219, from which Justice McKinstry quotes in extenso to establish that nonpayment does not amount to prevention, the Illinois court said: "'The contract provides for no other penalty or liability, and the law imposes no other, except, perhaps, that this violation of the contract by the defendant, in failing to make the payment, may justify the plaintiff in treating the contract as rescinded, and in suing for the amount due, in an action for goods sold and delivered." In Schwartz v. Saunders, 46 Ill. 18, the owner failed to pay the contractor in the erection of a building an installment of the contract price, when due, and the court said: "That he had a right to abandon the work, under the circumstances, seems a proposition so plain as to require no argument." A failure to pay an installment of the contract price, as provided in the contract, is a substantial breach of the contract, and gives the contractor the right to consider the contract at an end, cease work, and recover the value of the work already performed. As we have seen, Cox v. McLaughlin is authority to support this principle, and there is also ample precedent from the decisions of the courts of other states. Canal Co. v. Gordon, 6 Wall. 561; Evans v. Railroad Co., 26 Ill. 189; Preble v. Bottom, 27 Vt. 249; Dobbins v. Higgins, 78 Ill. 440; Shaw v. Turnpike, 3 Pen. & W. 445; Reybold v. Voorhees, 30 Pa. St. 116; School Dist. v. Hayne, 46 Wis. 511, 1 N. W. 170.

From the foregoing views, it follows that, to entitle the plaintiffs to recover in the present action, it is only necessary that they prove a substantial failure upon the part of defendant to comply with its agreement as to the payment of an installment upon the contract price, and, in addition thereto, that they rescinded the contract by reason of such failure, and upon these lines a new trial should be had. It is ordered that the judgment and order be reversed, and the cause remanded.

We concur: PATERSON, J., and HARRISON, J.

(100 Cal. 514)

WILSON v. SAMUELS et al. (No. 15,333.)[1]

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 26, 1893.)

CONTRACTS—VALIDITY — CONSIDERATION — INTERPRETATION—SUPPLYING BLANKS—PERFORMANCE.

1. Creditors of an insolvent contractor held liens for materials furnished to erect a building, and agreed with him, in writing, to assign their liens to the owner of the building if he would pay the money still due, before a certain day, by first paying in full the claims for labor, and then dividing the remainder proportionately among all other lien claimants. Held, that the agreement was valid, and binding on each signer, as the contract of each was a sufficient consideration for the contracts of the others.

2. The fact that blank spaces as to the amount due were left in the agreement did not render it incomplete, since they could be supplied from the agreement.

3. A signer could not recover in an action to enforce his lien against the contractor and owner, where the owner had paid out the money due to the contractor, as authorized by the agreement, except the pro rata share of such signer, which was tendered, but refused, and, on the bringing of action, was deposited with the court.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; Eugene R. Garber, Judge.

Action by J. H. Wilson against D. Samuels and W. A. Van Dervort to foreclose a mechanic's lien. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying a new trial, Samuels appeals. Reversed.

Naphtally, Freidenrich & Ackerman and Alex. G. Eells, for appellant. Geo. D. Collins, for respondent.

SEARLS, C. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff in an action to foreclose a mechanic's lien, and from an order denying defendants' motion for a new trial. Defendant Samuels was the owner of a lot of land in San Francisco. He entered into a written contract with W. A. Van Dervort, the other defendant, by the terms of which the latter was to construct for him certain buildings upon said lot. The contract was duly filed with the recorder of the city and county. Plaintiff, Wilson, furnished materials and labor to the contractor for and in the construction of the buildings, for which there was due him $1,200. For this amount he filed a mechanic's lien against the buildings at the proper time, and in due form. There was due the contractor from Samuels, on account of the contract, $6,312. Twelve other liens were filed, for amounts aggregating $8,875.69, on account of materials furnished; also, liens for labor, aggregating $310.50. There were therefore liens filed, exclusive of the labor liens, and including that of plaintiff, amounting to $10,075.69. The contractor, Van Dervort, seems to have been insolvent. Before the liens were filed, the creditors met, and endeavored to adjust their claims so as to avoid the expense and necessity of filing liens, but failed in their efforts. After the liens were filed, the lienholders met again, and learned the exact amount due from defendant Samuels on the contract, except that there was thought to be something due on account of extra work on the building; but the precise amount thereof, if anything, was not known. The amount of the several liens was also reported to the meeting. Thereupon, an agreement in writing was prepared and executed by all the lienholders, the plaintiff included, except Glosser & Gallagher, who refused to assent thereto. The following is a copy of the agreement:

"We, the undersigned creditors of W. A. Van Dervort for work done and materials furnished in the erection of a certain structure for D. Samuels, situated on Greenwich street, near Buchanan street, hereby agree that if said D. Samuels will pay, on or before the first of July, 1891, the money still due on said building, to wit, $——, the same may be paid as follows, to wit: First, all the claims for labor, amounting to $310.50, shall be paid in full; second, the remainder, $——, shall be distributed among all the other lien claimants in the proportion which each of said claims bears to the whole amount of such other lien claims filed against said building, said proportion being —— per cent. of each of said claims. And, in consideration of said payment being made, we, and each of us, will, on receipt of our said proportionate shares, respectively assign our said liens to said D. Samuels, with the agreement that we, and each of us, will furnish the testimony necessary to prove and establish the validity of our respective lien in any litigation growing out of the refusal of one or more of the lien claimants to accept his said proportion, and that, if said respective liens are not so proved by us, we will, respectively, refund the moneys so paid for such invalid liens. And the said W. A. Van Dervort hereby agrees to the payment of said money as above provided for, and hereby waives his own liens for any and all moneys so paid. [Signed] W. A. Van Dervort. San Francisco, June ——, 1891."

---

[1] For modification of opinion, see 35 Pac. 559.

Name of Claimant.	Amount of Lien.
C. E. Doty & Co.	$1,545 65
Keenan Withington	30 40
J. H. Wilson	1,200 00
L. E. Clawson & Co.	122 00
E. Platz	507 00
A. I. Sanborn	200 00
Latson Hardware Company	93 00
C. D. McGown & Co.	244 93
Fulda Bros.	79 79
Huntington, Hopkins & Co., per W. F. S.	518 19

As before stated, the parties did not know the amount due on account of extra work, and hence the blanks in the agreement. The clause in reference to proving amount due and validity of liens was inserted to meet the case in the event that some of the lienholders refused to accept the arrangement, and in order that such dissenters might not receive more than their pro rata share. Defendant Samuels was made acquainted with the agreement, and thereupon, through D. H. Bibb, paid off all the lien claimants their pro rata share of the $6,312 due the contractor, except the plaintiff, who refused to accept less than the full amount due him. Glosser & Gallagher, who refused to sign the agreement, finally accepted their pro rata share with the others. Before the 1st day of July, 1891, $720 was tendered to plaintiff, and refused by him, and, after this suit was brought, said sum was paid into court for him. This was slightly in excess of the pro rata share due him. The several liens so paid off pro rata were, with the consent of Samuels, assigned to one Greenwald, who brought suit upon them, which action was pending at the date of the trial herein. W. A. Van Dervort, the contractor, joined with Samuels as a defendant, made default, and Samuels alone is appellant here.

The position of respondent, in support of the judgment, is: (1) The agreement is not a composition agreement, and is not binding as such. (2) The agreement is fatally inchoate and incomplete by reason of the existence of the blanks therein relative to the pro rata the claimants were to receive. (3) The agreement, by its very terms, was to be obligatory only upon those who accepted the pro rata. (4) That, at the very most, the agreement was only an accord, which could be disregarded at any time before satisfaction, and therefore the respondent was at liberty to indorse his claim for the full amount.

In briefly noticing these propositions, it may be said of the first that a composition is an agreement made upon a sufficient consideration between an insolvent or embarrassed debtor and his creditors, or a considerable proportion of them, whereby the latter, for the sake of immediate or sooner payment, agree to accept a dividend less than the whole amount of their claims, to be distributed pro rata in discharge and satisfaction of the whole. Considered in the light of this definition, the agreement herein set out is not, technically, a composition agreement, for the reason that it is not one for the payment by the debtor of any sum or thing, and for the further reason that it does not purport to be and was not intended as a release of the debtor. It does not follow, however, from these reasons, that the agreement was inoperative or void. The defendant Van Dervort, as a contractor, was indebted to his creditors on account of materials furnished and labor performed in a sum in excess of $10,000. To the extent of $6,312, they had or were entitled to liens upon the buildings constructed. To the extent of this last sum, the property of defendant Samuels was liable; but, as there was no personal liability against him, he was not at liberty to pay, without the consent of all the parties, the amounts claimed upon these liens. Had he done so, it would have been a mere voluntary payment without authority on his part, and would at least have devolved upon him the burden of proving, as against the contractor and lienholders, the validity of the demands and regularity of the liens. Covell v. Washburn, 91 Cal. 560, 27 Pac. 859. To collect these several amounts through the instrumentality of suits to foreclose the several liens would take much time and involve large expense, all of which would come out of the fund in the hands of Samuels. The counsel fees, judging from that allowed to plaintiff herein, would have approximated $1,000. The creditors and their debtor, combined, had the power to release Samuels from their claim upon his property, or to agree upon any mode or time of payment or amount to be paid they saw fit, subject to his approval, without suit. The law could only enforce the liens upon the property of Samuels by a foreclosure. All the parties in interest were at liberty to obtain the sum for which the property was liable by any other lawful method by which they could contract.

It is said that Samuels occupied the position of a garnishee towards the creditors, by reason of his indebtedness to the contractor. Grant the position, and what follows? Can it be doubted that the creditor and debtor may release the garnishee, if they see fit, or provide by agreement when, where, and to whom he shall pay the debt covered by the process of garnishment? We think not. It is true, as claimed by respondent, that Samuels did not seek any compromise or composition of the claims for which his property was liable. So far as appears, he was at all times willing to pay all that he owed to the contractor, in the mode provided by law. It was not for his benefit that the agreement was made, but for that of the creditors of the contractor. It was in part for the benefit of the plaintiff here, who signed the agreement with the contractor, and all of the creditors, except a single firm, which afterwards accepted its terms. All parties have abided by the contract except the plaintiff, who now seeks to be rewarded as a result of his violation of it. There was sufficient consideration for the agreement. In such cases the contract of each creditor is a sufficient consideration for the contract of all the others. When they mutually agreed to forego their right to pursue the usual method of enforcing their demands in consideration of being paid at a given time, the engagement of each was a sufficient consideration for the engagement of the others to do the same. In this respect, it is, in principle, not distinguishable from a composition agreement. Pierson v. McCahill, 21 Cal. 129. Again, the acceptance of the agreement by Samuels, and payment by him, was a sufficient consideration for the agreement.

It is claimed that the contract is incomplete by reason of the blanks left therein relative to the pro rata to be paid the lien claimants. The agreement was in substance, that "we, the undersigned, hereby agree that if Samuels will on or before July 1, 1891, pay the money still due, etc., as follows: First, all the claims for labor, amounting to $310.50 in full, the remainder among all the other lien claimants, in proportion which each bears to the whole amount of such other lien claims filed," etc.,—"we will assign our claims to him, and will, if any one or more claimants shall refuse to accept his proportion, prove our claims valid or return the money paid to us. Van Dervort agrees to the above, and to waive his right to liens for money so paid." This is signed by the creditors, with the amount of their liens affixed. The rule enunciated by Parsons in his work on Contracts, (volume 2, p. 693,) in reference to blanks in agreements, is as follows: "Thus, if a blank be left in an instrument, or a word or phrase of importance omitted by mistake, the omission may be supplied, if the instrument contains the means of supplying it with certainty." In the present case, the contract affords the means for supplying the blanks in the agreement. It was the money due from Samuels that was to be divided, and it was to the demands due the creditors of Van Dervort that it was to be applied ratably. Those demands were all of record, and the proofs introduced without objection showed that the parties had a complete list of them at the meeting when the agreement was decided upon. The amount due from Samuels was also well known at the meeting, except that Van Dervort thought there was something in addition for extra work. The contract afforded a criterion by which to ascertain the amount due, and its disposition. Had the agreement been simply to divide the sum due from Samuels to Van Dervort on account of, etc., among the lienholders on the property, without other or more accurate specification, it would have been ascertainable and valid. A. agrees to sell to B. all the corn on ship C., at a specified price per bushel. The quantity is not known, but is ascertainable. "As to the parties or the subject-matter of a contract, extrinsic evidence may and must be received and used to make them certain, if necessary for that purpose." 2 Pars. Cont. p. 680. The essential thing, under the contract, to be done, was to pay in full certain liens for labor, and then to distribute the residue of the money "among all the other lien claimants." It was to be thus distributed, irrespective of the pro rata, and irrespective of the validity of the liens. In other words, the contracting parties assumed that all the lien claimants had valid liens. Else, why was Samuels authorized to distribute the balance of the fund "among all the other lien claimants?"

Respondent contends, further, that the agreement was to be obligatory only upon those who accepted the pro rata, and that, as to any of those signing and refusing to accept, special provision was made. We do not so construe the contract. Those who signed the agreement were bound by it, but it appeared that one or more refused to execute it. Hence the necessity for providing a method by which they should be prevented from obtaining a larger share of the fund than those who became bound by the contract. To suppose that the parties who signed the contract did so with the view that they were not to be bound by it if Samuels consented to pay them the money under it is to assume that they lack intelligence, or that they were seeking to practice a fraud upon Samuels, neither of which we are willing to assume. The court below found that defendant Samuels had not paid any part of the sum in his hands, except the amount paid on the labor liens, the payment of which was admitted. This finding is in the face of the evidence, which is to the effect that Samuels accepted the agreement, and promised to pay it; that Bibb advanced the money on the agreement, and paid it out to the lienholders; and that Samuels repaid it to him. There is no conflict in the evidence on this point, and the finding is in direct conflict with the evidence. The evidence shows, beyond controversy, (1) that plaintiff signed the agreement; (2) that prior to July 1, 1891, defendant, pursuant to said agreement, paid the entire funds in his hands owing to the contractor, Van Dervort, except the sum of $720, which was the proportion of said fund to which plaintiff was entitled; (3) that said amount was tendered to plaintiff prior to July 1, 1891, and was deposited in the court below for plaintiff by the defendant, upon filing by him of his answer in this cause. All these things did not amount to an accord between the parties, but did constitute a valid and binding agreement, which authorized defendant to disburse the fund in hand, as has been done as to all the other claimants; and to permit the plaintiff to repudiate such executed agreement as to all the other parties, and recover from defendant the entire sum due him from Van Dervort, would be to permit him to take advantage of his own wrong, and equivalent to offering a premium for wrongdoing. The judgment and order appealed from should be reversed, and the court below directed to enter a judgment in favor of plaintiff for $720, the amount in court, but without costs, and with costs of the court below in favor of defendant, the appellant herein, and that appellant have and recover his costs on this appeal.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; VANCLIEF, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order appealed from are reversed, and the court below directed to enter a judgment in favor of plaintiff for $720, the amount in court, but without costs, and with costs of the court below in favor of defendant, the appellant herein, and that appellant have and recover his costs on this appeal.

---

4 Cal. Unrep. 384

RITCHEY v. McMICHAEL. (No. 19,231.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 26, 1893.)

DECEIT — WHEN ACTION LIES — PRINCIPAL AND AGENT—RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES INTER SESE.

1. Plaintiff authorized defendant to buy for him land from one B. for $2,750, agreeing to pay one-third cash, one-third in six months, and the balance in a year. Thereafter defendant represented that B. would not sell except for one-half cash and the balance in a year; that he had taken a deed to himself on those terms, and would convey to plaintiff on the terms agreed on between them. He then forwarded a contract of sale to plaintiff, and drew on him for $916.66. Plaintiff executed the contract, and paid the draft. Defendant's representation as to his purchase of the land from B. was false, B. having agreed to sell it to another for $1,375. Held, that plaintiff could recover the amount paid on the draft.

2. In such case the relation of principal and agent existed between plaintiff and defendant, and the latter was accountable for the money paid him by plaintiff to carry out the purposes of the agency.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court of Los Angeles county; William P. Wade, Judge.

Action by J. T. Ritchey against J. G. McMichael for moneys of plaintiff fraudulently converted by defendant. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Anderson & Anderson, for appellant. Lacey & Trask and D. K. Trask, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. In April, 1888, one Buell was the owner of an interest in certain lands in Los Angeles county, and the defendant was the owner of a similar interest therein. The defendant was a resident of California, but was at that time in Louisville, Ky., where he had formerly resided, and where the plaintiff was then residing. He had known the plaintiff, and had been on friendly terms with him, for many years, and while there represented to him and one Curtice that Buell would sell his interest in the lands for $2,750, and urged them to purchase this interest, representing that it was of much greater value, and offered to make the purchase for them at the lowest price for which he could induce Buell to sell it. Neither the plaintiff nor Curtice had ever seen the lands, nor had they any knowledge of their value, or of the price at which Buell would sell his interest, but, relying upon the representations of the defendant, authorized him to make the purchase for them from Buell on terms of one-third cash, one-third in 6 months, and one-third in 12 months, thereafter. The defendant returned to California, and on the 9th of May wrote to the plaintiff to the effect that he had effected the purchase, but that Buell would not accept the terms proposed, but insisted on having half cash, and half in 12 months; and therefore he had had the contract from Buell made directly to himself upon these terms, but that the plaintiff and Curtice might have the benefit of the terms upon which they had agreed to make the purchase. Inclosed with the letter he sent a contract in duplicate to be executed by the plaintiff and Curtice, one of which they were to retain, and the other to return to him, by which he agreed to sell, and they to purchase from him, these lands for $2,750, payable one-third cash, one-third in 6 months, and one-third in 12 months, the deferred payments to be evidenced by their promissory notes; and at the same time made a draft upon them for $916.66. The draft was paid by them upon its presentation, but neither the contract nor the notes were executed or returned to him. When the second payment was about to mature, the plaintiff telegraphed the defendant to make his draft for both deferred payments with a deed attached, and they would be paid. To this request the defendant paid no attention, and does not appear to have made any subsequent attempt to collect the money. Subsequent investigation having satisfied the plaintiff that the defendant had defrauded them in the transaction, he brought this action to recover the amount of money paid on the draft, setting forth in his complaint the facts constituting the fraud, and that Curtice had assigned to him his interest in the money. The court finds that the representations of the defendant to the plaintiff in his letter of May 9th were false and untrue; that at the time he was in Kentucky, urging the purchase of Buell's interest for $2,750, Buell had authorized him to sell that interest for $1,650; that Buell did not refuse to sell the property upon the terms proposed by the plaintiff and Curtice, and that the defendant had never made such offer on their behalf to Buell; that defendant did not give Buell half of the purchase price in cash, and had not taken the property in his own name, or given Buell any cash; that, on the contrary, Buell did agree to sell his interest to a Mrs. Canine for $1,375, in terms of one-third cash, one-third in 6 months, and one-third in 12 months. The agreement for this sale was dated May 9, 1888, but the cash payment thereon—$458.33—was not made until July 24th. The defendant offered in evidence a deed from Mrs. Canine for this interest, purporting to have been made by her on May 9th, but which was acknowledged on the 15th of September, in the state of Kentucky. It does not appear that Mrs. Canine ever became the owner of the land, or that Buell ever made any conveyance of the land to any one. The court found that the defendant procured the $916.66 to be paid to him upon his draft by means of false and fraudulent representations, and that he had been guilty of fraud and deceit in the transaction, and rendered judgment in favor of the plaintiff.

The rule is so familiar as to be trite that the obligation of an agent to his principal demands of him the strictest integrity and the most faithful service. He is not permitted to acquire any adverse interest in the subject-matter of the agency, and is accountable to his principal for any gains that he may have made in violation of those obligations. So long as he retains his position of agent he is accountable to his principal for all property which he may have received from him with which to carry out the purpose of his agency, and for the faithful disposition of his property in accordance with the principal's directions. The defendant herein must be regarded as the agent of the plaintiff in all his transactions respecting the purchase of the lands in question. He had undertaken to effect the transfer of Buell's interest in the lands to the plaintiff and Curtice as their agent, and while that relation existed between them he was not at liberty to acquire any interest in the lands adverse to them. Even if it had been established at the trial that he had made a contract in his own name for the purchase from Buell of this interest, his relation to the plaintiff and Curtice would have made him a trustee of that interest for their benefit. In the first letter which he wrote to the plaintiff upon his return to California, in which he sent the notes and contracts for execution, he says: "Buell would not take one-third cash, one-third six months, one-third twelve months, but insisted upon one-half cash; so I had him to contract to me one-half cash, one-half twelve months, and make the terms to suit you all. The difference is small, and I gave it to him so as to fix you all up." And again: "I have taken the property in my own name, and consented to your terms, and I pay Buell one-half cash, one-half twelve months." And on the next day he telegraphed from California to the plaintiff: "Papers gone forward, and draft for one-third of the amount." The scheme which the defendant fraudulently devised for the transfer to Mrs. Canine of the right to purchase Buell's interest, and her assignment of this right to himself, did not divest him of his obligation to fidelity towards the plaintiff, or give to him any rights in the property which he could assert as against the plaintiff and Curtice. The money which the plaintiff and Curtice paid upon the defendant's draft was not for the purpose of discharging any obligation on their part to the defendant, or in pursuance of any transaction between them and the defendant as separate contracting parties, but it was merely placing that amount of money in his hands as their agent for the purpose of carrying out the object of the agency; and as soon as they learned that their agent had not applied this money as they had directed, but had proved faithless to his trust, they had the right to demand its return. Whether the money was paid upon the draft of the defendant, or had been personally placed in his hands, or forwarded to him, is immaterial. In either case it was at all times the money of the plaintiff and Curtice, given to the defendant for a special purpose.

The proposition of the appellant that the plaintiff cannot recover the amount of the draft without tendering to the defendant an assignment or reconveyance of any interest he may have in the lands, cannot be maintained. The relation of vendor and vendee never existed between them, nor was there ever any contract between them which required a rescission. The defendant could not, as we have seen, so long as he held the relation of agent to the plaintiff for the purchase of these lands from Buell, acquire any interest therein which he could hold as against his principals, or of which he could become the vendor. Equally untenable is the proposition that, inasmuch as the defendant was himself the owner of an interest in the lands equal to that of Buell, the contract between himself and the plaintiff is valid, and that the plaintiff cannot recover the money sued for until the defendant has made default upon this contract. The plaintiff never had any negotiations with the defendant for the purchase from him of his interest in the lands, and the defendant could not become the vendor of this interest without the assent of the plaintiff to purchase it. Even if he had intended to assume the relation of a vendor of his own interest, the agreement sent by him to the plaintiff can only be regarded as a proposition or offer from him, and would not be binding upon the plaintiff until his acceptance; and it is not claimed that the plaintiff ever executed the agreement, or manifested to the defendant any acceptance of the proposition. The money which he paid upon the defendant's draft was not upon any agreement to purchase the defendant's interest, but was for the purpose of making a payment for the Buell interest. If the defendant made a fraudulent use of this money, the plaintiff could at any time at his discretion repudiate his action and sue for the money. The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: GAROUTTE, J.; PATERSON, J.

(100 Cal. 525)

LOS ANGELES COUNTY v. LANKERSHIM.

(No. 19,235.)[1]

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 26, 1893.)

COUNTY TREASURER—PAYMENT OF FRAUDULENT WARRANT.

1. A county treasurer is required (County Government Act, § 70) to disburse only on auditor's warrants issued on orders of the board of supervisors or superior court, "or as otherwise provided by law" to pay (section 73) warrants presented, but not until he has received from the clerk of the supervisors the certified list of orders made, and (section 80) to settle his accounts each month, and deposit all warrants redeemed, taking the auditor's receipt therefor. Pol. Code, § 1543, bases school-fund warrants on requisitions of the superintendent on orders of the school trustees or board of education, and does not provide for furnishing the treasurer with any list or notice of them. In an action on a treasurer's bond for the amount paid on a school warrant, brought three years after the payment, defendant produced the auditor's receipt for said warrant. The court found that the treasurer paid the sum to some person unknown on what purported to be an auditor's warrant, payable to D., of whose existence no evidence could be given, nor could the warrant be found; that no requisition therefor was made by the superintendent on the auditor, nor order made by any board of trustees or of education, and said purported warrant was fraudulent. Held insufficient to sustain judgment on the bond, since, in view of the presumption in favor of official acts, the treasurer should have been clearly charged with notice of the fraud.

2. A finding that the payments were made by the treasurer wrongfully, and without right or authority, and in violation of his duty, is a mere conclusion of law, or, if of fact, then too general.

3. A surety on an official bond is not discharged by the obligee's failure to present its claim to the deceased officer's executor in due time.

4. Additional findings of fact cannot be made after entry of final judgment.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; W. H. Clark, Judge.

Action by the county of Los Angeles against James B. Lankershim on the official bond of J. W. Broaded, deceased. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. Reversed.

Graves, O'Melveny & Shankland and S. M. White, for appellant. H. C. Dillon, Dist. Atty., and Houghton, Silent & Campbell, for respondent.

VANCLIEF, C. The defendant was one of the sureties on the official bond of J. W. Broaded, treasurer of plaintiff, for the term of two years commencing on the first Monday of January, 1887; and this action is upon that bond, to recover $7,910.80 for alleged delinquencies of the treasurer during that term. Broaded died November 29, 1889, and this action was commenced May 5, 1890. The cause was tried by the court, and judgment rendered for plaintiff for the sum of $7,371.60. The defendant has appealed from the judgment, and also from an order denying his motion for a new trial. The judgment includes the sum of $3,840 alleged to have been paid out of the school fund by the treasurer in June, 1888, to some person unknown to plaintiff, upon an auditor's warrant not based upon any order of the board of supervisors, nor upon any order of the superior court, nor upon any authority otherwise provided by law, with interest thereon from June 30, 1888, until the date of the judgment. The residue of the judgment is conceded to be right, so that the only points made by appellant relate to the question, whether or not the treasurer justifiably paid out of the school fund said sum of $3,840.

As to this payment from the school fund, the court originally found as follows: "(5) That in the month of June, 1888, said treasurer also paid out of the general school fund of said county the sum of $3,840 to some person unknown; that said payment was made upon what purported to be a county auditor's warrant made payable to one C. H. Delevan, of whose existence no evidence was given, and which warrant cannot be found; that no requisition of said last-named money was ever made by the county superintendent of public schools upon the county auditor of said county; nor was any order therefor made by any board of trustees nor by any board of education in or of said county, and said purported warrant was fraudulent, and wholly without right, and was not based upon any claim against the school fund of said county." The original findings, including the above, were filed July 28, 1892, and the judgment, signed by the judge, was filed and docketed on the same day, and entered on the next day—July 29th. On August 3, 1892, the judge filed the following additional finding: "The court makes the following additional finding herein, the facts having been established on the trial of this action, to wit: The paper referred to in finding 5, as said finding 5 appears in the findings already filed in this cause, and which it is therein stated purported to be a county auditor's warrant, was regular on its face, was executed by the auditor or deputy auditor of said county, and the amount named therein, and for which said warrant purported to be drawn, was $3,840. W. H. Clark, Judge of said Court. [Indorsed] Filed Aug. 3, 1892." Counsel for appellant contend that upon finding 5, and the above additional finding, the judgment should have been for defendant, as to the sum of $3,840 paid from the school fund. But respondent contends—First, that the additional finding is immaterial; and, second, that if it is material it cannot be deemed a finding in the case, because made after the entry of the judgment, and without notice to respondent.

---

[1] Rehearing denied. See 35 Pac. 556.

Assuming, without deciding, that the additional finding is equivalent to a finding that the warrant was genuine and contained in proper form, substantially, all things which the law requires in a warrant on the school fund, I think the additional finding is material, unless the treasurer had actual or constructive notice that the warrant was not based upon a lawful requisition of the county superintendent of schools. The law has provided the treasurer with a check upon the auditor in all cases where warrants are drawn for claims allowed by the board of supervisors. Section 20 of the county government act requires the clerk of that board, immediately after the adjournment of each meeting, to prepare and certify duplicate lists "of all claims allowed and orders made for the payment of money," etc., to be countersigned by the chairman of the board, one of which lists must be delivered to and left with the treasurer, who is forbidden to pay any warrant for a a claim allowed by the board unless the claim or order upon which the warrant is based appears on such list. Warrants upon the school fund, however, are not based upon orders of the board of supervisors, but upon requisitions of the superintendent of schools, which requisitions are based upon orders of the school trustees or board of education. Pol. Code, § 1543. But the treasurer is not furnished with any list of the requisitions of the school superintendent, nor of the orders of the school trustees or board of education. Nor is there any provision of law requiring notice to the treasurer of the orders or requisitions upon which warrants upon the school fund are based. Section 70 of the county government act provides that the county treasurer must "disburse the county moneys only on county warrants issued by the county auditor, based on orders of the board of supervisors, or upon order of the superior court, or as otherwise provided by law." Section 73 of the same act provides: "When a warrant is presented for payment, if there is money in the treasury for that purpose, he must pay the same, and write on the face thereof 'Paid,' the date of payment, and sign his name thereto, provided, however, that the treasurer shall not receive, or pay, or indorse, any warrant until he shall have received from the clerk of the board of supervisors the certified list mentioned in subdivision four of section twenty of this act, and not then unless the claim or order upon which said warrant is based appears upon such list." It is obvious that the proviso in this section was intended to apply only to warrants based on orders of the board of supervisors, since the claim or requisition upon which a warrant on the school fund is based could not appear upon any list of claims allowed by the board of supervisors. Therefore, when this section is to be applied to warrants on the school fund, the proviso should be omitted. Thus read, the section absolutely commands the treasurer to pay a genuine auditor's warrant on the school fund, if there "is money in the treasury for that purpose." And this is perfectly consistent with subdivision 6 of section 70, above quoted, which restricts the disbursement of county moneys to the payment of warrants "based on orders of the board of supervisors, or upon order of a superior court, or as otherwise provided by law." Section 73, omitting the proviso, is a provision of law for the payment of warrants on the school fund, otherwise than on the condition that they are based on orders of the board of supervisors or superior courts; and fully answers the intention and purpose of the last clause of subdivision 6 of section 70, above italicized. It must have been intended by the legislature that a genuine auditor's warrant upon the school fund, in regular and legal form, should justify the treasurer in paying it, unless the treasurer has notice that it was not based upon a lawful demand, or has notice of facts sufficient to put an ordinarily prudent treasurer upon inquiry, which, if diligently prosecuted, would lead to a discovery of the illegality of the claim upon which the warrant was founded; otherwise, the legislature would have provided for him a check upon the auditor, and all others for whose delinquencies he is to be held responsible, of the same kind as that provided in cases of warrants based on claims allowed by the board of supervisors, in which cases the treasurer may properly and without hardship be held severally liable with the auditor, if the warrant is not founded upon an apparently lawful order of the board. But suppose the order of the board of supervisors is only apparently lawful, but really fraudulent and illegal. Should either the auditor or treasurer be held liable, in case the warrant is drawn and paid? If not, why not? I think neither should be held liable, for the reason that neither had notice of the fraud or illegality, both being misled by the apparently regular and lawful order of the board.

Again, suppose the warrant on the school fund in this case had been based on an apparently valid requisition of the superintendent of schools, but that such requisition was not founded upon any order of the board of school trustees or board of education. Would either the auditor or treasurer be liable for the $3,840 paid on the warrant? If either would be liable, why not extend the liability a step further back, and hold them accountable for any delinquency or fraud of school trustees or board of education, of which they had no notice? When a genuine warrant upon the school fund, in legal form, is presented for payment, to what extent must the treasurer review the action of the auditor, superintendent of schools, and board of school trustees, before he may safely pay it? If such genuine auditor's warrant does not justify the payment, I see no reason why the addition of a genuine requisition of the superintendent of schools, based upon no order of school trustees or board of education, should justify it, since the treasurer can no more be presumed to have notice of the want of a proper requisition of the superintendent upon the auditor than of the want of a proper order of the school trustees or board of education upon the superintendent. If the treasurer is to be made responsible for the delinquencies of the auditor, the superintendent of schools, and the school trustees, he should be supplied with lists of all requisitions of the superintendent upon the auditor, and of all orders of school trustees and boards of education upon the superintendent; and even then fraudulent claims might be allowed by school trustees or boards of education, upon which genuine requisitions, in due form, might be made by the superintendent upon the auditor.

While it has been often decided that treasurers and their sureties are responsible on their official bond for losses of public money by means of forgery, theft, and robbery, (Murfree, Off. Bonds, § 197,) no case has been cited by counsel, and I have found none, in which they have been held accountable for a loss resulting from payment of a genuine auditor's or comptroller's warrant in due form, without notice, actual or constructive, of any fraud or infirmity in the claim upon which such warrant was based; and it would seem that to hold a treasurer accountable for the frauds, mistakes, or other delinquencies of the auditor, of which he has no notice, would be to hold that the so-called auditor's warrants for the payment of money from the treasury are delusive misnomers, since they warrant nothing. I am of opinion, however, that the additional finding, though material, cannot be deemed a valid finding in the case. After the entry of final judgment the court had no power to change the findings of fact in any material respect. The superior court has power to set aside judgments and findings upon various grounds, as provided in the Code of Civil Procedure; but there is no provision of law authorizing any change in the findings of fact after the entry of final judgment thereon, while the judgment is allowed to stand. The entry of final judgment terminates the jurisdiction of the court over the cause and the parties, except as otherwise expressly provided by law. Hence, it is wholly immaterial whether the additional finding in this case was made upon notice to plaintiff or not. The court had no more power to make it upon notice than without notice. Whether, and to what extent, findings may be changed by consent and agreement of the parties, is not here involved; but, however this may be, a change of findings thus made would be the act of the parties, and not of the court. The following cases bear more or less directly upon the question as to the power of the court to change findings: Condee v. Barton, 62 Cal. 1; Bate v. Miller, 63 Cal. 233; Wunderlin v. Cadogan, 75 Cal. 618, 17 Pac. 713; Smith v Taylor, 82 Cal. 544, 23 Pac. 217; Brady v Burke, 90 Cal. 1, 27 Pac. 52. Yet I think the original findings, filed before the entry of judgment, insufficient to support the judgment for the sum paid out of the school fund on warrant No. 1,712, payable to Delevan. "There is always a presumption of law that officers perform their duty, and, whenever there is a charge made of official default, the burden of proof is upon the party making the allegation. If, in an action on an official bond, the breach laid is the failure of the officer to discharge the duties of his office, by refusing or neglecting to account for and pay over, as required by law, money which came into his hands, it is incumbent upon the plaintiff to prove what money did come to his hands, what amount he has not truly accounted for, and in what respects he has failed to do his duty." Murfree, Off. Bonds, § 593. And such presumption in favor of the officer inures to the benefit of his sureties. Id. § 596. In the face of this presumption of law, the original finding, No. 5, utterly fails to show that the treasurer failed to perform his duty in any respect, unless he was responsible for the delinquency or fraud of the auditor in drawing the warrant without a proper requisition therefor from the superintendent of schools, of which fraud or delinquency he had no notice. The finding that the "warrant was fraudulent, and wholly without right," is not a finding that the treasurer was guilty of any fraud or wrong; and, from the finding that "said payment was made upon what purported to be a county auditor's warrant made payable to one C. H. Delevan, of whose existence no evidence was given, and which warrant cannot be found," the presumption must be, in the absence of any finding to the contrary, that the warrant was genuine, and complied with the law in form and substance; in other words, that it was what it "purported" to be. Nothing against the treasurer can be inferred from the fact that the warrant could not be found at the time of the trial. The trial was three years after the warrant had been paid, and presumptively deposited with the auditor, as required by section 80 of the county government act. That section requires the treasurer, on the first Monday in each month, to settle his accounts relating to the collection and disbursement of public revenue, and at such settlements to deposit all warrants redeemed by him, and take the auditor's receipt therefor. Such a receipt from the auditor of all county warrants paid in the month of June, 1888, amounting to $188,162.74, including the sum of $3,840, for which the warrant in question was drawn, was offered in evidence by the defendant. But, even if this receipt had not been produced, the presumption would be that the warrant, (which "cannot be found,") if not in the possession of the auditor, who was the legal custodian thereof, must have been lost, destroyed, or otherwise disposed of by him.

The sixth finding, "that all of said payments were made by said treasurer wrongfully, and without right or authority, and in violation of his duty as such treasurer," consists of mere conclusions of law; and, even if it could be regarded as a statement of facts, it is too general and indefinite.

The finding "that the said treasurer did not, during his said term of office, keep any books as required by subdivision 3 of section 70 of the county government act," does not state any particular in which the treasurer's books were deficient, and consequently does not show that any deficiency or irregularity in his bookkeeping contributed anything to the cause or causes of the loss of the money paid on the warrant to Delevan.

The liability of the defendant on the bond of Broaded was not discharged by the failure of the plaintiff to present its claims arising on that bond to the executor of the estate of Broaded, for allowance, within the period of 10 months after publication of notice to creditors, and in so ruling the court did not err.

I think that so much of the judgment as appears to be based upon the payment by the treasurer, Broaded, of the auditor's warrant on the school fund for $3,840, payable to C. H. Delevan, should be reversed, and a new trial granted on the issue as to whether the defendant is accountable for the money paid on that warrant, but, as to the residue of the judgment, not based upon the payment of that warrant, the order and judgment should be affirmed; costs of the appeal to be taxed to the respondent.

We concur: SEARLS, C.; BELCHER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, so much of the judgment as appears to be based upon the payment by the treasurer, Broaded, of the auditor's warrant on the school fund for $3,840, payable to C. H. Delevan, is reversed, and a new trial is granted on the issue as to whether the defendant is accountable for the money paid on that warrant. As to the residue of the judgment, not based upon the payment of that warrant, the order and judgment appealed from are affirmed; costs of the appeal to be taxed to the respondent.

(100 Cal. 543)

STEWART et al. v. SUPERIOR COURT.

(No. 15,482.)[1]

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 27, 1893.)

INJUNCTION—APPEAL—STAY OF PROCEEDINGS—CONTEMPT.

In an action for injunction, commanding defendant not to interfere with plaintiff in connecting with defendant's water conduit, which right plaintiff claimed under a contract, there was judgment for plaintiff, but defendant appealed, and gave bond. Plaintiff had had no connection with the conduit, except pending a temporary injunction, which had been dissolved. Held, that the appeal stayed the operation of the judgment, so that defendant was not in contempt for preventing the connection.

Department 1.

Application of Julia V. Stewart and W. B. Prentice for writ of review to annul an order of the superior court of San Diego county. Order annulled.

Gibson & Titus and V. E. Shaw, for petitioner. E. W. Britt, for respondent.

PATERSON, J. This is an application for a writ of review to annul an order of the court below, adjudging petitioners guilty of contempt for the disobedience of its judgment. It appears that the petitioners, Julia V. Stewart and W. B. Prentice, entered into a contract with one Hill, whereby they agreed to deliver to the latter, or his executors, representatives, and assigns, at a certain point on the line of their pipe, water not to exceed 10 miners' inches, in perpetual flow, under a 4-inch pressure, for a term of 20 years. Thereafter, Hill sold and assigned all his rights under the contract to one J. W. Sefton, who constructed a pipe line extending from the point mentioned in the contract to his ranch, and thereupon demanded of Stewart and Prentice that he be allowed to make a direct connection between his pipe and the pipe line of Stewart and Prentice, and to divert from the flume two inches of water. This demand was refused by Stewart and Prentice, who claimed that he had no right to make such connection, whereupon Sefton instituted an action against them, in which, upon proper allegations made, he prayed that an injunction might issue, commanding the defendants not to interfere with the plaintiff in effecting a connection of his pipe with the conduit of the defendants, and for the sum of $1,000 damages. Thereupon, the court issued a temporary injunction in accordance with the prayer of the complaint, which was afterwards, on motion of the defendants, dissolved, and the plaintiff was ordered to detach his pipe from the pipe line of the defendants, the connection having been made during the pendency of the temporary injunction. A trial was had upon the merits, and judgment was entered in favor of the plaintiff, awarding to him one dollar damages, and the right to connect his line of pipe as prayed for. It was further decreed that the defendants desist and refrain from interfering with the plaintiff in making the connection of his pipe with the pipe line of defendants, and thereafter, and for the period of 25 years, in any manner interfering with or preventing the flow of water from defendants' pipe, to the extent of two miner's inches. Immediately after the entry of the judgment, the defendants perfected an appeal to this court by giving and filing a notice of appeal, and executing and filing an undertaking in the sum of $300. Thereafter, the plaintiff, notwithstanding the fact that notice of appeal had been filed and served, and an undertaking given, entered upon the premises of the defendants, cut into their water pipe, and connected his own pipe therewith. The petitioners herein, acting under the advice of counsel that the perfecting of the appeal stayed all proceedings, cut the connection, and restored the pipe and line to the condition in which it had existed prior to the time the connection was made. Again the plaintiff in the action cut the pipe of the defendants, and connected his pipe therewith, and proceeded to take water therefrom, whereupon the petitioners herein again broke the connection, and restored the water way to its previous condition. Thereupon, they were cited to show cause before the superior court why they should not be punished for the acts set forth; and after a hearing the order adjudging them guilty of contempt, above referred to, was made. A stay of proceedings was granted for a period of 30 days to enable the petitioners to make this application.

[1] For modification of opinion, see 35 Pac. 563.

We think that the appeal in Sefton v. Prentice et al. operated as a supersedeas against the judgment, in so far as it authorized the plaintiff therein to conect his pipe with the pipe of the defendants. The decree was, in effect, a mandatory injunction, although prohibitory in form. Neither Hill nor Sefton had ever connected his pipe with the pipe line of the defendants prior to the commencement of the action; and the main question in the case was whether, under the contract and the acts alleged to have been done by the plaintiff, he was entitled to make such connection. It is true that such connection had been made under the preliminary injunction, but when that injunction was dissolved the defendants' property was restored to the condition in which it had theretofore existed. The purpose of an injunction is to hold the subject of the litigation in statu quo until a final determination. It is doubtless true, as a general rule, that an injunction is not dissolved or suspended by an appeal; but there are exceptions to the general rule, and these exceptions are where the judgment commands or permits some act to be done. In such cases a stay of proceedings can be had. Hicks v. Michael, 15 Cal. 107. An appeal would in many cases be useless, if the execution of a decree which authorizes or permits the plaintiff to use the property of the defendant cannot be stayed during the pendency of the appeal. "During the pendency of the appeal, the court below could do no act which did not look to the holding of the subject of the litigation just as it existed when the decree was rendered." Dewey v. Superior Court, 81 Cal. 68, 22 Pac. 333. In Bullion, etc., Min. Co. v. Eureka Hill Min. Co., (Utah,) 13 Pac. 174, the court said: "The taking of the appeal and the giving of the supersedeas bond did not make void, or nullify or suspend, the judgment, nor the injunction contained therein, but all affirmative action looking to the execution of the terms of the decree was suspended. Slaughterhouse Case, 10 Wall. 273; Swift v. Shepard, 64 Cal. 423, 1 Pac. 493. But the lower court could nevertheless take such action as was necessary to hold the property intact, and enforce a continuance of the statu quo. However, the district court, during the pendency of the appeal, could do no act which did not look to the holding of the subject of litigation just as it existed when the decree was rendered. Hovey v. McDonald, 109 U. S. 161, 3 Sup. Ct. 136. In the exercise of its authority to preserve the property, the district court was empowered to punish as for contempt the violation of any provision of the injunction, where the parties were not allowing the property to remain as it was at the date of the decree. * * * Taking all the evidence together, we do not see that the appellants, at the time they are charged with having violated the injunction, occupied any other or different place on the lode in question than they did when the judgments containing the injunction were rendered, or that they were in manner hindering or obstructing the respondent company from working its lode. This being so, an injunction could not be used to eject them, and it was no violation of the injunction for the appellants to remain as they were when the injunction was granted." The office of a writ of injunction, as its name imports, is peculiarly a preventive, and not a remedial, one. It is to restrain the wrongdoer, not to punish him after the wrong has been done, or to compel him to undo it. An injunction, though restrictive in form, if it have the effect to compel the performance of a substantive act, is mandatory, and necessarily contemplates a change in the relative positions or rights of the parties from those existing at the time the injunction is granted or the decree is entered. To hold that an appeal from a judgment granting such an injunction does not stay the operation of the judgment would often render a reversal of the judgment entirely ineffectual, —"a barren victory." Dewey v. Superior Court, supra; Mining Co. v. Fremont, 7 Cal. 132. We think that the court below exceeded its jurisdiction, in adjudging the parties guilty of contempt.

The order of the court below is annulled.

We concur: DE HAVEN, J.; HARRISON, J.

100 Cal. 576

SUTTON v. SYMONS et al. (No. 18,163.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 28, 1893.)

Appealable Orders — Motion for New Trial—Sufficiency of Notice.

1. An appeal will not lie from an order refusing to vacate an order striking a statement on appeal from the files.

2. A notice of an intention to move for a new trial, that is not filed with the clerk until after the expiration of the time allowed, though served on the opposite party within such time, is insufficient, under Code Civil Proc. § 659.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Tuolumne county; Joseph H. Budd, Judge.

Action by Fred Sutton against William Symons and others. Judgment for plaintiff. From an order denying a motion for a new trial, and from an order refusing to vacate an order striking a statement on appeal from the files, defendants appeal. Affirmed as to order denying a new trial, and dismissed as to order refusing to vacate order.

Moses G. Cobb and J. B. Curtain, for appellants. F. W. Street, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. Judgment was rendered and entered in this action, in favor of the plaintiff, October 7, 1890, and the time for serving and filing a notice of intention to move for a new trial was extended by stipulation and by an order of the court until January 5, 1891. January 3, 1891, the defendants served upon the plaintiff a notice of their intention to move for a new trial, stating therein that it would be made upon a statement of the case, but the notice was not filed with the clerk until January 10, 1891. At the same time with serving this notice, the defendants served upon the plaintiff their proposed statement of the case, to which the plaintiff afterwards proposed amendments. We have assumed, in accordance with the admission by counsel for both parties, that this statement was afterwards settled by the judge and filed with the clerk, but the record fails to show these facts. The plaintiff afterwards moved the court to strike this settled statement from the files, and on the 13th of September, 1891, this motion was granted. The motion for a new trial came on to be heard September 13, 1892, at which time the defendants asked the court to vacate its previous order striking the statement from the files, which was denied; and on the next day the court made an order denying their motion for a new trial, from which the defendants have appealed. They have also appealed from the order refusing to vacate the order striking the statement from the files. An appeal was also taken at the same time from the order striking out the statement, but this appeal was dismissed March 8, 1893, upon the ground that it had not been taken in time. 97 Cal. 475, 32 Pac. 588. The order refusing to vacate the order of September 13, 1891, is not an appealable order, and for that reason the appeal therefrom must be dismissed. The order striking the statement from the files was itself appealable, (Calderwood v. Peyser, 42 Cal. 110; Clark v. Crane, 57 Cal. 633;) and the rule is well settled that an appeal cannot be taken from an order refusing to vacate an order which is itself appealable, (Harper v. Hildreth, [Cal.] 33 Pac. 1103.) When the motion for a new trial came on to be heard, there was no statement before the court upon which it could entertain the motion, and for that reason its order must be affirmed. The court was also required to deny the motion upon the ground that the notice of intention therefor had not been filed with the clerk in time. Section 659, Code Civil Proc., requires the party who intends to move for a new trial to serve the notice of his intention upon the adverse party, and also to file it with the clerk within 10 days after notice of the decision, or such additional time as may be allowed by the court. Although the notice in the present case was served upon the plaintiff within due time, it was not filed until after the time allowed by the court had expired. The order is affirmed.

We concur: PATERSON, J.; GAROUTTE, J.

100 Cal. 547

McCANN v. PENNIE. (No. 15,241.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 28, 1893.)

Transitory Actions—Breach of Contract—Action against Administrator—Sufficiency of Complaint—Presentation of Claim—Written Contract.

1. A cause of action for breach of an executory contract during the life and after the death of the promisor is transitory, and the action may be maintained against the administrator of the promisor without reference to where the contract was made, or to the fact that it was to be performed in a foreign country.

2. A complaint in an action against an administrator on a claim against decedent's estate is not bad on general demurrer, where it alleges that the claim was properly presented and rejected, because it fails to allege that it was presented within the time limited in the notice to creditors.

3. A complaint in an action on contract need not allege that it was in writing, since such fact will be presumed if necessary to the validity of the contract.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by William F. McCann against James C. Pennie, as administrator of Thomas H. Blythe, deceased, for breach of contract. From a judgment sustaining defendant's demurrer to the complaint, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Mich. Mullany, Aylett R. Cotton, and Wm. Grant, for appellant. Naphtaly, Friedenrich & Ackerman and John A. Wright, for respondent.

HAYNES, C. Judgment was entered against the plaintiff upon demurrer to his complaint, and this appeal is from that judgment.

In May, 1882, Blythe claimed to be the owner and was in possession of a tract of land in Mexico containing about 1,800,000 acres, and at that date entered into a contract with the plaintiff by which the plaintiff and his family should go from San Francisco to Mexico, and live upon the land, and conduct and manage the business of breeding, raising, and selling hogs, cattle, horses, and mules thereon from that time until December 31, 1887; and as compensation for plaintiff's services he was to receive $50 per month, 50 acres of said land to be conveyed to him at the expiration of the contract, a certain number of cows, with their increase, and a percentage of the profits resulting from the business; Blythe to furnish a designated number of hogs, cows, brood mares, etc., and to make the improvements necessary for conducting the business. Plaintiff entered upon the performance of the contract, and continued upon the land in charge of the business until August, 1887. Blythe resided in the city of San Francisco, and died in said city April 4, 1883, leaving a large estate in said city and county. On June 12, 1883, Philip A. Roach was appointed administrator of his estate by the superior court of said city and county, and qualified the same day.

After stating the terms of the contract very fully, and assigning several breaches of the same, and alleging the damages sustained therefrom, and other matters not necessary to be stated here, the complaint further alleged that the next day after the appointment and qualification of Roach as administrator, he informed him of his said contract, and the particulars of it, and requested immediate and full performance of it on the part of the administrator; that the administrator recognized the validity of the contract, and from that time acted under and partially performed the same; that the court and judge in which the administration proceedings were conducted also recognized the validity and obligation of the contract as against the estate, and at various times from that date until August, 1887, ordered and appropriated sums of money out of said estate, aggregating over $20,000, for the purpose of carrying out said contract on the part of the estate, which sums were expended by the administrator for that purpose that said cause of action did not fully accrue until January 1, 1888; and that on the 19th of February, 1888, he presented to the administrator his claim, amounting to $1,226,743, supported by his affidavit, and that his said claim was rejected on the 19th of March, 1888. The original complaint was filed March 20, 1888. Roach died after suit was commenced, and James C. Pennie became administrator of said estate, and was substituted in place of Roach. The demurrer was general and special.

1. It is contended in support of the demurrer that, in so far as the complaint sets up a cause of action accruing after the death of Blythe, the contract out of which it arose was to be executed in Mexico; that the administrator had no control over the lands and interests of his intestate in Mexico, and could not protect plaintiff from the wrongful acts of the Mexican citizen who dispossessed him; and that he had no authority to send funds or property into Mexico for the purpose of fulfilling the contract.

The special grounds of demurrer assigned do not reach these objections to the complaint, and as the objection only goes to a part of the cause of action, viz. that occurring after the death of the intestate, the demurrer cannot be sustained upon that ground. But the fact that the services to be performed under the contract were to be or were performed in a foreign country does not affect his right to maintain an action in the courts of this state against an administrator appointed here. It is not contended that the contract did not survive, nor are any authorities cited to sustain respondent's contention. In Janin v. Browne, 59 Cal., at page 44, it is said: "Where the contract of the deceased is of an executory nature, and the personal representative can fairly and sufficiently execute all the deceased could have done, he may do so, and enforce the contract, (Pars. Cont. 131;) e converso, the personal representative is bound to complete such a contract, and, if he does not, may be made to pay damages out of the assets, (Siboni v. Kirkman, 1 Mees. & W 418.)"

In 1 Chitty on Contracts, (11th Amer. Ed.) 138, it is said: "It is a presumption of law that the parties to a contract bind not only themselves, but their personal representatives. Executors, therefore, are held to be liable on all contracts of the testator which are broken in his lifetime, and, with the exception of contracts in which personal skill or taste is required, on all such contracts broken after his death; and such parties may likewise sue on a contract, although they are not named therein."

The cause of action is transitory in its nature, and might have been maintained against Blythe, had he lived, in any jurisdiction in which he might have been served with process; and hence his administrator is properly sued here without reference to where the contract was made, or was to be performed.

2. Respondent further contends that the complaint fails to state a cause of action, because it does not allege that plaintiff presented his claim to the administrator within the time limited in the notice to creditors; that it appears from the complaint that Roach qualified as administrator June 12, 1883, and that his claim was presented to the administrator February 29, 1888, and was rejected March 19, 1888.

The complaint does not show nor allege that notice to creditors was given. If the complaint had alleged that notice to creditors had been given, the complaint would be bad if it alleged a presentation at a date after the time limited in the notice had expired. But a claim may be presented before the notice is published, and such presentation is good. Ricketson v. Richardson, 19 Cal. 330; Society v. Hayes, 56 Cal. 306; Field v. Field, 77 N. Y. 294. In Janin v. Browne, 59 Cal., it was said at page 43: "It is not the publication of notice which is the prerequisite to the maintenance of an action on a claim, but the proper presentation of a claim and its rejection." I am not aware of any case holding that a complaint is bad, on general demurrer, where it is alleged that the claim was presented in due form, but contained no allegation touching publication of notice to creditors.

In Wise v. Hogan, 77 Cal. 184, 19 Pac. 278, the complaint alleged a presentation of the claim "within ten months next following and succeeding the first publication of notice to creditors." It was claimed in that case that the complaint stated no cause of action, inasmuch as the notice may have required the presentation of claims within four months; but the court held that such objection could not be raised by general demurrer, and said: "Although defectively stated, there is an allegation of the presentment of the claim;" and cited several cases in support of that proposition. The language of section 1500, Code Civil Proc., that "no holder of any claim against an estate shall maintain any action thereon unless the claim is first presented," etc., is analogous to the statute of frauds, which declares that no action shall be maintained on, etc., unless, etc.; and the bar of the statute must be pleaded in defense, unless the complaint shows upon its face that the contract is void under the statute; and a similar rule prevails in regard to the statute of limitations.

The special demurrers (b) and (c) go to the same point, and are sufficiently covered by what has been said. Special demurrer (a) is that it does not appear that the contract between the plaintiff and Blythe was in writing. Even though the contract were void if not in writing, it is not necessary to allege that it was in writing. If necessary to its validity, it will be presumed that it was in writing. Broder v. Conklin, 77 Cal. 330, 19 Pac. 513, and cases there cited.

The judgment should be reversed, with directions to overrule the demurrer, with leave to the defendant to answer.

We concur: SEARLS, C.; BELCHER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, it is ordered that the judgment be reversed, with directions to the court below to overrule the demurrer to the complaint, with leave to the defendant to answer.

---

4 Cal. Unrep. 390

NEVIN v. THOMPSON et al. (No. 19,318.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 28, 1893.)

PLEADING—COMPLAINT—SUFFICIENCY AS AGAINST GENERAL DEMURRER—PARTIES.

1. A complaint averred that defendant T. gave to plaintiff a note for $700; that, six months afterwards, defendants D. as principal, and S. and C. as sureties, gave T. a $3,000 bond, which was set out, conditioned that whereas T. and T. J. C. (who was not made a party) "are now indebted to parties hereinafter named in the sums set opposite each name, and that the purpose of this obligation is to relieve the said T. from any and all liability on said indebtedness, as follows, and we hereby agree to assume and pay the same, to wit, two promissory notes of $700 each, and the interest thereon: * * * Now, if the said T. J. C., or any of the parties save and except the said T.," shall pay such sums, the bond shall be void, etc; that T. was then indebted to plaintiff on two notes, one of which is the one sued on; and that the only indebtedness from T. to plaintiff was that evidenced by such notes. Held, that such complaint was not subject to a general demurrer, because the bond was to relieve T. from liability on a joint indebtedness of T. and T. J. C., while the debt sued on was T.'s only.

2. Nor was such complaint demurrable because T. J. C. was not a party, as he was not a necessary party.

3. Such complaint was not defective for uncertainty as to whether the suit was on the note or on the bond.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; W. L. Pierce, Judge.

Action by Nathan Nevin against Frank C. Thompson, T. J. Daley, A. R. Schulenberg, and H. T. Christian on a promissory note executed by Thompson, and on a bond whereby the other defendants assumed and agreed to pay such note; and also to reform such bond. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

J. L. Copeland and Gibson & Titus, for appellants. J. Z. Tucker, for respondent.

TEMPLE, C. This appeal is upon the judgment roll. The complaint shows that defendant Thompson, in June, 1890, executed and delivered to plaintiff a promissory note for the sum of $700, which note plaintiff still owns and holds, and which has not been paid; that, on the 11th day of December following, the defendants Daley, Schulenberg, and Christian executed and delivered to defendant Thompson an instrument in writing, which is set out in the complaint. This instrument, it was averred, as written, did not truly express the intention of the parties to it, and the plaintiff asked to have it reformed. This was done, and no point is made here as to that procedure. As it is alleged the parties meant to have it read, and as it is made to read by the judgment and decree of the court, it is a penal bond executed by Daley as principal, and Schulenberg and Christian as sureties, who are held and firmly bound to Thompson in the sum of $3,000, jointly and severally; and is conditioned "that whereas the said Frank C. Thompson and one Thomas J. Cambron are now indebted to the parties hereinafter named in the sums set opposite each name, and that the purpose of this obligation is to relieve the said Frank C. Thompson from any and all liability on said indebtedness, as follows, and we hereby agree to assume and pay the same, to wit, two promissory notes of $700 each, and the interest thereon: * * * Now, then, if the said Cambron, or any of the parties save and except the said Thompson, shall well and truly pay the said amounts, then this obligation is to be null and void, and otherwise to remain in full force and effect." It is alleged that Thompson was then indebted to plaintiff upon two notes, one of which is the note set out in the complaint, and that the only indebtedness from Thompson to plaintiff was that evidenced by the two notes. It is then averred that these notes are wrongly described in the bond, and the court is asked to reform the instrument so as to correctly describe them.

The complaint was demurred to generally for insufficiency of the statement of facts; for uncertainty as to whether the suit is on the note or bond; for nonjoinder of Cambron as a party defendant; and for misjoinder, in that Christian is not a proper party defendant. The point is made that the bond is to relieve Thompson from liability upon a joint indebtedness of Thompson and one Cambron, while the indebtedness upon which suit is brought is an indebtedness of Thompson alone. Therefore, as Daley, Schulenberg, and Christian have only undertaken to pay a joint indebtedness of Thompson and Cambron, it does not appear that they have undertaken to pay the debt averred. This point is certainly very plausible, but I think must be overruled. The complaint is undoubtedly very defective, but the objection is raised only on general demurrer. That does not reach a case where the facts are insufficiently stated, if it can be seen that the facts inartificially stated would, if properly stated, have been sufficient. The complaint does substantially aver that the indebtedness sued upon is the same as that described in the bond, and, the bond being a part of the complaint, a correct description is there found, and, as against a general demurrer, this allegation, which amounts to a statement that the debt described and sued upon is the debt assumed by the appellant, is enough. Nor is the other description of the indebtedness, as an indebtedness of Thompson upon a promissory note, which appears to have been signed by Thompson alone, absolutely inconsistent with the statement in the bond that the indebtedness is that of Thompson and Cambron. Both may be true. The indebtedness may have been a joint one, although secured by the note of Thompson alone. As to this general demurrer, if this could be so, we must assume it. The findings do, in fact, show that the note was signed by Thompson and indorsed by Cambron, and it is said that they were given for a horse purchased from plaintiff by Thompson and Cambron. This is, of course, only stated in lieu of a supposable case showing that the statements may both be true.

Although Cambron was also liable for the debt, it was not necessary to make him a defendant in this case, and the defendants are not injured by the fact that his liability is not more particularly averred.

There is no uncertainty as to whether the appellants are sued on the bond. They cannot doubt that it is sought to hold them liable upon it, and it is equally plain that they are not sued upon the note. As to them, at least, the averments as to the note are mere matters of inducement showing the consideration of their promise. No other points are raised here, and, if other objections might be suggested, they are not decided. The judgment should be affirmed.

We concur: SEARLS, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

NEVIN v. THOMPSON et al. (No. 19,188.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 28, 1893.)

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; W. L. Pierce, Judge.

Action by Nathan Nevin against Frank C. Thompson, Thomas J. Daley, A. R. Schulenberg, and H. T. Christian on a promissory note executed by Thompson, and on a bond whereby the other defendants assumed and agreed to pay such note; and also to reform such bond. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

J. L. Copeland and Gibson & Titus, for appellants. J. Z. Tucker, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The judgment in this case is affirmed on the authority of Nevin v. Thompson, (No. 19,318; this day decided in this department,) 35 Pac. 160.

100 Cal. 571

PEOPLE ex rel. CONNOLLY v. CITY OF CORONADO. (No. 19,239.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 28, 1893.)

POWERS OF LEGISLATURE—AMENDING CHARTER OF CITY.

Const. art. 11, § 8, which provides that the charter of a city "may be amended at intervals of not less than two years by proposals therefor, submitted by the legislative authority of the city to the qualified electors thereof," refers only to amendments made by and at the instance of the officers and electors of the city.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; E. S. Torrance, Judge.

Proceedings by the people, on the relation of James Connolly, against the city of Coronado, to have defendant city excluded from all corporate rights, privileges, and franchises, and to dissolve said corporation. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Atty. Gen. Hart and C. H. Rippey, for appellant. J. S. Callen and Gibson & Titus, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. A general demurrer to the complaint in this action was sustained by the court below, and, the plaintiff declining to amend, judgment was entered in favor of the defendant, from which the plaintiff appeals. The facts stated in the complaint are, in substance, as follows: Under the provisions of section 8 of article 11 of the constitution of this state, a charter for the city of San Diego was framed by 15 freeholders, ratified by a vote of the electors, and on March 16, 1889, approved by the legislature. St. 1889, p. 643. On March 19, 1889, an act was passed by the legislature, entitled "An act to provide for changing the boundaries of cities and municipal corporations, and to exclude territory therefrom." Id. p. 356. On March 17, 1890, proceedings were commenced, under the provisions of this act, to change the boundaries of the city of San Diego as described in its said charter, and to exclude therefrom certain territory known as "Coronado Beach," the boundaries of which were specifically described. These proceedings were conducted and carried on in strict conformity to the provisions of the said act, and resulted, in October following, in the exclusion of the said territory, if the provisions of the act were applicable to the city of San Diego, and the proceedings could be taken at that time. Afterwards, in November and December, 1890, the excluded territory was regularly organized as a municipal corporation of the sixth class, called the "City of Coronado," pursuant to the provisions of an act of the legislature approved March 13, 1883, and entitled "An act to provide for the organization, incorporation and government of municipal incorporations." St. 1883, p. 93. It is alleged that said pretended corporation, the city of Coronado, has "usurped and exercised, without any warrant, charter, or grant, the franchises of a municipal corporation of California, to wit, a city of the sixth class, and continues so to do, and has exercised, and still continues to exercise, franchises of a city of the sixth class, without any right so to do;" and the prayer is for judgment "that the defendant, the city of Coronado, be excluded from all corporate rights, privileges, and franchises," and that said corporation be dissolved.

It is admitted by counsel for appellant that the facts stated in the complaint show "the due incorporation and organization of the defendant city in all respects, if the stated proceedings had for the purpose of excluding territory from the city of San Diego were effectual for that purpose;" and it is said: "Our point of contention is that these segregation proceedings were wholly ineffectual to segregate the territory therein described from the city of San Diego; that the said territory remained, and still is, a part of the city of San Diego; and that therefore the incorporation and organization of the defendant city within the territorial limits of San Diego was and is void." The constitution, in section 8 of article 11, provides that any city containing a certain named population may frame a charter, commonly called a "freeholders' charter," for its own government, "consistent with and subject to the constitution and laws of this state," and that the charter so framed, when ratified by the qualified electors of the city and approved by the legislature, shall become the charter of such city and the organic law thereof; and also that "the charter so ratified may be amended at intervals of not less than two years, by proposals therefor, submitted by the legislative authority of the city to the qualified electors thereof, at a general or special election held at least sixty days after the publication of such proposals, and ratified by at least three-fifths of the qualified electors voting thereat, and approved by the legislature as herein provided for the approval of the charter." The constitution also, in section 6 of article 11, provides that "cities or towns heretofore or hereafter organized, and all charters thereof framed or adopted by authority of this constitution, shall be subject to and controlled by general laws." It is argued for appellant that the description of the boundaries of the city of San Diego, as found in its charter, constituted a part of the charter, and that the change of its boundaries by excluding therefrom Coronado beach was in effect an amendment of the charter, which, under the constitutional provision above quoted, could not be made for at least two years after the charter became the organic law of the city. The argument is unsound. It rests on the assumption that the constitutional provision referred to inhibits the amendment or change of a freeholders' charter, in any way, at intervals of less than two years, when, as clearly appears, the provision relates only to amendments made by and at the instance of the officers and electors of the city. The constitution plainly declares that all charters of cities, framed or adopted by its authority, shall be subject to and controlled by general laws, and there is no limit of time as to when such laws may be passed and take effect. The act of March 19, 1889, providing for changing the boundaries of cities, and under which the proceedings complained of were had, was a general law, and was constitutional. People v. Common Council of San Diego, 85 Cal. 369, 24 Pac. 727. This being so, the proceedings were authorized and must be sustained.

There are several decisions of this court which are in harmony with, and tend to support, the views above expressed, but we do not deem it necessary to cite them. The case of People v. City of Oakland, 92 Cal. 611, 28 Pac. 807, cited by appellant, is not in point. In that case a freeholders' charter for the city of Oakland was approved by the legislature on February 14, 1889. After the charter was framed, and before it was approved, certain territory was annexed to the city under the provisions of the act of March 13, 1883, (St. 1883, p. 93,) but this annexed territory was not included within the boundaries of the city, as described in the new charter. It was held that the old charter, which was amended by the proceedings to annex additional territory, was wholly superseded by the new charter, and the effect of such new charter was to detach the territory so annexed. We advise that the judgment be affirmed.

We concur: SEARLS, C.; TEMPLE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is affirmed.

---

100 Cal. 537

PEOPLE ex rel. FLEMING v. SHORB et al. (No. 19,377.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 26, 1893.)

COUNTY TREASURER — VACATION OF OFFICE — ABSENCE FROM STATE — QUO WARRANTO — SUFFICIENCY OF COMPLAINT.

1. Under Pol. Code, § 996, providing that an office shall become vacant before the expiration of the term on the incumbent's absence from the state, without permission of the legislature, beyond the period allowed by law; and section 4120, forbidding a county officer to absent himself from the state for more than 60 days, or for any period, without the consent of the board of supervisors,—such absence, ipso facto, creates a vacancy in his office, and in the office of each of his deputies, and the appointing board may appoint another to fill the office.

2. The fact that such treasurer was necessarily absent from the state on account of his health is immaterial.

3. In quo warranto against such treasurer and his deputies, on the relation of one claiming title to the office by appointment, a general demurrer to the complaint was properly overruled, though it failed to show title in relator, since a judgment ousting defendants would not rest on the want of relator's right to the office, (Code Civil Proc. § 803 et seq.,) and since such demurrer, for that reason, did not raise the question of relator's right.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; Lucien Shaw, Judge.

Quo warranto by the people, at the relation of T. J. Fleming, against J. De Barth Shorb and others. There was judgment for relator, and all the respondents, except said Shorb, appeal. Affirmed.

Smith & Winder, for appellants. McLachlan & York and Atty. Gen. Hart, for respondent.

VANCLIEF, C. The defendant Shorb was elected treasurer of the county of Los Angeles in November, 1892, and, having duly qualified, commenced to discharge the duties of that office January 2, 1893. The other defendants are his appointed and duly-qualified deputies, who were acting as such before and at the time of the commencement of this action. The action is of the nature of a quo warranto information, and is prosecuted by the attorney general, on the relation of T. J. Fleming, who claims the office of treasurer by virtue of an appointment thereto by the board of supervisors of Los Angeles county. The plaintiff alleges, in substance, that on July 14, 1893, Shorb left this state, and has ever since remained, and now (September 25th) is absent from this state, without the consent of the legislature, and without the consent of the board of supervisors of said county, for a longer period than 60 days, from July 14, 1893; that, by reason of such absence from the state, the office of treasurer of said county became vacant on September 13, 1893; that on September 15, 1893, the board of supervisors of said county appointed the relator, T. J. Fleming, to fill the vacancy; that, after having duly qualified, Fleming, on September 25, 1893, demanded of the defendants, who were then conducting the business of the office as deputies of Shorb, the records of the office, together with all moneys of the county deposited in the office and then in their custody; but that said deputies refused to comply with such demand. The prayer of the complaint is for judgment that none of the defendants are entitled to the office of deputy treasurer, nor to the custody of the records or moneys appertaining to that office, and that the relator, Fleming, is entitled to the office of treasurer, and that he be put in possession thereof, and of all records and moneys belonging thereto. The defendant Shorb was not served with process, and did not appear, and as to him the action was dismissed. The other defendants filed a general demurrer to the complaint, and answered at the same time, and plaintiff filed a general demurrer to the answer. The demurrer to the complaint was overruled, and the demurrer to the answer was sustained. The answer not being amended, judgment was rendered in favor of plaintiff, against the defendants other than Shorb, according to the prayer of the complaint. The defendants, except Shorb, have appealed from the judgment upon the judgment roll, without any bill of exceptions. The answer admits all the facts alleged in the complaint, but, as affirmative new matter of defense, alleges, in substance, that Shorb has been unwillingly, but necessarily, absent from the state on account of his serious and dangerous illness—severe nervous prostration—for proper treatment of which he was advised by his physicians it was necessary that he should go to the city of Philadelphia; that, pursuant to such advice, he left this state, and has not sufficiently recovered his health to enable him to return without danger of fatal consequences; but that defendants have such information of his convalescence as warrants their expectation and belief that he will soon return to this state.

1. It is contended for appellants that the absence of Shorb from the state for any period would not, ipso facto, effect a vacancy of his office; that the vacating of an office by absence of the incumbent from the state is a statutory penalty, of the nature of a forfeiture, which can be enforced only through legal proceedings in which the incumbent must have his day in court. I think, however, this position cannot be sustained, as it seems to depend upon a misconstruction of sections 996 and 4120 of the Political Code, which are as follows: "Sec. 996. An office becomes vacant on the happening of either of the following events before the expiration of the term: (1) The death of the incumbent. (2) His insanity found upon a commission of lunacy issued to determine the fact. (3) His resignation. (4) His removal from office. (5) His ceasing to be an inhabitant of the state, or, if the office be local, of the district, county, city or township for which he was chosen or appointed, or within which the duties of his office are required to be discharged. (6). His absence from the state without permission of the legislature beyond the period allowed by law. (7) His ceasing to discharge the duties of his office for the period of three consecutive months, except when prevented by sickness, or when absent from the state by permission of the legislature. (8) His conviction of a felony, or of any offense involving a violation of his official duties. (9) His refusal or neglect to file his official oath or bond within the time prescribed. (10) The decision of a competent tribunal declaring void his election or appointment." "Sec. 4120. A county officer shall in no case absent himself from the state for a period of more than sixty days, and for no period without the consent of the board of supervisors of his county." The 10 events mentioned in section 996 are merely conditions, upon the occurrence of any one of which the legislature has declared the office shall become vacant, not as a penalty or forfeiture, but simply as the legal effect of the happening of any one of the events mentioned. It is true that the occurrence of some of these events are conclusively established against the incumbent of the office by the finding or judgment of a competent tribunal, namely, his insanity, his removal from office, his conviction of a felony, and the invalidity of his election. But in all these cases he has his day in court; and section 997, Pol. Code, requires that "the body, judge, or officer before whom the proceedings were had must give notice thereof to the officer empowered to fill the vacancy." But no official notice to the appointing power of the happening of any of the other events mentioned in section 996 is required; and therefore, upon any kind of satisfactory evidence of the occurrence of any one of them, the appointing officer or board may make an appointment, though the incumbent of the office is not thereby concluded as to the fact of the occurrence of such event. He may still question and contest the allegation of that fact, either before or after the installation of the appointee,—before such installation, if he refuse to vacate the office, in an action by the people to oust him; or, after such installation, in an action by the people on his relation to oust the appointee. Thus, he may always have his day in court before it can be conclusively adjudged against him that the office was vacant at the time the appointment was made, The absence of Shorb from the state, as alleged and admitted, ipso facto, effected a vacancy of the office of treasurer, and consequently a vacancy of the office of each of his deputies, the appellants, who have had their day in court, and have admitted all the facts essential to plaintiff's cause of action against them. Of course, Shorb is not concluded by their admissions, since they do not represent him in this action, and he is not a party to it. I think the foregoing construction (section 996, Pol. Code) warranted by the decision of department two of this court in case of People v. Brite, 55 Cal. 79.

2. The complaint shows that the official bond of the relator was approved by only four of the six judges of Los Angeles county, the other two judges having been absent from the county at the time; and for this reason it is claimed that the general demurrer to the complaint should have been sustained. By section 69 of the county government act, the bond is required to be approved "by the judge or judges, if there be more than one, of the superior court." The judgment ousting the defendants does not rest upon the want of the relator's right to the office, (Code Civil Proc. § 803 et seq.,) and therefore they were not interested in the question as to whether his bond had been properly approved, and their general demurrer did not raise that question. The complaint being good as against them, their demurrer was properly overruled. Flynn v. Abbott, 16 Cal. 359. It is therefore unnecessary to decide whether or not the approval of relator's bond was sufficient.

3. What is said under the first head sufficiently answers appellants' contention that the absence of Shorb from the state was necessary to his health, and that its continuance beyond the period limited by law was inevitable by reason of his sickness. The legislature has made no exception to, or qualification of, the rule that the continuous absence of a county officer from the state, for a period exceeding 60 days, without consent of the legislature or board of supervisors, shall absolutely effect a vacancy of his office, which may be filled by appointment; and courts have no power to interpolate any exception or qualification. The object and effect of the rule are to protect the interest of the public, and it is not perceived that it works the least injustice to an incumbent of an office. In effect it is only a contingent limitation of the term of an office, subject to which the office is voluntarily taken and generally eagerly sought. I think the judgment should be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; BELCHER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

---

100 Cal. 5

STEVENS v. SAN FRANCISCO & N. P. R. CO. (No. 15,371.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 28, 1893.)

MASTER AND SERVANT — ACTION FOR PERSONAL INJURIES — FELLOW SERVANTS — EVIDENCE — INSTRUCTIONS.

1. Though a steamboat engineer has power to employ and discharge an oiler working under him, they are fellow servants, under Civil Code, § 1970, providing that those are fellow servants who are employed by the same master in the same general business.

2. In an action for the death of plaintiff's intestate through the negligence of defendant's steamboat engineer, an instruction asked by plaintiff, that if an engineer should be perfectly competent to run an engine by reason of his knowledge and skill, yet he would not be a competent engineer within the meaning of the law if he should be unsteady and unreliable on account of habits of intoxication, is misleading, since it ignores the question whether defendant knew of such habits.

3. Plaintiff's intestate, an oiler on defendant's steamboat, was in such proximity to the machinery when the engine was started that he was crushed. Plaintiff sought to show that he was entitled to notice from the engineer before starting the engine. Defendant gave evidence that the rule of defendant's engineer was to have intestate inform him when he was going into a dangerous place, and, if he was not in his engine room, to withdraw the starting bar, and place it on the floor, as notice to the engineer not to start; that plaintiff followed this rule until the day of the accident, when he failed to give any notice, and, as a consequence, was killed by the machinery. Held, that it was proper to charge that, if it was intestate's duty to give such notice, and he failed to do so, plaintiff could not recover, even though the engineer was intoxicated and careless.

4. Plaintiff having introduced witnesses, who testified as to their own knowledge of the engineer's sobriety, the court properly refused to permit him to prove his general reputation for sobriety among his fellow employes, as such evidence would be mere hearsay.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; A. A. Sanderson, Judge.

Action by Catherine Stevens against the San Francisco & North Pacific Railroad Company. From a judgment for defendant, and from an order denying a motion for new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Henry E. Highton, for appellant. Charles F. Hanlon, for respondent.

SEARLS, C. Defendant had judgment in this cause. Plaintiff moved for a new trial, and this appeal is prosecuted from an order denying such motion.

The action is by plaintiff, as administratrix of her deceased husband, Joseph Stevens, to recover damages for his death while in the employ of the corporation defendant, alleged to have been caused by its negligence. The defendant, at the time of the injury complained of, was conducting a steam ferry between the city of San Francisco and Point Tiburon, in Marin county, using for that purpose a steamer called the James M. Donahue. On the 16th of August, 1887, the deceased was a fireman and oiler on said steamer under W. H. Wiggins, who was engineer of the vessel. The complaint avers that the business of oiling some part of the machinery when the engine was in motion was dangerous and full of peril to the life of the oiler; that it was the custom among oilers to attend to the oiling of the more dangerous portions while the steamer was lying idle at its landing, and the engine motionless; that it was the duty of the engineer to give the oiler notice before starting the engine; that on the 16th day of August, 1887, while the steamer was at Tiburon, and deceased was engaged in oiling the machinery, the engineer, without notice, started his engine, whereby deceased, without fault or negligence, was jammed by the crank of the engine against the frame supporting such engine, and crushed so that he died. The complaint further avers that Wiggins was, and for many years had been, the engineer of the steamer; that he was reckless, careless, and negligent in the discharge of his duty as an engineer, was given to habits of intoxication while on duty, and had been twice discharged by the defendant for drunkenness and negligence; all of which was known to defendant, but unknown to deceased, who had been employed on the steamer but 10 days. Defendant denies all of the foregoing allegations of the complaint imputing negligence to it or its engineer, or that he was careless, negligent, or intoxicated, or addicted to intoxication, and avers that he was a sober, skillful engineer, and denies that he was ever discharged; avers that the deceased had been in the employ of defendant for about 15 years, a portion of the time on the steamer James M. Donahue, and the remainder upon other steamers, and was well acquainted with the character and habits of Engineer Wiggins. Denies that it was necessary to oil the machinery when at rest, and avers negligence and carelessness on the part of deceased whereby he was injured. There was a substantial conflict upon all these issues, and the verdict in favor of defendant is conclusive, unless errors of law intervened by which the rights of the plaintiff were violated.

The James M. Donahue was, and for ten days to two weeks had been, running as a regular passenger ferryboat in place of the Tiburon, which was hauled off for repairs. She ran in connection with trains on the North Pacific Railroad. A train was due on that road at Point Tiburon from the north at 1:55 P. M., and the habit of the boat was to leave for San Francisco as soon thereafter as the passengers, baggage, and express matter could be transferred, which would usually be about 2 P. M. The steamer usually at this midday trip remained at Tiburon, say, one hour, during which time deceased, as oiler, was accustomed to oil the machinery. It is conceded on all hands that, when the engine ceases to run, water accumulates in the cylinder and fills the vacuum, and, before starting, it becomes necessary to start the machinery slowly, and give it a few revolutions to expel this water and restore the vacuum. The weight of testimony is to the effect that this movement of the engine usually takes place about five minutes before the time for starting the steamer, by which time the oiling is supposed to be completed; and that many engineers give notice before turning the machinery for such purpose by calling out "All clear" as a signal to the oiler. There was testimony, however, to the effect that this moving of the machinery to clear the engine may occur at irregular intervals, and that engineers have different methods by which oilers are notified. The engineer of the Donahue testified that his method was to have the oiler, when about to go into a dangerous place, notify him if in the engine room, and, if not, to take out the starting bar, and place it on the floor of the engine room, which was a signal to him not to start; that when deceased came under him as an oiler he notified him of this, his rule, and deceased replied he was acquainted with such rule, and that he (deceased) observed it, and often removed the starting bar, gave him notice, etc. There is also a conflict in the testimony as to the time at which the engine was started on the occasion upon which deceased was caught by the crank shaft and killed. Some three witnesses on behalf of plaintiff testified that it was at 20 minutes before 2 P. M. Defendant proved without contradiction that the train arrived at 1:55 P. M. on that day, and several witnesses, including the captain and other officers of defendant, testified that the engine was started after or about the moment the train arrived. The precise position occupied by deceased when killed by the accident is not clear. He had been seen on the upper deck not long before, but, as he was killed by the crank, and was found in the crank pit, had oiled on one side of the crank and not on the other, it may fairly be inferred he had come down from the upper deck, and was engaged in oiling about the pillow blocks and crank, when caught by the starting machinery and crushed.

The testimony in reference to the habits of W. H. Wiggins, the engineer, as to sobriety, was, as on other issues, contradictory. That he partook of intoxicants to a moderate extent was admitted by him at the trial. That he was ever intoxicated when on duty was disputed. There was testimony that he had drank from one to three times on the day Stevens was killed, which was contradicted beyond the statement that he had taken a single drink; and no one testified as to his apparent intoxication on that day, while as many as seven witnesses testified as to his apparent sobriety. At the trial counsel for the plaintiff asked the court to instruct the jury as follows: "If you believe from the evidence that the engineer, Wiggins, on board the steamer James M. Donahue, at the time of the accident, August 16, 1887, had charge of a department,—that is, the engineering department on board that boat,—with full control over the fireman and oiler, and with power to employ or discharge them, and that he occupied his position for and on behalf of defendant, then, and in that event, you are instructed that the said engineer, Wiggins, was what is termed in law a vice principal or agent for the defendant, and was not a co-employe of the oiler, Stevens; and, if the accident resulted from the negligence of the said engineer within the rules and principles otherwise laid down by the court, the defendant was responsible, whether it had or had not exercised due diligence and care in the selection of said engineer." The court refused the instruction, and subsequently, and on its own motion, gave the following instruction: "Now gentlemen of the jury, I instruct you that, as a matter of law, Wiggins, the engineer, and Stevens, the deceased, were fellow servants, and that section 1970 of the Civil Code of this state is the law which must control your verdict in this matter, subject to the facts as you may find them to be. That section reads as follows, (as far as it applies to this case I will read it to you:) 'That an employer is not bound to indemnify his employee for losses suffered by the latter in consequence of the negligence of another person employed by the same employer, in the same general line of business, unless he has neglected to use ordinary care in the selection of the culpable employee.' Now, the complaint avers, and the evidence shows, that Wiggins and Stevens were both employed in the same general business by the defendant. That on the day of the accident Mr. Wiggins, the engineer, started the engine of the steamboat, and Mr. Stevens, who was then and there acting as oiler, was caught in the machinery and killed. Now, under the pleadings and the evidence shown in this action, I instruct you that, in order to arrive at your verdict in this case, you must determine the following question: Did the death of Stevens occur through the defendant neglecting to use 'ordinary care,' as defined to you heretofore, in the selection and retention of Mr. Wiggins? The plaintiff claims it did, and the defendant claims it did not. It is for you to determine that question. Now, keeping this rule of law and this question which I have just read to you in your minds, and remembering that the evidence is that Mr. Wiggins moved the engine at the time of the accident, it then remains for you to answer this question: Did the death of Stevens occur through the carelessness or neglect of Mr. Wiggins, caused by the use of intoxicating liquors, used then or theretofore by Mr. Wiggins, and of which the defendant knew, or ought, by reason of the fact shown, to have known? The plaintiff claims it did; the defendant claims it did not. This is wholly for you to determine, and it is a great and important question in this case, for it is, in fact, a part of the question of 'ordinary care,' and to which I have just called your attention. Now, subject to the next instruction as to contributory negligence, —which I will give you,—if you should find that the defendant did not use this 'ordinary care' in the selection and retention of its engineer, Wiggins, then your verdict will be for the plaintiff. But if, on the other hand, you should find that the railroad company defendant did use this 'ordinary care' in the selection or retention of its engineer, Wiggins, then your verdict should be in favor of the defendant. If you should find that the defendant did not use 'ordinary care' in the selection or retention of its engineer, Wiggins, and that the accident occurred by reason thereof, then you will be obliged to answer this question: Did the killing of Stevens occur without contributory negligence on the part of Stevens? Contributory negligence is that degree of negligence on the part of the decedent, in this case, which would have contributed proximately or directly to the injury complained of, and it is here to the loss of life of decedent. The plaintiff says it did, and the defendant says it did not, and it is for you to determine. If the plaintiff is correct on this point, she would be entitled to a verdict in her favor; if, on the other hand, the defendant is correct on this point, then the railroad company, defendant, would be entitled to a verdict in its favor." The court also, at the request of defendant, gave the following: "If the defendant corporation here has used ordinary care in the selection and retention of Wiggins as engineer, then, if Stevens was free from all fault, and Wiggins was to blame altogether for the accident, it is a matter between co-employes, and the corporation, I instruct, has discharged its duty, and your verdict must be against the plaintiff and in favor of the defendant corporation."

The contention of appellant is that, as to the fireman and oiler on the steamer Donahue, the defendant had abdicated its authority to Wiggins, and that the latter had full power to employ and discharge them; and, as he had complete management and control of them, that, as to them, Wiggins was their master. That, under such circumstances, the engineer was a representative of his principal,—a vice principal, and not a fellow servant of the deceased,—and, as a sequence, defendant is liable to the same extent that it would be for its own carelessness or neglect, had it directly managed the engineer's department. Many cases are cited in support of this theory, and among them Brown v. Sennett, 68 Cal. 225, 9 Pac. 74. There is much contradiction between the decisions of the several states upon the question involved in the proposition presented by appellant's instruction. In this state, however, it is believed the recent decisions have settled the question adversely to the contention of the appellant. The deceased oiler and Engineer Wiggins were fellow servants, employed in the same general business; and the fact, if it was a fact, that the engineer employed and discharged the firemen and oilers who worked under him at will, did not alter their relations as fellow servants. Collier v. Steinhart, 51 Cal. 116; McLean v. Mining Co., Id. 255; Daves v. Railroad Co., 98 Cal. 19, 32 Pac. 708. Being fellow servants, it was incumbent upon plaintiff to show that the death of Joseph Stevens was proximately caused by the negligence of the engineer, and that the latter was incompetent, and that there was negligence upon the part of the defendant in employing him in the first instance, or in retaining him in its service after notice of his incompetency. Holland v. Railway Co., (Cal.) 34 Pac. 666. Section 1970 of the Civil Code has placed in the category of "fellow servants" all those who are employed by the same employer in the same general business. The section has been construed so often by this court, and with such uniformity and unanimity of opinion, that further remarks on the subject are not deemed necessary. Congrave v. Railroad Co., 88 Cal. 360, 26 Pac. 175; Yeomans v. Navigation Co., 44 Cal. 71; Hogan v. Railroad Co., 49 Cal. 128; McDonald v. Hazeltine, 53 Cal. 35; Brown v. Railroad Co., 72 Cal. 523, 14 Pac. 138; Fagundes v. Railroad Co., 79 Cal. 97, 21 Pac. 437; Stephens v. Doe, 73 Cal. 26, 14 Pac. 378. The case of Brown v. Sennett, relied upon by appellant, was commented upon in Congrave v. Railroad Co., supra, and evidently is not regarded as authority in cases like the present. The conclusion is reached that the instruction asked by appellant and refused did not properly embody the law applicable to the case, and that the instructions given by the court on its own motion contained correct expositions of the law.

Plaintiff asked an instruction as follows: "If an engineer should be perfectly skillful and competent to run an engine by reason of his intelligence, knowledge, skill, and experience, and yet should be unsteady and unreliable on account of a habit of drinking intoxicating liquors to excess, he would not be a competent engineer, within the meaning of the law." The court refused the instruction as asked, and modified it by adding the following: "If the employer knew of the fact, or had means of obtaining such knowledge;" with which addition it was given, and to which addition by the court plaintiff excepted. The instruction as asked may be conceded to be correct as an abstract proposition of law. As asked, however, it was well calculated to mislead the jury, for the reason that there was some evidence to the effect that the engineer, Wiggins, was addicted to drunkenness; and whether or not knowledge of such drunkenness (if the jury found it to exist) had been brought home to the defendant was an issue in the case; an issue which the instruction, as asked, entirely ignored. Again, the court had, in the 13th, 16th, 27th, 28th, 30th, 32d, 33d, 34th, 36th, and 39th instructions given at the request of the plaintiff, and in the instructions given on its own motion, correctly declared the law upon the question involved in the modified instruction; and, had it refused this instruction altogether, it would not have been error.

Exception is also taken to the following instruction given on behalf of defendant: "The plaintiff, in her complaint, alleges a duty in regard to the engineer on the question of signals, but she nowhere refers in her complaint to any corresponding duty on the part of the oiler to give a signal to the engineer. Now the defendant has adduced testimony to show that it was the duty as well as the practice of Stevens, during the period immediately before the accident, to give notice to the engineer by taking out the starting bar, or by notice whenever he desired the machinery to remain still while the ship was lying still at the ferry slip. Therefore, if you find that the accident was caused by Stevens failing to give any signal, and that it was the practice and rule on that boat at that time for him to give it, and he was thereby killed, then, even if Wiggins was intoxicated, or was careless, or was to blame, it would make no difference, as I instruct you that in that case the contributory negligence on the part of Stevens would defeat plaintiff's action, and would make it your duty to bring in a verdict against the plaintiff and in favor of the defendant corporation." In this instruction, and another, involving negligence on the part of Stevens if he needlessly placed himself in the way of the machinery, etc., appellant contends that the instructions are erroneous, in that they hold that mere negligence on the part of defendant would defeat a recovery, whereas the negligence which defeats a recovery must be a negligence which directly conduces to the injury; and, while the injured party may have been negligent, yet, if the injury was caused by the failure of defendant, after such notice as would put a prudent man upon his guard to use ordinary care for the purpose of avoiding such injury, the party injured is entitled to recover, etc. The immediate cause of Stevens' death was not in dispute. It was conceded on all hands that he was in such proximity to the machinery of the steamer that when it was started it caught and crushed him. The real question involved related to his being rightfully in such position that starting the machinery would produce this result. Plaintiff sought to show that the deceased was entitled to notice from the engineer before starting the engine. Defendant, on the other hand, introduced evidence tending to show that different engineers had different rules; that the rule of the engineer, Wiggins, was to have the oiler inform him when going into a dangerous place, and, if not in his engine room, to withdraw the starting bar, and place it on the floor of the engine room, which was notice to him not to start; that he instructed Stevens as to this rule when the latter first came with him; that the latter replied that he was familiar with the rule, and acted upon it until the day in question, when he gave no notice, and, as a consequence, was killed by the starting of the machinery. If this was true, there can be no serious question but that Stevens was in fault.

The court is not required to instruct upon phases of the law not involved in the case, and what the duty of defendant's engineer would have been had he in fact known the position of Stevens when he started his engine did not concern the court or jury, for the reason that there is nothing in the testimony to show that the engineer or any one else on the boat saw or knew what the position of Stevens was until the engine started, when he cried out, and the engineer at once stopped the engine, the crank not having moved over two or three feet, when he was found crushed. It follows that the hypothesis contended for was foreign to the case. If the jury believed the theory of plaintiff, that it was the duty of the engineer to give notice before starting the engine, then, as to that branch of the case plaintiff was in the right, irrespective of knowledge of the whereabouts of Stevens by the engineer.

Another exception of appellant is founded upon the refusal of the court to permit plaintiff to prove the general reputation of Wiggins for sobriety among those employed in the ferry service. Intemperance, sobriety, and drunkenness are facts to be proven like other facts. The proffered evidence was hearsay, concerning which Greenleaf, at section 99, vol. 1, of his work on Evidence, says: "Hearsay evidence, as thus described, is uniformly held incompetent to establish any specific fact which in its nature is susceptible of being proved by witnesses who can speak from their own knowledge." Plaintiff had already introduced witnesses upon the subject, who had testified as to these specific facts; and upon the face of the offer the testimony was not admissible. There are some exceptions to the general rule enunciated by Greenleaf, but the offer of plaintiff failed to bring the proffered testimony within any of the exceptions; in other words, the offer was general. In his brief, counsel for appellant argues that this evidence was proper, as tending to bring knowledge of the habits of the engineer home to defendant. If offered for that specific purpose, it should have been so specified, which was not done. Where evidence is admissible, not generally, but for some specific purpose, the offer should designate the purpose.

We have patiently examined the record bearing upon the numerous exceptions reserved at the trial. To comment upon all of them in detail would swell the decision beyond reasonable limits, and, as they are either without merit, or not of sufficient importance to call for a reversal, no useful purpose will be subserved by their elaboration. The cause was properly tried, and the verdict of the jury was in consonance with the weight of testimony. The order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial should be affirmed.

We concur: VANCLIEF, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial is affirmed.

(4 Cal. Unrep. 393)

PACIFIC MUT. LIFE INS. CO. v. BECK et al. (No. 15,332.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 28, 1893.)

MORTGAGES — FORECLOSURE — PURCHASING MORTGAGEE—RIGHT TO RENTS AND PROFITS.

1. Where a receiver was appointed in a suit to foreclose a mortgage, and the mortgagee purchased the mortgaged premises at the foreclosure sale for the full amount of his debt and costs, the rents and profits of the mortgaged premises in the hands of the receiver at the time of the sale belonged to the mortgagor, and not to the mortgagee.

2. The mortgagee did not become owner by purchasing at the foreclosure sale, so as to entitle him to rents payable 10 days after the sale, since his title was not changed thereby, except that the amount of his debt was fixed, and his right to a deed or to a sum paid to redeem within six months became absolute.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county; John Ellsworth, Judge.

Action by the Pacific Mutual Life Insurance Company against John Beck and Priscilla Beck and another to foreclose a mortgage. From an order directing a receiver of the mortgaged property to pay rents and profits in his hands to the mortgagor, the mortgagee appeals. Affirmed.

Kellogg & King and Fox, Kellogg & King, for appellant. J. W. Harding, for respondents.

TEMPLE, C. This appeal is from an order made after judgment. The action was to foreclose a mortgage executed by the defendants Beck to plaintiff, in which it was stipulated that, when proceedings to foreclose were instituted, a receiver might be appointed.

November 17, 1890, a suit to foreclose having been commenced, an application was made for the appointment of a receiver. By consent a receiver was appointed, who in the order was directed and authorized "to take charge of the property, and prevent waste thereon, and to collect and receive the rents and profits thereof, and especially to farm or lease or cultivate said land, and to care for, protect, and at the proper time harvest and thresh or otherwise prepare for market and sell the product of said premises, holding the same and all moneys collected or received by him hereunder subject to the further order of this court in that behalf, reporting to the court, from time to time, his doings hereunder," etc. The receiver was appointed, and duly qualified, and took possession of the mortgaged premises, which consisted of a farm.

In pursuance of the authority, the receiver leased the property for the cropping season of 1891, "but in no event to exceed nine months from January 1, 1891, at the rent of one-fifth of all crops raised thereon during said demised term, payable as follows: Hay, well baled; wheat, barley, and similar products, sacked in good sacks,—and all the foregoing products delivered in a seasonable time for harvesting and gathering same at warehouse in Livermore, free of all expense to receiver." The proceedings not having been ended in 1891, the lease was renewed for the cropping season of 1892 on the same terms. Besides the terms above recited, the lease contained a stipulation that the tenant would cultivate the land "in a farmer-like manner, using the same for the purpose of raising hay, wheat, barley, and similar crops."

The questions involved in this appeal have reference to the crops of 1892. They were all harvested, and the portion paid as rent was delivered in the warehouse, as stipulated, before September 7, 1892. At that time the receiver obtained warehouse receipts for it. On the 21st day of September, 1892, the premises were sold under a decree of foreclosure entered in the suit. At that sale the mortgagee purchased, paying the full amount of its debt and costs. September 30, 1892, the receiver filed a report, showing that he had in his hands hay, wheat, and barley, the crop of 1892. Thereupon a contest arose between appellant and the defendants Beck, each claiming the property. It was given to the defendants, and plaintiff appeals from that order.

As the mortgage debt and all costs had been fully paid, it is difficult to comprehend upon what rational ground the mortgagee can claim the crops which were in the hands of the receiver. Counsel argues that the rents were collected by the receiver for the purpose of having them applied to the mortgage debt. Let that be admitted; still they did not belong to the mortgagee. They were held as security only. The mortgagee was not entitled to his debt and the rents and profits, but to his debt only. The debt having been fully paid from the property of the debtor, the securities which remain belong to the debtor.

Counsel seem to argue, in the opening brief, that the lease did not expire until October 1st, and they put in proof that it was generally thought that the cropping season ended at that time. They then contend that the rents were not due until the end of the term, and that plaintiff, when he purchased the mortgaged premises at the foreclosure sale, which was nine days before October, became the owner of the premises, and, as such, entitled to all rents which fell due after his purchase. I think it clear that counsel are mistaken in all these propositions. The term expired at least as soon as the crops were harvested and removed from the premises. The term was for the cropping season, and it was stipulated, in effect, that the premises were to be used for the purpose of raising these crops only. If, however, it be conceded that the term continued until October, the crops were to be delivered to the receiver as soon as convenient after harvesting, "in a seasonable time after the proper and suitable time for harvesting and gathering same." If they had not been so delivered, it would have been the duty of the receiver to compel such delivery. And, lastly, if it be admitted that the rent was payable after the sale under the foreclosure, still the plaintiff would have no right to them. He did not become owner by purchasing at the sale. His title was not at all changed by that fact, except that the amount of his debt was fixed, and his right to a deed, or a sum paid to redeem within six months, absolute. His rights as purchaser are carefully defined in the Code of Procedure.

It is suggested, rather than clearly stated, that his title dates back to the date of the mortgage. It cannot be that it is really claimed that any such relation affects plaintiff's rights in this case. The relation is allowed only to cut off intervening rights, but the purchaser has the rights of an owner only when he becomes entitled to his deed. Jones, Mortg. § 1661. I advise that the order be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; SEARLS, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the order appealed from is affirmed.

(100 Cal. 590)

BANK OF UKIAH v. PETALUMA SAV. BANK et al. (No. 15,022.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 28, 1893.)

UNRECORDED MORTGAGES—JUDGMENTS—PRIORITIES.

An unrecorded mortgage, being valid between the parties and those having notice, (Civil Code, § 1217,) and being declared void, by section 1214, only as against subsequent purchasers or mortgagees for value and in good faith, takes precedence over an attachment or judgment lien obtained after execution of the mortgage.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Sonoma county; S. K. Dougherty, Judge.

Action of the Bank of Ukiah, a corporation, against the Petaluma Savings Bank, a corporation, Pierce Asbill, and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Haskell & Meyer, for appellants. J. A. Cooper, for respondent.

TEMPLE, C. Appeal from the judgment. A simple question of law is presented by this appeal. The learned judge of the trial court, in an opinion which respondent has printed in his brief, presents that question thus: "Will the lien of an unrecorded mortgage, given to secure a loan, take precedence over an attachment or judgment lien obtained after the execution of the mortgage?" There is no law in this state which requires conveyances to be recorded. Section 1217 of the Civil Code provides that 'an unrecorded instrument is valid as between the parties thereto and those who have notice thereof.' This section implies that a mortgage, though unrecorded, is a lien upon the real estate mentioned therein, and our supreme court has said that the mortgage lien attaches when the instrument is executed, though recorded afterwards. Root v. Bryant, 57 Cal. 48; Walker v. Buffandeau, 63 Cal. 312." The mortgage covered property situate in Sonoma county, and also property in Trinity county. It was recorded in Sonoma, but not in Trinity. Shortly after it was executed, appellant brought suit against the mortgagors, and caused an attachment to be levied on the land in Trinity county. Subsequently, a judgment having been obtained, a transcript of the original docket was filed with the recorder of Trinity county, as provided in section 674, Code Civil Proc. The judgment was rendered July 3, 1890, and this suit was commenced to foreclose plaintiff's mortgage May 14, 1891, which was after the levy of the attachment and the filing of the judgment docket. The trial court held that the lien of the judgment was subject to the lien of the mortgage, and defendants appeal.

The lien being created by the mere execution and delivery of the mortgage, the next question is whether the lien is lost, as to a judgment or attaching creditor, because the mortgage is not recorded. It is enough to say that the statute does not so provide. The mortgage unrecorded is only declared void as against subsequent purchasers or mortgagees for value and in good faith. Civil Code, § 1214. An attaching creditor takes only whatever interest the debtor has. "An attachment and the levy of an execution or a judgment lien are not much different, and an attachment creditor cannot be considered as a bona fide purchaser. The creditor is entitled to the same rights as the debtor had, and to no more." Ping. Chat. Mortg. § 665. See, also, Foorman v. Wallace, 75 Cal. 553, 17 Pac. 680. I find some cases from other states which at first view seem to sustain the position of appellants. So far as I have examined such cases, they all depend upon some statutory provision which is wanting here. In some states an unrecorded instrument is made void as to creditors under certain circumstances. I think the judgment should be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; SEARLS, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is affirmed.

100 Cal. 419

PEOPLE ex rel. SCEARCE et al. v. GLENN COUNTY. (No. 18,193.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 15, 1893.)

Legislation—Dispensing with Reading of Bill—Urgency — Counties — Creation — Special Legislation.

1. Under Const. art. 4, § 15, providing that a bill shall be read on three several days in each house before its passage, unless, in a case of exigency, two-thirds of the house, where the bill is pending, shall vote to dispense therewith, the reading of a bill may be dispensed with by a resolution expressly naming the bill, though including other bills.

2. The motive of a legislator in voting for a resolution declaring a bill a case of urgency, and dispensing with readings thereof, cannot be inquired into.

3. An act creating and providing for the original organization of a county is not special or local legislation.

4. It is no objection to a bill creating and providing for the original organization of a county that it does not divide the county into supervisor districts, but allows supervisors to be in the first instance elected at large, who, under the general law, have power to divide the county into districts.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county; Matt. F. Johnson, Judge.

Action by the people, on the relation of Scearce and others, against the county of Glenn, to have it declared not legally organized. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Atty. Gen. Hart, Stanly & Hayes, and H. M. Albery, for appellants. Aylett R. Cotton and J. C. Campbell, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. On March 11, 1891, an act of the legislature was approved entitled "An act to create the county of Glenn, to establish the boundaries thereof, and to provide for its organization," (St. 1891, p. 98;) and defendant claims that, in pursuance of the provisions of that act, the county of Glenn became duly organized. For some time past defendant has been exercising the ordinary functions of a county government, and has been recognized as such by the political and executive departments of the state government. This present proceeding was brought in the superior court, in the name of the people, to have it judicially decreed that said county of Glenn "is not legally organized, and is not a separate county government;" that it has usurped the franchise of a public corporation; and that it be precluded from exercising the same, etc. To the complaint defendant interposed a demurrer, upon general as well as upon many special grounds. The demurrer was sustained, and, plaintiffs declining to further amend, judgment was rendered for defendant. Plaintiffs appeal.

The only point presented by appellants at the oral argument, and the main one made in their brief, is that said act providing for the creation of Glenn county was not, before its passage by the state senate, "read on three several days" in that branch of the legislature, in accordance with the provision of section 15 of article 4 of the state constitution; that such provision was not dispensed with by a two-thirds vote of the senate, as may be done under that section; and that, therefore, said act is unconstitutional and void. The complaint avers that said act, which had been regularly passed in the assembly, and was designated as "Assembly Bill No. 185," was not read on three several days before its passage in that body. But the complaint also shows that, before its passage in the senate, a resolution was there adopted by a two-thirds vote, by which it was resolved that said act, (Assembly Bill No. 185,) and also a number of other bills, "present 'cases of urgency,' as that term is used in section fifteen of article four of the constitution, and the provision of that section requiring that the bills shall be read on three several days in each house is hereby dispensed with, and it is ordered," etc. The only objection to the dispensing resolution is that it included other bills as well as the one now in question. But the constitution does not undertake to provide the form, or to set limitations to the manner, in which the dispensing power shall be exercised. The words are simply: "Unless, in a case of urgency, two-thirds of the house where such bill may be pending shall, by a vote of yeas or nays, dispense with this provision." It merely provides that a bill shall be read on three different days in each house, unless such house, by a two-thirds vote, shall, in some appropriate form, dispense with that necessity. This was done in the case at bar with respect to the bill in question, the bill being expressly named in the resolution. The main virtue of the provision is evidently the requirement of a two-thirds vote. The constitution does not, either expressly or by necessary implication, prohibit the senate from exercising its dispensing power with respect to two or more bills by one declaration of its purpose; and the unquestioned rule with respect to American states is that the legislature may exercise all legislative power not prohibited to it by the constitution. The judiciary, when called upon to determine what the law is that applies to an action regularly pending in a court, is sometimes forced to say that a particular act of the legislature invoked by one of the parties to the action is not law, because in conflict with the higher law,—the constitution; but it will exercise that delicate power only in cases where the legislature, in passing the act in question, did clearly violate some prohibitory clause of the constitution. To otherwise exercise it would be to confound the distinction between the co-ordinate departments of the government. And, in the case at bar, to hold here that the Glenn county act is unconstitutional, for the reason assigned, would simply be to substitute our judgment of the propriety of certain legislative action for that of the legislators themselves, whose judgment in the premises was, under the constitution, supreme and final.

It is averred in the complaint that several of the senators who voted to declare the Glenn county bill a case of urgency afterwards voted against the bill on its final passage. This averment is clearly of no value. It was made to indicate that such senators may have voted in the first instance through improper motives. In the first place, if motives could be at all inquired into here, we would not hunt after bad motives for an act when worthy motives were apparent. For instance, a legislator, although opposed to a certain bill, might well vote to dispense with the readings on different days, because he thought that the public interest required speedy action on the subject; or it might well be that between the first and second vote he had changed his views as to the policy of the bill. Other creditable motives could easily be suggested. But the motives which induced legislative action are not a subject to judicial inquiry; and a legislative act cannot be be declared unconstitutional because, in the opinion of a court, it was or might have been the result of improper considerations. A court is neither the director of the discretion of a legislator, nor the keeper of his conscience. The case of Bloom v. Xenia, 32 Ohio St. 461, cited and relied on by appellants, is not authority for them, but is authority against them. The case involved the validity of an ordinance of a municipal corporation, and the facts were that the rules were suspended generally, without special mention of the ordinance in question, and then, after a certain other ordinance had been passed, the ordinance in question was passed, without any further suspension of the rules. But the court elaborately shows the distinction between a municipal corporation, with granted and limited powers, and the legislature of a state, with powers unlimited, except by prohibitions of the constitution. The court says: "The efforts of courts are to sustain acts of the legislature. They will not be declared unconstitutional unless clearly so. * * * By the terms of the organic law the legislative power of the state is declared to be vested in the general assembly. The grant of power is general, not special. It embraces all such legislative power as the people of the state could, under the federal constitution, confer,—the whole legislative power of the state. The limitations upon the exercise of this power thus broadly confined are special, and are to be found in other parts of the instrument. When, therefore, the power of the legislature to enact a general law is disputed, the proper question is whether such exercise of legislative power is clearly prohibited by the constitution."

There are other points made by appellants in their brief, which we do not deem necessary to be largely discussed. They are in great part answered by the decision of this court in People v. McFadden, 81 Cal. 489, 22 Pac. 851, which involved the validity of the act creating the county of Orange. It must be remembered that, as held in the case just cited, an act creating and providing for the original organization of a new county is not within the prohibitions of the constitution against special and local legislation; and this consideration parries most of the additional thrusts made in the brief at the validity of the Glenn county act. Many of the provisions of an act creating a new county are intended to be only preliminary and temporary, and are necessary to put the new political subdivision on its feet; so that, at the expiration of time limited for the existence of the temporary expedients, the county may, in due course, take its place under the general law for the government of organized counties. And, as there is no limitation upon the means which may be employed for this preliminary organization of a county, it is not fatal to the Glenn county bill that it does not itself provide for the division of the proposed county into supervisor districts, but allows five supervisors to be, in the first instance, elected at large, who have power under the general law to divide the county into districts.

Neither do we see anything in the objection to the manner in which the election, at which the voters of proposed new county expressed their will, was held. It was held in accordance with the provisions of the act itself; and by subdivision 11, § 25, art. 4, of the constitution, there may be a special law for holding and conducting an election "on the organization of new counties." There are in the complaint some attempted allegations of fraud at the election; but if the determination of the commissioners, appointed by the act to superintend the election and declare the result, is not conclusive of that point, in the absence of any law for contesting such an election, still the said allegations are only of conclusions of law, and state no facts sufficient to constitute such fraud. There were special demurrers on that point, and they were properly sustained. There are no other points necessary to be specially mentioned. The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: DE HAVEN, J.; FITZGERALD, J.

4 Cal. Unrep. 371

HAMILTON v. BATES et al. (No. 19,211.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 21, 1893.)

CORPORATIONS—CONTRACTS.

Where a president of a corporation agrees that the corporation shall assume the debts of a person it cannot be held liable by a creditor of such person, no corporation action with relation to the contract being shown, but it being claimed simply that money paid on the contract came into possession of the corporation.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; W. L. Pierce, Judge.

Action by Charles S. Hamilton against F. E. Bates and others and the Coronado Beach Company. Judgment for defendants. Plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

J. J. Henderson and Luce & McDonald, for appellant. Works & Works, for respondents.

TEMPLE, C. This appeal is from a judgment of nonsuit, rendered in favor of the defendant the Coronado Beach Company, and was taken within 60 days after the rendition of the judgment. The action was brought to recover $2,152 for goods sold and delivered to Ben S. and Josie A. Miller. The respondent was sued upon the supposition that for a valuable consideration, paid to it by one F. E. Bates, it had promised to pay all the indebtedness of the Millers. Plaintiff claims that the contract is one made expressly for his benefit, upon which he may therefore sue, as provided in section 1559, Civil Code. Ben S. Miller and Josie A. Miller, his wife, had purchased a large amount of land from the Coronado Beach Company, for which they held contracts; the purchase money not having been paid. They had built upon the land purchased an hotel called the "Hotel Josephine." About January 27, 1888, being unable to pay their indebtedness, they entered into a verbal arrangement with Bates, who had become liable for a large amount of their indebtedness, by which Bates was to take their property and sell it, and from the proceeds pay their debts. It is a matter of dispute as to whether Bates then undertook and promised to pay all the indebtedness of the Millers. The purchase money due the respondent, for which they held the land as security, was $40,785.41. Bates had previously become responsible for about $1,900 of the Millers' debts, and they owed about $8,000 more, which are called "floating debts." The debts sued upon are a part of this floating indebtedness, for which Bates was certainly not liable prior to the arrangement with the Millers, above alluded to; and I think there is no evidence in the case upon which the court could have found that Bates then assumed such debts. Subsequently to the verbal arrangement it was agreed that respondent should convey the title to the land to Bates, who should secure the purchase money by a mortgage to the respondent. Accordingly the deed and mortgage were executed, and at the same time an instrument in writing by all the parties, reciting the change in the relation of the corporation to the property, and wherein Bates agreed to save the respondent harmless from loss through certain claims against the property, and particularly against the attachment of the Chadbourne Furniture Company and the floating indebtedness of the Millers. Afterwards, March 10, 1888, the Millers executed a release in favor of Bates, whereby they released Bates from all claims on account of the conveyance to him of said property, provided Bates should pay all their indebtedness in the county of San Diego, not exceeding in the aggregate $70,000. This was not signed by Bates, and was probably intended to release him from that part of the first verbal arrangement in which it was agreed that, in case of a surplus after payment of the debts, such surplus should be equally divided between Bates and the Millers. Before this last instrument was executed, however, to wit, February 23, 1888, Bates had become convinced that he would be unable to manage the debts of the Millers, or prevent the property from being sold under the attachments. He therefore informed Babcock, who was president and manager of respondent, of his inability. Babcock then asked what he could do to induce the corporation to assume the indebtedness of the Millers. It was then finally arranged between Bates and Babcock, acting as president and manager of respondent, that Bates would pay to respondent $15,000, and hold the property for the Beach Company, or convey it to any one at request of that company; that, in case the debts were paid, the corporation should have and retain one-half of any surplus that might remain, and Bates should have the other half; in consideration of which Babcock agreed for the corporation that it would pay all the indebtedness of the Millers. Bates paid to Story, who was acting with Babcock, for the corporation, of which he was vice president, the $15,000. This was charged to the corporation, and most of it, it is shown, was afterwards paid out in the name of the corporation upon the debts of the Millers in discharge of attachments upon the property.

Respondent's counsel contend that the evidence only shows that Babcock and Story undertook and agreed to pay certain debts which were then threatening to throw the Millers into insolvency, and did not assume to pay all the debts; but, as the judgment is by nonsuit, we must assume as against it that every fact was proven in favor of plaintiff which there was any substantial evidence tending to prove. It will be presumed that the trial court considered all such facts as established, and held as matter of law that, conceding that they were proven, they did not entitle the plaintiff to judgment. Bates testified very clearly that Babcock agreed for respondent that it should assume all the debts of the Millers in San Diego county. The motion for a nonsuit was based upon seven alleged defects in the evidence. The one sustained by the court was that it was not shown that the corporation ever assumed the indebtedness. As I think this point must be sustained, it is not necessary to consider the others. The only showing in regard to the corporation in the record consists in the allegation that it is a corporation; the proof that it had sold land to the Millers; that it conveyed the title to Bates, and received a mortgage for the purchase money; that Babcock assumed to act for it as president and manager; that Story signed a receipt as its vice president; that a payment was made in its name, and a note so indorsed; that Story was heard to say that he had paid the $15,000 to it, and the testimony of Bates that some of the Miller land had been sold, and the proceeds divided between himself and the corporation. There was no proof as to the character or purpose of the corporation, or the nature of the business in which it was engaged. There was no proof as to who were its directors or stockholders, or that Babcock or Story owned any stock except by such presumption as would arise from the fact that they assumed to act as president and vice president. No corporate action of any kind is shown. There was, so far as the proof shows, no meeting of the board of directors or of the stockholders. There was no proof tending to show the nature or extent of the authority of the president or vice president, or that they had been accustomed to transact business of any kind for the corporation. It is not a case where an agent had ostensible authority, as there is no evidence whatever as to what Babcock's authority was, and no facts tending to show that any one had a right to assume anything whatever as to the extent and scope of his authority. There is no proof that any one was or could have been deceived upon the subject. It is not shown that the directors took any action whatever upon the matter. Perhaps, had they done so, it might be assumed that a resolution authorizing it had been passed. It is not shown in proof that there were any directors. It was not shown that the articles of incorporation—in other words, its charter—would justify such a transaction. One dealing with a corporation is bound to take notice of the limitations of its charter. Mor. Priv. Corp. § 591.

It is not claimed that there is any proof of an actual ratification of the agreement made by Babcock and Story, but it is contended that the corporation has received the benefit of the contract, and cannot now repudiate its obligations. The benefits alleged to have been received are the $15,000 paid by Bates in cash; the agreement that the land should be sold, and the corporation should have one-half of the surplus; and the statement of Bates that some land had been sold, and the proceeds divided between himself and the Beach Company. So far as the first is concerned, it seems to have been a mere matter of bookkeeping by Babcock and Story. They charged the money to the corporation, and when it was paid out in discharge of the Miller debts the checks were drawn in the name of the corporation. It is not shown that any stockholder or director ever knew of the transaction, or that the treasurer of the corporation—if there be one —ever had the money. It is presumable that more than that sum was paid to discharge pressing Miller debts, for Bates testified that he made the arrangement with Babcock because he only had $15,000, which was not enough for that purpose. The evidence only shows that Babcock and Story paid the Chadbourne claim, which was a little more than $13,000. It was shown that the property was not sold for enough to pay the Miller debts. It was in fact sold to pay the purchase money. As to the statement of Bates that he had sold some land and divided the proceeds, it does not appear when he sold the land. It may have been before the arrangement with Babcock, and the money part of the $15,000. But Bates does not specify how the money was paid, or to what agent of respondent he gave it. We are justified in supposing it was simply given to Babcock or Story. But there is nothing in all this which tends to prove a ratification of the contract made by Babcock and Story. At the most, it would only tend to show that the corporation had received a benefit which it could not retain when it repudiated the contract made on its behalf. In Foulke v. Railroad Co., 51 Cal. 365, it was held that in such case the express contract is not ratified, but the corporation is liable upon an implied contract to pay for the benefit received, and the recovery must be limited to the extent of the benefit. Section 1559, Civil Code, only authorizes a person not a party to a contract to sue when it is expressly made for his benefit. He cannot sue upon an implied contract, and, if he could, in no sense would this be one made for his benefit. And then there is a total absence of proof showing that the respondent has retained any benefit from the arrangement. As the property did not sell for more than its own debt, for which it had a preferred lien, the presumption is it has nothing.

It is not necessary here to hold that a corporation may not so deal with an unauthorized contract as to be held to have become bound by its terms. We are dealing with a case in which no corporate action with reference to the contract is shown, but where it is claimed simply that money paid upon the contract has come into its possession. There is no evidence tending to show that any creditor has been induced to change his position to his injury by reason of supposed assumption of the Miller debts. Indeed, they would hardly have been justified in doing so, in view of the fact that in the Code the right of the parties to the contract to rescind it at any time, at least before it has been acted upon, is expressly recognized. I think the judgment should be affirmed.

We concur: SEARLS, C.; VANCLIEF, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

---

5 Cal. Unrep. 765

DAVIS v. LAMB et al. (No. 15,293.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 21, 1893.)

JUDGMENT—CORRECTION—NEW TRIAL—SUFFICIENCY OF MOTION—ACTION ON NOTE—DEFENSE OF ALTERATIONS—OPENING CASE.

1. A judgment in an action against an administrator that is entered against him personally will be corrected on appeal therefrom, as the error is one that is apparent on the judgment roll.

2. A judgment in an action against an administrator that is made immediately enforceable will be corrected on appeal therefrom so as to make it payable "in due course of administration," as required by Code Civil Proc. § 1504, as the error is one that is apparent on the judgment roll.

3. A judgment in an action on a note for a sum larger than the principal and interest due on the note will be corrected on appeal therefrom, as the error is one that is apparent on the judgment roll.

4. The denial of a motion for a new trial on the ground of insufficiency of evidence will not be reviewed where the bill of exceptions on which the motion was made contains no exception on that ground, and no specification of any particular in which it is claimed the evidence was insufficient.

5. In an action, tried before the court, on a note guarantied by defendant's intestate, error cannot be predicated on the consideration of the note as evidence, on the ground that it had been altered after intestate's death, where no objection was offered to its admission on such ground, and the court found the note in the form in which it was made.

6. In an action, tried before the court, against an administrator on a note guarantied by his intestate, the court's refusal to open the case after taking it under advisement, to permit the administrator to show that he demanded the production of the original note when the claim was presented to him, is a proper exercise of discretion when it does not appear that the claim was rejected because of the nonproduction of the original.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county; F. W. Henshaw, Judge.

Action by Joseph Davis against George W. Lamb, administrator of the estate of William H. Lamb, deceased, and another, on a promissory note. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant Lamb appeals. Modified.

Welles Whitmore, for appellant. Marcus Rosenthal, for respondent.

VANCLIEF, C. Action on a promissory note made by the defendant Larabee to A. Davis & Son, and indorsed by the decedent as guarantor. The plaintiff is a member of the firm of A. Davis & Son, and sues as assignee of the note. The defendant Larabee was not served with summons. The court found in favor of plaintiff on all the issues of fact, and, among other things, found the note to have been made and indorsed in the following form: "$400.00. San Francisco, Oct. 19, 1889. Two months after date —— promise to pay to the order of A. Davis & Son four hundred dollars, for value received, with interest at —— per cent. per —— from —— until paid, both principal and interest payable only in United States gold coin; and in case suit is instituted to collect this note, or any portion thereof, —— promise to pay such additional sum as the court may adjudge reasonable as attorney's fees in said suit. C. E. Larabee." As conclusions of law the court found as follows: "(1) That by the terms of said promissory note the defendant Larabee promised to pay to the order of said A. Davis & Son, two months after its date, the sum of four hundred dollars, with interest thereon from its date at the rate of seven per cent. per annum, and, in case suit should be instituted to collect said note or any part thereof, such additional sum as the court should judge reasonable as attorney's fees in such suit. (2) That the said note was a nonnegotiable instrument, and the said William H. Lamb, by such indorsement, became a guarantor of such note, and guarantied the payment by said Larabee of the amount of said note. (3) That by reason thereof the plaintiff is entitled to judgment against the defendant George W. Lamb, as administrator of the estate of William H. Lamb, deceased, for the sum of four hundred dollars, with interest thereon at the rate of seven per cent. per annum from the 19th day of October, 1889, and costs of suit, such judgment to be payable in the course of administration of the estate of the said William H. Lamb, deceased; and it is ordered that judgment be entered accordingly. Done in open court this 14th day of May, 1892. F. W. Henshaw, Judge." Thereafter, on June 13, 1892, the clerk entered judgment on the findings as follows: "Wherefore, by reason of the law and by the finding aforesaid, it is by the court here ordered, adjudged, and decreed that plaintiff do have and recover of and from the defendant George W. Lamb the sum of five hundred and twenty-six and 40-100 dollars, and costs taxed at $72.00. Judgment entered June 13, 1892. James E. Crane, County Clerk. By Robert Edgar, Deputy Clerk." The defendant Lamb appeals from the judgment, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

Unquestionably, the judgment is erroneous in the following respects: First, it is against George W. Lamb personally, whereas it should have been against him as administrator of the estate of William H. Lamb, deceased, in which character he is sued; second, it is enforceable immediately, instead of being payable "in due course of administration," as required by section 1504 of the Code of Civil Procedure; third, it is for a sum ($526.40) exceeding the amount of the principal and interest of the note at the time it was rendered by about $53. All these errors are plainly apparent on the judgment roll, and may be corrected on the appeal from the judgment. On the appeal from the order denying the motion for a new trial, however, no error is made to appear. The motion was made on a bill of exceptions, proposed and settled after judgment, which contains no exception on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence, and no specification of any particular in which it is claimed the evidence is insufficient. Nor does the bill of exceptions show on what ground the new trial was asked. A paper purporting to be a notice of motion for a new trial is printed in the transcript, but it is not in, nor referred to by, the bill of exceptions, nor does it purport to have been served; and, since it is no part of the judgment roll, it forms no part of the authenticated record. It must be presumed, therefore, that the evidence justified the findings of fact. Jones v. Shay, 50 Cal. 509; Watson v. Railroad Co., Id. 523; Bonner v. Quackenbush, 51 Cal. 180; Perham v. Kuper, 61 Cal. 331; Coglan v. Beard, 67 Cal. 304, 7 Pac. 738. The bill of exceptions sufficiently specifies several alleged errors in law.

1. It is claimed that the note sued on should have been rejected and held void, for the reason that it had been altered after the death of William H. Lamb. In the note, as set out in the complaint, all the blanks appearing in it, as found by the court, are filled in so that instead of reading, "with interest at —— per cent. per —— from —— until paid," as found by the court, it reads as follows: "With interest at four per cent. per month from date until paid." In this form, with the blanks so filled, the note was offered in evidence by plaintiff, and admitted by the court without objection, on the ground that it had been altered by filling these blanks, though it was objected to on other grounds not tenable. After it had been admitted in evidence, it appeared by other evidence on the part of the plaintiff, including the testimony of the plaintiff himself, that these blanks had been filled after the death of William H. Lamb; and one of the plaintiff's witnesses testified that all the alterations were in the handwriting of the plaintiff. Thereupon plaintiff testified that he did not make nor authorize the alterations, and made an explanation of how they might have been made without his fault or knowledge, which explanation, it must be admitted, seems lame and unsatisfactory. Yet the defendant did not move to strike out the note, nor make any objection to it, on the ground that it had been altered by filling the blanks. As we have seen, the court found the note in the form in which it was made, disregarding the alterations; and, in the absence of any specification of insufficiency of evidence, it must be presumed that the evidence justified this finding; and, since there was no objection to the note as evidence on the ground that it had been altered by the filling of the blanks, the court did not err in considering it as evidence.

2. The case was submitted to the court on briefs to be filed by both parties within 20 days. After the briefs had been filed, and while the court held the case under advisement, the defendant's attorney moved to open the case for the admission of additional evidence on the issue as to whether the defendant had demanded the production of the original note at the time a copy of it was presented to him, as administrator, for allowance; and it is contended that the court erred in denying this motion, but I think otherwise. The proposed additional evidence was merely cumulative. Besides, it does not appear that the claim was rejected by the administrator on the ground that the original note was not presented. Under the circumstances, I think the refusal of the court to open the case was clearly within the bounds of its discretionary power, and not an abuse of such power.

The other points made by appellant are not sufficiently plausible to require special consideration. I think the cause should be remanded, with instructions to the court below to modify the judgment as indicated in this opinion; and, although this relief might have been obtained by motion in the trial court, I think, upon consideration of all the circumstances, the costs of the appeal should be taxed to respondent.

We concur: SEARLS, C.; BELCHER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the cause is remanded, with instructions to the court below to modify its judgment as above indicated, and, as so modified, the judgment and order are affirmed. The costs of the appeal are to be taxed to respondent.

100 Cal. 592

HOUSE et al. v. MEYER. (No. 19,283.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 29, 1893.)

NEGLIGENCE — ACTION FOR PERSONAL INJURIES — COMPLAINT—SUFFICIENCY— CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

1. In an action for injuries caused by defendant's alleged negligence, it is sufficient that the complaint allege generally negligence on defendant's part.

2. Nor was it necessary that plaintiffs should allege that they were free from contributory negligence.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

Action by House and others against Meyer. A demurrer to the complaint was overruled, and from a judgment for plaintiffs, and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Reymert & Orfila, for appellant. C. C. Stephens, for respondents.

DE HAVEN, J. The demurrer to the complaint was properly overruled. In an action like this, to recover damages resulting from the alleged negligence of a defendant, a general allegation of negligence upon the part of the defendant is sufficient. "The negligence is the ultimate fact, to be pleaded, and is not a legal conclusion." Bliss, Code Pl. § 211. Nor was it incumbent on the plaintiffs to allege that they were not guilty of contributory negligence. Robinson v. Railroad Co., 48 Cal. 409. The appeal in this case is without merit. Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: McFARLAND, J.; FITZGERALD, J.

4 Cal. Unrep. 388

In re DE LEON'S ESTATE. (No. 15,367.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 27, 1893.)

APPEAL—DISMISSAL.

Where the transcript on appeal does not show that the findings of fact and conclusions of law set out in it were signed by the trial judge and filed with the clerk, and that judgment was entered upon such findings and conclusions, as required by Code Civil Proc. §§ 632, 633, the appeal will be dismissed.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; J. V. Coffey, Judge.

Proceedings by Virginia Durstein to have allotted to her a share in the estate of Jose Francisco De Leon, deceased. Decree for plaintiff. The assignee of one of the distributees of said estate appeals. Dismissed.

T. M. Osmont, for appellant. Lloyd & Wood and L. D. McKisick, for respondent.

FITZGERALD, J. The appeal in this case purports to be from a judgment upon the judgment roll with a bill of exceptions. There are so-called "findings and conclusions of law" set out in the transcript, but they do not appear to have been signed by the judge or filed with the clerk; nor was there any judgment entered thereon, as required by sections 632, 633, of the Code of Civil Procedure. With the exception of a statement in the bill of exceptions that a "decree was rendered in favor of the petitioner as in said decree set forth," there is nothing in the record showing that any judgment was ever rendered by the court. This point was not made by counsel, either in their arguments or briefs, for the reason, perhaps, that they supposed that the judgment had been regularly entered upon the decision, and that, as the appeal had been taken upon the judgment roll, it was necessarily contained therein. If, however, it should be made to appear within the time allowed to file a petition for rehearing that the judgment was in fact entered upon the decision, but was inadvertently omitted from the transcript, then the judgment herein will be set aside, and counsel permitted, upon a suggestion of diminution of the record, to supply the omission. Appeal dismissed.

We concur: DE HAVEN, J.; McFARLAND, J.

(Jan. 26, 1894.)

BY THE COURT. Ordered that the judgment heretofore rendered in this cause on December 27, 1893, be and the same is hereby vacated and set aside, and, upon stipulation of the parties filed herein, further ordered that the case stand submitted upon the amended record, and upon the briefs now on file.

---

4 Cal. Unrep. 415

KAHN v. BRILLIANT et al. (No. 15,170.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 30, 1893.)

TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS.

It is not error to refuse an instruction which has been already substantially given.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; A. A. Sanderson, Judge.

Action by Henry Kahn against Abraham I. Brilliant and William H. Byington. From a judgment in favor of defendant Byington, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Naphtaly, Friedenrich & Ackerman, for appellant. C. L. Weller and McCreery & Byington, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. The plaintiff brought this action to recover the value of certain goods, wares, and merchandise alleged to have been sold and delivered to the defendants, who were copartners doing business under the firm name of A. I. Brilliant & Co. The defendant Byington only appeared, and by his answer he denied that he was a partner with the other defendants. The case was tried by a jury, and the verdict and judgment were in his favor. From this judgment, and an order denying his motion for a new trial, the plaintiff appeals.

The only point made for a reversal is that the court erred in refusing to give to the jury a certain instruction asked by the plaintiff. In charging the jury, the court, among other things, said: "Now, there are two essential points in dispute here, and it is around these two points that your deliberations must crystallize. Those points are substantially these: Was or was not Mr. Byington a partner in this firm of A. I. Brilliant & Company on or after December 17, 1889? Or, if he was not a partner, did he (Mr. Byington) permit himself to be held out or represented as a partner in such firm at any time to third persons, who gave credit to such firm on the strength or faith of such representations?" The court then, after stating the law very fully as to general and special partnerships, and as to the liability of every general partner, read to the jury sections 2444 and 2445 of the Civil Code, which are as follows: "Sec. 2444. Any one permitting himself to be represented as a partner, general or special, is liable as such to third persons to whom such representation is communicated, and who on the faith thereof give credit to the partnership. Sec. 2445. No one is liable as a partner who is not such in fact, except as provided in the last section." Following this, the court said: "If you should find, from the evidence, that Mr. Byington was in fact a partner (as I have explained that term to you) in the firm of A. I. Brilliant & Company on and after December 17, 1889, then I charge you your verdict must be in favor of the plaintiff for such amount as may have been proven here, which you will get later on. Again, if you find from the evidence that Mr. Byington was not in fact a partner in such firm on or after December 17, 1889, but should find that Mr. Byington permitted himself to be held out or represented as a partner in such firm at any time to third persons, and such third persons gave credit, on the faith of such representations, to such firm, then Mr. Byington would be liable to such persons, and your verdict should then be in favor of the plaintiff; but only, of course, for such amounts of credits as may have been given to those third persons who gave credit on such representations, if any you find to have been so given." The instruction asked by plaintiff, and refused, was in these words: "When an individual permits others to hold him out as a partner, or by his acts and declarations creates in the mind of another a reasonable belief that he is a member of a partnership, he is liable to the person so believing, on a bona fide contract made by the latter with a member of such firm in the regular course of business, although in fact no such partnership existed." It is admitted that the instruction was refused upon the ground that it had already been given in substance and effect, and we think the refusal was justified. The charge as given stated the law upon the subject referred to in the refused instruction fully and fairly; and, as has been many times held by this court, a trial court is not bound to repeat itself at the request of counsel. After it has already given an instruction which substantially covers a question involved in the case, all other instructions on the same subject may well be refused. The authorities to this effect are numerous, and need not be cited. The judgment and order should be affirmed.

We concur: SEARLS, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

---

4 Cal. Unrep. 402

ESREY v. SOUTHERN PAC. CO. (No. 15,-440.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 29, 1893.)

APPEAL—TIME OF TAKING—DISMISSAL.

An appeal from an order denying a new trial, not taken within 60 days after the order is entered on the minutes of the court, (Code Civil Proc. § 939,) will be dismissed.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Tulare county; W. W. Cross, Judge.

Action by Nannie Esrey against the Southern Pacific Company, in which defendant appealed from the judgment in favor of plaintiff, and from an order denying its motion for a new trial. Plaintiff moves to dismiss both appeals. Motion to dismiss appeal from such order granted. Motion to dismiss appeal from the judgment denied.

Foshay Walker, for appellant. Justin Jacobs, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Motion to dismiss the appeals. Judgment was rendered in this case in favor of the plaintiff February 8, 1892, and an order denying the defendant's motion for new trial was made and entered May 24, 1893. The defendant appealed from the judgment February 1, 1893, and from the order denying a new trial August 14, 1893. The plaintiff now moves to dismiss the appeal from the order denying a new trial, upon the ground that it was not taken within 60 days after the entry of the order.

The right of a litigant to have the action of the lower court reviewed by this court upon an appeal therefrom depends upon a compliance by him with the statutory requirements for taking an appeal. Section 939, Code Civil Proc., limits the time for taking an appeal from an order granting or refusing a new trial to 60 days after the order is made and entered in the minutes of the court, and, unless taken within that time, this court has no jurisdiction to hear the appeal. The appeal from the order denying a new trial, not having been taken within 60 days after the entry of the order, must therefore be dismissed.

The plaintiff has also moved to dismiss the appeal from the judgment upon the ground that the transcript was not filed within the time limited by rule 2 of this court, or within the time limited by any order of the court or stipulation of the parties. The time for filing the transcript was extended by stipulation until 40 days after the decision of the lower court upon the motion for a new trial, in order that, if the motion should be denied, a single transcript might serve for both appeals. If the motion should be granted, the defendant would have no occasion to appeal. We are of the opinion, however, that the facts and circumstances presented in the affidavit on behalf of the appellant in opposition to this motion are such as to excuse its failure to file the transcript prior to receiving the plaintiff's notice of motion to dismiss the appeal. See Carter v. Paige, 77 Cal. 64, 19 Pac. 2.

The motion to dismiss the appeal from the order denying a new trial is granted, and the motion to dismiss the appeal from the judgment is denied.

---

100 Cal. 648

OULLAHAN et al. v. BALDWIN et al. (No. 14,622.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 30, 1893.)

REAL-ESTATE AGENTS—CONTRACT—WAIVER—COMMISSIONS—WHEN EARNED—EVIDENCE—ESTOPPEL.

1. To a request by landowners to be released from a contract made with brokers to find a purchaser of their land, the brokers replied that unless they could convince the principals by Thursday morning, at 8 o'clock, that they could make a sale, they would "then" waive all claims under it. Held, that it did not constitute a waiver of the original contract on the failure to perform the condition named in such reply, but was a conditional promise to waive in futuro, and did not affect the original contract.

2. Where the acts and statements of such brokers and the intended purchaser at the time specified were sufficient to convince a fair man of ordinary understanding that such brokers would make the sale, it must be held that such owners were convinced.

3. Where such reply by the brokers was purely voluntary, and written in a spirit of accommodation only, it had no binding effect.

4. In an action to recover commissions for finding a purchaser, it appeared that the contract provided that the terms of payment should "be $10,000 within the five days, $5,000 additional on confirmation of title;" that at 8 o'clock in the morning of the last day for making a sale, as provided by the contract, plaintiffs and one B. met defendants, and B. offered himself as a purchaser, and tendered a check for $10,000 as the first payment; that the check was declined by defendants, as not equivalent to money, whereupon they were informed that the money would be produced on the opening of the bank; that defendants said they would allow until 9:30 o'clock to produce the money; that plaintiffs and B. drew the money at 10 o'clock, and endeavored to tender it to defendants, but were eluded all day by the latter; and that at 10 o'clock defendants sold the land to other persons. B. had made no written contract for the purchase of the land. Held, that defendants were liable. Harrison and Paterson, JJ., dissenting.

5. It appeared that when defendants declined B.'s check, and said they would wait until 9:30 o'clock for the money, they also said, if plaintiffs and B. did not return at that time, they would "go down below, and take up the other offer," and that plaintiffs replied, "Very well." Held, that such reply by plaintiffs, and their failure to return by the time stated, did not constitute either a waiver or an estoppel.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county; J. G. Swinnerton, Judge.

Action by Robert B. Oullahan and others against Frank T. Baldwin and others to recover brokerage commissions under a written contract executed by defendants to Gaman & Lyon, and by the latter assigned to plaintiffs. From a judgment for defendants, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

Louttit, Woods & Levinsky, Carter & Smith, and Mich. Mullany, for appellants. J. C. Campbell, for respondents.

GAROUTTE, J. This is an action by real-estate brokers to recover commissions for negotiating a sale of a tract of land situated near the city of Stockton. The owners thereof gave Gaman & Lyon, real-estate brokers of San Francisco, the following writing: "Stockton, September 17, 1887. We, F. T. Baldwin, B. F. Langford, and John D. McDougald, do hereby constitute and appoint Gaman & Lyon, of 339 Kearny street, of San Francisco, our sole agents for a period of five days from date hereof, to negotiate a sale of our Stockton lands, consisting of thirteen hundred and fourteen (1,314.35) and thirty-five hundredths acres, and known as 'Stockton Gardens.' Our price for said land is one hundred and sixteen thousand six hundred and sixty-six (116,666.65) and sixty-five hundredths dollars, net to us, * * * and any amount over and above said sum, for which our said agents may sell said land, we agree to give them for commissions for their services. Terms of payment shall be $10,000 within the five days, $5,000 additional on confirmation of title. * * * Complete abstract of title to be furnished, and ten days allowed for examination." The brokers had in view one C. D. Barrows as prospective purchaser, and were expecting him to appear upon the scene at any moment for the purpose of viewing the land. After the owners had placed the property in the hands of Gaman & Lyon under the aforesaid agreement, they ascertained that certain parties residing in San Jose were desirous of purchasing, whereupon they stated to the brokers their fears that the prospective buyer Barrows would fail to purchase, and that prior to the expiration of the life of the contract the San Jose parties would undergo a change of mind, and thus no sale be consummated to any one; and they thereupon requested said brokers to release them from the contract. In answer to such request, Gaman & Lyon sent them the following letter: "Stockton, Cal., September 20, 1887. Messrs. Baldwin, Langford, and McDougald—Sirs: You have requested us to release you from the contract which we hold on your tract of land near Stockton, known as the 'Stockton Gardens.' Replying, we beg to say that under the circumstances, and in view of the amount of labor we have performed, we cannot, in justice to ourselves, release you from said contract, but we will concede that, unless we can convince you by Thursday morning, at eight o'clock, that we will make a sale, we will then waive all claims under said contract. Respectfully yours, Gaman & Lyon." Baldwin gave his power of attorney to Langford and McDougald to act for him in the premises, and was not in the city on Thursday, the 22d. Langford was not in Stockton upon that day, and hence McDougald alone, aside from their attorney, represented the owners in the transaction. Thursday morning, September 22d, at 7 o'clock, Lyon informed McDougald that Barrows was present, and ready to take the land upon the terms stated in the contract, whereupon McDougald requested them to meet him at Judge Budd's law office at 8 o'clock, for the purpose of completing the trade. The parties met at that time, and Barrows offered himself as a purchaser, and tendered his personal check for $10,000 as the first payment under the contract. This check was declined, as not the equivalent for the money, whereupon McDougald was informed that the money would be produced for him upon the opening of the bank, and McDougald then stated that he would allow them until 9:30 o'clock of that morning to produce the money, and, if not present with it at that time, he would close the trade with other parties. Thereupon Lyon and Barrows withdrew, and McDougald sold the land to the San Jose parties at 10 o'clock at a largely increased price. Lyon drew the money from the bank at 10 o'clock, and passed the remainder of the day in an effort to tender it to McDougald as the first payment upon the purchase price; but McDougald was elusive, and Lyon's efforts in that direction were not crowned with success.

Viewing the case from any standpoint, the letter written by the brokers to the defendants, and which was entirely voluntary upon their part, and written purely through a spirit of accommodation, in no way changes the status of this litigation. In speaking as to the effect of this letter, respondents' counsel says: "While we do not contend that they [owners] would or should demand of appellants anything unreasonable or impossible, they had the right to demand and receive evidence sufficient to satisfy them, as reasonable men, that the premises would be sold according to the terms of the power or authority given appellants." After a review of the evidence upon this point, we can say it fills the measure furnished by respondents' counsel. If the letter bound the brokers to convince the owners by 8 o'clock upon Thursday morning, the 22d, that a sale would be made upon that day, or that all their rights under the contract would lapse by reason of a failure so to do, then the brokers fulfilled the self-imposed conditions, for at the agreed time ample evidence was produced to convince McDougald of the certainty of the sale. At least, the evidence was sufficient to convince a fair man of ordinary understanding,—a man who was honestly willing to be convinced, and consequently it must be held that McDougald was convinced. But, aside from the foregoing considerations, we think the letter a false quantity in the case. It neither strengthens nor weakens the cause of either party. The contract of defendants was simply an employment of Gaman & Lyon as brokers to negotiate a sale of the realty. They were made sole agents for that purpose for the period of five days from September 17th, which would include the entire day of September 22d. It is insisted that the letter modified the terms of the contract; but the letter itself, in express words, says: "We cannot, in justice to ourselves, release you." As already suggested, the letter was entirely voluntary, no consideration passed to the brokers for its issuance, and there were no mutual covenants. It did not possess a single element necessary to create a binding, valid contract upon the part of the brokers. Again, conceding the letter to have a binding force upon the writers of it, it, in substance, says: "We cannot now release you from the contract, but, if we do not convince you by Thursday morning, at 8 o'clock, that we will make a sale, we will then waive all claims under the contract." This amounts simply to a conditional promise to waive something at a specified time in futuro. It is not a waiver, but an agreement to waive at a particular future time. There can be no waiver until the time arrives, and the condition fails; and when the time does arrive, if the party declines to waive, the only result is a violated promise and a breach of the agreement. The waiver does not take place, ipso facto, upon the failure of the condition and the arrival of the appointed time. Positive action upon the part of the party holding out the promise is demanded. This letter, conceding the failure of the condition, does not constitute a waiver of rights under the contract, any more than a promise by an attorney to his brother attorney, that upon the morrow he will extend his time 10 days to file a brief, constitutes in itself such extension.

No question of estoppel arising from the letter is suggested by counsel; neither does it appear to be present in the case. But it is insisted by some of respondents' counsel that a waiver took place, or an estoppel against plaintiffs was created, at the 8 o'clock meeting in the lawyer's office; and the basis of this contention is found in the following testimony of defendants' attorney: "He went away when Mr. McDougald told him he would wait until half past 9 o'clock for the money, and, if he came back with the money in that time, they would complete this trade; if not, he would go down below, and take up the other offer; and Mr. Lyon left, saying, 'Very well.' That is the last I saw of him." Conceding the broker to have used the words charged to him, still it is a very small thing out of which to build either a waiver or an estoppel. The pecuniary interests here involved are too weighty to depend upon such a slender thread. The phrase "Very well" may mean assent, and, again, it may mean the strongest dissent. Tone, inflection, gesture, and manner are the only indicators by which the phrase may be properly interpreted. The history of the various doings of these parties upon this day destroys the claim of either waiver or estoppel upon the part of plaintiffs.

The brokers were simply authorized to negotiate a sale. Their contract was completed, and their commissions earned, when they produced a purchaser, within the five days, ready, willing, and able to purchase upon the terms stated in the contract of employment. They had all of the 22d day of September in which to produce such purchaser, and upon that day they did produce a purchaser in the person of C. D. Barrows. That he was ready, able, and willing to purchase is entirely apparent from the record. It can scarcely be said to be denied by opposing counsel. The fact that his check was not a legal tender amounts to nothing. He was not required to produce, at that 8 o'clock meeting, either check or money. He was not required to attend any meeting whatever at that time. He was entitled to the last hour of the fifth day in which to pay the $10,000. The contract so expressly provided. At this meeting he offered himself as the purchaser upon the terms presented by the contract, and stated he would pay the $10,000 in cash as soon as the bank opened,—an event which was near at hand. He attempted to pay the $10,000 through his broker, during the entire day of the 22d, but was prevented by his failure to secure a personal audience with McDougald. He was not only willing, but using his best efforts, to pay this money, free of all limitations and conditions not found in the contract; and his efforts to make the first payment upon the purchase price is the highest evidence that Barrows was a purchaser ready, able, and willing to take the property. Aside from these considerations, the property was sold to third parties at 10 A. M. upon the 22d; and, if a tender of the first payment ever was required in order to establish Barrows' ability and good faith in the transaction, the conduct of the owners in making this sale waived it.

Conceding that no liability for commissions was created against respondents by the occurrences taking place at the meeting in the lawyer's office, appellants still make a showing by subsequent events that entitles them to recover. From 10 o'clock until Dr. Barrows left the city of Stockton, some time during the afternoon of that day, he was there, ready and willing to buy the land upon the terms fixed by the owners. He had the $10,000 in hand, and was anxious to make the first payment. This period of time was during the life of the contract, and, when those conditions existed, defendants' liability attached. The fact that one of the owners was in Sacramento, another in Arizona, and the third was suddenly called from the city to look after important matters upon his farm during the expiring hours of the contract, is entirely immaterial. It is apparent that the broker was acting in good faith, and his rights cannot be sacrificed or injuriously affected by the absence of all the owners from the city of Stockton at this important period of time. For the foregoing reasons it is ordered that the judgment and order be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; DE HAVEN, J.; FITZGERALD, J.; McFARLAND, J.

HARRISON, J., (dissenting.) A broker's contract for the sale of real estate is to be construed under the same principles as is any other contract. It is a contract of employment wherein the right to compensation is established when the broker has performed the contract according to the terms of his employment, and, until he has rendered the services for which he was employed, he has no right to compensation. "The general rule of law as to commissions undoubtedly is that the whole service or duty must be performed before the right to any commissions attaches, either ordinary or extraordinary; for an agent must complete the thing required of him before he is entitled to charge for it." Story, Ag. § 329. The rendering of such services being in the nature of a condition precedent to his right of recovery, the burden of proving the performance of the condition is upon him, and its performance must be satisfactorily established in the mode, and to the extent, stipulated by the contract of employment. Whart. Cont. § 601; Hinds v. Henry, 36 N. J. Law, 328. For the purpose of showing, therefore, whether he has performed his contract, it is first necessary to ascertain the terms of the contract. The ordinary contract between a broker and the owner is that he will find a purchaser upon certain specified terms who will be acceptable to the owner. Sometimes other terms are included in the contract, such as that a sale shall be effected, (Walker v. Tirrell, 101 Mass. 257,) or that his commission shall be payable out of the purchase money, (McPhail v. Buell, 87 Cal. 115, 25 Pac. 266,) or that he shall have a fixed compensation for his services, irrespective of the result; but, in the absence of some terms qualifying his employment, his contract is performed only when he finds a purchaser who is able, ready, and willing to make the purchase according to the terms upon which he was employed to make the sale. To find a purchaser, however, means more than to procure some one who will offer to negotiate for the purchase. It implies the production of one who is not only ready and willing to comply with the terms of the purchase, but who has also the present ability to consummate it, and to comply with all of its terms, and who is also willing and ready to do all the acts that may be required to make an actual purchase of the land. To produce one who makes an offer to purchase, and who is without means, or who is not in condition to comply with the terms of the sale, and against whom a claim for damages resulting from a failure to perform the contract of purchase could not be enforced, does not constitute the finding of a purchaser, within the terms of the agreement, (Iselin v. Griffith, 62 Iowa, 671, 18 N. W. 302;) and the mere statement by one who is produced that he is ready and willing to make the purchase, even if he has the ability to do so, does not render him a purchaser, if at the same time he refuses to do the acts which are requisite to consummate the purchase. Upon the production of such purchaser, if the transaction is not to be consummated by an immediate delivery of the deed and payment of the purchase money, the owner has the right to demand that a valid, enforceable contract for the purchase of the land shall be executed by him; and the services of the broker have not been fully performed until such agreement is executed. The owner may, however, waive the execution of such contract; as, if, after the broker has introduced the purchaser to him, he himself assumes to prepare a contract which afterwards proves defective, or to deal with the purchaser upon other terms, or accepts a parol obligation from him. The broker is, however, entitled to his commissions whenever the purchaser who is produced by him is accepted by the owner, even though the owner fail to make a binding contract, or to enforce the execution thereof, or though, either by reason of defect of title, or a refusal of the vendor or vendee to perform such contract, the sale be not afterwards consummated. So, too, the owner may by his own conduct prevent the execution of the contract, or its fulfillment on the part of the purchaser, by insisting on other terms, or by a refusal to sell, or from a defect in his title. In such case the broker is entitled to his commissions upon the principle that he has fully complied with all the terms of his employment, except those which have been waived, or from which he has been released by the acts of the owner.

It is not essential, however, that the owner and the purchaser should be brought face to face. The broker sufficiently performs his agreement if he tenders to the owner a valid, written contract, containing the terms of sale agreed upon, executed by a party able to comply therewith, or to answer in damages if he should fail to perform. Hayden v. Grillo, 35 Mo. App. 647. The contract must, however, be one which the owner can enforce against the vendee, and must be delivered to the owner. The owner is not bound to accept the statement of the broker that he has a contract, or that a deposit has been made with him on account of the purchase. He is entitled to the contract itself, and also to the deposit made thereunder, and to know whether the purchaser is able to carry it out. The person proposed by the broker may be insolvent, and thus, during the pendency of the transaction, the owner might lose the opportunity of making a valid sale. Much less is the owner required to accept a verbal contract made on his behalf by the broker, even though a deposit has been made with the broker upon such verbal contract. A verbal contract made by the purchaser with the broker is insufficient. A sale of real estate can be made only by an instrument in writing, and is "negotiated" only when such instrument has been executed. A binding contract for a sale constitutes a sale, within the meaning of such agreement, (Rice v. Mayo, 107 Mass. 550;) and an employment to negotiate a sale has been held to be satisfied by finding a purchaser, (Phelps v. Prusch, 83 Cal. 626, 23 Pac. 1111.) It is not, however, a part of the broker's employment to prepare a contract of purchase to be executed by the purchaser. Cook v. Kroemeke, 4 Daly, 268. He has done all that he was employed to do when he has produced a purchaser who is acceptable to the owner. The preparation of such agreement, and any further negotiations regarding the terms of purchase, are to be made between the owner and the purchaser. In the absence of special authority therefor, the broker has no authority to enter into any contract on behalf of the owner, (Duffy v. Hobson, 40 Cal. 240,) or to make any contract on behalf of the purchaser; a broker being "one who makes a bargain for another, and receives a commission for so doing," (Pott v. Turner, 6 Bing. 706.) "The duty assumed by the broker is to bring the minds of the buyer and seller to an agreement for a sale, and the price and terms on which it is to be made; and, until that is done, his rights to commissions do not accrue;" (Sibbald v. Iron Co., 83 N. Y. 378;) but the agreement for the purchase must be one that is valid, and can be enforced.

The foregoing principles have been established in various decisions, and may be regarded as settled rules for construing the contract between brokers and their principals. Masten v. Griffing, 33 Cal. 111; Phelan v. Gardner, 43 Cal. 306; Gonzales v. Broad, 57 Cal. 224; Hyams v. Miller, 71 Ga. 608; Veazie v. Parker, 72 Me. 443; Buckingham v. Harris, 10 Colo. 460, 15 Pac. 817; Moses v. Bierling, 31 N. Y. 462; Mooney v. Elder, 56 N. Y. 240; Barnard v. Monnot, *42 N. Y. 203; Love v. Owens, 31 Mo. App. 510; Hayden v. Grillo, 35 Mo. App. 654; McGavock v. Woodlief, 20 How. 221; Coleman v. Meade, 13 Bush, (Ky.) 363; Watson v. Brooks, 11 Or. 271, 3 Pac. 679; Hinds v. Henry, 36 N. J. Law, 328; Love v. Miller, 53 Ind. 294; Glentworth v. Luther, 21 Barb. 145; Leete v. Norton, 43 Conn. 219. There are expressions in the opinions in some cases to the effect that a written contract of purchase is not necessary in order to entitle the broker to his commissions but an examination of those cases will show that in each one of them the written contract was waived by the owner, or that the owner himself refused, or was unable, to consummate the sale. We know of no authority in which it has been held, or even stated, that if the owner insists upon the execution of a valid contract of purchase, and the purchaser produced by the broker fails or declines to enter into such contract, or to comply with the other terms of purchase. the broker is nevertheless entitled to his commissions. The owner does not lose his right to make a sale of the property by reason of his having employed a broker, (Dolan v. Scanlan, 57 Cal. 264; Hungerford v. Hicks, 39 Conn. 259; McClave v. Paine, 49 N. Y. 561; Wylie v. Bank, 61 N. Y. 415,) or to employ other brokers for the same purpose; and the mere fact that he has made a sale within the time allowed the broker by his employment does not entitle the broker to his commission unless the broker has, within the terms of his employment, found a purchaser, (Waterman v. Boltinghouse, 82 Cal. 659, 23 Pac. 195; Stewart v. Murray, 92 Ind. 543;) and, however much he may have labored for the purpose of securing the purchaser, he is not entitled to commissions unless he produces one. "A broker is never entitled to commissions for unsuccessful efforts. The risk of failure is wholly his. The reward comes only with his success. That is the plain contract and contemplation of the parties. The broker may devote his time and labor, and expend his money, with ever so much of devotion to the interests of his employer, and yet, if he fails; if, without effecting an agreement or accomplishing a bargain, he abandons the effort; or his authority is fairly and in good faith terminated,—he gains no right to commissions. He loses the labor and effort which was staked upon success, and in such event it matters not that, after his failure and the termination of his agency, what he has done proves of use and benefit to the principal." Sibbald v. Iron Co., 83 N. Y. 383.

Under the foregoing principles it must be held that the plaintiffs did not negotiate a sale or find a purchaser for the land, and consequently did not become entitled to compensation for their services. No agreement in writing for the purchase of the land was ever made by Barrows, and, when he was introduced to the owners as the purchaser, he not only did not comply with their demand that such contract be executed, but he also failed to comply with their terms of sale. It was specified in the instrument of September 17th that $10,000 of the purchase price should be paid "within the five days." This can only be construed as meaning that this amount of money should be deposited with the owners within that time as a payment on account of the purchase price, without any condition, and as an earnest of good faith on behalf of the purchaser that he would complete the purchase, subject, of course, to the implied agreement on behalf of the owners that it would be repaid if, through any fault on their part, the sale should not be completed. The succeeding clause in the agreement, that $5,000 additional should be paid "on confirmation of the title," shows that this $10,000 was to be paid irrespective of and before any examination of title. At the first interview between the plaintiff Lyon and the owners on the morning of the 22d, he had neither a contract on behalf of Barrows, nor did he produce Barrows as the purchaser, nor did he offer to pay or deposit with the owners the $10,000, but insisted that as broker he had the right to retain this amount of money until after the examination of the title and completion of the sale. The function of a broker, however, as we have seen, is merely to make bargains, and not to execute contracts, and he was neither authorized to retain the money which his customer had given him with which to make a deposit or part payment on account of the purchase, nor to receive or hold the money for the account of the owners. Budd, on behalf of the owners, refused to accept the check as a compliance with the terms of the sale, on the ground that it was not money, and so stated to the plaintiff Lyon, and also stated to him that, if Barrows would come with the money or what they knew to be money, he would then close the matter up, and put the agreement in writing, so that it would be binding on all parties. Lyon then went away, and after a few minutes returned with Barrows, who stated that he was willing to purchase the land according to the terms of agreement, if the title was good, and again tendered the check as a performance of the condition to pay the $10,000. The owners, however, again declined to accept the check, upon the express ground that it was not a legal tender, or the equivalent of money, and Budd said to him that he was ready to draw up the contract and accept the money, but would not accept the check. This interview took place before the hour for the opening of the bank in Stockton. The check was drawn upon a bank in San Francisco, and was made payable to the order of the plaintiffs, Gaman & Lyon; and McDougald, on behalf of the owners, thereupon stated to Lyon and Barrows that he would wait at Budd's office until half past 9 o'clock, and that, if they then had the money there, the trade would be made, otherwise he would close with the other parties. To this Lyon assented, and thereupon Barrows and Lyon left the office without saying whether or not they would return; but neither of them did in fact return, and a little after noon of that day Barrows left Stockton, and about the same time Lyon obtained the money on the check, and took from the bank a certificate of deposit payable to his own order. McDougald and Budd waited at the office of the latter until about 10 o'clock, and afterwards, on the same day, closed the contract for the sale with the other parties. When it was thus shown to the court below that no contract for the purchase of the land was ever made by or on behalf of Barrows, and that when he was introduced to the owners he did not comply with the terms of the sale, and that when he was informed by them that they would require a contract of purchase to be made by him, and that the $10,000 should be paid to them in money at the same time, instead of complying therewith, or saying that he was willing to do so, he went away, and soon after left town, and did not thereafter, in any form, offer to make such payment, or to enter into such contract, the court was justified in finding and adjudging that the plaintiffs had not performed their contract of employment, and that they were not entitled to a recovery from the defendants.

PATERSON, J.: I concur in the views of Mr. Justice HARRISON.

4 Cal. Unrep. 396

WHEELOCK v. GODFREY et al. (No. 15,236.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 28, 1893.)

JUDGMENT—PAYMENT—INTERPLEADER.

1. Where judgment is rendered against a savings bank for a deposit with accrued dividends, the creditor having leave to apply for any relief needed to fix the amount and enforce payment, and later a decree is entered fixing the amount due to date at a certain sum, for which judgment is rendered against the bank, the first judgment is interlocutory, and payment of the second discharges both.

2. Where a defendant has disclaimed interest except as stakeholder, and prayed interpleader, and judgment is given against it in accordance with its own prayer, with costs against the defeated claimant, it may safely pay the judgment, in spite of irregularities in the interpleader suit which are uncomplained of by said claimant.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; Walter H. Levy, Judge.

Action by Almon Wheelock, executor of Albert G. Wheelock, deceased, against Arabella Godfrey and the San Francisco Savings Union, for certain money deposited in defendant bank by deceased. From a judgment for defendant Godfrey against the bank, the bank appeals. Affirmed.

H. C. Campbell and Clunie & Clunie, for appellant. Wm. Barber, for respondents.

SEARLS, C. Almon Wheelock, executor of the last will of Albert G. Wheelock, brought an action to set aside and declare null and void an assignment made by Albert G. Wheelock, deceased, to defendant Arabella Godfrey, upon the ground of the mental incapacity of said Wheelock to execute the same, and fraud on the part of said Godfrey in procuring the execution of such assignment, and also to recover from both the defendants the sum of money assigned. Albert G. Wheelock, plaintiff's testator, according to the complaint, had on deposit with the San Francisco Savings Union, an incorporated bank of savings, one of the defendants and the appellant herein, the sum of $7,045.89, for which he had a bank book. On the 1st day of October, 1888, said Wheelock assigned his said demand and bank book to the other defendant, Arabella D. Godfrey, the respondent herein, who thereupon procured the amount aforesaid to be transferred by the bank to her credit, and in evidence thereof the issue of a bank book showing such credit to her. The bank defendant answered the complaint, and also filed a cross complaint, in both of which it admitted the deposit by Wheelock of the $7,045.89, the issue of a bank or deposit book to him, wherein he was credited therefor, and avers the due assignment thereof to defendant Godfrey, and the issuance to her of a bank or deposit book, and a credit to her of the amount thereof on its books, etc. And in its further answer or cross complaint it avers that the plaintiff and defendant Godfrey each claim said sum of money; that one of them is entitled thereto, with the dividends thereon, and that it has no means of knowing or ascertaining which of them is entitled thereto, except by the determination of the court in the premises; that it is willing to pay the same when the ownership is determined, and has no interest in the question except to hold the money according to the terms of the deposit, and to pay it to the party entitled thereto. Defendant prays that plaintiff and defendant Godfrey be required to interplead, and that the court, by its judgment, determine which of them is the owner and entitled to said money deposit and dividends thereon. No answer was filed to this so-called "cross complaint" by either plaintiff or defendant Godfrey. The cause was tried by the court, written findings filed, and judgment entered as follows: (1) In favor of both of the defendants, as against the plaintiff; (2) that, as between the defendants, the sum of $7,045.89, which by the answer of the bank defendant is admitted to be held by it on deposit in the name and to the credit of defendant Godfrey, belongs to her, together with any and all dividends that have accrued thereon; and it was further decreed that she recover the same, and that she be at liberty to apply to the court for any further relief that may be necessary to ascertain the amount due her by the terms of this decree, and to enforce payment thereof. This decree was entered September 18, 1891. On the 30th day of October, 1891, a further decree was entered, as between the defendants, which recited that, in pursuance of the permission granted in the former judgment entered, testimony had been introduced, from which it apears that the amount due to date (October 30, 1891) on the deposit referred to in said judgment is $8,302.16. Judgment is rendered in favor of defendant Godfrey, and against the bank defendant, for said amount.

The bank defendant has taken an appeal from each of said judgments, and in each case the cause comes up on the judgment roll; this appeal being from the last or final judgment. As they are submitted together, it may be said here the first judgment or decree was, as between the defendants, an interlocutory judgment, which simply established the right to the deposit, but left the amount of the recovery thereon to be adjudicated and crystallized in the final judgment rendered October 30, 1891. Freem. Judgm. §§ 29–33. We do not doubt that a satisfaction of the last judgment will extinguish the first, and all the rights of defendant Godfrey acquired thereunder. It must be admitted that there are serious defects in the record, some of which are inexplicable, growing out of the filing of an amended complaint pending the trial. These do not, however, affect this appellant, which occupies the position of a stakeholder as between the other parties. No judgment was rendered against it either on the original or amended complaint, but, on the contrary, it had judgment for costs against the plaintiff. The judgment rendered against it was in consonance with the prayer of its answer and cross complaint. It stands indifferent, as between the other parties to the action; and the controversy having been settled as between them, and the deposit awarded to defendant Godfrey, it was in order for it to pay the demand, as it expressed a willingness to do. There were, however, good reasons apparent why appellant here should exercise due caution in the premises by not paying the demand until a final adjudication between plaintiff and its codefendant; and it may fairly be presumed this consideration was an important inducement to this appeal. The judgment appealed from should be affirmed; each party to pay his own costs on appeal.

We concur: BELCHER, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment appealed from is affirmed; each party to pay his own costs on appeal.

WHEELOCK v. GODFREY et al. (No. 15,235.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 28, 1893.)

Department 1. Appeal from superior court of San Francisco county; W. H. Levy, Judge.

Action by Almon Wheelock, executor of Albert G. Wheelock, deceased, against Arabella Godfrey and the San Francisco Savings Union, for certain money deposited in defendant bank by deceased. From an interlocutory judgment for defendant Godfrey against the bank, the bank appeals. Appeal dismissed.

Clunie & Clunie and H. C. Campbell, for appellant. Wm. Barber, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. The appeal of the San Franciso Savings Union in the above-entitled cause is hereby dismissed, upon the authority of the opinion in No. 15,236, between the same parties, this day filed. 35 Pac. 315.

---

100 Cal. 578

WHEELOCK v. GODFREY et al. (No. 15,398.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 28, 1893.)

MENTAL STATUS—OPINION EVIDENCE — INTIMATE ACQUAINTANCE —JURY TRIAL — COMPETENCY OF WITNESS—EXPERT—OBJECTION WAIVED—LEADING QUESTION.

1. There is no abuse of discretion in holding a witness competent as an "intimate acquaintance," within Code Civil Proc. § 1870, subd. 10, allowing expression of opinion of an intimate acquaintance respecting the mental sanity of a person; it appearing that witness had known him for 18 years, had until the last 6 years lived next door to him, and seen him every day, and had since then visited the family, where he lived, twice a week or more, and had often had conversations with him.

2. Plaintiff is not entitled to a jury in an action to recover money, it being asked that the assignment thereof be set aside for fraud and undue influence, the case being one of equitable cognizance.

3. Where a party offers a witness, who is not objected to, he cannot, after discovering that his testimony militates against him, have it stricken out on the ground of incompetency of the witness.

4. Where a witness has testified that he, as a physician, attended deceased from January to the time of his death, in October, describing his ailments, physical condition, and conversations with him, etc., a question as to the state of his mind on October 1st, based on his appearance, actions, condition, and conversation, will not be held leading or suggestive.

5. Where witness has testified as an expert for plaintiff, it cannot be objected, when he is called for defendant, that he is not an expert.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; Walter H. Levy, Judge.

Action by Almon Wheelock, executor of Albert G. Wheelock, deceased, against Arabella Godfrey and the San Francisco Savings Union, for certain money deposited in defendant bank by deceased. There was judgment for defendants, and from an order denying a new trial plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Clunie & Clunie and H. C. Campbell, for appellant. Wm. Barber, for respondents.

SEARLS, C. This action was brought to recover, by Almon Wheelock, as the executor of the last will of Albert G. Wheelock, the sum of $7,045.89, moneys received on deposit by the defendant the San Francisco Savings Union from Albert G. Wheelock in his lifetime. Defendants had judgment. Plaintiff thereupon moved for a new trial, which motion was denied, and from the order of denial this appeal is taken. Albert G. Wheelock was a bachelor of the age of, say, 65 years; had been a bank clerk in San Francisco, and possessed a fortune worth, say, $50,000. Arabella D. Godfrey was a widow, and Wheelock had lodged at her house for some 15 years, was a friend of her deceased husband in his lifetime, and had, according to some of the testimony, at intervals from the time of the death of the husband of said Arabella D. Godfrey, evinced a determination to make some provision for the support and maintenance of the latter. On or about September 25, 1888, said Albert G. Wheelock made a last will, whereby he bequeathed and devised all his estate, real, personal, and mixed, to his nephews, a niece, and sister residing at Chicago, Ill., and Toledo, Ohio. On or about October 1, 1888, Wheelock had on deposit with defendant the San Francisco Savings Union, an incorporated bank of savings, which we will hereafter denominate the "Bank," the sum of $7,045.89, in evidence of which he held a bank book. At the date last mentioned, he duly assigned his said bank book to the defendant Arabella D. Godfrey, who took it to the bank with the assignment, had the amount thereof transferred to her credit, and received a bank book therefor in her own name. On the 20th day of October, 1888, Albert G. Wheelock died at the house of said Arabella D. Godfrey, in the city and county of San Francisco.

The last will aforesaid was admitted to probate, and Almon Wheelock, named therein as an executor, was duly appointed and qualified as such executor. The gravamen of the complaint is that at the date of the said assignment, if the same was ever in fact executed, Albert G. Wheelock had been stricken with paralysis, was weak in body and mind, and mentally unsound, and incompetent to attend to any business whatever; that he lodged and boarded at the house of defendant Godfrey, was subject to and under her influence, direction, and control; and that the latter fraudulently, and by duress and menace, and by undue influence, induced and procured said Wheelock, in his enfeebled condition, to execute the assignment to her, etc. Plaintiff demanded judgment (1) that the assignment be declared null and void, and set aside; (2) that the assignment was not made by Albert G. Wheelock; (3) that said moneys be declared the property of the estate of Albert G. Wheelock, and that plaintiff have judgment against the defendants therefor,—and for general relief. The complaint was not verified. The defendants answered separately, each denying the material allegations of the complaint, except as expressly admitted. The bank admitted that it held the money on deposit, set up the transfer of the deposit to defendant Godfrey, etc., and, by way of answer and cross complaint, set out that both plaintiff and defendant Godfrey claimed the money, that it was willing to pay it over to the one entitled thereto, etc., that it has no interest in the dispute, and asks that the parties be required to interplead, and that the court determine which of them is entitled to the fund, etc. Defendant Godfrey also filed a cross complaint, which was, on motion, stricken out.

At the trial the principal question in controversy related to the mental status of Wheelock at the date of the assignment. A number of witnesses on the part of defendants were called upon to express an opinion as to the mental sanity of said Wheelock. To the expression of an opinion on this subject, counsel for appellant objected, and the action of the court in overruling the objection is assigned as error. The first of these alleged errors is in relation to the testimony of Mary S. Mugan, and is based upon an alleged failure to establish a predicate for the expression of an opinion by showing that the witness was such an "intimate acquaintance" of said Wheelock as is required by subdivision 10 of section 1870 of the Code of Civil Procedure. That section, after providing for other cases in which witnesses may give an opinion, adds, in subdivision 10, as follows: "And the opinion of an intimate acquaintance respecting the mental sanity of a person, the reason for the opinion being given." The witness stated, in substance, that she was 23 years of age, and had known Wheelock since she was 5 years old, lived in his vicinity, first across the street, and then next door, and saw him every day until within the last 6 years, "when we moved away. We were good friends with Mrs. Godfrey, (where Wheelock lived,) and I have been since in the habit of going there maybe twice a week, and sometimes oftener, and saw Mr. Wheelock many times and conversed with him; very often had little conversations with him; conversed with him in 1888; was in his room in 1888, and had a talk with him as to the changes in the furniture of his room. When Mrs. Godfrey was out at times, he would come to the door for me. There were many times that we had conversations, so that I haven't them placed." The witness was then permitted to express an opinion that "he was of sound mind," and gave as reasons therefor that there was no evidence of any illness; that there was no evidence of any unsoundness; that Mrs. Godfrey used to go out, and leave him in charge of her house, and would not have done so with a man of unsound mind,—and added: "The expression of his countenance was always just as I had seen it from a child. It was perfectly sound and bright. There was no change in Mr. Wheelock's expression from the time I knew him first until his death."

From necessity, much must be left to the discretion of the trial court in determining whether or not a given witness is an "intimate acquaintance," within the purview of the statute. As an abstract proposition, the question would seem to be one easily solved. In practice, however, a serious difficulty is met in the incapacity to detail specifically all the minor incidents from which the ultimate fact of an intimate acquaintance is deduced. Many persons cannot describe particulars in detail. A witness, as the result of observation, will determine with great accuracy that a given person is intoxicated; but confine him to a detail of the minute appearances that have led him unerringly up to the fact, and he will often fail most signally. The details of conduct, attitude, tones, gestures, words, expression of eye and face, and abnormal movements have either escaped him, or he is unable to draw what may be termed a "living picture" of what he has seen, and what is in reality photographed upon his mind. It is much the same in regard to the lesser details which go to make up the status of an intimate acquaintance; and the court, having the witness before it, is better able to determine the relation of the parties from the evidence given than can be done from a cold record of the words spoken. It is for this and similar reasons that this court has said that the question was addressed to the discretion of the court below, and that, there being no abuse of the discretion, the appellate court would not interfere. Estate of Carpenter, 79 Cal. 382, 21 Pac. 835; Id., 94 Cal. 407, 29 Pac. 1101; People v. Levy, 71 Cal. 623, 12 Pac. 791; People v. Fine, 77 Cal.147 , 19 Pac. 269; People v. Pico, 62 Cal. 53. The difficulty in this class of cases which has been met and will continually meet the courts in determining what is an intimate acquaintance, within the meaning of the statute, is aptly epitomized by Temple, C., in Estate of Carpenter, supra, where, in speaking of the statute, he says: "Since it requires the drawing of a definite line between things which are separated only by degrees of difference, the rule is, and must remain, more or less indefinite;" and he adds: "A very large discretion must be conceded to the trial court. If the conclusion reached is one which can be reasonably entertained, consistently with the above idea of intimacy, [thereinbefore set out,] this court cannot review the ruling." Within the purview of the above reasoning and the cases cited, there was no abuse of discretion by the court below in holding the witness competent, as an intimate acquaintance, to express an opinion as to the mental sanity of Albert G. Wheelock.

The other alleged errors, founded upon rulings in the cases of other witnesses upon the same point, involve the same question, and do not vary in their facts sufficiently to alter the conclusion reached in the case considered, and need not therefore be elaborated.

The next error assigned is founded upon the denial by the court of an application by plaintiff for a jury trial. It appears from the record that the cause was set down for trial by the court, January 26, 1891, and notice thereof served upon the attorneys of plaintiff. Prior to the commencement of the trial, and prior to January 26, 1891, but at what precise date does not appear, the plaintiff in open court demanded a jury trial, which was refused by the court. The facts stated in the complaint, and the prayer for relief, indicate the case to be one of equitable cognizance, and therefore one in which plaintiff was not entitled to a jury. Fish v. Benson, 71 Cal., at pages 434, 435, 12 Pac. 454; Cassidy v. Sullivan, 64 Cal. 266, 28 Pac. 234. The statement of appellant's counsel that the amended complaint contains matter which might have been omitted, and that he demanded unnecessary relief, is, in effect, but a statement that a different cause of action, sufficient for a recovery at law, with a demand for only such relief as a court of law could grant, might have been prosecuted. The answer must be that the phraseology of the complaint was adapted to the relief sought, viz. setting aside, and declaring null and void, the assignment by plaintiff's testator to defendant Godfrey; that the money be declared the property of plaintiff; and that he have a judgment therefor against the defendants. The court committed no error in the premises. It is true, the amended complaint stated "that the said pretended assignment and transfer was never signed, made, executed, or delivered by," etc., and then proceeds to set out at length the incompetency and weakness of the testator, the fraudulent practices of defendant Godfrey to induce him to sign the transfer, and avers that, "if he ever signed said pretended assignment or transfer, [he] was induced to sign the same by and through fraud and undue influence," etc. This allegation is iterated and reiterated in various forms. That the complaint was ambiguous is apparent, but it is not apparent that the plaintiff should be permitted to take advantage of that fact by now saying he did not mean what he said in his pleading, and by repudiating the whole theory upon which he tried the cause. He proved by his own witnesses the execution of the assignment, and then sought to show the invalidity of the act by proving the incompetency of his testator.

The next error assigned relates to the action of the court in denying a motion on behalf of plaintiff to strike out the testimony of John Montgomery, M. D., the attending physician of deceased, and in overruling the objections of plaintiff to questions put to said Montgomery by defendant as to the mental condition of said deceased. John Montgomery was called as a witness on behalf of plaintiff, and stated that he was a physician; had been in practice as such for 17 years; testified as to attending Wheelock as a physician from January, 1888, to October of the same year, when he died; gave his opinion as to his ailments; and described his death as being due to progressive paralysis, etc. On cross-examination he testified as to the mental status of his patient; said he was thoroughly rational in conversation, and deemed him a competent gentleman; that his physical condition did not affect his brain, etc. Upon the close of the testimony on behalf of the plaintiff, his counsel moved the court to strike out substantially all the testimony of Dr. John Montgomery upon the ground that he was a licensed physician, in attendance as such upon Wheelock, who was his patient, and that the information possessed by him was acquired while attending his patient, and was necessary to enable him to prescribe for Wheelock, and hence was incompetent, under subdivision 4 of section 1881 of the Code of Civil Procedure of this state. The motion was denied by the court, and the ruling excepted to by plaintiff. At a later stage of the case, Dr. Montgomery was called as a witness on behalf of the defendants, and gave important testimony, including his opinion that Wheelock was mentally sane, etc., to which objections and rulings were had, and exceptions noted. Conceding, without deciding, that Dr. Montgomery was an incompetent witness for the reasons indicated by the plaintiff, appellant is not in a situation to urge such incompetency. His testimony was received without objection from the defendants. The question, then, presents this proposition: Can a party to an action introduce testimony which, in the face of an objection, would be incompetent, and, upon discovering that it militates against him, strike it out without the consent of the opposite party? The question must be answered in the negative. By offering the witness, and eliciting testimony from him, he in effect declared the witness was competent and the testimony proper. In the absence of objections by defendants, it was the equivalent of consent, and was as binding upon them as a written stipulation agreeing to the competency of the witness to testify to the given facts would have been. The motion came too late. People v. Long, 43 Cal. 446; People v. Samario, 84 Cal. 484, 485, 24 Pac. 283. Rogers on Expert Testimony, at page 111, says: "When it is proposed to introduce in evidence the testimony of witnesses who are disqualified by these statutes, the party who desires to claim the benefit of the statutes must seasonably exercise the privilege by objecting to the evidence at the time it is offered. It is too late after the examination has been insisted on, and the evidence has been received without objection, to raise the question of competency by a motion to strike it out;" citing Hoyt v. Hoyt, 112 N. Y. 514, 20 N. E. 402, the doctrine of which fully sustains the text. The objections to questions put to Dr. Montgomery when a witness for defendants were not as to his competency by reason of having been the physician of Wheelock, and are regarded as of little importance. The first was to a question as to the state of Wheelock's mind on October 1, 1888, based upon his appearance, actions, condition, and conversation. It was objected that the "question was leading and suggestive, and not the proper question, and, further, that he has testified that he did not form an opinion." The witness answered: "Well, the man, to my mind, was perfectly sane." The witness then said he formed an opinion, and answered as before. Again, to a question as to his opinion whether he was of sound or unsound mind, the witness answered: "I believe he was of sound mind." Counsel objected that the witness was "not an expert, and not proven to be." Another question was as to the state of mind of Wheelock, in the opinion of the witness, from January, 1888, down to and including the time when he was stricken with this paralysis, which had been shown to have occurred some three days before his death. This was objected to as "irrelevant, immaterial, and incompetent, and as covering periods of time and occasions when the witness did not see him, and could not express an opinion." The witness answered that he never had the slightest doubt as to his sanity; "it would have been an impossibility for me to do such a thing as that." A motion to strike out the answer as not responsive was denied. The first question was not leading or suggestive, in view of the preceding testimony, in which the witness had stated at length that he had attended the deceased from January 8th to the time of his death, in October; had described his ailments, physical condition; had conversed with him, etc. The witness had been shown to be, as before stated, a physician of 17 years' experience, and had testified as an expert for the plaintiff, and was entitled to be questioned as such. As his physician during 1888, and being in the habit of visiting him as such, and at times as often as two or three times a day, he was competent to speak of his condition during the entire period from January to October, except as thus stated. The questions, answers, and rulings of the court thereon were correct, and their propriety is sufficiently apparent to obviate the necessity of discussion.

We have examined most of the other errors assigned in the record, and find them either without merit or not of sufficient importance to warrant a reversal; and as appellant has contented himself with saying he does not waive them, and asking us to examine them, as set forth in the specification of errors, without any direction as to where they are to be found in a record of 373 printed pages, we are justified in the conclusion that they are not important. Webber v. Clarke, 74 Cal. 11, 15 Pac. 431; West v. Crawford, 80 Cal. 33, 21 Pac. 1123. The order appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; BELCHER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the order appealed from is affirmed.

---

4 Cal. Unrep. 399

WHEELOCK v. GODFREY et al. (No. 15,234.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 28, 1893.)

FINDINGS—DEFINITENESS—ULTIMATE FACTS—JUDGMENT.

1. A finding that all the averments of a complaint, down to and including a certain averment, are true, is sufficiently explicit.

2. Where an attempt is made to avoid a gift on the ground of mental incompetency and undue influence, a finding that there was no incompetency or undue influence is sufficient, without finding as to the donor's physical condition or other facts stated as inducement to the ultimate facts.

3. Where one brings an action against two parties for a fund, the judgment being against him as to both, he cannot complain that it is in favor of one defendant as against the other.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; Walter H. Levy, Judge.

Action by Almon Wheelock, executor of Albert G. Wheelock, deceased, against Arabella Godfrey and the San Francisco Savings Union, for certain money deposited in defendant bank by deceased. Judgment for defendants. Plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Clunie & Clunie and H. C. Campbell, for appellant. William Barber, for respondents.

SEARLS, C. This is an appeal by plaintiff from a final judgment in favor of defendants. The cause comes up on the judgment roll, and, as the appeal was not taken within 60 days after the entry of judgment, the appeal must be determined upon the questions presented by the pleadings, findings, and judgment. An appeal from an order denying a new trial in the same case, (No. 15,398,) this day decided, (35 Pac. 317,) contains a sufficient reference to the facts in the case, and they will not be repeated here.

The first finding is to the effect that all the allegations of plaintiff's complaint, from the commencement thereof down to and including the averment that the moneys referred to in the complaint, viz. $7,045.89, were still in charge of the defendant bank, are true. It is objected to this finding that it is impossible to determine from it the averments found true, and those not sustained. It is as comprehensive and explicit as the complaint to which it refers, and, as it finds all the averments of the complaint true down to and including a given averment, we fail to see any difficulty in determining precisely what the court means. The averments thus found true may be epitomized as follows: Defendant Arabella D. Godfrey is a widow; the other defendant is an incorporated savings bank. On the 1st of October, 1888, Albert G. Wheelock (plaintiff's testator) had deposited $7,045.89 in the bank for loaning and safe-keeping, and had received in evidence thereof a bank book, in which he was credited for the amount as a deposit. On or about October 1, 1888, defendant Godfrey presented to the bank this deposit book, with an assignment thereof in writing, purporting to be executed by Wheelock, assigning the said money and account, and demanded a transfer and delivery to her of said moneys. The bank, in pursuance of said demand, transferred to her credit on its books the amount, and gave her a deposit book, crediting her therein for the amount. The money has not been drawn from the bank, and it is still in its charge and custody. The court then proceeds to find at length, what need only be referred to briefly, that on October 1, 1888, the said instrument of transfer was signed, executed, and delivered by Wheelock to defendant Godfrey, and that, when so executed and delivered, he was not of weak or unsound mind, or mentally incompetent to make the transfer, but was of sound mind, and competent to make such transfer; that the assignment was not procured by or through undue influence or control by Godfrey over Wheelock, nor by any unfair advantage, nor by any advantage taken of the mental or physical weakness or unsoundness of mind of Wheelock; that he was not induced to sign the assignment or transfer by any fraud or undue influence of defendant Godfrey or any one else; that the assignment and delivery were not procured by duress, fraud, or undue influence, etc., by Godfrey or any one else; that Wheelock was free from fraud, duress, menace, or undue influence at the time and in the matter of the making, signing, and delivery of said assignment. The court then finds the allegations of the complaint in reference to the death of Wheelock, his last will, and proceedings had thereunder as true.

These findings cover all the material issues in the case. It was not necessary to find whether or not Wheelock had been ill or paralyzed, or as to his physical condition, or any other fact stated in the complaint, merely as inducement to the ultimate facts, which were that he was mentally incompetent, and that defendant Godfrey knowingly and fraudulently took advantage of his weakness, and, by undue influence, by duress, and by obtaining control over him, induced and procured him to sign, execute, and deliver to her an assignment of his bank book and of the money in bank. The findings are full and complete on the material issues. The objection to that portion of the judgment which awarded the money in bank to defendant Godfrey, as against the bank, is not open to attack by this appellant, who was plaintiff in the court below. The judgment is against plaintiff, and in favor of both the defendants as to him. If he was not entitled to it, manifestly he is not, and cannot be, injured by any judgment in the premises awarding it, as between the defendants. That is not his affair, but theirs. The judgment appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

---

4 Cal. Unrep. 419

MIETZSCH v. BERKHOUT et al., Superintendent of Public Streets. (No. 15,011.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 30, 1893.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—STREET IMPROVEMENT—ILLEGAL ASSESSMENT—REMEDY—INJUNCTION—WHEN MAINTAINED.

1. St. 1889, p. 70, §§ 10–15, regulating the procedure for widening streets, provide that the commissioners must file with the clerk of the board of supervisors a report specifying each lot, etc., assessed for the improvement, with the name of the owner and a plat of the assessment district; that the clerk must give notice requiring persons interested to show cause, at a time named, why such report should not be confirmed, etc. Held, that a lot owner who failed to object to an assessment, and to proceed as provided by such statute, could not maintain an action to declare the assessment void, and enjoin the execution of a deed pursuant to a sale of the assessed property to pay the assessment.

2. Where a city lot is assessed only $2.50 for a street improvement, and sold for nonpayment, and the owner could redeem from the sale by paying $3.90, the maxim, "De minimis non curat lex," applies, and a court of equity will not restrain the execution of a deed pursuant to such sale, if invalid.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; Eugene R. Garber, Judge.

Action by E. Mietzsch against Amelia Berkhout and James Gilleran, as superintendent of public streets of the city of San Francisco, Cal., for an injunction. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Henry E. Highton, for appellant. A. W. Linforth, for respondents.

BELCHER, C. Proceedings were regularly instituted for the widening of Mission street, in the city and county of San Francisco, and for the condemnation for that purpose of a strip of land 16½ feet wide, along the southeasterly side of said street. The proceedings resulted in a judgment of condemnation and in assessments upon certain lots of land owned by the plaintiff, to help pay the expenses of the improvement. The assessments not being paid, the said lots were sold thereunder to one William Kreling, who received certificates of purchase therefor, and assigned the same to the defendant Amelia Berkhout. There was no redemption of any of the property so sold, and at the proper time the said assignee served on the plaintiff the usual and required notice, that she would apply for deeds of the lots pursuant to the said sales. The defendant James Gilleran, the then superintendent of streets in and for the said city and county, was about to execute and deliver the deeds so applied for, and thereupon the plaintiff commenced this action to obtain a decree restraining the execution and delivery thereof. A summons was duly issued, and served on each of the defendants, but they failed to appear, and their defaults were entered. Thereafter, the case was submitted to the court below for decision, and after consideration the court made and filed its findings of facts and conclusions of law, to the effect that all the allegations of the complaint were true, but that the plaintiff was not entitled to the relief demanded, and that judgment should be entered in favor of defendants. Judgment was accordingly so entered, from which the plaintiff appeals.

In the proceedings for condemnation above referred to, the appellant here was a party defendant; and from the judgment entered in the case, and an order denying a new trial, an appeal was taken by the defendants to this court, where the judgment and order were affirmed. City and County of San Francisco v. Kiernan, 33 Pac. 720. Most of the questions involved in this case were involved in that, and were decided against the contention of appellant. They must therefore, upon this appeal, be treated as settled, and need not be further considered.

It is claimed, however, that one of appellant's lots was assessed for a larger portion of the costs, damages, and expenses resulting from the proceedings to effect the widening than it should have been, and hence that the entire proceedings, as to him, were invalidated. The order of the board of supervisors, under which the proceedings were initiated and carried on, defined the district to be benefited by the widening, and upon which the costs, damages, and expenses thereof should be assessed, as the land extending along each side of Mission street, as widened, from Twenty-Sixth street to the San Mateo county line, and having a uniform width of 1,000 feet on each side of the street; and it declared that after deducting from the total costs, damages, and expenses of the widening the amount assessed to the railroad company occupying the street, the remainder should be assessed as follows: One-fourth upon the lands and improvements thereon lying within a uniform distance of 100 feet easterly from the southeasterly line of the street, as widened; one-fourth upon the lands and improvements lying between 100 feet and 1,000 feet easterly from the southeasterly line of the street; and the other two-fourths upon the lands and improvements similarly described on the northwesterly side of the street: "provided, that all lots or parcels of land within 100 feet of the southeasterly or northwesterly lines of Mission street, * * * not fronting directly on the line of said street, shall, for the purposes of this assessment, be assessed as though the same were outside the line of said 100 feet, as hereinbefore provided, and be assessed as herein provided for the assessment of land and property distant more than 100 feet from the southeasterly and northwesterly lines of said street." The appellant owned six lots subject to assessment under the said order. Three of these lots the complaint describes as lots 51, 52, and 53, "as designated upon a certain map of the Bernal Homestead Association," on file in the office of the recorder of the city and county, and as "forming a complex of lots or parcels of land designated as, and subdivided into, lots 2, 4, and 5 of block 166 in the report, and on the map, plans, and diagrams of the Mission street widening commissioners." The complaint further describes lots 51 and 52 as commencing at the corner of Mission street and Allison avenue, and extending thence along Mission street 104 feet 4 inches, and along Allison avenue 42 feet 9 inches, with a width or length at the other end or side of 96 feet 2 inches; and it describes lot 53 as located in the rear of the other two lots, and fronting on Allison avenue, with a uniform width of 50 feet and a length of 120 feet. It is alleged that the larger part of lot 53 was within the 100-feet limits, as above defined, and was assessed as within those limits, when the whole lot should have been assessed as within the 900-feet limits; and it is claimed that the assessment so made "presented an incontestable violation of the order under which it was sought to levy the assessment." The statute regulating the mode of procedure provided, in substance, that the commissioners appointed for the purpose must make and file with the clerk of the board of supervisors their report, specifying each lot, subdivision, or piece of property assessed, with the name of the owner thereof, if known, and a plat of the assessment district, showing each block and lot, or portion of lot, assessed, and its dimensions, designated and described by an appropriate number; that upon the filing of the report and plat the clerk must give notice thereof by publication for at least 10 days, requiring all persons interested to show cause before the board on or before a day named, why such report should not be confirmed; that all objections must be in writing, and filed with the clerk, and by him laid before the board; that the board must fix a day for hearing the objections, and the clerk must notify the objectors thereof; that at the time fixed the board must "proceed to pass upon the report, and may confirm, correct or modify the same, or may order the commissioners to make a new assessment, report and plat;" that the clerk must forward to the street superintendent a certified copy of the report, assessment, and plat, as finally confirmed and adopted, and that such certified copy shall thereupon be the assessment roll; and that, immediately upon receipt thereof by the street superintendent, the assessment therein contained shall become due and payable, and shall be a lien upon all the property contained and described therein. St. 1889, p. 70, §§ 10–15. It appears from the complaint that the abovementioned provisions of the statute were complied with; that written objections were filed by a number of persons interested, and were considered and acted upon by the board; and that, after modifying the report in a few details, the board "undertook and attempt .. to confirm and adopt, and in form confirmed and adopted, the said report, assessment, and plat." It does not, however, appear that any objection was made by appellant to the assessment upon any of his lots. He apparently thought he could safely rest upon his oars till after the sale, and then invoke the power of a court of equity to declare the sale null and void. But we do not think he was at liberty to do that. If the objection now urged had any merit, it should have been presented to and acted upon by the board; and it cannot, in our opinion, be raised for the first time in the courts. See Lent v. Tillson, 72 Cal. 404, 14 Pac. 71. Besides, no diagram or definite description of lot 5, as assessed, is presented, and from the general description we infer that it is the same as lot 53. But it appears from the complaint that lot 5 was sold for $2.50, the full amount of the assessment against it, and could have been redeemed by paying $3.90. This being so, the maxim, "De minimis non curat lex," may well be held applicable to the case.

The other points do not require special notice. The judgment, in our opinion, should be affirmed.

We concur: SEARLS, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is affirmed.

100 Cal. 626

PRIEST v. BROWN et al. (No. 13.886.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 30, 1893.)

FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES—RIGHTS OF PURCHASER—REVIEW ON APPEAL—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

1. Where the debtor testified that it was his intention, in making a transfer of his property, to prefer certain creditors, and the grantee testified that the debtor said to him at the time that his object was to prefer creditors out of the proceeds, a finding to that effect will not be disturbed.

2. An insolvent debtor, who has the right to prefer certain creditors, is not required, in the exercise of that right, to convey his property directly to such creditors, but he may transfer it to a third person, and pay the proceeds to the creditors.

3. A conveyance by an insolvent debtor with the intention of using the proceeds thereof in discharge of the claims of certain of his creditors, need not be made for cash in hand.

4. The title of a purchaser in good faith of the land of an insolvent debtor is not affected by the fact that the debtor in making the conveyance intended to defraud his creditors.

5. The fact that an insolvent debtor, who conveyed his land with the avowed intention of using the proceeds in payment of the claims of certain of his creditors, did not pay such creditors, will not affect the title of the purchaser, if the purchase was made in good faith.

6. Findings of the trial court upon conflicting evidence will not be disturbed on appeal on the ground that they are against the weight of the evidence.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; T. K. Wilson, Judge.

Action by one Priest against Joseph Brown and others. Judgment for defendants. Plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

T. Z. Blakeman, for appellant. James A. Waymire, H. C. Campbell, and W. T. Baggett, for appellees.

DE HAVEN, J. This action was brought by the plaintiff to subject certain real property in the city of San Francisco to the payment of a judgment obtained by him against the defendant Joseph Brown on April 5, 1887, for the sum of $8,334.06 and costs of suit. It is alleged in the complaint that this real property was on October 3, 1883, conveyed by the judgment debtor to one A. M. Brown, with intent to delay and defraud the creditors of such debtor. The land was afterwards conveyed to other defendants named, in trust to secure an indebtedness owing from the said A. M. Brown to the San Francisco Savings Union. The superior court found that the deed from J seph Brown to the defendant A. M. Brown was not made with intent to defraud the creditors of Joseph Brown, and upon this finding, and others not necessary to be stated, gave judgment for the defendants. It is manifest that if the finding of the court to the effect that the original conveyance to the defendant A. M. Brown was not fraudulent and void as to the creditors of Joseph Brown is sustained by the evidence, the judgment and order appealed from must be affirmed without reference to other questions argued by counsel. It is earnestly urged in behalf of appellant that this finding is contrary to the evidence. It appears from the record that at the date of the transfer Joseph Brown was insolvent, and he testified to the effect that his object in making it was to prefer certain of his creditors. The purchaser, A. M. Brown, was his nephew. He was a captain in the United States army, with a salary of $2,000 per year, but without other property. The property transferred was substantially all the debtor, Joseph Brown, had. It had a rental value of about $1,000 per year, and the purchase price agreed to be paid therefor was $9,000, $500 of which was paid in cash, and the balance in the negotiable notes of the purchaser, maturing at different periods from 6 to 24 months from date. None of the creditors to be preferred knew anything of the transfer, and, of course, did not give their assent to it at the time, but Joseph Brown testified that he afterwards sent the notes to the persons for whom he intended them when he made the sale. The notes sent to his sister were returned to him by his direction, and one or more of the other notes again came into possession of the debtor, and these seem to be the only ones that have been paid, and they were paid to Joseph Brown out of money, the greater portion of which was obtained from the rents, and from a mortgage placed upon the property by the purchaser. The purchaser, A. M. Brown, testified, in substance, that at the time of the transfer he was informed by his uncle that his object was to prefer certain of his creditors out of the proceeds of the sale, and that he was willing to assist him in the matter by purchasing the property. In view of the direct testimony of the grantor and grantee to that effect, we cannot say that there was no evidence to justify the trial court in finding that the real intention of the debtor in making the transfer was to prefer a portion of his creditors, and that the conveyance was accepted by the defendant A. M. Brown with knowledge of this intention of his grantor. A transfer made by an insolvent debtor for such a purpose is not fraudulent in the absence of a statute making it so, and while it is true that in this state, under section 55 of the insolvent act of 1880, a conveyance made and accepted with such intent may be set aside by an assignee in insolvency, if made within one month before the commencement of insolvent proceedings by or against the grantor, still, subject to the right thus given the assignee in insolvency to defeat it, such a conveyance is unassailable. This general rule that an insolvent debtor may, when there is no bankrupt or insolvent law making a different disposition of his property, lawfully devote it to the payment of any creditor, or a part of his creditors to the exclusion of others, is thoroughly settled by numerous well-considered decisions. Dana v. Stanfords, 10 Cal. 269; Low v. Wortman, 44 N. J. Eq. 202, 7 Atl. 654, and 14 Atl. 586; Shelley v. Boothe, 73 Mo. 74; Brashear v. West, 7 Pet. 614; Giddings v. Sears, 115 Mass. 505. The same rule is embodied in section 3432 of the Civil Code, which declares: "A debtor may pay one creditor in preference to another, or may give to one creditor security for the payment of his demand in preference to another." It is argued, however, that the facts of this case do not bring it within this rule, because the conveyance here was not made directly to the creditor, and the sale was not made for money in hand, but upon a long credit, represented by the notes of the purchaser; but we do not think these facts make any difference in the application of the rule. It is perhaps true that in most of the cases in which the question of the right of a debtor to give a preference has arisen, the transfer assailed as fraudulent was made directly to the creditor, but, in our opinion, it is not essential to its validity that a transfer for such a purpose should be made to the creditor directly. The insolvent debtor, so long as he retains control of his property, is clothed with the right to dispose of it for the bona fide purpose of providing means for the payment of any of his debts; and he necessarily has the right to determine whether the sale shall be for cash in hand or upon a reasonable credit. Nor can it make any difference whether the transfer is made directly to the creditor by way of preference, or whether the property for which it is exchanged be money or notes, to be used by him for the same purpose. This view is sustained by the following cases: Gregory v. Harrington, 33 Vt. 241; Avery v. Eastes, 18 Kan. 507; Bedell v. Chase, 34 N. Y. 387; Loeschigk v. Bridge, 42 N. Y. 421; Ruhl v. Phillips, 48 N. Y. 125. In Gregory v. Harrington the debtor sold his store and merchandise, taking the notes of the purchaser in payment therefor, and these notes he afterwards turned over to some of his creditors by way of preference; and the court held that the sale was as valid as if it had been made directly to the preferred creditors. The court said: "In this case, if the principal debtor had transferred the property itself to the same persons to whom he transferred the notes he took for it, and for the same purpose, no person would claim that he had not a perfect legal right to do so; or, if he had sold the property and taken the money for it, and had applied the money in the same manner, it would not have been fraudulent. The purpose was not to keep his property away from his creditors, but to pay it to his creditors, he exercising his legal right to prefer such as he chose. Fraud does not consist in transferring property with a view to prefer one creditor to another, but in transferring property with the intent to prefer oneself to all his creditors." It is true that in the case just cited the notes received were actually transferred to the creditors of the vendor; but the failure of the debtor to thus apply the proceeds of a sale would not defeat the title of a purchaser in good faith, who had given his negotiable notes in payment, without any knowledge that the real object of the debtor in making the sale was not to pay his debts, but simply to convert the property into something which might more effectually be placed beyond the reach of his creditors, and for his own benefit. The case is authority for the proposition that a transfer made for the purpose of preferring a creditor is valid, although the transfer is not made directly to the creditor intended to be preferred. In Bedell v. Chase, 34 N. Y. 387, the sale was made upon credit, the vendors taking the purchaser's notes, the last one due in 12 months from date, and the sale was made for the purpose of preferring creditors of the vendors. The sale was upheld. So, also, in Ruhl v. Phillips, 48 N. Y. 125, the sale was of an entire stock of an insolvent copartnership upon credit, the vendee having knowledge of the insolvency, and also of the fact that the sale was made for the purpose of preferring certain creditors of the copartnership out of the proceeds of the sale. The court in that case held that the sale was not necessarily fraudulent because the notes of the purchasers were taken in payment, or because of the intended preference which was known to the purchasers. In discussing the question of preference the court said: "The amount of the notes was not sufficient to pay all the debts of the firm, and it was the object of Many, the member thereof who made the sale, to prefer certain of their creditors, including a copartnership, [of Many, Baldwin & Many,] in the payment of debts due to them, and to indemnify them against liability on indorsements made for their accommodation. This object, although known to Phillips at the time of his purchase, did not render it fraudulent as against the plaintiff or any of the creditors who were not to be so preferred. A debtor, notwithstanding his insolvency, is allowed to make such preference if bona fide; and a sale for that purpose is not invalid." The foregoing cases all proceed upon the principle—which we deem a sound and reasonable one—that a debtor has the lawful right to prefer a creditor; and, this object or purpose being lawful, the manner in which it is to be done, whether by a direct conveyance to the creditor or by a sale to another, either for money or notes, with the intention of applying the proceeds of such sale by way of preference, is immaterial.

It is lastly urged that it was incumbent upon the vendee to see that his notes were applied in payment of the creditors to be preferred, and that, as they were not in fact so applied, or at least some of them were not, the transfer was fraudulent. We think, however, that there was evidence from which the court might have found that all of the notes were transferred to those creditors of Joseph Brown whom he desired to prefer. It is true, some of them got back into his hands in a manner which does not clearly appear; but, whatever the fact may be, whether these notes were or were not given to the creditors of Joseph Brown, the court had evidence before it upon which to base a finding that the defendant A. M. Brown believed at the time of the sale that his notes were to be used in preferring certain creditors of his uncle; and, if he so believed, he was not guilty of any fraud, whatever may have been the real intention of his grantor, and the conveyance cannot be set aside for the fraud of the grantor, in which the grantee did not participate. Bank v. Northrup, 22 N. J. Eq. 58; Foster v. Hall, 12 Pick. 89; Cohen v. Knox, 90 Cal. 273, 27 Pac. 215. Thus, in the case last cited, we said: "Where one party conveys land to another for a valuable and adequate consideration, the conveyance will be good, against the creditors of the grantor, although the latter intended thereby to defraud his creditors, if the grantee had no knowledge of such intent, and was in no way a participant in the fraudulent purpose." And of course, if, in such a case, the conveyance is valid when made, it is not rendered invalid by what the grantor may do or fail to do afterwards; if the present fraudulent intention of the grantor alone cannot defeat the conveyance, his subsequent action in furtherance of his own fraudulent design ought not to affect the rights of the grantee. The negotiable notes given by the grantee in this case constituted a valuable and adequate consideration for the transfer, and bring the transaction within the protection of the rule which upholds the conveyance, when the grantee is himself acting in good faith, and without any intention of assisting his grantor in defrauding his creditors.

We have not deemed it necessary to enter into any discussion relating to the weight which ought to be given to what the plaintiff terms "badges of fraud," and other facts appearing in this case, which he claims really outweigh the direct evidence of the defendants Joseph and A. M. Brown upon the issue as to the fraudulent character of the conveyance made by the former to the latter. At most, the matters referred to only make a conflict of evidence upon the main question involved. When this is so, it is the well-settled rule here that the finding of the trial court thereon will not be disturbed by us; and the fact that the evidence bearing in this case upon the matter embraced in the finding consists of depositions does not take the case out of the general rule thus stated. Reay v. Butler, 95 Cal. 214, 30 Pac. 208. Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: McFARLAND, J.; HARRISON, J.; GAROUTTE, J.; FITZGERALD, J.

100 Cal. 664

PEOPLE v. MUNROE. (No. 20,973.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 30, 1893.)

FORGERY — INSTRUMENTS SUBJECTS OF—CONTRACT AGAINST PUBLIC POLICY.

A contract which, if genuine, would be void as against public policy, may be the subject of forgery.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; B. N. Smith, Judge.

George Munroe was convicted of forgery, and appealed. After the judgment was affirmed in department, (33 Pac. 776,) a rehearing was ordered. Affirmed.

W. E. Cox, W. T. Williams, and Edgerton & Adams, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Hart, for the People.

GAROUTTE, J. This case was decided in department, but, a rehearing having been ordered, it is now before the court in bank. The appellant was convicted of the crime of forgery, and prosecutes this appeal from the judgment and order denying his motion for a new trial. It is insisted that the facts charged in the information do not constitute the offense of forgery; and that is the only matter relied upon for a reversal of the judgment which demands our attention. We will not enter into a detailed analysis of the various parts of the writing which is the subject of the forgery here charged, but will view it from the standpoint of appellant's claims, and, for the purposes of this investigation, will concede the writing to be an assignment or sale of the unearned salary of a public school teacher for the next ensuing month, together with an order upon the city auditor of Los Angeles for the warrant representing such salary. That being the fact, it is further claimed that Helen Henry, the purported author of the writing, being a public school teacher, is a public officer, and that the sale or assignment of an unearned salary by a public officer is void, being against public policy, and, the writing being void, it cannot be the basis of a charge of forgery. The information charged that this writing was forged and passed by the defendant with intent to defraud one J. W. Jackson; the evidence disclosing that the writing was assigned to Jackson for a valuable consideration, and that subsequently the warrant was delivered to him by the auditor, and the money paid thereon by the treasurer. Section 470 of the Penal Code provides that "every person who, with intent to defraud another, falsely makes, alters, forges or counterfeits any charter, [then follows a list by name of almost every conceivable kind and character of writing,] is guilty of forgery." Upon a strict construction, it might in good reason be held that the foregoing definition of forgery curtails the elements necessary to be present in order to constitute the offense, as contradistinguished from forgery recognized by various writers upon criminal law. Under our statute we hold burglary to be an entry into a building with intent to commit larceny; and, upon the same lines, it might be held that forging a writing with intent to defraud another is forgery; and, indeed, it is apparent that the character of the writing is quite insignificant, when placed in the balances opposite the other element,—the intent to defraud. But we will take broader ground, and concede the essential ingredients of the crime of forgery to be (1) a false making of some instrument; (2) a fraudulent intent; (3) if genuine, the writing might injure another. The third element stated is expressly recognized by this court to be the true test as to the nature of the writing. People v. Frank, 28 Cal. 514; People v. Tomlinson, 35 Cal. 506; Ex parte Finley, 66 Cal. 263, 5 Pac. 222. There is some general language in the Tomlinson Case, taken very probably from People v. Shall, 9 Cow. 784, to the effect that the writing, if genuine, must be sufficient to form the basis of a legal liability; but such is not the true test, in our opinion. The requirements of the statute demand no such construction, and its adoption would result in the escape from justice of many criminals.

Appellant's counsel has cited many cases to the effect that a contract against public policy is illegal and void, and has no standing in courts. He has also cited cases to the effect that a void contract cannot be the subject of forgery. But he has cited no case to the effect that a contract against public policy is not the subject of forgery, and, after diligent examination of authorities, we have failed to find a case to that point, and this court is not willing to be the first judicial body to declare such a doctrine. It would serve no useful purpose to review in detail the cases cited by counsel holding that void contracts are not the subject of forgery. Many of them are cases of nudum pactum, and others follow the very extreme doctrine laid down in People v. Shall, supra, where the learned judge said: "I agree that a man ignorant of the technical requirements of a special agreement might be imposed upon by the paper in question. This remark probably embraces a majority of the community in which we live, and most likely the very parties named in the false instrument. In this view, no doubt, the deed of which the defendant stands convicted involves all the moral guilt of forgery. He believed that he had succeeded in fabricating what purported to be a valid promissory. But legal forgery cannot be made out without imputing a possible, or even actual, ignorance of the law to the person intended to be defrauded. However dark may be the moral hue of a transaction, courts of justice can only act upon legal crime,—upon criminal breaches of professional obligation." It is sufficient to say that this language carries the principle to limits which we cannot follow. The more liberal doctrine, and the doctrine which, in the interests of good government, should be sustained, is declared in People v. Krummer, 4 Parker, 219, where the court says: "We are never called upon to determine whether, in legal construction, the false instrument or writing is an instrument of a particular name or character. It is a matter of perfect indifference whether it possesses or not the legal requisites of a bill of exchange, or an order for the payment of money or the delivery of property. The question is whether, upon its face, it will have the effect to defraud those who may act upon it as genuine, or the person in whose name it is forged. It is not essential that the person in whose name it purports to be made should have the legal capacity to make it, nor that the person to whom it is directed should be bound to act upon it, if genuine, or have a remedy over." There is no question but that a writing which is a nudum pactum is not the subject of forgery; but a contract which a court will not enforce, or even recognize, because it is against the policy of the law, cannot be termed a "nudum pactum." A forged contract, even though it covers a subject-matter which makes it void as against public policy, upon its face may present such an appearance that, if genuine, it might injure another, and thus it satisfies the test which we have laid down. The contract may be such that there would not only be a possibility of its injuring another, but a very strong probability of such injury; for there are many contracts against public policy which, upon their face, present a most innocent and most inviting appearance. Even though a contract presented to a court of justice would be declared void as against public policy, yet aside from that fact it may have a pecuniary value to its owner. It could have such a value as that the theft of it would be the subject of larceny; and it would be anomalous to hold an instrument the subject of larceny, and yet its counterfeit not of sufficient value to form the basis of a charge of forgery. If the stealing of the genuine instrument would be larceny, surely the false making of such an instrument would be forgery. To declare the law to be that all contracts which are not enforceable, because against the policy of the law, are not the subject of forgery, would be offering a carte blanche to the professional forger, of which he would not be slow to take advantage; and hereafter he would confine himself to the manufacture of spurious paper in the nature of contracts against public policy, for he would thereby be enabled to make a very respectable living,—respectable as to the size of his income, and respectable in that such acts would be no crime.

Contracts against public policy cover a multitude of subjects, and in many cases the determination of their character in this regard calls for the exercise of the nicest discrimination from the most learned judges. From the face of the contract itself, courts will disagree as to its validity or invalidity. All things which are opposed to moral precepts may be said to be against public policy, and thus we have a great and uncertain field opened up before us. Contracts pertaining to restraint of trade and competition in business have been entered into by parties in the utmost good faith, believing that they were making valid contracts, and upon considerations of the gravest character; and still those contracts subsequently have been declared to be invalid as against public policy. It cannot be contended for a moment that such contracts could not be forged. Suppose a contract contained a covenant upon the part of a competing dealer that he would not again engage in business within the state of California. Thus we have a covenant clearly void under our Code, as being in restraint of trade; yet we think such a contract is the subject of forgery. Certainly, that character of instrument might be well calculated to defraud the tradesman still remaining in business. He might be willing to pay large sums of money for that agreement, well knowing at the time that he could not enforce it in law, but knowing his man, and believing the covenants would be considered binding by the party making them, and that no attempt would ever be made to evade them. Such an agreement is of full value until denied. It answers every purpose of its creation until that time, and perchance it may never be denied. The foregoing principle is fully illustrated in Com. v. Pease, 16 Mass. 91. The defendant was charged with theftbote, defined by Blackstone as where a party robbed not only knows the felon, but also takes his goods again, or "other amends," upon agreement not to prosecute. The offense is here recognized as compounding a felony. The question in that case was, would a promissory note of the defendant satisfy the term "other amends?" Parker, C. J., said: "It is argued that it will not, because such a note will be void in law, and in fact nothing may ever be received; but there seems to be no reason for this nice and critical construction of the words. The note, although voidable, is in fact of value to the holder until it is avoided. It may never be disputed."

Obligations ultra vires stand upon the same level with contracts against public policy as to the offense of forgery. If one is not the subject of forgery, neither is the other. In England, corporations are created by special acts of parliament. Within those acts are found the measures of their powers. In this country, the general statutes, in connection with the articles of incorporation, which are public records, form the limitation of their powers. Thus the world deals with corporations with a knowledge of the extent of their powers, and ignorance of the law forms no defense to the plea of ultra vires. If this appellant's position be sound, all contracts of corporations which are ultra vires are not the subject of forgery. Neither would bonds of municipal corporations which are ultra vires form the foundation for a prosecution for forgery. The determination of the powers of corporations, both private and municipal, is a question often involving the most complex principles of legal jurisprudence, and, if ultra vires contracts may not be forged, a rich field for the successful practice of fraud is presented to the forger. In State v. Eades, 68 Mo. 150, it is said that the fraudulent making of a false municipal certificate of indebtedness is forgery, though the municipality had no power to issue such certificate; and this principle is in line with sound reason, and fully commends itself to our views. It is held that contracts made under an unconstitutional law are void. Every man is presumed to know the law, and appellant's contention would free the criminal forging such a contract. Vilhac v. Railroad Co., 53 Cal. 208. In other words, it would be a good defense to a prosecution for forgery that the law under which a genuine contract similar to the forged one might be made is unconstitutional. Such a plea is too remote from the crime of which the accused stands charged, and his liberty must be regained upon more substantial grounds. As to what contracts are against public policy, or ultra vires, or void as creations under unconstitutional statutes, we think matters entirely foreign to a prosecution for forgery. In the examination of such grave and abstruse questions, the criminal element of the case would soon be lost to view. For the purposes of the case, we conceded at the outset that this instrument would be declared void by a court as against public policy; but, if that question were a live issue in the case, this contract might be declared valid upon the ground that a teacher in the public schools is not a public officer. Certainly, the law as to that point is not so plain but that an ordinary layman, in the exercise of the greatest care, might not be defrauded in taking an assignment of a public school teacher's unearned salary.

There is a further view to be taken of this question, which is also fatal to appellant's claims, and which was incidentally touched upon in noticing the Pease Case. Aside from the nonenforceable character of this contract in a court of justice, it has an inherent, substantial value. It is said in Morton's Case, 2 East, P. C. 955, "That, though a compulsory payment by course of law could not have been enforced for want of the proper stamp, yet a man might equally be defrauded by a voluntary payment being lost to him." It cannot be said that a contract has no value because you have no standing in court to enforce it. Who can say in advance that the money will not be voluntarily paid, as agreed upon by its terms? Who can say that Helen Henry would not have lived up to the very letter of this instrument, if it had been her genuine contract? If her word is as good as it should be; if her conduct of the affairs of life is actuated by those principles of truth and justice which surely should be found in the breast of every teacher in our public schools,—then her act and deed, as evidenced by a writing such as is present in this case, would be a valuable instrument to the holder thereof; just as valuable as though it were enforceable in the courts of the land. If a genuine instrument signed by Helen Henry similar to the forged one found in this case possessed such value, the conclusion is irresistible that the forged paper was such as might defraud another. Again, if the paper had been the genuine act of Helen Henry, and upon the strength of her signature the proper officer had paid the amount it called for to Jackson, the legal holder thereof, however invalid the writing may have been as against public policy, the money would have been beyond the reach of Helen Henry forever. She could not have recovered it from the officer paying it out, or from Jackson who received it. Her mouth would be closed to assert ownership in herself. The writing would serve as a perpetual barrier to the recognition by courts of any claim upon her part; and, for this reason also, the instrument was of such value as to make it the foundation of a charge of forgery. It is ordered that the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: McFARLAND, J; PATERSON, J.; HARRISON, J.

De HAVEN, J. I concur in the judgment. The writing alleged to have been forged is one which, if genuine, would be void, because against public policy; but nevertheless such a writing is, in my opinion, the subject of forgery.

---

100 Cal. 617

DOLBEER v. LIVINGSTON et al. (No. 19,246.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 30, 1893.)

ESTOPPEL—SIGNING BLANK BOND.

G. signed and delivered a bond to L., knowing that L. expected to obtain the charter of a steamer, and give the same as security therefor. At the time he signed, the date and name of the steamer and name of the payee were left blank, and the blanks were afterwards filled in by L., and the bond delivered to plaintiff, who received it in good faith. Held, that G. was estopped from denying the validity of the bond.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; George Puterbaugh, Judge.

Action by John Dolbeer against J. B. Livingston and W. M. Ginty. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant Ginty appeals. Affirmed.

C. H. Rippey, for appellant. McNealy, Trippet & Neale, Oscar Trippet, and Trippet, Boone & Neale, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. On July 3, 1890, the plaintiff entered into a written agreement with the defendants, J. B. Livingston and W. H. Clarke, under the firm name of Livingston, Clarke & Co., whereby he leased to them the steamer Farallon for a certain time, commencing July 8, 1890, and upon certain terms and conditions, and, to secure performance of the terms of the agreement on their part, the said defendants delivered to the plaintiff a bond signed by themselves as principals, and by W. M. Ginty and W. H. Clarke as sureties. The plaintiff commenced this action on the said bond, alleging that Livingston, Clarke & Co. had failed to pay the full amount of money due under the charter party for the use of the steamer, and demanding judgment against all of the defendants for the amount so due and unpaid, with interest thereon. The defendant Ginty answered the complaint, and denied that he, as a surety or otherwise, executed to the plaintiff, or at all, the bond sued upon. Upon the issue thus raised the case was tried by the court, without a jury, and judgment given for the plaintiff, as prayed for. From this judgment, Ginty appeals on the judgment roll, and the only point made for a reversal is that the judgment against him is not supported or warranted by the findings.

The court found, among other things, as follows: "That the defendant W. M. Ginty signed and executed the bond set out in said complaint, and marked 'Exhibit B,' and delivered the same to the defendant Clarke, to be delivered as security for any charter party which he or the said Livingston, Clarke & Co. might desire to make; it being then expected that the said Livingston, Clarke & Co. would procure a charter party for one or two steamers,—the Farallon being preferred,—it being known to said parties that the plaintiff was the managing owner thereof. That at the time said bond was signed by the said Ginty the names 'John Dolbeer' and 'Farallon' and the date, 'July 8, 1890,' were not inserted therein, but places therefor were left in blank, and the same was delivered to said Clarke with said blanks; and said blanks were filled in, respectively, with the names 'John Dolbeer,' 'Farallon,' and 'July 8, 1890,' by the said Clarke, before said bond was delivered to the said John Dolbeer. That upon execution of the charter party said bond was delivered to said plaintiff by said Clarke, with said blanks filled in, and said bond appeared to be all right, and all appeared executed in regular form, and, there being nothing upon the face of said bond to excite the suspicion of said plaintiff or any reasonable person, said bond was accepted by the said plaintiff, in good faith, as security for the performance of said charter party as in said bond provided; and thereupon, upon the faith of said bond and said charter party, said steamer Farallon was delivered to the said Livingston, Clarke & Co., as hereinbefore found. That said defendant W. M. Ginty never gave the said Clarke, or any other person, any written authority to fill in said blanks, other than might be implied from his signing said bond, which was regular in all other respects, except said blanks; it being expected and understood by him at the time that the said Livingston, Clarke & Co. would procure a charter party, and that the bond signed by him should be given as security for the same, and it being particularly expected and understood that the steamer Farallon would be chartered of the plaintiff; and with such understanding and expectation the said bond was signed by the said Ginty, and delivered to the said Clarke." Appellant contends that, when the paper in question was signed and delivered by him to Clarke, it was not a bond or instrument imposing any obligation upon him, because of the blanks left in it, and could never become such unless express authority was given to fill the blanks, and that, as no such authority is found to have been given, his plea of non est factum should have been sustained; and in support of this contention he cites, and chiefly relies upon, the cases of Upton v. Archer, 41 Cal. 85, and Arguello v. Bours, 67 Cal. 447, 8 Pac. 49. Respondent, on the other hand, contends that, under the facts found, appellant is estopped to deny that the bond, as delivered to Livingston, Clarke & Co., was a valid instrument, duly executed, and binding upon him, as a surety thereon.

In our opinion, all the elements necessary to create an estoppel are shown here, and respondent's contention should therefore be sustained. It is clear that, when appellant signed the bond, he knew Livingston, Clarke & Co. were seeking to obtain a charter party of a steamer and expected to charter the Farallon from respondent, and give the bond as security therefor; and it was with the expectation and understanding that all this would be done and accomplished that he signed and delivered the bond to Clarke, who was a member of the firm. Now, if he did not intend that Clarke should fill in the blanks, and deliver the bond to respondent, when the trade was completed, then he was guilty of negligence and bad conduct, in putting it in the power of Clarke to mislead and deceive respondent. That respondent received the bond in good faith, having no means of knowing, or reason to suspect, that it was not properly executed, is clear; and, if appellant can now escape liability thereon, it must be in disregard of the maxim of law that, "When one of two innocent persons must suffer by the acts of a third, he by whose negligence it happened must be the sufferer." Civil Code, § 3543. The general rule is that "where a person, by word or conduct, induces another to act on a belief in the existence of a certain state of facts, he will be estopped, as against him, to allege a different state of facts." 7 Amer. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 19. "Estoppel in pais may be defined to be a right arising from acts, admissions, or conduct which have induced a change of position in accordance with the real or apparent intention of the party against whom they are alleged." Bigelow, Estop. (4th Ed.) 445. "Where a person tacitly encourages an act to be done, he cannot afterwards exercise his legal right in opposition to such consent, if his conduct or acts of encouragement induced the other party to change his position so that he will be pecuniarily prejudiced by such adversary claim." Scott v. Jackson, 89 Cal. 258, 26 Pac. 898. Under these authorities—and many more might be cited to the same effect—the appellant must be held estopped from questioning the due execution by him of the bond in suit.

The cases cited by appellant are not in point. In Upton v. Archer the plaintiff executed a deed of certain real property, leaving a blank for the insertion of the names of the grantees. An agent, with whom the deed was left, sold the property to the defendant, inserted his name in the blank, and delivered it to defendant as the plaintiff's deed. Plaintiff refused to recognize the sale, or receive the purchase money; and it was held that, under the statute of frauds, the agent had no power to fill the blank without authority in writing to do so. This was upon the ground that the deed was a sealed instrument, but all distinctions between sealed and unsealed instruments are now abolished in this state. Civil Code, § 1629. In Arguello v. Bours the plaintiff executed a deed with a blank for the name of the grantee. The deed came into the hands of Bours, and by his direction, in the absence of Arguello, and without any authority from him, one Inglis wrote Bours' name in the blank, and thereupon Bours took the deed, and filed it for record. In neither of these cases was there any claim that the plaintiff was estopped, and in the last-named case, certainly, no such claim could have been set up. We advise that the judgment be affirmed.

We concur: VANCLIEF, C.; SEARLS, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, it is ordered that the judgment appealed from be affirmed.

---

4 Cal. Unrep. 424

PEOPLE v. SANDS. (No. 15,369.)[1]

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 3, 1894.)

JUSTICES OF THE PEACE—FILLING VACANCIES.

1. City justices of the peace are not township or county officers, and the board of supervisors has no authority to fill vacancies therein.

2. Although inferior courts in incorporated cities can only be established by the constitution, (article 6, § 1,) and their jurisdiction, powers, and duties must be fixed by the legislature, (Const. art. 6, § 13,) still a valid provision for filling vacancies may be made by charter.

3. Under a charter providing that the mayor shall appoint suitable persons to fill vacancies in office, he is empowered to fill vacancies in the offices of city justices of the peace.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county; F. W. Henshaw, Judge.

Action in the nature of quo warranto by the people, on the relation of Fred V. Wood, against John A. Sands. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Davis & Hill, for appellant. W. H. H. Hart, Atty. Gen., Jas. C. Martin, and A. A. Moore, for the People.

HAYNES, C. This is an action in the nature of quo warranto, brought by the people on relation of Fred. V. Wood against John A. Sands to try the title of the relator and the defendant, respectively, to the office of city justice of the peace of the city of Oakland. The office became vacant by the resignation of the prior incumbent, and the mayor of the city, acting under the "freeholders' charter," appointed the defendant to fill the vacancy. Sands thereupon qualified, and entered upon the duties of said office. The board of supervisors of Alameda county, assuming that the power of appointment to said office was vested in them, appointed the relator to fill the same vacancy, and he also qualified, and demanded possession of the office. The cause was submitted in the court below upon an agreed statement of facts, which was adopted as a finding, in which it is conceded that each of these persons possesses all the qualifications required by law, and that the sole question is as to where the power of appointment to fill said vacancy is vested. The superior court held that said power was vested in the board of supervisors, and gave judgment in favor of the relator, Wood, and defendant, Sands, appeals therefrom.

Appellant contends that a city justice of the peace is a city officer, and that under the charter of the city the mayor is empowered to fill all vacancies in city offices. If a city justice of the peace is a city officer, the provision of the charter is sufficient in its terms to authorize an appointment by the mayor to fill the vacancy. Its language is as follows: "The mayor shall have the power to appoint suitable persons to fill vacancies in any office, except as in this charter provided." St. 1889, p. 570, § 202. The exception does not affect this case. The contention of respondent, briefly stated, is that city justices are not city officers, but are officers designated by the constitution, and exercising a part of the judicial power therein provided for; that, even if the power of appointment to a vacancy is not enumerated in the general permanent powers of the board of supervisors, a general provision gives them such other power, and charges them with such other duties, as are or may be imposed upon them by law; and among these is the power and duty imposed by section 111 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which reads as follows: "If a vacancy occurs in the office of a justice of the peace, the board of supervisors of the county shall appoint an eligible person to hold the office for the remainder of the unexpired term." These provisions, however, cannot be held to give the board of supervisors the power to fill the vacancy in question, if the office of city justice is a city office. Section 103 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as amended by the act of March 31, 1891, (St. 1891, p. 456,) provides that there shall be at least one justice of the peace in each township, elected by the qualified electors of the township, and gives the board of supervisors authority, when, in their opinion, the public convenience requires it, to establish two justices' courts in townships; and further provides: "In every city having fifteen thousand and not more than thirty-four thousand inhabitants there shall be one justice of the peace, and in every city having thirty-four thousand and not more than one hundred thousand inhabitants, two justices of the peace, to be elected in like manner by the electors of such cities respectively, and such justices of the peace of cities, and justices' courts of cities, shall have the same jurisdiction, civil and criminal, as justices of the peace of townships and township justices' courts. No person shall be eligible to the office of justice of the peace in any city having over fifteen thousand inhabitants who has not been admitted to practice law in a court of record; * * *. Every justice of the peace in any city having over fifteen thousand inhabitants shall receive an annual salary of two thousand dollars per annum, and shall be provided by the city authorities with a suitable office in which to hold court. All fees which are by law chargeable for services rendered by such justices of the peace in the cities aforesaid, shall be by them, respectively, collected, and on the first Monday in each month every such city justice of the peace shall make report, under oath of the city treasurer, of the amount of fees so by him collected, and pay the amount so reported into the city treasury, to the credit of the general fund thereof." Here it will be seen that not only are different designations given to justices in cities and townships, but that different qualifications are required; that, as to township justices, the board of supervisors have the power to increase the number from one to two, but are charged with no duty, discretion, or power in regard to city justices; that the number and the salary of city justices are definitely fixed by the legislature; that the city must provide suitable places for holding their courts; that the city justices must report to the treasurer of the city, and pay over all fees collected; and by another statute the salary of the justice must be paid by the city. The same distinctive appellation is given in numerous other statutes; as in the municipal government act, sections 390, 397, 402, (Pol. Code, pp. 794, 795;) and also by the act of March 18, 1885, (St. 1885, p. 213.)

---

[1] Rehearing granted.

In the county government act, approved on the same day as the above amendment of section 103, Code Civil Proc., it is declared that "the officers of a township are two justices of the peace, two constables, and such inferior and subordinate officers as may be provided by law or by the board of supervisors; provided that in townships containing cities in which city justices are elected, there shall be but one justice of the peace." St. 1891, p. 314, § 58. It is obvious that the local character of justices of the peace is not denied by any provision of the constitution, while all the statutes relating to their election and jurisdiction characterize them as local officers; and if justices of the peace elected by electors of a township, and exercising their jurisdiction therein, make them township officers, as declared by the foregoing statute, it is difficult to perceive why a justice elected by the electors of a city, and exercising his jurisdiction therein, is not a city officer. The constitution and statutes clearly distinguish between county organizations and governments and city organizations and governments. Each have distinct legislative bodies and executive officers. Nowhere is any duty or authority vested in the board of supervisors over municipal matters or officers, except in the case of consolidated city and county governments.

By still another act, approved March 31, 1891, (St. 1891, p. 292,) are city justices recognized as city officers. It is there provided that "the judicial power of every city having thirty thousand and under one hundred thousand inhabitants shall be vested in a police court, to be held therein by the city justices, or one of them, to be designated by the mayor, * * * and it is hereby made the duty of said city justices, in addition to the duties now required of them by law, to hold said police courts." The police court is given by said act exclusive jurisdiction of certain violations of the criminal laws of the state committed within the city, and is also given other powers concerning the violation of the criminal laws of the state, while sitting as a police court; and in a certain class of cities, of which Oakland is one, a clerk is given said court, whose salary is paid by the city, and of whom a bond, to be approved by the mayor, is required; and the city justices, as well as the clerk, are required to report and account to the city; and by section 305 of the municipal corporations act (Deer. Pol. Code, p. 786) vacancies in city offices are filled by the council upon nomination made by the mayor.

The charter of the city of Oakland provides for a police court, to be held by a police judge to be elected by the city, and also provides for the election of two city justices of the peace, but provides that the justices' courts therein provided for are intended to be the justices' courts provided for by general law, and that there shall be only two justices of the peace in said city. In Ex parte Ah You, 82 Cal. 339, 22 Pac. 929, it was held that the police court provided for by the freeholders' charter of the city of Oakland has no legal existence; and in People v. Toal, 85 Cal. 333, 24 Pac. 603, the same conclusion was reached touching a similar provision in the charter of the city of Los Angeles. In each of these cases there was a dissenting opinion, but they have not been overruled, and are therefore authoritative. It follows, therefore, that the act of March 31, 1891, (St. 1891, p. 292,) is in force in the city of Oakland. But it does not follow that, because inferior courts in incorporated cities and towns can only be established by the legislature, under section 1 of article 6 of the constitution, and that their jurisdiction, powers, duties, and responsibilities must also be fixed by the legislature under section 13 of the same article, a valid provision for filling vacancies in city offices may not be made in the charter. Such provision in no way trenches upon the constitutional provisions above cited relating to establishing inferior courts and fixing their jurisdiction; nor can it affect the question that city justices are provided for in the general municipal government act and in the Code of Civil Procedure. They are local officers, elected by the electors of the city, with qualifications different from that of township justices, and adapted to the wants of the city and the requirements of its business, with a special jurisdiction added that is purely municipal. If the naming of officers and prescribing their duties by the legislature can make them other than municipal officers, then the mayor and other officers, who are named in the municipal government act, and whose powers and duties are therein prescribed, are not municipal officers. But it is clear that city justices are not township or county officers, and, if so, it is equally clear that the board of supervisors has no authority to fill the vacancy in question. I advise that the judgment appealed from be reversed, with directions to the court below to enter judgment upon the findings in favor of appellant, and that he be restored to his said office.

We concur: SEARLS, C.; BELCHER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment appealed from is reversed, and the court below is directed to enter judgment upon the findings in favor of appellant, and that he be restored to his said office.

101 Cal. 26

KENNA v. CENTRAL PAC. R. CO. (No. 14,246.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 3, 1894.)

INJURY TO EMPLOYE—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

In an action against a railroad company for causing the death of plaintiff's intestate, the court properly granted a nonsuit for the contributory negligence of deceased, where plaintiff's evidence shows that deceased was at work on a tower which stood between two tracks; that his work bench was between the tracks, 75 feet from the tower; that trains ran on such tracks every 15 minutes; that he knew of the danger; that in going from the tower to his bench he walked on the track; that, after he could have seen an approaching train which had passed the tower, he walked 15 feet without turning around to look, and was struck and killed; and that he could have seen his danger, and could have avoided it by a single step into the open space between the tracks.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

Action by Kenna, as administrator of Patrick Fallon, deceased, against the Central Pacific Railroad Company, for negligently causing the death of plaintiff's intestate. From a judgment for defendant, and an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Frank Sullivan, for appellant. Frank Shay, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. Action to recover damages for causing the death of Patrick Fallon, the plaintiff's intestate. At the close of the plaintiff's testimony the court granted a nonsuit. The plaintiff moved for a new trial, and from the order denying the same, as well as the judgment, he has appealed.

In January, 1885, the defendant was engaged in erecting a tower on the Oakland mole, and constructing a signal system to be connected therewith. The plaintiff's intestate was employed by the defendant as a plumber, for fitting and connecting pipes to be laid in the tower and alongside its tracks. This tower was about 400 feet from the end of the mole, and a few feet to the south of the Alameda track. There were two tracks for the Alameda trains, and to the north of them were the tracks of the Oakland trains. Between these tracks, and about 100 feet to the east of the tower, there was an open space, in which was placed the plumber's bench. On the 10th of January, Fallon started to go from the tower to this bench for the purpose of cutting a piece of pipe, and while walking upon the end of the ties on the outer or southernmost track, at a point about 75 feet east of the tower, was struck in the back by the locomotive of the Alameda train, and instantly killed. Directly to the south from this place, and 10 feet away, was a pile of ties against which he was thrown, and between this pile and the ends of the ties on which he was walking was an open space or depression in the ground, slightly uneven, and a little lower than the level of the track. The track at this place is laid upon a curve, and the tower aforesaid prevented a clear view of it to the end of the mole, but, from the point at which the deceased was walking at the time he was struck, it could be seen for a distance of about 150 feet. Four trains of cars passed over this track every hour, that is, one Alameda train in each direction at intervals of a half hour, and, in addition to these, the daily San Jose and Livermore trains. It appears from the evidence that the bell upon the locomotive which struck the deceased was not rung, nor was its whistle sounded. There is some uncertainty as to the speed at which it was moving; for, although plaintiff's witness testified that it was going at the rate of 20 miles an hour, the weight and accuracy of his testimony is somewhat impaired by his further testimony that when the train was opposite the tower the deceased was 60 feet away, and that he had walked 15 feet before he was struck by the locomotive. It may be assumed, however, that the defendant was guilty of negligence to such a degree that, in the absence of any other evidence, it would be liable in damages, but the contributory negligence of the deceased was, nevertheless, such as to prevent a recovery against the defendant. It appears from the evidence that Fallon was a prudent, cautious man, 22 years old; that he knew the danger of the place in which he was working; had talked with his uncle about it; had had the experience of several days in which to learn the frequency with which the trains passed over the track, and to become acquainted with the danger; and that owing to the curve in the track, and the obstruction caused by the tower, he could not see an approaching train until it came within a few rods of him. It was therefore incumbent on him to exercise a corresponding care and vigilance to avoid danger, rather than negligently and recklessly expose himself to injury. "His employment and the theater of his services may not be disregarded. They made him conversant with the locality, the character and frequency of trains, the necessity for incessant vigilance to avoid injury, and the fact that no one could venture upon the tracks, and escape injury, without the greatest circumspection." Bresnahan v. Railroad Co., 49 Mich. 413, 13 N. W. 797. The law demands that one who is working in a place where he is exposed to danger shall himself exercise his faculties for his own protection, and does not permit a recovery for damages resulting from a neglect of this rule. Walking upon the line of a railroad where trains are at any time liable to pass is itself dangerous, and to do so without looking to see whether a train is approaching, is negligence per se. It is a fixed rule that it is the duty of any one, when attempting to cross a railroad track upon a highway, to be vigilant,—to look and to listen before attempting to cross; and a failure to do so is regarded as such negligence on his part as to preclude a recovery. Glascock v. Railroad Co., 73 Cal. 137, 14 Pac. 518. With greater reason does the principle of this rule apply to one who is traveling laterally along the route of a railroad, and knows that engines will soon follow him. "It is negligence for a person to walk upon the track of a railroad, whether laid in the street or upon the open field; and he who deliberately does so will be presumed to assume the risk of the perils he may encounter. The crossing of the track of a railroad is a different thing. The one is unavoidable, but in the other case he voluntarily assumes to walk amid dangers constantly imminent." Railroad Co. v. Hall, 72 Ill. 222. See, also, Austin v. Railroad Co., 91 Ill. 35; Roden v. Railroad Co., 133 Ill. 72, 24 N. E. 425; McAllister v. Railroad Co., 64 Iowa, 395, 20 N. W. 488; Delaney v. Railway Co., 33 Wis. 76; Railroad Co. v. Depew, 40 Ohio St. 121; O'Donnell v. Railroad Co., 7 Mo. App. 190; Schmolze v. Railway Co., 83 Wis. 659, 53 N. W. 743, and 54 N. W. 106; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. State, 69 Md. 551, 16 Atl. 212; Aerkfetz v. Humphreys, 145 U. S. 418, 12 Sup. Ct. 835; Holmes v. Railroad Co., 97 Cal. 161, 31 Pac. 834. The deceased, in the present instance, selected the track as his route for his own convenience, and not through any necessity. There was ample space for him to walk in safety and convenience between the track and the pile of tiles. The only reason assigned for his not doing so is that it was not quite as convenient as the track, because it was uneven. It also appears that there was a sufficient space between the Alameda tracks and the Oakland tracks in which to place the plumber's bench, and no reason was shown why he did not cross the tracks at the tower, and go upon the north side of the Alameda tracks. "He voluntarily and needlessly put himself in a highly dangerous place; a place, however, where he might go without incurring any liability as a wrongdoer, but where his own safety required his attention to his surroundings without one moment's interruption. If he risked himself in such a place, he must take whatever injury came from his own want of attention to his danger." Railroad Co. v. Depew, 40 Ohio St. 127. If there were any circumstances which would excuse the apparent negligence of the deceased in walking upon the track without taking any precaution to avoid danger, it was incumbent upon the plaintiff to establish them at the trial. When the facts are undisputed, and the plaintiff's negligence clearly appears therefrom, or when the uncontradicted evidence on the part of the plaintiff is such that the only reasonable construction that can be drawn therefrom is that the injured person did not exercise such care as men of ordinary prudence usually exercise in positions of like exposure and danger, the issue of negligence is a question of law to be determined by the court. There is no issue of fact to be submitted to the jury, but it is the duty of the court to grant a nonsuit. Flemming v. Railroad Co., 49 Cal. 253; Glascock v. Railroad Co., supra. In the present case the facts connected with the killing of Fallon were presented by a single witness on behalf of the plaintiff, and his testimony was clear and unequivocal that, when the train passed by the tower, Fallon could have seen it if he had turned around; that he had time to turn around and look before the engine struck him; that he walked 15 feet after the engine came within the range of view; that he did not turn around and look—did not look at all—to see if the train was coming; that there was a space of 10 feet between the track on which he was walking and the pile of ties, where he could have stepped, and over which he could have walked, instead of walking upon the track; that he could have got out of the way of the engine by stepping a single step into this space. These facts appearing in the plaintiff's testimony, and nothing to impair their effect, the court properly granted the nonsuit. The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; McFARLAND, J.; GAROUTTE, J.; DE HAVEN, J.; FITZGERALD, J.

(101 Cal. 42)

NATOMA WATER & MIN. CO. v. HANCOCK et al. (No. 14,847.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 5, 1894.)

WATERS AND WATER COURSES—RIGHTS IN STREAMS ON PUBLIC LANDS—DIVERSION OF SURPLUS.

The appropriator of water, who constructs a dam across the bed of a stream in public lands for the purpose of raising the surface of the water to a level which will cause it to flow into his canal, does not thereby acquire such exclusive right in the bed and banks of the stream as entitles him to restrain a subsequent appropriator of the surplus water from tapping the stream for its diversion at a point above the dam and below the head of slack water. McFarland and De Haven, JJ., dissenting. 31 Pac. 112, reversed.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county; John W. Armstrong, Judge.

Action by the Natoma Water & Mining Company against John Hancock and Joseph Wild for an injunction. There was judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

For opinion in department, see 31 Pac. 112.

Barclay, Wilson & Carpenter, J. G. Blanchard, and S. Solon Holl, for appellants. Daniel Titus, for respondent.

BEATTY, C. J. This is in action to enjoin the appellants from diverting water from the south fork of the American river at a point immediately above the dam of the respondent, and the principal question involved in the case may be stated as follows: If a prior appropriator of water constructs a dam across the bed of a stream, for the purpose of raising its surface to a level which will cause it to flow into the head of his ditch, does he thereby acquire such an exclusive right in the bed and banks of the stream as far as the slack water extends above his dam that he can enjoin a subsequent appropriator of the surplus from tapping the stream, and diverting such surplus at any point above the dam and below the head of the slack water? The decree of the superior court, from which the defendants appeal, cannot be sustained without affirming this proposition, as will clearly appear from a statement of the case.

The south fork of the American river is a considerable stream heading in the high Sierras, and like other mountain streams varies greatly in volume from year to year and from season to season. It reaches its lowest stage in each year towards the end of the dry season, and when the rains begin (usually in the fall) its flow increases in proportion to the amount of precipitation. Ordinarily, it reaches its highest stages during the winter and early spring, at which period it is subject to heavy floods. After the rains cease in the spring its volume subsides, but its flow is maintained by the melting snows at a comparatively high stage until the latter part of the summer. These are features common to all the streams flowing from the Sierras to the Sacramento valley, and are matters of universal notoriety. Such being the case, it is evident that an appropriation covering the entire flow of the stream at its lowest stages may leave a large surplus of water at flood, or even ordinary stages. The plaintiff in this case in the year 1851 gave notice of his intention to divert and appropriate, for the purpose of placer mining and irrigation, enough of the waters of the south fork to fill at all times a canal 8 feet wide and 4 feet deep, with a current running 10 miles per hour. In pursuance of this notice it proceeded to construct a canal 10 or 15 miles in length, but not of the capacity mentioned in its notice. Its present capacity, as found by the court, is 6 feet wide at the bottom, 8 feet wide at the top, 3 feet deep, and with a grade or fall of 4 feet to the mile. In seasons when the water has been unusually low in the dry summer months, the capacity of the canal was sufficient to take all the water of the river, but ordinarily, at the lowest stages of the stream, considerable quantities of water are discharged over the dam after the canal is filled. The system of head works by which the plaintiff diverts water from the river is of the ordinary type. The upper section of the canal, for a distance of about 300 yards, is of considerably greater capacity than the canal proper, and is furnished with waste gates and sand gates for the discharge of silt and surplus water. At the lower end of this larger section, and at the head of the canal proper, is a gate, by which the influx of the water is controlled. By means of a dam across the stream a short distance below the head of the canal, the water is raised to the proper level to fill it. This dam, which is of stone, is about 300 feet long on its crest. Neither the findings nor the evidence show what its height is; but, according to the only testimony on the point, it sets back the water about three-quarters of a mile,—say 3,000 feet, or 10 times the width of the dam, and 20 times the mean width of what plaintiff calls its pond. The crest of the dam is about 10 inches lower than the level at which the water must be held in order to turn a full supply into the head of the plaintiff's canal, and it appears from the evidence that the dam cannot be made permanently higher without endangering the head of the canal and its banks in times of flood. Ordinarily, the amount of water flowing in the stream is so large that the permanent dam holds it at a sufficient height for plaintiff's purposes, but, as the water falls with the advance of the dry season, and especially during years of extraordinary scarcity, it is necessary to add a false crest of lumber or riprap and gunny sacks, by which the dam is raised so as to prevent any water from passing over it.

Disregarding some minor facts, and some qualifications which it will be more convenient to state in connection with another branch of the case, it may be said that the foregoing statement applies to the whole period of time from the completion of the plaintiff's dam and ditch, in 1852 or 1853, down to the trial of this action. The plaintiff has at all times diverted water to the full capacity of its canal, and applied the whole of it to beneficial uses, for mining and irrigation. It still requires, for irrigation and other useful purposes, all the water so diverted, and, as against a subsequent appropriator, has an undoubted right to continue such diversion unmolested and undisturbed, except in so far as a lawful appropriation and diversion of the surplus at a point above its works may involve the necessity of altering and perfecting the appliances which have thus far proved sufficient to fill its ditch. The question is whether it is any infringement of this right of plaintiff for the defendants, in order to appropriate the surplus and divert it to an irrigating ditch on the opposite side of the river, to tap the stream above the dam and below the head of the slack water. There can be no question, as between the parties to this action, that the defendants have a perfect right to appropriate such surplus by any lawful means of diversion; and the only question is whether the plaintiff can shut them out from access to the stream at all points between the upper and lower ends of what counsel call its pond. The plaintiff's canal is on the south side of the river. The defendants, or some of them at least, are successors in interest to the owners of a mining and irrigating ditch on the north side, which was originally constructed and used as early as 1854, and was known as the "Boyd's Bar Ditch." In March, 1854, the plaintiff entered into a written agreement with the proprietors of the Boyd's Bar ditch, by which it granted to them the right to "put in, insert, and maintain in the dam of said Natoma Water and Mining Company" a box of sufficient size to supply their ditch, reserving the right, in case of a deficiency of water to fill its own canal, to close the gate of the Boyd's Bar ditch, and keep it closed while such deficiency continued. In pursuance of this agreement the predecessors of defendants put in a box two feet square on the north side of the river, and a few feet above plaintiff's dam, through which they have ever since drawn water to supply their ditch. In 1887 the defendants posted a notice of their intention to enlarge their ditch to a capacity of 2,000 inches, the diversion to be made at the Natoma dam. In accordance with this notice they had completed the proposed enlargement up to within a short distance of the dam, when this action was commenced for the purpose of enjoining them from "completing the construction of said ditch, and tapping the said south fork of the American river at the plaintiff's dam, and from taking water therefrom, or from any point above said dam," etc. The enlarged ditch of defendants was of sufficient capacity to carry all the water of the south fork at its lowest stages in a dry year, and, its level being some 10 inches lower opposite the dam than that of plaintiff's canal, it would have been in the power of the defendants upon the completion of their ditch to drain the stream, and deprive plaintiff of all or of a great part of the water to which it is entitled. But they have at all times disclaimed any intention of taking any but the surplus water over and above the quantity to which the plaintiff is entitled by its prior appropriation. In their posted notice of intention they say nothing about surplus water, but by their answer to the complaint in this action, by their testimony at the trial, and by their declarations pending and prior to the commencement of the action, they have uniformly insisted that they have no intention to divert any but the surplus water. There is no finding that they have any other intention, and no evidence upon which such a finding could be sustained. The court, however, does find that, "in order to draw the surplus from plaintiff's dam without taking the water from plaintiff's canal, it would be necessary to raise plaintiff's dam from 22 to 24 inches higher, and also to raise the banks of plaintiff's canal." This finding, and the fact that defendants upon completion of tneir ditch would have the power to drain plaintiff's canal, are the sole grounds upon which the superior court has enjoined the defendants from completing their ditch, and it only remains to consider whether they are sufficient to uphold the decree.

It is to be observed, in the first place, that the defendants are not in any worse position than they would be if they had not succeeded to the rights of the original owners of the Boyd's Bar ditch under the contract of 1854. Claiming, as they do, the privilege granted by that contract, they must concede, as they do concede, the prior right of the plaintiff to all the water carried by its canal at the date of the contract; but as to the surplus they stand upon the same footing as other citizens, and may, like others, appropriate it by any lawful means. This, indeed, is not disputed, and the contention of counsel here is for the identical proposition enunciated in the findings and conclusions of the superior court,—that no subsequent appropriator can tap the stream above the dam and within the slack water, because, if he did, it would be in his power to drain plaintiff's canal; and, even if he strictly limited his diversion to the actual surplus, it would compel the plaintiff to raise its dam and the banks of its canal. As to this last finding it is not sustained by the evidence, because, although there is some slight testimony to that effect, it is contrary to reason. The findings, no less than the evidence, show that there are times when the river carries barely enough water to fill plaintiff's canal. At such times it is necessary to raise the dam by means of a false crest of riprap and gunny sacks, high enough, and to make it tight enough, to prevent any water from flowing over or leaking through. The diversion of the surplus at any stage of the river would impose upon the plaintiff the necessity of doing nothing beyond what it is accustomed to do when from natural causes the surplus gradually diminishes and fails. It would simply have to raise its dam by a false crest, and make it tight enough to prevent any waste. The diversion of a part of the surplus would require a proportionate addition to the crest of the dam, and the whole effect of any diversion above the dam would be to compel the plaintiff to commence the annual operation of building a false crest a little earlier in the season than it has been accustomed to do, and to make it high enough and tight enough to prevent any waste during some years when without such diversion a less efficient crest would serve to fill its canal. This is as plain and self-evident as the proposition that two and two make four, and testimony to the contrary is not worthy of consideration.

The question to be decided, therefore, narrows itself to this: Must the defendants be enjoined from tapping the stream merely because they would thereby gain the power to drain plaintiff's canal, though they disclaim any such intention? Or must they be enjoined from diverting the surplus merely because such diversion would compel the plaintiff to perform its annual task of raising its dam earlier in the season every year, and of making it tight and efficient oftener, than they have been accustomed to do? To answer either of these questions in the affirmative would be equivalent to holding that there never can be a lawful appropriation of the surplus at any point above the plaintiff's dam, for it is self-evident that a ditch heading in the stream above the slack water with a dam sufficient to fill it would give its proprietors the same, or even more complete, power to drain plaintiff's canal than a ditch heading in the slack water; and it is equally evident that a diversion of the surplus, or a portion of it, at any point above the head of plaintiff's ditch, would lower the head of water behind the dam to precisely the same extent that it would be lowered by a diversion of the same quantity from the slack water. It is apparent, therefore, that there is nothing in either of the two grounds upon which the injunction was sought and granted, and upon which it is defended here, that would not equally support a similar decree if the defendants, instead of seeking to put the head of their new ditch in plaintiff's so-called pond, had gone a mile above the head of the slack water for that purpose. But, as above remarked, there can be no question as to the right of any lawful appropriator to divert the surplus either above or below the plaintiff. Suppose the defendants had headed their new and enlarged ditch for a point on the stream entirely above plaintiff's slack water, and an injunction had been sought upon either or both of the grounds I have been discussing. As to the control they would thereby acquire over the flow of the stream, and the mere power it would give them to drain plaintiff's canal, the obvious answer would be: "The defendants have as perfect a right to appropriate the surplus as you have to the quantity first appropriated. They can take it either above you or below you, as their interest or convenience may dictate. They choose to take it below. They cannot divert the surplus without putting in a dam and ditch, and therefore the right to the surplus involves the right to the dam and ditch. It may be true that their dam and ditch will put it in their power to take all the water when the stream is low, and thereby drain your canal; but it does not follow that they will make such unlawful use of their power. They disclaim any intention of doing so. Necessarily, they will be compelled to provide their ditch with a proper head gate, and other suitable appliances for controlling the influx of water, and when the stream falls they can readily limit or shut off the flow into their ditch, so as always to leave you the quantity to which you are entitled. In the mean time they cannot be enjoined from using the means essential to the exercise of their undoubted right merely because they would thereby gain the power to infringe yours. It will be time enough to enjoin them when they threaten or attempt to injure you, and the powers of a court of equity are entirely adequate to the conservation and enforcement of the rights of both parties. If the defendants fail to provide their ditch with proper head works, and you are thereby deprived, or threatened with the deprivation, of any of the water by you first appropriated, an injunction specifically framed to meet the case will compel the defendants to provide suitable works, and to exercise their rights in such manner as to leave yours unimpaired. As to the necessary lowering of your head of water by the diversion of the surplus, that will no doubt cause you some inconvenience and trouble, which you have heretofore escaped; but it is damnum absque injuria." There is but a limited supply of water in this state available for irrigation and other useful purposes, and a paramount public policy requires a careful economy of that supply. So long as there is but a single appropriator of water on a stream it matters not how imperfect or wasteful may be the means by which he diverts the quantity of water to which he is entitled. No one else is affected, and there is no ground for complaint. But when subsequent appropriators divert the entire surplus at points above him he is required to use all reasonable diligence to husband what is left, and if, by such diligence, and the use of ordinary means of diversion, he can obtain all that he is entitled to, he cannot complain on account of the trouble and expense which it may involve.

In the case of Barrows v. Fox, 98 Cal. 63, 32 Pac. 811, (recently decided,) we had occasion to consider this policy of the law of appropriation, and to apply its principle. There a riparian owner of lands below the point at which a portion of the stream had been diverted by a prior appropriator sought and obtained an injunction which in effect required the appropriator to substitute an iron pipe in place of his ditch and flume, in order that he might receive the quantity of water he could put to a beneficial use without diverting so large a quantity from the stream. We held that the decree was in this respect erroneous, because ditches and flumes are the usual and ordinary means of diverting water in this state; and parties who have made appropriations by such means cannot be compelled to substitute iron pipes, "though they may be compelled to keep their flumes and ditches in good repair, so as to prevent any unnecessary waste." Accordingly, we decided that the appropriator had a right to divert from the stream water enough to yield at the place of use the quantity required after the loss by absorption and evaporation of so much thereof as is necessarily so lost in a ditch and flume well constructed and kept in good condition. This is but the latest of a long series of decisions recognizing and enforcing the same policy, and the soundness of the doctrine upon which they rest is unquestioned. While the right of the prior appropriator is carefully protected, he is compelled to exercise it with due regard to the rights of others and the paramount interests of the public. The quantity of his lawful appropriation cannot be diminished, but he must return the surplus to the stream without unnecessary waste, and he must use reasonable diligence and reasonably efficient appliances in making his diversion, in order that the surplus may not be rendered unavailable to those who are entitled to it. Upon the same principle it must be held that a prior appropriator, whose means of diversion become insufficient for his purposes, by reason of their inherent defects, when the surplus is diverted above him, must take the usual and reasonable measures to perfect such means. And it is no injustice to this plaintiff to allow the diversion of the surplus waters of the south fork by a lawful appropriator, so long as a resort to the same means it is accustomed to employ in periods of scarcity will enable it to fill its canal.

Having thus, as I think, clearly shown that the doctrine upon which the decree of the superior court is expressly based, and upon which counsel seek to uphold it, involves the absurd conclusion that the surplus waters of the south fork cannot be diverted by a qualified appropriator at any point above the head of plaintiff's canal, I will next consider some of the more technical grounds upon which counsel base their further contention. They seem to claim that, irrespective of any question of actual injury to the plaintiff by a diversion of the surplus, and conceding that it will cause no greater or other inconvenience to take it from the dam than would be occasioned by taking it from the stream above the dam, the plaintiff has, nevertheless, such an exclusive property in the bed and banks of what they call its pond or reservoir, that to take it from the dam would be an invasion of its strict legal rights,—a trespass upon its property. Indeed, the argument of counsel is that they have the same right to the pond that they have to their canal, and, if the defendants can put the head of their ditch in the former, they can with equal right put it into the latter. But clearly this is not so, for, in the absence of any proof of title derived from a paramount source, there is an obvious and radical difference between the canal and the river. The plaintiff made the canal, its bed and banks; it did not make the channel of the river. It has been permitted, for its convenience, to obstruct the flow of the river; to raise its level, and, necessarily, to retard its current, and to widen and deepen it above the dam; but this change in its condition leaves it still a part of the river, and it is difficult to see how those who had a right of access to it before plaintiff's dam was erected have lost such right merely because, by the liberality of the government, the plaintiff has been permitted to raise its level and set back its current.

There is no finding as to the ownership of the soil covered by the dam or either of the ditches. Nor is there any evidence, so far as I can discover, touching the point. In the absence of proof to the contrary, it must be assumed that these lands are public lands of the United States, as they unquestionably were at, and long after, the time when plaintiff constructed its dam and canal and made its appropriation. The rights of plaintiffs are therefore such as have been conferred by the grant or license of the United States. The extent of this grant or license is clearly defined by the act of congress of July 26, 1866. It confirms such rights to the use of water as have been recognized and acknowledged by local laws and customs and the decisions of courts, and grants a right of way for ditches and canals. 14 Stat. 253. It does not grant any land whatever, but merely the right to divert and use the water, and a right of way,—an easement. There is nothing in the letter of the statute or the terms of the grant which authorizes the erection of a dam across a natural stream, but, assuming that the grant of the water right carries with it the right to employ this reasonable and usual means of forcing the water into the canal, it cannot be held to carry anything not necessary to the enjoyment of the right granted, nor to deprive the government of such control of the stream as is essential to the protection of other equally deserving objects of its bounty. To say that the first appropriator gains an exclusive right of access to the river as far above his dam as it sets the water back is to say that he takes as an incident to what is expressly granted something that is in no way essential to the enjoyment of his rights, but is in the highest degree prejudicial to the government by whose liberality he profits, and to all other citizens who may desire to participate in its bounty upon fair and equal terms. Suppose that the land covered by this dam has been granted, or shall hereafter be granted, by the United States to homestead or pre-emption claimants, will any one contend that such grantees have taken or will take it subject to any right of plaintiff, except the mere easement to flow it? It does not seem possible that there can be more than one answer to this question. As against the United States, and those who connect themselves with the United States, the plaintiff does not own a foot of land covered by its so-called pond, or bordering upon it. If the land still belongs to the United States, the defendants are granted, by the same statute under which plaintiff claims, a right of way across it to the river for the purpose of making a lawful appropriation of any water not covered by a prior right, and the plaintiff, by raising the level of the river, has not sequestered one foot of its natural channel, except so much as is covered by the material structure of its dam, or is essential to its support. To call this inclosure formed by the dam and the sides of the canon a reservoir is an abuse of terms. A reservoir may be formed by damming a natural water course where the object is the storage of a large body of water; but the object of this dam is not the storage of water, and there can be no pretense that the plaintiff has any right of property in the body of water it holds back. The whole object of this dam is to raise the level of the stream as a means of diverting a part of it into the canal, leaving the surplus to flow over the dam and down the canon. According to the testimony, the slack water extends more than 3,000 feet above the dam, and the so-called pond or reservoir has therefore a length more than 10 times its greatest width at the dam, and more than 20 times its mean width. Through it there is at all times flowing all the water of the river, out of which the plaintiff has a right to divert a limited quantity, leaving the surplus to flow on. It is therefore vastly more like what nature made it, a part of the river channel, than what counsel call it, a pond. There is no analogy between the point involved in this controversy and the point decided in Rupley v. Welch, 23 Cal. 453. There the plaintiff had constructed a reservoir for impounding the waters flowing down a ravine, which he used for irrigating a garden and orchard. The defendants were not claiming the right to take the surplus, but, as miners, claimed the right to divert "the water"—that is, all the water—from plaintiff's reservoir to their sluices, and had accordingly done so. The report of the case is very meager, but its meaning is perfectly plain to any one who knows how the operation of sluice washing was conducted at that date. The defendants were digging and sluicing above the reservoir, and, of course, could not draw water for that purpose from the reservoir. What they did was to turn the water into their sluice above the reservoir, and discharge it below, thereby diverting it from the reservoir. The question as to their right to tap the slack water in order to appropriate the surplus could not possibly have arisen, and clearly was not decided. The point, and the only point, contended for by the defendants was that a prior appropriation of water for irrigation was of no avail against a subsequent appropriation for mining. The court merely decided that the appropriation for irrigation was as good against miners as against others, and that the defendants could not prevent the water so appropriated from flowing into the reservoir prepared for impounding it. This is a doctrine which, at the present day, no one disputes; but in early mining times the paramount right of the miner was strenuously insisted upon by the miners, and in the mining sections often exercised with a high hand, as it was by the defendants in Rupley v. Welch.

To recapitulate, and to conclude upon this branch of the case: The plaintiff has shown no right to the land above its dam, or to the bed and banks of the stream, except such as it can base upon the act of congress of July 26, 1866, above cited. By that act it has been expressly granted a right to use the water it has appropriated, and a right of way for its ditch. It can take nothing as incidental to what has been expressly granted, except what is reasonably necessary to its enjoyment. Conceding that this includes the site of its dam, and the right to maintain it, and to flow the lands above it, it does not include an exclusive right to the water course above the dam and below the head of slack water, because such right is not only unnecessary to the enjoyment of that which is expressly granted, but it infringes the equal rights of others. If the land above the dam is public land, the same act of congress grants to defendants a right of way over it to the stream, and to all parts of the stream, for the purpose of diverting the surplus. If the land belongs to the defendants, or if they have the grant or license of the private owner, their right of access to the stream is equally undoubted. They are bound only in appropriating the surplus, whether within or above the slack water, to provide proper head works for their ditch to regulate the influx of the water, so that the plaintiff may, at all times, have the quantity by it first appropriated.

These conclusions necessarily involve a reversal of the judgment, but in remanding the cause it is proper to notice other errors assigned. The defendants, for some reason not clearly apparent, set up in their answer the contract of March, 1854, granting to the owners of the Boyd's Bar ditch a right to put a box in plaintiff's dam, etc. They did not allege any infraction or threatened infraction of their rights under that contract, and asked for no affirmative relief. It is not easy to see what bearing the facts connected with that contract have upon the case made by the complaint, or the question which it presents. But at the trial evidence was taken as to those matters, and the court made findings,—not very full or explicit,—upon which are based certain provisions of the decree regulating the exercise by the parties of their contract rights. The effect of the decree is to limit the defendants to a box two feet square and eight feet long, set upon a level grade with the top of the box on a level with the surface of the pond, reserving to plaintiff the right to close this box at all times when there is not a full supply of water for plaintiff's present ditch. Neither the findings nor the evidence supports this part of the decree. It clearly appears from the evidence, and partially from the findings, that the present capacity of the ditch is materially greater than it was at the date of the contract. It is found that the canal was enlarged, and its capacity increased, "in places," in 1862; but it is said the evidence does not enable the court to determine how much. As to the expression "in places," we know what is meant when a ditch owner enlarges his ditch and increases its capacity in places. He does not enlarge it in the large places, but in the small places, and by so doing increases its capacity throughout. The evidence in the record shows without contradiction that plaintiff's ditch was widened to six feet on the bottom wherever it was of less width, as it was in many places. The only conflict is as to whether it was, prior to the enlargement, four feet or five feet wide on the bottom. But, whichever it was, the enlargement was material, and a finding as to its extent was absolutely essential to a decree settling the right of the parties under the contract. On the hypothesis most favorable to the plaintiff the capacity of its ditch prior to 1862 is indicated by a section 5 feet wide at bottom, 7 feet wide at top, and 3½ feet deep, equal to 21 square feet. Its present capacity is measured by a section 6 feet wide at bottom, 8 feet wide at top, and 3½ feet deep, equal to 24½ feet. Its capacity in miners' inches is not found, and the testimony does not show with any degree of certainty what it is; but, assuming that it is 2,450 inches, each square foot of the section would represent 100 inches, and the 3½ added in 1862 would represent 350 inches. The right to this quantity of water perpetually, or to a half or a quarter of it, is too important to be decreed away without a finding, and without evidence to support a finding. But the superior court seems to have thought it unnecessary to consider the evidence on this point, because, in its opinion, the acquiescence of the defendants and their predecessors for nearly 30 years in the enlargement of plaintiff's ditch raised an estoppel against them. But the defendants were not complaining of the enlargement of the canal, or of its increased capacity. They never had a right, either under their contract or independent of it, to complain of such enlargement. They could only object to the closing of their ditch or the box that supplied it when there was more than sufficient water to supply the canal according to its capacity at the date of the contract, but not sufficient to supply it as enlarged. And the evidence shows that their box never was closed by plaintiff after the enlargement of its canal. Nor is it found that the plaintiff ever did any other act adverse to the rights of defendants under the contract in such manner or for such time as to gain a prescriptive right. The decree is also unsupported by any finding as to the dimensions and setting of the box through which the defendants are entitled to draw water from the dam under the contract. The contract does not specify a box eight feet long, or of any length, nor at what level it shall be set. The evidence of all the witnesses, except one, who does not pretend to have measured the box actually used by defendants, or to have had any occasion to observe it with attention, is that it was only three or four feet long; and this is material, for if a box is set level the longer it is the less water it will deliver. It is also an objection to the decree that the level at which the box is to be set is not definitely fixed. The level of the water behind the dam is not a practicable gauge, for the evidence shows that this varies greatly according to the stage of the river. If upon a retrial of the cause the rights of the parties under the contract are again submitted for decision and regulation, the court should find the extent to which the plaintiff's canal was enlarged in 1862, and precisely and definitely the dimensions and setting of the box which the defendants and their predecessors put in and used in pursuance of plaintiff's grant. The judgment and order of the superior court are reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: HARRISON, J.; FITZGERALD, J.

McFARLAND, J. I dissent in toto, and adhere to the former opinion in department. 31 Pac. 112.

PATERSON, J., (concurring.) As I understand this case and the principles involved, the plaintiff is entitled to water sufficient to fill its ditch to its capacity at the time of the contract with the Boyd's Bar Company in 1854, or to such increased capacity as it has acquired the right to fill, by prescription or otherwise, since that time; and when there is not sufficient water for this purpose may shut down the defendant's gate until there is a sufficient supply. The defendants are entitled at the proper point to draw from the surplus water; that is, water which would flow over the dam after the plaintiff's ditch is filled. In determining how, when, and where this surplus may be taken, all the circumstances of the case must be considered. The plaintiff is bound to use reasonable care in diverting sufficient water to fill its ditch, so as not to occasion unnecessary waste of the surplus water. To do this it must raise its dam to a height sufficient to fill its ditch whenever the stage of the water renders it necessary to do so. That is to say, plaintiff is not entitled to a flow of eight or any other number of inches of water above and over the crest of the dam, simply to fill its ditch, because it has always heretofore enjoyed the same, but, when desiring to obtain a flow of water through its ditch to its full capacity at low stages of the water, it must raise the crest of its dam to a level with the top of its ditch, if necessary to fill it, and prevent surplus water, which the defendant desires to use, from flowing over the dam. Whether the defendants are entitled to tap the stream or pond at any particular point is a question for the court to determine upon all the circumstances. The plaintiff has the right to build and maintain its dam, and to flow back the waters to any extent upon the public domain necessary to fill its ditch in a reasonable manner; and defendants have no right to interfere with plaintiff's works or possessions so as to injure or endanger its dam or other structure, or to render its diversion of water sufficient to fill its ditch more difficult or expensive than it was before, and while operating in a reasonable and careful manner. But when the purpose of plaintiff's dam has been accomplished it cannot prevent others from enjoying the use of the waters running to waste, unless they are proposing to take the same at a point or in a manner that will interfere with the free use and enjoyment of its water right or other property. Whatever structures it has found necessary to build are its property, and, whether they be dam or side walls, probably no one would be permitted to cut through or under them under any circumstances. But that is not a question in this case. Here the side walls are natural banks of rock, and the area above the dam which the plaintiff is entitled to flow and exclusively occupy is, as stated before, a question for the court to determine upon all the circumstances of the case.

It does not clearly appear whether the question of reasonableness of the plaintiff's claim of exclusive control of all the slack water entered into the judgment of the court below, but the latter seems to have placed its decision squarely upon the proposition that the defendants are not entitled to tap the pond of water for the purpose of drawing water into its ditch at any point along the line of slack water. There are other reasons, we think, why the case ought to go back for further consideration. The court found (finding 4) that a temporary crest or "flashboard" eight inches in height is sufficient at low stages of the water to fill plaintiff's canal to its full capacity, and yet in finding 5 held that, "in order to draw the surplus from the plaintiff's dam, without taking the water from plaintiff's canal, it would be necessary to raise plaintiff's dam from 22 to 24 inches higher, and also to raise the banks of plaintiff's canal." There is here an apparent inconsistency. If the finding quoted be correct, the plaintiff would be entitled to an injunction, because, as stated before, the defendants have no right to impose any additional burden upon the plaintiff, except such as is necessary to preserve the surplus water from waste, or subject its dam or ditch to any additional danger.

The evidence shows that the plaintiff's ditch was enlarged at different points since the date of the Boyd's Bar ditch contract, but the court does not find whether these enlargements increased the capacity of the ditch. It simply finds that "at the point where this widening of the canal occurred the capacity was increased, but to what extent the evidence does not enable the court to determine." The rights given to the defendants by the contract referred to ought not to be affected by any subsequent alteration of the plaintiff's ditch, and, unless the plaintiff has acquired the right to use the ditch in an increased capacity through the acquiescence of the defendants, the judgment is erroneous in that regard. In its conclusion of law the court found that "by reason of the long acquiescence of the defendants, for a period of about 25 years, without objection, in such increased capacity of plaintiff's canal as may have resulted from the widening of portions of the canal in 1862 and 1864, the defendants are now estopped from making any complaint of said widening of said canal, and are not entitled to any relief with respect thereto." It is earnestly claimed by appellants that there is "not a scintilla of evidence to sustain the finding or conclusion of law that defendants lost or plaintiff acquired any right by acquiescence or by estoppel of any kind." This contention is based upon the proposition that the defendants' gate has never been shut down since the plaintiff's ditch was widened; that there has always been sufficient water for both ditches as they now exist; that plaintiff had a right to enlarge its ditch to any size it chose, as long as it did not interfere with the defendants' ditch; that, as no right was interfered with, there was no ground for objection, and no suit could have been maintained until defendants' rights were interfered with. The legal propositions involved in this contention are sound, but whether they are supported by the record, as claimed, we deem it unnecessary to determine, as the case must go back for another trial.

GAROUTTE, J. I concur in the reversal of the judgment, and also in the views of Mr. Justice PATERSON upon the principal question discussed.

DE HAVEN, J., (dissenting.) I dissent from the judgment. Upon the main question therein discussed I concur in the opinion written by Mr. Justice McFARLAND in deciding this case in department, but, after a more careful examination of the judgment appealed from, I think it erroneous in so far as it reserves to the plaintiff the right to close the box through which the defendants are to divert the water to which they are entitled under the Boyd's Bar ditch contract whenever there is not sufficient water to supply the capacity of plaintiff's ditch as at present constructed. It is not clear to me from the evidence that the capacity of this ditch has not been materially increased since the date of the Boyd's Bar ditch contract, but the court below has failed to make any finding whatever in relation to the fact. The cause should be remanded, with directions to the court below to find whether the capacity of plaintiff's ditch has or has not been increased, and thereupon to modify its judgment so as to permit the defendants to exercise all the rights enjoyed by their predecessors under the contract above referred to, —the full rights given by that contract,—unaffected by any subsequent alteration of plaintiff's ditch.

(100 Cal. 593)

In re LUX'S ESTATE. (No. 15,346.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 30, 1893.)

EXECUTORS—FAMILY ALLOWANCE PENDING ADMINISTRATION.

1. When an inventory, completed, signed, and delivered by the appraisers to the executors, is presented by the latter's attorney to the judge in chambers to procure an order for payment of the appraisers, and the order as made recites that the appraisers have completed their work, the inventory is "returned," within Code Civil Proc. § 1464, entitling the widow to reasonable provision for her support till such return, though the executors do not attach their affidavits of the completeness of the inventory, as required by section 1449, and the inventory is not actually filed with the clerk till long afterwards.

2. Code Civil Proc. § 1466, requiring the court, after return of inventory, to make a reasonable allowance for support of the family, to continue during administration if the property set apart to them be insufficient, applies to a widow to whom sufficient property has not been set apart, though she have enough of her own. Sawyer v. Sawyer, 28 Vt. 245, followed.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Mateo county; George H. Buck, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Charles Lux, deceased. Appeal of Miranda W. Lux, the widow, from an order relating to her allowance for support pending administration. Reversed.

Garber, Boalt & Bishop, for appellant. D. M. Delmas and J. H. Campbell, for respondents.

DE HAVEN, J. This is an appeal by Miranda W. Lux, widow of Charles Lux, deceased, from an order of the superior court, made May 17, 1892, allowing her the sum of $1,000 per month as an allowance for her support, from August 30, 1888, to November 16, 1891. Charles Lux died testate in March, 1887, leaving an estate of the value of $4,000,000 or more, of which 90 per cent. was the partnership interest of the deceased in the firm of Miller & Lux. The indebtedness of the estate appears to be about $4,000. Under the partnership agreement, as well also as by the terms of the will, the surviving partner was given seven years after the death of the other within which to settle the business of Miller & Lux. The order appealed from is the second order for family allowance. The first was made May 4, 1887, prior to the return of the inventory of the estate, and allowed the widow $2,500 per month from the date of the decedent's death "until said inventory is returned, or until the further order of this court;" and it appears that this allowance was actually received by her up to the 16th of November, 1891, the date when, under the terms of the order now under review, the family allowance ceased. The order setting apart to the widow the exempt property to which she was entitled by section 1465 of the Code of Civil Procedure was not made until March, 1892. The court below found that the inventory of the estate was returned on August 30, 1888, but it also appears that the same was not filed until May 16, 1890. It is claimed by the appellant that the first order in relation to the family allowance remained in force according to its terms until the date of the order appealed from, and that, if it did not, but is to be construed as terminating upon the return of the inventory, the date when the inventory was filed, or when the executors attached thereto their affidavits, as required by section 1449 of the Code of Civil Procedure, is the time of its return, and the finding of the court that it was returned prior thereto, upon August 30, 1888, is against the evidence; and that under either construction the order appealed from is erroneous—First, because it is retroactive, and attempts to deprive her of a portion of the allowance to which she was entitled under the first order, and which had actually been paid to her in obedience to its directions before the last order was made; and, second, because it does not provide for a family allowance during the entire period of the settlement of the estate; and, lastly, that the allowance of $1,000 a month is not sufficiently large, and is not a reasonable one, in view of the value and condition of the estate.

1. The order of May 4, 1887, as already stated, made a family allowance to the widow of $2,500 per month "from the date of the death of the deceased until said inventory is returned, or until the further order of this court." The words, "or until the further order of this court," were not intended to continue the allowance beyond the date of the return of the inventory, and until some further order of the court in the matter, as argued by appellant; but the true construction of the order is that the allowance thereby given shall terminate upon the return of the inventory, or before that time if the court shall so order. The order simply refers to two events, upon the happening of either one of which the allowance is to cease. This is not only the natural construction of its language, but makes the order itself in harmony with section 1464 of the Code of Civil Procedure. That section is as follows: "1464. When a person dies, leaving a widow or minor children, the widow or children, until letters are granted and the inventory is returned, are entitled to remain in possession of the homestead * * * and are also entitled to a reasonable provision for their support, to be allowed by the superior court or a judge thereof." The order referred to in this section may be made at once upon the filing of the petition for letters, and when the court is without the definite information concerning the value of the estate which is afforded by the inventory and appraisement; and that the allowance here provided for is intended to be in the nature of a preliminary or temporary allowance, not extending beyond the return of the inventory, becomes clear when this section is read in connection with section 1466, following, which imposes upon the court the duty to make a further allowance after the return of the inventory, if the property set apart to the family is insufficient for their support, and which allowance is to be of a more permanent character, and to continue during the administration of the estate, unless the estate is insolvent, in which case it is not to continue longer than one year.

2. The order appealed from was made May 13, 1892. It is entirely retroactive in its effect, and gives to the widow $1,000 per month, commencing August 30, 1888, the date of the return of the inventory as found by the court, and ending November 15, 1891. The appellant claims that this order covers a portion of the time when the order of May 4, 1887, was in force, and is erroneous, because it reduces the family allowance during such period, and attempts to deprive her of a part of the allowance to which she was entitled by that order. The decision of the question thus presented depends entirely upon the fact as to when the inventory was returned. If the finding of the court below as to the date of its return is sustained by the evidence, then the order under review is not open to the objection that it interferes with any rights which vested in appellant by virtue of the prior order of May 4, 1887. It appears from the record that the inventory and appraisement was actually completed by the appraisers, and signed and delivered by them to the executors of the estate on August 20, 1888; and it was presented by the attorney for the executors to the judge of the superior court at his residence, on August 30, 1888, for the purpose of procuring an order fixing the compensation of the appraisers, and on that day an order was made, fixing such compensation, and directing its payment, the order reciting that it appeared to the court that the appraisers had completed the work of appraising the estate. At the time the inventory was so presented to the judge the executors had not attached thereto their affidavits, as required by section 1449 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and did not fully comply with the law in this respect until February, 1890; and the inventory was not actually filed with the clerk until May 16, 1890. On the day when the inventory was presented to the judge for the purpose of procuring the order fixing the compensation of the appraisers, it was verbally agreed between the attorney for the executors and the attorney for certain devisees named in the will that the inventory need not be in fact filed, and that it might be retained in the custody of the attorney for the executors, but should be treated for all purposes as filed on that day. The will of the deceased provides that no inventory of the estate shall be filed, and the attorneys doubtless proceeded upon the assumption that they could properly so far comply with this direction as not to place the inventory on file for public inspection. We have alluded to this verbal stipulation, not because we think it affects the question we are now discussing, but simply as a matter established by the evidence. Assuming the foregoing facts to be true, when was the inventory returned? The filing of an inventory with the clerk of the proper court would certainly constitute its return, but, while this is so, we do not think such filing an indispensable step which must be taken in order to effect the return of such a paper. An inventory is returned within the meaning of the law when it has been completed by the appraisers, and presented to the court or judge for information, and as a basis for some judicial action to be taken in the proceeding for the settlement of the estate to which it relates; and if the inventory was completed so as to have a legal existence when it was presented to the judge of the superior court on August 30, 1888, such presentation was sufficient to constitute its return. The fact that it was so presented to the judge at his residence, and the order fixing the compensation of the appraisers was there signed, is not material. The order was one which the judge had a right to make at chambers, and he could properly receive and act upon the inventory there. Code Civil Proc. § 166. A judge's chambers are not confined to some particular room in the courthouse or other place for the usual transaction of judicial business not required to be done in open court. Von Schmidt v. Widber, (Cal.) 34 Pac. 109. "Chamber business may be done, and often is done, on the street, in the judge's own house, at the hotel where he stops when absent from home; or it may be done in transitu on the cars in going from one place to another within the proper jurisdiction of the court." In re Neagle, 14 Sawy. 265, 39 Fed. 833. But it is further contended by appellant upon this point that the inventory was not completed when presented to the judge of the superior court on August 30, 1888, nor until the executors attached thereto their affidavits, as required by law. Section 1449 of the Code of Civil Procedure does make it the duty of the executor or administrator to indorse upon or annex to the inventory, after it is completed by the appraisers, an affidavit to the general effect that the inventory contains a true statement of all the property of the decedent of which he has any knowledge, and of all claims which the decedent had against him; but, in our opinion, this affidavit is not necessary to give a legal existence to the inventory itself. An inventory may be said to be completed when the work of the appraisers has been concluded, and the instrument showing the result of their labors has been signed and delivered by them. The purpose of the statute in requiring the affidavit mentioned in section 1449 of the Code of Civil Procedure is to furnish an additional assurance that the inventory contains a full statement of all the property of the estate known to the executor or administrator, and also to obtain his solemn admission that he is properly chargeable in his accounts with all that is shown by the inventory; and the court may, upon its own motion, or upon the application of any person interested in the estate, compel the executor or administrator to comply with this section; but the failure of the executor or administrator to discharge this duty would not render the inventory, properly signed and delivered by the appraisers, of no effect as an inventory. Our conclusion is that the finding of the court that the inventory was returned on August 30, 1888, is sustained by the evidence, and that the order appealed from is, therefore, not in conflict with the previous order of May 4, 1887, and does not deprive the appellant of any rights vested in her by that order.

3. The order appealed from in effect was a denial of the petition of the widow for an allowance for her support during the progress of the settlement of the estate. The order was retroactive, and the allowance therein given ceased on November 15, 1891, more than six months prior to its date. Did the court err in refusing to continue the allowance after that date, and until the distribution of the estate in whole or in part? Section 1466 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that, if the property set apart for the use of the widow and minor children "be insufficient for the support of the widow and children, or either, the court * * * must make such reasonable allowance out of the estate as shall be necessary for the maintenance of the family according to their circumstances during the progress of the settlement of the estate, which in case of an insolvent estate must not be longer than one year after granting letters testamentary, or of administration." The court below found that the property set apart to the widow is insufficient for her support, and also made additional findings to the effect that the deceased in his will bequeathed to her a legacy of $500 per month during her life, and a life estate in certain property from the rents and sale of her interest in which she had received $137,000, and that the deceased also provided in his will, as well as by agreement with his partner, Miller, that said Miller should pay to her monthly such sum as might be needed for her support. It is claimed by respondents that these findings show that the widow has sufficient property of her own to support herself, and that, under such circumstances, she was not entitled to any allowance whatever from the estate, and therefore she cannot be heard to complain because the order appealed from does not continue the allowance during the administration of the estate; and in support of this proposition it is argued that the object of the statute is "to meet the actual wants and necessities of the widow and her family," and that when, as in this case, the widow is childless and has abundant private means of her own, there are no wants or necessities to relieve, and the law does not contemplate that any allowance shall be made for her support. But, however the rule may be in other states, (and there are decisions which seem to support this contention of respondents,) we do not think section 1466 of the Code of Civil Procedure can be so construed. Its language is express and mandatory, and in the language of the counsel for the appellant "the duty of maintaining the family, which the law imposed upon the deceased husband or father in his lifetime, is continued against his estate pending its administration," if the estate is solvent. It declares that the court must make a reasonable allowance out of the estate if the property set apart to the family is insufficient for their support; and for the court to hold that no allowance shall be made to the widow if she has sufficient property of her own, although the property set apart to her is insufficient of itself for her support, would be, in effect, an amendment of the law by judicial construction. There was nothing actually decided in Estate of Walkerley, 77 Cal. 643, 20 Pac. 150, in conflict with this conclusion, although it may be conceded that there are expressions in the opinion which, considered apart from the facts before the court, lend some support to the argument of respondents on this point. Of course we are not to be understood as holding that the value of the property set apart for the use of the family, under section 1465 of the Code of Civil Procedure, or the income of such property, is not to be considered in determining what is a reasonable allowance to be made from the remaining portion of the estate for the support of the family during the progress of the settlement of the estate; nor that such order for family support, when made, may not be subsequently modified by the court if the condition of the estate or the relation of the family thereto should change; as if, for instance, it should appear that the value of the estate was materially less than shown at the date of the order sought to be modified, or that its indebtedness is greater than was then supposed, or in the event of a partial distribution to the widow or children before the final distribution of the estate.

The law of Vermont in regard to the family allowance is substantially the same as that of this state, and in Sawyer v. Sawyer, 28 Vt. 245, the supreme court of that state held that the widow's financial ability to support herself without aid from the estate was immaterial in considering the question of her right to a family allowance. In that case it was urged that the widow was not entitled to such allowance, because she was in receipt of a pension, and was living with her father, who was wealthy, and who made no charge against her for her support. In answer to this argument the court in that case, in an opinion delivered by Redfield, C. J., said: "The exceptions claimed in the present case are, first, on the ground of the pension which the widow obtained as such upon the decease of her husband. This is no different in principle from her being possessed of ability to maintain herself in any other mode so as not to require assistance from the estate, and, indeed, the general ability of the appellee, or the widow in this case, from her living with her father, and the wealth of the family, and the very great improbability of his making any personal claim against his daughter for her board, was also alluded to in the argument, and is stated in the case, and seems to us to come fairly under consideration in the same connection; but we are not prepared to say that any such exception can fairly be ingrafted upon the statute. If it had been the purpose of the legislature to allow maintenance only in case of such widow and children as were without the means of subsistence in any other mode, it is difficult to conjecture how it occurred that the provision should have been expressed in the general and unlimited manner it here is. It is incomprehensible that, if the provision were intended only for the indigent and necessitous, it should have been made general." This decision of a learned court upon a statute similar to section 1466 of the Code of Civil Procedure is entitled to great weight, and we adopt it as expressing our own views of the proper construction to be given that section.

4. In view of the conclusion reached upon the preceding point, it is unnecessary for us to express any opinion upon the question of the reasonableness of the amount allowed by the court for the period covered by its order. The amount of the allowance is a question which rests very largely in the discretion of the superior court, and its action in the matter will not be disturbed on appeal unless it clearly appears that the discretion has been improperly exercised. Of course, as was said in Re Stevens, 83 Cal. 325, 23 Pac. 379: "The court is not restricted, in making this allowance, to a bare support of the widow. Regard should be had * * * to the mode in which she lived during the lifetime of her husband." The allowance is to be sufficient to provide all the necessaries of life, and this will include all those things which are reasonable and proper for use in the home and in social intercourse, in view of the condition and value of the estate, and the station and surroundings of the family. The order appealed from will be reversed.

and the superior court will, upon the evidence already before it, and such further evidence as the parties may desire to present, make an order for an allowance to the widow, to continue during the progress of the settlement of the estate, and in such amount as it shall deem reasonable, and without regard to the fact that she may have separate property sufficient for her support. Order reversed.

We concur: FITZGERALD, J.; McFARLAND, J.

(100 Cal. 606)

In re LUX'S ESTATE. (No. 15,345.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 30, 1893.)

EXECUTORS—ACCOUNTING—FAMILY ALLOWANCE PENDING ADMINISTRATION.

When the court grants an order for family allowance for a past period pending administration, payable in 20 days, the executors, having without an order paid the widow more than the sum allowed, are entitled to a present credit for the sum allowed.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Mateo county; George H. Buck, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Charles Lux, deceased. Appeal by the executors from an order denying them credit for a certain item in their account. Reversed.

Garber, Boalt & Bishop, for appellants. D. M. Delmas and J. H. Campbell, for respondent.

DE HAVEN, J. This is an appeal by the executors of the estate of Charles Lux, deceased, from an order settling the first and second accounts filed by them in the course of the administration of the estate. Many of the questions arising upon this appeal were involved in Re Lux's Estate, 35 Pac. 341, (No. 15,346, recently decided by this court,) and were passed upon in the opinion in that case. It was there held that the family allowance fixed by the order of May 4, 1887, terminated upon the return of the inventory of the estate, and that the finding of the superior court that such inventory was returned on August 30, 1888, was sustained by the evidence. As these questions were there presented upon substantially the same record as the one before us, the decision in that case is decisive of the same matters presented on this appeal.

The only question requiring discussion at this time relates to the refusal of the court to allow the executors any credit whatever for the sum of $97,500, paid by them to the widow as a family allowance between August 30, 1888, and November 16, 1891. At the time this money was paid there was no order of the court authorizing the executors to make such payments; but afterwards, on March 25, 1892, and before the date of the order settling the accounts, the court made an order for a family allowance to the widow, in which the court "ordered and decreed that an allowance of one thousand dollars per month from the 30th day of August, 1888, until the 15th day of November, 1891, making altogether the aggregate sum of $39,000, be paid within twenty days by the executors of Charles Lux, deceased, to said Miranda W. Lux." This order was a determination by the court that the widow was entitled to a family allowance of $1,000 per month for the period therein named, and the executors, having paid the same, were entitled to a credit in the statement of their accounts for the amount thus fixed by the court as a reasonable and proper sum to be paid to the surviving widow for that purpose. The fact that the order made such allowance payable within 20 days after its date does not affect the right of the executors to a present credit, as it was shown that an amount far in excess of that allowed by the order had already been paid by them to the widow as a family allowance for the period of time covered by the order; and the fact that such payments were made without a previous order of the court does not deprive the executors of the right to a credit therefor, to the extent that the court found such advances were reasonable and proper. In the matter of paying a family allowance, "the administrator is not required to wait for an order of court, but may make the necessary expenditures as the exigencies occur, and the court will allow such sums as may be reasonable in the settlement." 1 Woerner, Adm'n, § 92; Sawyer v. Sawyer, 28 Vt. 248; Simmons v. Byrd, 49 Ga. 288. It follows that the court erred in refusing to credit the executors with that portion of the advances made by them to the widow on account of the family allowance, which the court found to be reasonable and proper for that purpose. Order reversed.

We concur: FITZGERALD, J.; McFARLAND, J.

(100 Cal. 609)

In re LUX'S ESTATE. (No. 15,146.)[1]

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 30, 1893.)

EXECUTORS—ACCOUNTING—LIABILITY FOR INTEREST.

1. Code Civil Proc. § 951, requiring one appealing from an order to furnish copies of the order and of the papers used on the hearing, and Sup. Ct. Rule 32, requiring such papers or evidence to be authenticated by bill of exceptions, when no other mode is provided, do not demand a bill on appeal from an order settling an executor's account, where the clerk's certified transcript contains the accounts, reports, and exceptions, (these being pleadings which the clerk must attach to the judgment, under Code Civil Proc. § 670, to form the judgment roll,) as well as the judgment and findings, (which last are properly a part of the judgment,) the errors being thus assigned on the face of the record.

2. Under Code Civil Proc. § 1585, giving the surviving partner possession of the firm assets till the business is settled, while paying the executor from time to time any balance to which deceased would have been entitled, it is not error to settle an annual account of executors without an accounting between them and the surviving partner, though such partner himself be one of the executors.

---

[1] Rehearing denied, 35 Pac. 639.

3. Where executors, one of whom is the widow, have in good faith, but without an order of court, paid said widow a family allowance in excess of what the court afterwards allows, they are liable for interest on the excess at the legal rate, compounded annually.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Mateo county; George H. Buck, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Charles Lux, deceased. Appeal of certain devisees from an order settling an annual account of the executors. Reversed.

Garber, Boalt & Bishop, for appellants. D. M. Delmas and J. H. Cambell, for respondent.

DE HAVEN, J. The superior court made an order settling certain accounts rendered by the executors of the estate of Charles Lux, deceased, to which accounts exceptions had theretofore been filed by certain devisees named in the will of the deceased. This appeal is taken by said devisees, and is from so much of the order as fails to charge the executors interest upon money which the court found was improperly paid by them to the widow as a family allowance, and in so far as it fails to require a full accounting of the partnership affairs of the firm of Miller & Lux, of which firm the deceased was a member at the time of his death. The transcript on appeal as amended contains the accounts of the executors, and reports accompanying them, the objections or exceptions to the accounts, the findings of the court thereon, and the judgment or order settling the accounts. There is no bill of exceptions in the record, but the papers just referred to are certified by the clerk of the court from which the appeal is taken to be copies of the originals on file in the matter of the estate of Charles Lux, deceased. The respondents have made a preliminary motion to dismiss the appeal upon the ground that the papers contained in the transcript are not authenticated by a bill of exceptions as required by rule 32 of this court. Section 951 of the Code of Civil Procedure makes it the duty of a person appealing from an order to furnish this court with a copy of the order appealed from, and copies "of papers used on the hearing in the court below," and rule 32 of this court provides that such papers or evidence must be authenticated by a bill of exceptions, when no other mode of authentication is provided by law. This rule was only intended to apply to those appeals in which the order is sought to be reversed, because of matters alleged to be shown by affidavits or evidence used or taken upon the hearing in the court below. Such was the case of White v. White, 88 Cal. 429, 26 Pac. 236, cited by respondents. But a fair interpretation of its language, as well as a consideration of its object, will show that this rule of the court can have no application when the order appealed from is attacked for matters appearing upon its face, or upon the face of the record of which it forms a part. The settlement of the accounts of an executor or administrator, though sometimes spoken of as an order, is in effect a judgment; and it was held in Estate of Page, 57 Cal. 238, that in a proceeding for the settlement of such an account "the petition and account, and the written objections filed to it, are the pleadings which the clerk of the court is required to attach to a copy of the judgment, (section 670, Code Civil Proc.,) and these constitute the judgment roll;" and to the same effect is the earlier and well-considered case of Estate of Isaacs, 30 Cal. 106; and while, in such a proceeding, it is not incumbent upon the court to make and file express findings, still, when the account is assailed in any particular for matters not appearing upon its face, the court may properly make express findings upon such issues, as was done in Estate of Moore, 96 Cal. 522, 31 Pac. 584, and when it does so such findings become as much a part of the judgment roll as the judgment or order itself, or the account and exceptions thereto, which constitute the pleadings of the parties. If the findings in this case are to be regarded as a part of the judgment roll, as we think they must, then every objection urged by the appellants to the order appears upon the face of the judgment roll, and in such a case a bill of exceptions has no office to perform, its only purpose being to make that matter of record which would not otherwise appear as such. The record here being sufficient to present the questions raised by the appellants upon this appeal, the motion to dismiss the appeal must be denied.

2. The court did not err in settling the accounts of the executors in the absence of an accounting between them and the surviving partner of the firm of Miller & Lux. The acounts filed were not intended to serve as a final account. The purpose of an executor's account is to show what property of the estate has come into his hands, the disbursements made by him, and the balance, if any, remaining in his possession. Under section 1585 of the Code of Civil Procedure the surviving partner has the right to retain possession of the partnership assets until the business of the partnership is settled, paying to the executor from time to time any balance to which the deceased partner would have been entitled. The court may, upon application of the executor, compel the surviving partner to render an account of the partnership business, and the executor in a proper proceeding may doubtless, if good cause appear therefor, be required to demand an accounting from the surviving partner, and return the same into court; but the failure of the executor to apply for an order requiring the surviving partner to account is no reason why the court should refuse to settle an annual account of the executor, which, as we have seen, is only intended to show what property has been received by him, and what he has done with it; and the fact that in this case the surviving partner is also one of the executors of the estate of the deceased partner is not any reason for refusing to settle his accounts as an executor because of the absence of a statement showing the condition of the partnership affairs. Of course, when any portion of the assets of a partnership have come into the hands of an executor as such, he must charge himself therewith in his accounts.

3. The findings of the court show that Miranda W. Lux is the widow of the deceased, and also one of the executors of his will, and on May 14, 1887, the superior court made a family allowance to her of $2,500 per month, to continue until the return of the inventory or the future order of the court; and that the inventory was returned on August 30, 1888, but the executors continued thereafter, until November 16, 1891, to pay to the widow the sum fixed as a family allowance in the order of May 14, 1887, thus paying to her for that purpose the sum of $97,500, without any order of the court therefor. It is further found that on March 25, 1892, the court, upon petition of the widow, made an order directing the executors to pay to her as a family allowance "the sum of $1,000 per month during the period extending from the 30th day of August, 1888, to the 15th day of November, 1891." The court, in its order settling their accounts, refused to allow the executors credit for any part of the $97,500 so paid out by them during the period of time covered by the second order for a family allowance, and also refused to charge them interest thereon. The contention of the appellants here is that the court erred in holding that the executors ought not to be charged with interest upon this sum so advanced by them to the widow. We think the findings, when read in connection with the accounts filed, show that these payments were made to the widow, who was also one of the executors, to be used by her for her own personal benefit and advantage. Upon these facts the executors are chargeable with legal interest, computed with annual rests, upon so much of the sum so paid as appears to have been improperly advanced by them for the private use of one of their number. When an executor uses the funds of an estate in his own business, or for any purpose of his own, the rule in this state is to charge him with legal interest, compounded with annual rests. Estate of Clark, 53 Cal. 355; Estate of Stott, 52 Cal. 403; In re Hilliard, 83 Cal. 427, 23 Pac. 393. It is true that in this case there was no actual bad faith or intentional wrongdoing upon the part of the executors, and they doubtless supposed that such expenditure or use of the funds of the estate would be approved by the court. The payments, however, not being authorized by a present order of the court, were made at their peril, and to the extent that they were not approved by the subsequent order of the court constituted a wrongful use of the money of the estate for the personal advantage of one of the executors, all of the executors consenting to such use. The rule which makes an executor or other trustee chargeable with compound interest upon trust funds used by him in his own business, is not adopted for the purpose of punishing him for any intentional wrongdoing in the use of such fund, but rather to carry into effect the principle enforced by courts of equity that the trustee shall not be permitted to make any profit from the unauthorized use of such funds. Wheeler v. Bolton, 92 Cal. 159, 28 Pac. 558; Cruce v. Cruce, 81 Mo. 684; Schieffelin v. Stewart, 1 Johns. Ch. 620. The rule is intended to secure fidelity in the management of trust estates, and where, as in this state, the conventional rate of interest exceeds the statutory rate, the executor should be charged with legal interest, compounded annually, in order to fully reach the profit realized by him from the use of the trust fund. The court, in settling the accounts in this case upon the findings which appear in this record, should have allowed the executors credit for the sum named in the second order as a family allowance during the period covered by the accounts, and then have charged them legal interest, computed with annual rests, upon the excess paid by them as a family allowance to the widow for the same period. Order reversed.

We concur: FITZGERALD, J.; McFARLAND, J.

In re LUX'S ESTATE. (No. 15,107.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 30, 1893.)

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Mateo county; George H. Buck, Judge.

In the matter of Charles Lux, deceased. Appeal of certain devisees from an allowance to the widow. Reversed.

Garber, Boalt & Bishop, for appellants. D. M. Delmas and J. H. Campbell, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an appeal by certain devisees named in the will of Charles Lux, deceased, from the same order for a family allowance involved in the case of In re Lux's Estate, 35 Pac. 341, (No. 15,346, just decided,) and the judgment in that case disposes of all the points urged by the appellants here for a reversal of the order adversely to their contention. The motion of respondent to dismiss the appeal is denied on the authority of In re Lux's Estate, Id. 345, (No. 15,146,) and, as the order here appealed from was reversed in Re Lux's Estate, Id. 341, (No. 15,346,) the same order will be made on this appeal, but without costs to the appellants. Order reversed, without costs.

101 Cal. 10

PAYNE et al. v. ENGLISH et al., Harbor Commissioners. (No. 15,269.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 3, 1894.)

BOUNDARIES—ARTIFICIAL—UNLOCATED HIGHWAYS.

In 1852 the city of San Francisco leased a block, represented on the then official city map as "Block No. 12 of the South Beach Water Lots," and described as bounded by a line beginning at the southwest corner of B. and T. streets; thence southwest, along B. street, 825 feet, to F. street; thence southeast 275 feet, to C. street; thence northeast 825 feet, to T. street; and thence 275 feet, to the place of beginning. The block and surrounding streets were covered by water from 1852 to 1865, so that there could be no marks to show the corners of the block and the street lines. In 1865 a plank driveway was laid along the southerly side of B. street, from T. street to F. street. In 1866 the city surveyor surveyed the southerly line of B. street, and the lessee of the block then filled in along such line. In 1867 the owners of the opposite block built along the northerly side of B. street, which, as thus established, has ever since been a recognized thoroughfare of the city. Held, that the location of block 12 may be determined by reference to B. street as now located.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; Eugene R. Garber, Judge.

Suit by Warren R. Payne and S. P. Dewey to enjoin William D. English and others, as the state board of harbor commissioners, from building a wharf in front of plaintiffs' lot. Judgment for plaintiffs. From an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

F. S. Stratton and T. C. Coogan, for appellants. Cope, Boyd, Fifield & Hoburg, for respondents.

BELCHER, C. This is the second appeal in this case. On the first appeal the judgment, which was in favor of the defendants, was reversed, and a new trial ordered. 79 Cal. 540, 21 Pac. 952. The second trial resulted in a judgment for the plaintiffs, and the present appeal is from an order denying the defendants' motion for a new trial.

The facts of the case are very fully stated in the opinion rendered on the former appeal, and need not be repeated here at length. The plaintiffs allege that they are, and for more than 30 years have been, the owners of that certain lot or parcel of land in the city and county of San Francisco, bounded by Berry, Channel, Third, and Fourth streets, and having a width, between the two first-named streets, of 275 feet, and a length, between the two last-named, of 825 feet. The defendants, in their answer, admit that the plaintiffs are the owners of the lot or parcel of land described in their complaint, except a strip of the uniform width of 30 feet, extending along the southeasterly side thereof; and they allege that this strip of land is, and for more than 30 years has been, a portion of Channel street, and that plaintiffs have not now, and never had, any right, title, or interest therein or thereto. The court found that the original plaintiffs were, at the commencement of the action, and for more than 30 years prior thereto they, and those under whom they claim, had been, the owners of that certain lot or parcel of land particularly described in the complaint; "that no portion of said lot or parcel of land is, or ever was, a part of Channel street;" and "that the southerly portion of said lot or parcel of land, mentioned and referred to in the answer of defendants, as a strip of the uniform width of thirty feet, and extending from Third street to Fourth street, being a distance of eight hundred and twenty-five feet, is not, and never was, a portion of Channel street." Whether this finding as to the 30-foot strip was justified or not is the principal question presented for decision.

The deed under which the plaintiffs claimed title was executed in 1852, and described the premises conveyed as "beginning at the point forming the southwesterly corner of Third and Berry streets, and running thence southwesterly, on the line of Berry street, three hundred varas, to Fourth street; thence southeasterly, along the line of Fourth street, one hundred varas; thence northeasterly, at right angles, along Channel street, three hundred varas; and thence northwesterly, along the line of Third street, one hundred varas, to the place of beginning." The distances named in the deed are equal to 825 and 275 feet, and the premises described are therefore of the dimensions claimed by plaintiffs. In 1852, and thereafter until 1865 or 1866, the land conveyed by the deed, and the streets surrounding the same, were covered by the navigable waters of the bay of San Francisco. Channel street was then, and still is, an arm of the bay, extending up several blocks past and beyond the block in question; and in 1868 an act was passed by the legislature which declared that a canal 140 feet wide, located in the middle of Channel street, should forever remain open for the purposes of drainage and navigation. When the deed was made, there was an official map of the city, called the "Eddy" or "Red-Line" map, on which the land conveyed was represented as block No. 12 of South Beach water lots, but there were then, and could be, no marks or monuments upon the ground designating the corners of the blocks or the lines of the adjacent streets. In 1865 piles were driven and planked over along the southerly side of Berry street, as now established, between Third and Fourth streets, so as to form a driveway thereon, and within a year or two thereafter the street was filled in to about its present grade, and made 82½ feet wide. In 1865 or 1866 the owners of block 12, or their tenants, began to erect buildings along the northerly line of their block, and at their request the city surveyor surveyed and marked out for them the southerly line of the street. They continued this building until 1867, when nearly the whole front of the block was built upon. They also built several wharves leading back from the rear of their buildings to the north line of Channel street, as they locate it. In 1867, also, the owners of the opposite block, on the northerly side of Berry street, began to build along the street, and they continued this work until nearly the whole front of the block was built upon. As thus established and built upon, Berry street has remained ever since—now nearly or quite 25 years—a recognized thoroughfare of the city, which has been, and is, largely used by the public for the purposes of traffic over it. At both trials it was claimed by defendants that the plaintiffs' block of land was only 240 feet wide, and on the first trial the court found, upon evidence which this court held inadmissible, that it was only 245 feet wide. This claim is practically abandoned now, but it is insisted that "while plaintiffs' deed may properly be construed as calling for a tract of land 275 feet in width," still it is necessary for them to locate their grant upon the ground, which could not be done by measuring from the present practical location of Berry street. The answer raises no issue as to the location of Berry street, and the record contains no evidence tending to show that it is not correctly located. On the contrary, the evidence on the part of defendants refers to the southerly line of the street as correctly fixing the northerly line of block 12. George F. Allardt, a civil engineer and surveyor of long experience, was called as a witness for defendants, and testified that in 1868 he was the chief surveyor of the board of tide-land commissioners, and as such made a survey and map of the block in question, as well as other blocks on Mission bay, and the streets surrounding them. He was asked: "Where did you get the data from which you located the northerly line of Channel street? A. From the maps on file in the city and county surveyor's office, and the maps on file in the secretary of state's office. The southerly line of Berry street being visible on the ground by reason of improvements, in order to find the northerly line of Channel street, which is the southerly line of block 12, it was only necessary to measure the distance so obtained in the data referred to. It was only necessary to measure the two hundred and forty feet which I found on these maps. Q. You stated that the southerly line of Berry street was a well-defined line by buildings being erected upon it? A. Yes, sir. Q. And you assumed that the northerly line of Channel street was two hundred and forty feet from that point, didn't you? A. I so measured it on the ground. I assumed it, and measured it on the ground I located."

Now if, as defendants contend, Berry street, as now located, cannot be looked to for the purpose of determining the location of block 12, because it was practically located after the deed to plaintiffs was made, then it would seem to be impossible to mark out on the ground the northerly and southerly lines of the block, and the grant must therefore ever remain a float. But we do not think this can be so. When Berry street was established and built upon, and was accepted, recognized, and used by the city authorities and the public, it became a street of the city, and presumably the street referred to in the deed. The following language used by this court in deciding the case of Orena v. City of Santa Barbara, 91 Cal. 621, 28 Pac. 268, is applicable to the case in hand: "In determining the line of the street, measurements on that street would naturally be of more value than elsewhere; but if they, or the places where they were, cannot be located, it would be important to ascertain the boundaries of the street as actually opened and used; and if such location has been generally acquiesced in by the public, by landowners, and the municipality, in the absence of more certain evidence, it will be conclusive." And again: "In order to build cities and towns, there must be some finality as to the location of blocks and streets." It must be held, therefore, that the court below was fully justified in finding that the 30-foot strip in controversy was not a part of Channel street.

Counsel for defendants next call attention to the late decision of the United States supreme court in the Chicago Water Front Case, 146 U. S. 387, 13 Sup. Ct. 110, and urge that, under the law as declared in that case, "plaintiffs cannot assert title and claim as against the state, where such assertion will actually interfere with the paramount interests of commerce." We are unable to see how that case can control or affect the decision in this. As has been stated, the defendants admit the plaintiffs' ownership of block 12, and only deny that the strip in controversy is a part of that block. This question having been decided against their contention, they, as members of the board of state harbor commissioners, are by the statute given no control over the strip. Pol. Code, § 2524. We advise that the order appealed from be affirmed.

We concur: SEARLS, C.; TEMPLE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the order appealed from is affirmed.

---

101 Cal. 70

SAN JOAQUIN LAND & WATER CO. v. BEECHER. (No. 18,216.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 6, 1894.)

CORPORATIONS—SUBSCRIPTIONS—ACTION ON ASSESSMENT.

1. A subscriber to stock becomes liable to suit for delinquent assessment thereon by the directors, under Civil Code, § 349, where a majority of the subscribers have met and organized for the objects and with the capital and number of shares specified in the subscription agreement, and have elected the directors who levy the assessment.

2. In a suit on an assessment, the subscriber cannot show, in contradiction of the secretary's minutes, that the directors were not elected by ballot.

3. Under Civil Code, § 331, authorizing directors, when one-fourth of the stock is subscribed, to levy and collect assessments on the "subscribed capital stock," a notice describing the assessment, in conformance with section 335, as "levied upon the capital stock," will sustain a collection on the stock subscribed.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county; J. K. Law, Judge.

Action by the San Joaquin Land & Water Company against J. L. Beecher on a subscription to stock. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Jas. H. Budd, J. E. Budd, and W. L. Dudley, for appellant. Baldwin & Campbell and S. D. Woods, for respondent.

SEARLS, C. This is an appeal from a final judgment in favor of the corporation plaintiff, and from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial. On the 19th day of November, 1887, the defendant, and over 60 other persons, entered into a written agreement with each other, and one with the other, to form a corporation under the name of the San Joaquin Land & Water Company, for the purpose of procuring water rights, purchasing and constructing dams, reservoirs, canals, aqueducts, etc., and to conduct, supply, and sell water for mining, farming, irrigation, and other purposes; to buy, sell, let, cultivate, and improve lands, etc.,—in certain named counties of the state of California. The capital stock of the corporation, it was provided, should be $1,000,000, divided into 10,000 shares of $100 per share. The parties to the agreement each agreed to take the number of shares set opposite his name thereunto subscribed, and to pay 20 per cent. of the par value of the shares so subscribed, within five days after the articles of incorporation were filed in the office of the county clerk of the county of San Joaquin; payments to be made to F. M. West, at the Stockton Savings & Loan Society, at Stockton, Cal. They further nominated and appointed L. U. Shippee, J. L. Beecher, (the defendant and appellant herein,) and George Gray as their agents, and the agents of the corporation to be formed, to negotiate for the purchase of any one or more water rights, canals, reservoirs, etc., for said corporation, and to pay for the same by drawing from West the money to be paid in by them under the contract, and further provided that all contracts of the agents should be binding upon them and the corporation to be formed. The contract was signed by all the parties thereto, the appellant included, and the number of shares subscribed by each affixed to his name; the aggregate of all the shares subscribed being in excess of 3,000, of which number the appellant herein subscribed for 100 shares. Questions growing out of and relating to the validity of this agreement have been twice before this court for adjudication, viz. in West v. Crawford, 80 Cal. 19, 21 Pac. 1123, and in Water Co. v. West, 94 Cal. 399, 29 Pac. 785. In each of these cases the body of the agreement above specified is set out at length. Hence, it is not deemed necessary to repeat it in full here. On the 17th day of December, 1887, appellant, and a majority of the persons who had signed said agreement, including persons who had subscribed for a majority of the shares of stock therein subscribed, met in the city of Stockton, county of San Joaquin, Cal., and organized for the purpose of forming a corporation in accordance with the agreement. The appellant herein was selected and acted as the presiding officer of said meeting. Nine of the persons who had signed the agreement of November 19th, including the appellant, were selected, voted for by the parties to the agreement, and elected directors of the corporation for the first year. A committee to prepare a set of by-laws was appointed, and an attorney chosen to prepare articles of incorporation. A list of the subscribers to the capital stock was ordered to be placed in the hands of the president (appellant) until such time as the directors should be elected and qualified. Articles of incorporation of the San Joaquin Land & Water Company, the plaintiff and respondent herein, were prepared, with the name, capital stock, number of shares, and for the objects and purposes specified in the agreement aforesaid, and with the shares subscribed and names of subscribers as in said agreement, which articles of incorporation were signed by the nine persons who had been selected as directors, who duly acknowledged the same (appellant included) on the 19th day of December, 1887, before a notary public; and thereafter, and on the 20th day of December, 1887, said articles so executed were filed in the office of the county clerk of the county of San Joaquin; Stockton, in said county, being named as the principal place of business of said corporation. A certified copy of the articles was duly filed in the office of the secretary of state for California, and on the 21st day of December, 1887, a certificate of incorporation of respondent was duly issued by said secretary of state under the seal of the state of California. On December 23, 1887, the board of directors met at the office of appellant, and organized by electing appellant president, to act until by-laws were adopted, and transacted corporate business, such as issuing a call for a meeting of stockholders for January 14, 1888, to adopt by-laws; appointing a committee of three, including appellant, with full power to purchase water rights, etc. Appellant, as such president, gave notice, etc., of the meeting of stockholders, as provided for by the directors, which meeting assembled January 14, 1888, pursuant to call. Appellant called the meeting to order, stated its object, and it appearing upon a call that stockholders representing 2,200 shares of the subscribed capital stock were present, and that number being a majority of the capital stock subscribed, viz. a majority of 3,302 shares, by-laws were thereupon adopted, a board of nine permanent directors elected, to which board power to purchase water rights was unanimously granted. On the same day the new board of directors organized by selecting L. U. Shippee as president, George Winter as secretary, and appellant as treasurer. Thereupon, other corporate business was transacted. Appellant acted for a time as treasurer of the corporation, and paid to it the 20 per cent. on the 100 shares of stock subscribed by him in the agreement of November 19, 1887. Under the by-laws the board of directors held monthly meetings at the office of the corporation, in the city of Stockton, on the first Thursday of each month. On the 7th of August, 1890, the corporation, being largely in debt, levied an assessment of $10 per share upon the subscribed capital stock of the company, payable September 20, 1890, etc., and provided for giving notice thereof as provided in sections 337–339, Civil Code. Notice was given of the levy of the assessment, in which notice it was stated that "an assessment of $10 per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation," which notice appellant contends should have stated, "upon the subscribed capital stock." On October 3, 1890, at a meeting of the board of directors, the assessment was declared delinquent, and a resolution adopted waiving proceedings for collecting such assessment by sale, etc., and electing to collect the assessment by action at law, etc., as provided in section 349, Civil Code, whereupon, after notice and demand, this action was brought, a trial had before the court without a jury, and, upon the written findings filed, judgment was entered in favor of plaintiff and against defendant for $1,000 and interest.

The first point made by appellant is that no action will lie against a stockholder of a corporation to recover assessments against members who have subscribed for shares of stock, when there is no express agreement to pay such assessment, and that plaintiff's only remedy, if any, is the sale of the delinquent shares pursuant to statute. In support of this proposition, we are referred to Turnpike Corp. v. Gould, 4 Amer. Dec. 80; Turnpike Corp. v. Adams, 5 Amer. Dec. 81; Cotton Mills v. Abbott, 9 Cush. 423; In re South Mountain Con. Min. Co., 8 Sawy. 366, 14 Fed. 347. These cases, except the last cited, arose in Massachusetts, in which state there was no express statute authorizing an action to recover an assessment levied by a corporation, and in which state—contrary, as we think, to the great weight of authority—the courts hold that a mere subscription for shares in a corporation, without an express promise to pay therefor or to pay assessments thereon, raises no implied promise to pay such assessments as may be levied by the corporation, and that the only remedy of the latter is by a sale of the delinquent shares under the statute. In New York it is held that an agreement to take a certain number of shares of the capital stock of a corporation thereafter to be formed creates, if not an express, certainly an implied, promise to pay for the shares; and this implied promise will sustain an action by the company, on its complete incorporation, against the stockholders, to recover calls duly made upon the stock. The interest acquired by the subscriber upon the incorporation of the company is held a good consideration to support the implied promise to pay for such stock, and raises a sufficient mutuality of contract between him and the company to render the contract a binding one on him. Railroad Co. v. Dudley, 14 N. Y. 336; Thomp. Liab. Stockh. § 105; Railroad Co. v. Mason, 16 N. Y. 451. The right of action, in such cases, is held cumulative to the right of the corporation to forfeit the shares of stock for nonpayment of calls under the statute. It is not deemed necessary to quote the decisions at length upon this point. That they are not uniform is very apparent, and it may well be concluded that to settle this disputed question was one of the objects of adopting section 349 of our Civil Code, which is as follows: "On the day specified for declaring the stock delinquent, or at any time subsequent thereto, and before the sale of the delinquent stock, the board of directors may elect to waive further proceedings under this chapter for the collection of delinquent assessments, or any portion thereof, and may elect to proceed by action to recover the amount of the assessment and the costs and expenses already incurred, or any part or portion thereof." It will be perceived the Civil Code provides two methods for the enforcement of the liabilities of stockholders to the corporation, by reason of assessments levied upon the capital stock,—one by a sale of the stock, in pursuance of the plan devised in the statute; the other by an action at law, at the option of the board of directors. The latter method would seem equally valid, and may, in many cases, be much more efficacious than the former.

In Re South Mountain Con. Min. Co., 8 Sawy. 366, 14 Fed. 347, which was the case of a mining corporation, Sawyer, Circuit Judge, distinguished mining corporations from the ordinary corporations, and held them to be, in many particulars, sui generis, and denied an application of an assignee in bankruptcy of such a corporation for an order requiring the levy of an assessment on the stockholders for the payment of corporate debts, to be enforced by actions in personam against delinquent shareholders. That the doctrine of this case, if it can be upheld, is to be confined strictly to the class of corporations to which it applied, is abundantly established by the later decisions of this court. Harmon v. Page, 62 Cal. 459;

460; Baines v. Babcock, 95 Cal. 583, 27 Pac. 674, and 30 Pac. 776. Sawyer, J., did not, however, hold that an action could not be maintained to recover from a stockholder an assessment. In referring to that question, he says: "I am not prepared to say now that an assessment properly levied by the directors of a corporation, under the statute, may not be collected by a personal action, instead of a sale of stock. I do not think it necessary to go so far as to sustain the order of the district court, of which a review is now sought; and I therefore express no opinion upon that point, either way." Actions have been repeatedly brought and maintained without question under this section, and no good reason is apparent why it should not be done as against the stockholder in a corporation organized like the present, under the general law of the state. Railroad Co. v. Spreckles, 65 Cal. 193; Hotel Co. v. Callender, 94 Cal. 120, 29 Pac. 859. The agreement of November 19th, to form the corporation plaintiff herein, and to take the number of shares specified, was, as to incorporating, executory; but when the promoters met, and organized the corporation, under the name, for the objects, with the capital stock, the number of shares, etc., as specified in the agreement, and named the parties to said agreement, with the shares subscribed by each in the articles of incorporation, as subscribers to the capital stock, to the extent of the shares agreed to be by them, respectively, taken, it was an acceptance by the corporation of such parties as stockholders, and they became thereby and thenceforth bound as such. Railroad Co. v. Mason, 16 N. Y. 452; Hotel Co. v. Friedrich, 26 Minn 112, 1 N. W. 827. It was not necessary to the validity of the corporation, or to the subscribers becoming stockholders, that they should all sign the articles of incorporation. Those who sign articles of incorporation act as the agents of the others. Railroad Co. v. Hildreth, 53 Cal. 129; Plank Road Co. v. Griffin, 21 Barb. 454. In another action growing out of this agreement, (94 Cal. 399, 29 Pac. 785,) and in Power Co. v. Johnson, 93 Cal. 538, 29 Pac. 126, this court held that these preliminary agreements inured to the benefit of the corporations thereafter formed, as contemplated by the agreements. To constitute the subscribers stockholders, it was not necessary that the certificates of stock should have issued to them. Civil Code, § 323; Hotel Co. v. Callender, 94 Cal. 120, 29 Pac. 859; Mitchell v. Beckman, 64 Cal. 117, 28 Pac. 110.

There are four separate appeals submitted here, by as many defendants, depending upon the same general principles, but differing somewhat in the evidence establishing the facts as to their becoming stockholders, and the foregoing remarks are indulged in part as applicable to all of the appellants. So far as this appellant is concerned, he signed the articles of incorporation, acted as an officer of the company, and in various ways attested his position as a stockholder in the company. In view of the reasoning in Power Co. v. Johnson, supra, in Hotel Co. v. Callender, supra, in Baines v. Babcock, 95 Cal. 581, 27 Pac. 674, and 30 Pac. 776, and in the two appeals heretofore prosecuted in matters growing out of the same agreement involved here,—all recent cases,—it is not deemed necessary to extend the reasoning upon the point that the agreement of November 19th was valid and binding upon the subscribers, and sufficient, upon the organization of the corporation, and acceptance by it of their subscriptions, to constitute them stockholders in the corporation which they had agreed to form, and in which they had bound themselves to become such stockholders.

The objection that the directors of the corporation were not elected by ballot, as required by law, and hence had no power to levy the assessment in question, is untenable: (1) The minutes of the secretary show that the directors were elected by ballot. (2) If not properly, they were at least nominally, elected, organized as a board of directors, and acted as such; and, being de facto officers, their acts as such are valid.

It is further objected that the assessment in question, of $10 per share, was levied on the subscribed capital stock of 3,302 shares while the notice to the stockholders informed them that the board of directors had levied an assessment of $10 per share on the capital stock, instead of upon the subscribed capital stock. By section 331 of the Civil Code, the directors were authorized, after one-fourth of its capital stock had been subscribed, to levy and collect assessments upon the subscribed capital stock "in the manner and form, and to the extent provided herein." The 3,302 shares of stock subscribed were in excess of one-fourth of 10,000 shares, into which the capital stock was divided, and the shares so divided became the basis for the assessment, the capital stock upon which the assessment was to be levied. The notice required to be given to stockholders of calls must be such as the charter requires, or, what with us is the same thing, such as the statute prescribes; and in the absence of an express provision in the charter or articles of association, or the law under which they are formed, it is said no notice is requisite. Mor. Corp. § 147. Our Civil Code, § 335, prescribes the form of a notice to be given to stockholders of the levy of an assessment, which form was followed in the present case. In describing the assessment, it describes it as being "levied upon the capital stock of the corporation," instead of upon the subscribed capital stock. The legislature had authority to designate the form of notice to be given, and having done so, and the secretary having given the notice thus provided, it was sufficient.

The other matters discussed in the brief of appellant are not material to the result. The judgment and order appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: VANCLIEF, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

SAN JOAQUIN LAND & WATER CO. v. BELDING. (No. 18,215.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 6, 1894.)

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county; J. K. Law, Judge.

Action by the San Joaquin Land & Water Company against Charles Belding. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Jas. H. Budd, J. E. Budd, and W. L. Dudley, for appellant. Baldwin & Campbell and S. D. Woods, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The judgment and order appealed from in this case are affirmed, upon the authority of Water Co. v. Beecher, 35 Pac. 349, (No. 18,216, this day decided.)

SAN JOAQUIN LAND & WATER CO. v. HEWLETT. (No. 18,217.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 6, 1894.)

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county; J. K. Law, Judge.

Action by the San Joaquin Land & Water Company against H. H. Hewlett. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Jas. H. Budd, J. E. Budd, and W. L. Dudley, for appellant. Baldwin & Campbell and S. D. Woods, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The judgment and order appealed from in this case are affirmed upon the authority of Water Co. v. Beecher, 35 Pac. 349, (No. 18,216, this day decided.)

SAN JOAQUIN LAND & WATER CO. v. HITCHCOCK. (No. 18,218.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 6, 1894.)

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county; J. K. Law, Judge.

Action by the San Joaquin Land & Water Company against J. R. W. Hitchcock. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Jas. H. Budd, J. E. Budd, and W. L. Dudley, for appellant. Baldwin & Campbell and S. D. Woods, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The judgment and order appealed from in this case are affirmed, upon the authority of Water Co. v. Beecher, 35 Pac. 349, (No. 18,216, this day decided.)

101 Cal. 15

WULZEN v. BOARD OF SUP'RS OF CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO.

(No. 14,401.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 3, 1894.)

CERTIORARI — REVIEWING ACTS OF CITY COUNCIL — CONDEMNATION OF LAND FOR STREET — DUE PROCESS OF LAW.

1. The action of a city council, to whom power has been delegated to appropriate land for public use, in passing a resolution of intention to extend a street, and in declaring the width and length of such extension, is not subject to review on certiorari, as such action is the exercise of a purely legislative function.

2. Personal notice to those whose lands are to be taken for public use is not necessary to constitute due process of law.

3. Act March 6, 1889, relating to the taking by a city of land for public improvements, requires the city council, before making any improvement, to post near the land affected, and to publish, notice of the intention to make the improvement and of the character of the improvement. Held, that a fulfillment of these requirements constitutes due process of law in the matter of giving notice to those whose lands are to be affected.

4. An order of a city council, to whom has been delegated power to appropriate land for public use, declaring that certain land is hereby "condemned, appropriated, acquired, set apart, and taken for public use," is subject to review on certiorari, as such order is the exercise of a function judicial in its nature.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; D. J. Murphy, Judge.

Petition by D. H. Wulzen for a writ to have an order of the board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco reviewed. From a judgment dismissing the petition, petitioner appeals. Reversed.

J. C. Bates, for appellant. Pierson & Mitchell, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The appellant here filed his petition in the court below to obtain a writ of review under section 1068 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to annul a certain order of the board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco, (a copy of which, marked "Exhibit C," is made a part of the petition,) which purported on its face to take and condemn petitioner's land, with that of many others, for an alleged public use, in the extension of Market street in a general southwesterly direction, from its present terminus to the Pacific ocean. The order sought to be brought under review follows the resolution of intention of the board, (which is also set out at length in the petition, and marked "Exhibit A,") and the portion thereof against which the objections of petitioner are more particularly directed is as follows: "Section 1. Market street is hereby declared to be an open public street of the city and county of San Francisco, from its present termination at its intersection with Castro and Seventeenth streets, thence southwesterly and westerly, with a uniform width of 120 feet, to low-water mark of the waters of the Pacific ocean. The said street, as extended, embracing all the land included in the boundaries hereinafter described, is hereby condemned, appropriated, acquired, set apart, and taken for public use, except those portions of said lands included therein, and now held by the city and county as open public streets or highways." The petition avers that no compensation was made to petitioner for his land taken, and also that it is not, and never has been, for the public use or convenience, or necessary thereto, to open or extend said Market street, and specifies reasons for this conclusion. An order requiring defendant to show cause why a writ of review should not be allowed issued, in answer to which defendant appeared, and for cause answered "that the proceeding sought to be reviewed herein was not, and is not, a judicial act, but was and is a legislative act, and not the subject of review on a writ of certiorari." Upon a hearing the court below sustained the position taken by defendant, and denied the writ and dismissed the petition. From the judgment, petitioner appeals.

It is admitted on all hands that certiorari does not lie to review the action of an inferior tribunal or board in the exercise of purely legislative functions which are not judicial in their character. People v. Board of Ed. of Oakland, 54 Cal. 375; Myers v. Hamilton, 60 Cal. 289; Williams v. County of Sacramento, 65 Cal. 160, 3 Pac. 667; Bixler v. Board, 59 Cal. 698; People v. Bush, 40 Cal. 344. At the oral argument much stress was laid by counsel for appellant upon the insufficiency of the notice provided by the statute to be given to the owners of property to be affected by the improvement. The position taken was not that the notice must be "due process of law," in the strict sense of the term, as defined in proceedings taken in the courts, but that it must be its equivalent, with only such modification as the nature of the proceedings and the surroundings render necessary. Justice Bradley, in discussing what is due process of law in Davidson v. New Orleans, 96 U. S. 97, uses the following language: "In judging what is due process of law, respect must be had to the cause and object of the taking,—whether under the taxing power, the power of eminent domain, or the power of assessment for local improvements, or none of these; and, if found to be suitable or admissible in the special case, it will be adjudged to be due process of law, but, if found to be arbitrary, oppressive, and unjust, it may be declared to be not due process of law." In commenting upon the above quotation in Lent v. Tillson, 72 Cal., at page 414, 14 Pac. 71, Temple, J., says: "In other words, the sufficiency of the notice must be determined in each case from the particular circumstances of the case in hand. And, further, in matters of assessment and taxation, the same character of notice is not required as in ordinary actions in a court of justice, for the reason, I presume, that in such summary proceedings it is not practical or usual." In the present case the statute of March 6, 1889, (St. 1889, p. 70,) under which the proceedings were taken, requires that before ordering any work done or improvement made, as authorized by section 1 of the act, the city council shall pass a resolution of intention to do the work or make the improvement, describing the work or improvement, and the land deemed necessary to be taken therefor, and specifying the boundaries of the district to be affected or benefited by the improvement, and to be assessed to pay expenses. Notices are required to be posted upon the contemplated improvement, not more than 300 feet apart, and not less than three in any case, which shall be headed, in letters of not less than one inch in length, "Notice of Public Work," and shall contain notice of the passage of the resolution of intention, its date, and, briefly, the work or improvement proposed, "and refer to the resolution for further particulars." A like notice is required to be published for 10 days in a daily newspaper (if any) published and circulated in the city where the work is to be done, etc. Within 10 days after completion of publication, all parties in interest objecting may file their objections, when a day for hearing their objections must be fixed, the parties objecting notified, and a hearing had; and, if the objections are sustained, all proceedings are stopped; if overruled, or if no objections are filed, the council is deemed to have acquired jurisdiction to order the work done or improvement made. The notice was given by posting and publication, as prescribed by the statute.

The terms "due process of law," or "due course of law," or "law of the land," all of which signify the same thing, are sometimes defined as "law in its course of administration through courts of justice." As applied to judicial proceedings, this definition is concise and precise, but in a broader sense the term signifies such an exercise of the powers of the government as the settled maxims of law permit and sanction, and under such safeguards for the protection of individual rights as those maxims prescribe for the class of cases to which the one in question belongs. Administrative process, it has been said, of the customary sort, is as much due process of law as judicial process. To settle the question as applied to a given state of facts, we have but to examine the previous condition of things in use, and regarded as essential to the protection of the rights of the individual under such circumstances; and, if in substantial compliance with such essentials, the course prescribed may be said to be in consonance with the law of the land, and to constitute due process of law. The power of taxation is confided to the legislative department of the government, and "an act for levying taxes and providing the means of enforcement is within the unquestioned and unquestionable power of the legislature. It is therefore the law of the land, not merely in so far as it lays down a general rule to be observed, but in all the proceedings and all the process which it points out or provides for in order to give the rule full operation." Cooley, Tax'n, pp. 48, 49. It was said in Kelly v. Pittsburgh, 104 U. S. 80: "Taxes have not, as a general rule, in this country since its independence, nor in England before that time, been collected by regular judicial proceedings. The necessities of government, the nature of the duty to be performed, and the customary usages of the people have established a different procedure, which, in regard to that matter, is, and always has been, due process of law."

The burden sought to be laid upon property holders in this case is not, it is true, "taxation," in the strict sense of the term. Hagar v. Supervisors of Yolo Co., 47 Cal. 234. It is an assessment for a local—for a municipal—improvement, which is sought in the proceedings under review; but in principle it is in most respects subject to like considerations with cases of taxation. The determination as to whether or not the right of eminent domain should be exercised, and as to what lands are necessary to be taken in the exercise of that right, is a political and legislative question, and not a judicial one. Its determination rests exclusively with the legislature, or with such subordinate legislative bodies as it may be properly devolved upon, and the question of whether the exercise of the power is wise or not is one with which the judicial department has no concern. The question as to whether a given use is in fact a public use may be inquired into by the courts; but that question determined in the affirmative, as it must be here, and the power of the court is confined to seeing to it that the burdens cast upon the citizen are in conformity with the methods prescribed by the legislature, and that those methods are not in conflict with the fundamental rights of the people. Gilmer v. Lime Point, 18 Cal. 257; Railroad Co. v. Moss, 23 Cal. 324; Davies v. City of Los Angeles, 86 Cal. 37, 24 Pac. 771; In re Fowler, 53 N. Y. 62; People v. Smith, 21 N. Y. 595. In the case last cited it was said: "The necessity for appropriating private property for the use of the public or of the government is not a judicial question. The power resides in the legislature. It may be exercised by means of a statute, which shall at once designate the property to be appropriated and the purpose of the appropriation; or it may be delegated to public officers, or, as it has been repeatedly held, to private corporations established to carry on enterprises in which the public is interested. There is no restraint upon the power, except that requiring compensation to be made; and, where the power is committed to public officers, it is a subject of legislative discretion to determine what prudential regulations shall be established to secure a discreet and judicious exercise of the authority." We think the consensus of opinion—the weight of authority—is to the effect that, in a case like the present, the legislative authority would have a perfect right, without any notice to the parties to be affected by its action, in the absence of a statute requiring notice, to open up Market street, and determine the district to be affected thereby, the latter of which was done and upheld in the case of the widening of Dupont street. Lent v. Tillson, 72 Cal. 404, 14 Pac. 71. In that case it was said, in substance, that the parties affected had no constitutional right to be heard until the assessment was made. The notice in the present case is made necessary by the act under which the council received its authority, and was in accord with the requirements of the act, and was as specific and certain as is practical under such circumstances, and was substantially such as has been approved in many cases in this state and elsewhere. To require such a notice to name all the persons to be affected, and to be served upon them personally, would, for a variety of reasons, require an impossibility.

We are of opinion, therefore: (1) That the proceedings of the council in passing the resolution of intention, and in declaring the exterior boundaries of the district to be affected by the contemplated improvement, were legislative in character. (2) In matters of taxation and assessment the state is not bound to accord personal service of process upon the citizen. (3) That the notice and the mode of its service was in obedience to the requirements of the statute, and not violative of any inherent or constitutional right of the persons to be affected thereby, and hence in accord with the law of the land, and amounted to due process of law in such a case.

No objections were filed, so far as appears, to the improvement, or to the extent of the district of lands to be affected or benefited by such improvement; hence, under section 5 of the act, the council "is to be deemed to have acquired jurisdiction to order any of the work to be done or improvements to be made." Thereupon the city council passed the ordinance set out in the transcript and marked "C," which it is claimed by appellant was the exercise of judicial power, and in excess of the jurisdiction conferred upon the city council by the act of March 6, 1889. That order or ordinance (Order No. 2,319) purports to be an order for "opening and extending Market street from its present termination, in a southwesterly and westerly direction, to the Pacific ocean." By section 1, "Market street is declared to be an open public street of the city and county of San Francisco, from its present termination at its intersection with Castro and Seventeenth streets, thence southwesterly and westerly, with a uniform width of 120 feet, to low-water mark of the waters of the Pacific ocean. The said street, as extended, embracing all the land included in the boundaries hereinafter described, is hereby condemned, appropriated, acquired, set apart, and taken for public use, except those portions of said lands included therein, and now held by the city and county as open public streets or highways, to wit." Then follows a description of the proposed street. Section 2 names and appoints three commissioners to assess the benefits and damages resulting from the opening and extending the street. as provided for in resolution of intention, and to have and exercise general supervision of the proposed work and improvement until the completion thereof pursuant to the provisions of an act of the legislature, etc., describing the objects of the act approved March 6, 1889, (St. 1889, p. 70, etc.)

The questions presented are: (1) Was the act of the board of supervisors judicial in its character and effect? and, if so, (2) was it in excess of the jurisdiction conferred upon the board? The passage of ordinary resolutions for opening streets in cities by the board of supervisors or city council, under the authority conferred by the act of March 6, 1889, and providing for commissioners, etc., is clearly, we think, a legislative act. A legislative act is said to be one which predetermines what the law shall be for the regulation of future cases falling under its provisions, while a judicial act is a determination of what the law is in relation to some existing thing done or happened. Mabry v. Baxter, 11 Heisk. 690; Sinking Fund Cases, 99 U. S. 761. In the case last cited it was said: "Whenever an act undertakes to determine a question of right or obligation, or of property, as the foundation upon which it proceeds, such act is to that extent a judicial one, and not the proper exercise of legislative functions. Thus, an act of the legislature of Illinois authorizing the sale of the lands of an intestate to raise a specific sum to pay certain parties their claims against the estate of the deceased for moneys advanced and liabilities incurred was held unconstitutional, on the ground that it involved a judicial determination that the estate was indebted to those parties for the moneys advanced and liabilities incurred. The ascertainment of indebtedness from one party to another, and a direction for its payment, the court considered to be judicial acts, which could not be performed by the legislature. Lane v. Dorman, 3 Scam. 238." Whenever an act determines a question of right or obligation, or of property, as the foundation upon which it proceeds, such an act is, to that extent, judicial.

The order in question went beyond the legislative function of declaring a street an open and public one. It purported to and condemned, appropriated, acquired, set apart, and took for public use all the land within the exterior boundaries of the street, except that already held by the city. To condemn land is to set it apart or expropriate it for public use. "To appropriate" is to make a thing one's own; to make it the subject of property; to exercise dominion over an object to the extent, and for the purpose, of making it subserve one's own proper use or pleasure. "To acquire" is, in the law of contracts and descents, to become the owner of property; to make property one's own. "To take" signifies "to lay hold of," and, when applied to land, implies "to gain or receive into possession; to seize; to deprive one of the possession; to assume ownership. Thus, it is a constitutional provision that a man's property shall not be taken for public uses without just compensation." Black, Law Dict. tit. "Take." The terms used in this order are the usual and apt ones made use of in proceedings in the courts for the final condemnation of land under the exercise of the power of eminent domain. They are not the usual expressions made use of in the exercise of legislative power. The jurisdiction of the board conceded, and the terms used were sufficient to divest the title of the petitioner, and vest it in the public, to appropriate the property to a public use. It was the exercise of judicial power. It will not do to say that the board of supervisors had no such power, and therefore we must presume that in the order they merely intended their action as preliminary to proceedings to condemn, should they become necessary. The order in question speaks in no uncertain terms. It uses language capable of only one interpretation, and that as showing an intent to condemn the land indicated in praesenti. The order included not only a legislative expression of the will of the board adopting it that a street should be opened, but, in addition thereto, sought to perform the judicial act of taking the land of citizens, rendered necessary under the legislation involved in the order. To the extent which it sought to accomplish this last object it was judicial.

As to the action of the board, so far as judicial, being in excess of its jurisdiction, we entertain no doubt. It is true that boards of supervisors, city councils, and like local boards and commissions are not within the inhibition of section 1 of article 3 of our state constitution, and may be invested with powers belonging to either or all of the three departments of our government. People v. Supervisors, 8 Cal. 60; People v. Provines, 34 Cal. 532; Kimball v. Alamenda Co., 46 Cal. 19. The objection to that portion of the order is not simply that it seeks to exercise judicial power, but that it involves an exercise of such power not conferred by any statute, and in a manner which no statute can authorize. When land within a street is "condemned, appropriated, acquired, set apart, and taken for public use," it would seem that the last act in the series essential to vest in the public a right to its use as a thoroughfare is accomplished. It is evidence, not of an intention to take and condemn the land in the future, as provided in the statute we have referred to, but of a present condemnation, segregation, and dedication to the use of the public. It follows from these views that the court below erred in holding that Order No. 2,319 was and is not a judicial act, and the judgment of the court below is reversed, and the cause remanded.

BEATTY, C. J. I concur in the judgment.

BRICKELL v. BOARD OF SUP'RS OF CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO.

(No. 15,027.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 3, 1894.)

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Petition by Brickell for a writ to have an order of the board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco reviewed. From a judgment dismissing the petition, petitioner appeals. Reversed.

J. C. Bates, for appellant. T. Z. Blakeman and John D. Durst, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. On the authority of Wulzen v. Board, 35 Pac. 353, (No. 14,401; this day decided,) the judgment is reversed.

101 Cal. 32

GOULD v. STAFFORD. (No. 19,214.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 4, 1894.)

Water Rights—Injunction—Amended Answer—When Proper—Law of the Case—Diversion by Tenants—Liability of Riparian Owner.

1. In an action by a lower to restrain an upper riparian owner on the same stream from diverting water through a certain small flume by temporary dams, the answer averred, inter alia, that defendant, as such owner, and also by prescriptive right, was entitled to divert more water than such flume could carry. Held, that it was not an abuse of discretion, after reversal on appeal of the judgment rendered, to permit defendant to file an amended answer omitting such defense, and averring that at the time of the alleged diversion a part of his riparian land was leased to certain tenants over whom he had no control, and who were alone liable if more water was diverted through the flume than the leased land was entitled to.

2. As an amendment to a pleading may be allowed to correct certain enumerated mistakes, or "a mistake in any other respect," and "in other particulars," (Code Civil Proc. § 473,) the court may allow an amendment to an answer, though it is mainly to correct a mistake of law made by defendant's attorney.

3. The court found, on sufficient evidence, that defendant leased part of his riparian land, and by agreement constructed such flume to carry water to the leased land; that the tenants were bound to keep it in repair, and "had actual and exclusive possession and control of" it and the premises; that defendant "had nothing to do or say as to the quantity of water that was diverted into said flume;" that he did not cause the water to flow through such flume, but that such tenants caused it to so flow; and that before suit was brought no notice was given him that there was a wrongful diversion of such water, nor any demand made to abate the alleged nuisance. Held, that defendant was not liable for such diversion.

4. In view of such findings, it was immaterial whether the court erred in findings as to the quantity of water to which plaintiff was entitled, the quantity of which he was deprived, and the damage done him, or in permitting defendant to cross-examine plaintiff's witness touching the diversion of water by third persons.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Santa Barbara county; W. B. Cope, Judge.

Action by Frederick S. Gould against O. A. Stafford for damages, and to enjoin the diversion of water. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

For prior reports, see 18 Pac. 879, and 27 Pac. 543.

Geo. H. Gould and John J. Boyce, for appellant. B. F. Thomas, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. This action was brought by plaintiff, who is a lower riparian proprietor on a stream, to restrain the defendant, who is an upper riparian proprietor on the same stream, from diverting water therefrom. Judgment went for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. The case has been here twice before. 77 Cal. 66, 18 Pac. 879; 91 Cal. 146, 27 Pac. 543. On the first appeal a judgment in favor of defendant was reversed on account of defective finding, and it was said in the opinion that under the pleadings, as they then stood, evidence of diversions of water by third persons would be admissible only as to the amount of damages (which were waived by plaintiff;) and that findings as to the acts of certain Chinamen and others were irrelevant, and against the admissions of the answer. Certain principles as to riparian rights were also stated for the guidance of the court on another trial. When the case went down to the trial court, defendant asked leave to file a certain amended answer, to which the plaintiff objected. The court allowed it to be filed, and plaintiff excepted, preserving his exception in a bill of exceptions; but on the second trial judgment was rendered for plaintiff, so that the objection to the amended answer was not presented to this court on the second appeal. Upon the second appeal the judgment for plaintiff was reversed, mostly upon points which do not arise on the present appeal. When the case went down the second time, plaintiff, in addition to the exception which he had preserved as before stated, moved the court to strike out the said amended answer, and, his motion having been denied, he again excepted.

The point most elaborately argued by appellant is that the court erred in permitting respondent to file his amended answer. It appears that the alleged wrongful diversion was made through a small flume, into which the water was turned from time to time by temporary obstructions or dams across the stream. In the original answer it was averred, among other things, that defendant, as a riparian owner, and also by virtue of a prescriptive right, was entitled to divert more water than said flume could carry; and he thus justified the diversion. In the amended answer he omitted the defense just stated, and averred that during the time of the alleged diversion a part of his riparian land was leased to certain tenants over whom he had no control; and that if during said time more water was diverted through said flume than said leased riparian land was entitled to, said tenants alone are liable therefor to plaintiff. And it is to this difference between the two answers that plaintiff mainly objects. We cannot say that the court abused its discretion in permitting the amended answer. The rule is that courts will be liberal in allowing an amendment to a pleading when it does not seriously impair the rights of the opposite party, and particularly an amendment to an answer. A defendant can generally set up as many defenses as he may have. Appellant contends that the affidavits upon which the motion to amend was made show that it was based mainly on a mistake of law made by respondent's attorney; but, assuming that to be so, still the power of a court to allow an amendment is not limited by the character of the mistake which calls forth its exercise. The general rule that a party cannot be relieved from an ordinary contract which is in its nature final, on account of a mistake of law, does not apply to proceedings in an action at law while it is pending and undetermined. Pleadings are not necessarily final until after judgment. Section 473, Code Civil Proc., provides that the court may allow an amendment to a pleading to correct certain enumerated mistakes, or "a mistake in any other respect," and "in other particulars." The true rule is well stated in Ward v. Clay, 82 Cal. 502, 23 Pac. 50, 227. In the case at bar evidence of the lease was given at the first trial, and we cannot see that the amendment before the second trial put plaintiff in a position any different from that which he would have occupied if the amendment had been made before the first trial.

Appellant contends that the court erred in allowing respondent to ask, on cross-examination of Packard, a witness for appellant, certain questions touching the diversion of water by third persons, and argues that said questions were contrary to the law of the case as settled by this court on the first appeal. We think, however, that, considering the testimony of the witness in chief, the said questions were not beyond the legitimate scope of cross-examination. As to "the law of the case," it may be remarked that what the court said on the first appeal related entirely to the attempt of the defendant, under the pleadings as they then stood, to prove diversions by third persons as a defense. It had nothing to do with the question of proper cross-examination, and, of course, nothing to do with the right of respondent, under the present answer, to show the acts of his tenants. But in fact this point, and all other points made by appellant, except his objection to the amendment of the answer, are unimportant and immaterial if the findings of the court are to stand to the effect that if any damage was done to appellant by the alleged diversion of water it was done, not by respondent, but by his tenants, for whose acts he is not responsible. The court found that respondent leased a portion of his riparian land to certain tenants for a term of five years, and agreed to construct, and did construct, a six-inch flume, by which the water of the stream could be carried to the leased land, the tenants to keep the flume in repair; that respondent "had nothing to do or say as to the quantity of water that was diverted into said flume;" that during the times stated in the complaint the said tenants "had actual and exclusive possession and control of said premises and of the flume;" that during said time respondent did not erect any dam or obstruction across said stream, or prevent any part of its waters from flowing down the same, or cause any part thereof to be wasted or carried away from appellant's riparian land; that all of the water which flowed through said flume was caused to so flow by said tenants, over whom respondent had no control; and that, prior to the commencement of this action, no notice was given respondent that there was a wrongful diversion of water through said flume, nor any demand made to abate the alleged nuisance. It is apparent that if these findings of fact are justified by the evidence, and constitute in law a defense, then it would be useless to inquire whether the court committed any error in arriving at the other findings about the quantity of water to which appellant was entitled, the quantity of which he was deprived, the damages done him, etc.

We do not deem it necessary to discuss here the general principle of law which applies to the question whether or not, in any particular case, a landlord is responsible for wrongful acts or nuisances done or created by his tenants. The general rule is, itself, well established; but its application to particular facts is often difficult, and there have been many decisions where the rule was invoked. Sufficient was said on the subject in the opinion of this court on the last appeal, both as to the rule and as to its application to the particular facts in the case at bar. 91 Cal. 146, 27 Pac. 543. It is enough to say here that the evidence is not insufficient to support the findings on this subject above specially stated; and that those findings justify the legal conclusion that respondent was not liable, under the circumstances, for the said diversions of water by his tenants. This being so, the judgment must be affirmed. Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: DE HAVEN, J.; FITZGERALD, J.

100 Cal. 496

DOUGHERTY et al. v. BARTLETT et al.

(No. 15,265.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 23, 1893.)

TESTAMENTARY TRUST—EQUITABLE ACTION TO ENFORCE—WHEN MAINTAINABLE.

Beneficiaries under a will cannot maintain a suit in equity against the executors and trustees under the will as such, and also as individuals, to enforce the performance of the trust, for an accounting of the trust estate, and to declare void certain orders of the probate court in relation to such estate, before a final settlement of the accounts of such trustees, and distribution by the probate court.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; J. C. B. Hebbard, Judge.

Bill by Mary S. Dougherty and others against Columbus Bartlett, Martin Bacon, and Frank Barker, as trustees and executors under the will of William Walkerly, deceased, and also as individuals, to enforce the performance of the trust, for an accounting, and to declare void certain orders of the probate court relating to such estate. From a judgment sustaining a demurrer to and dismissing the bill, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

The plaintiffs are nieces and nephews of the decedent, and allege in the bill, in substance, various wrongful and fraudulent acts and omissions on the part of defendants in connection with the management of the estate, resulting in loss and waste; the appropriation of trust funds to their own use; collusion with the widow of deceased, whereby she has obtained and is about to obtain more than she is entitled to under the will; and that certain orders of the probate court, setting apart certain property as a homestead for the widow, making family allowances, and appointing and compensating an attorney to represent absent or minor heirs, were void for want of jurisdiction.

B. B. Newman, (Fox & Kellogg, of counsel,) for appellants. H. C. Firebaugh, for respondents.

DE HAVEN, J. The demurrer to the complaint was properly sustained. Until distribution of the estate of William Walkerly, deceased, by the probate court, the respondents, Bartlett, Bacon and Barker, hold the property of said deceased as executors of his will, and they must account to the probate court for all property of the estate of said deceased received by them as such executors, and for their management of the same prior to its distribution under the will of deceased; and it is for the court to determine what, if any, commissions the said named respondents shall be entitled to receive for their services as executors of said will, and also to determine in the settlement of the accounts of the said executors what moneys expended by them in the discharge of their duties were properly expended, and so chargeable to the estate represented by them, and whether they have exercised ordinary care in the management of the property of said estate, or whether they have mismanaged the same, or permitted waste thereof. It was a question solely for the consideration of the probate court whether an attorney should be appointed to represent absent or minor heirs, and, if so appointed, the amount of compensation to be allowed him. The probate court also had jurisdiction to make the order setting apart a homestead for the widow of the deceased, Walkerly, and to make the order for a family allowance; and no facts are alleged in the complaint showing that such orders were fraudulently procured by the defendants, or either of them, as the result of any misrepresentation or concealment of facts; nor does it even appear from the allegations of the complaint that the court committed any error in making such orders, even if we could review the same in this action. The fact, if it be one, that the defendant Blanche M. Walkerly openly asserts that she will commence legal proceedings against the other defendants, as trustees under the will, to compel them to to pay her out of the trust estate the further sum of $21,000, does not give to plaintiffs any cause of action against her or the other defendants. It is unnecessary to attempt any synopsis of the voluminous complaint filed in this action, or to notice more particularly its several allegations. We do not understand from the complaint that the executors, who are also the trustees under the will of the deceased, have failed "to annually distribute the residue of the rents and profits of the trust estate" among the nephews and nieces of the deceased, as directed by the will, or that this is an action to enforce this particular duty of the defendants, who are named as executors and trustees under the will; and we express no opinion upon the question whether such an action could be maintained in a court of equity prior to the distribution of the estate under the will. Judgment affirmed.

We concur: FITZGERALD, J.; McFARLAND, J.; GAROUTTE, J.; PATERSON, J.; HARRISON, J.

101 Cal. 89

COOK et al. v. FOWLER et al. (No. 19,220.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 8, 1894.)

ACTION BY PARTNERSHIP — SUFFICIENCY OF COMPLAINT.

In an action by a copartnership, the failure of plaintiff to make, file, and publish a certificate stating the names and place of residence of the copartners, as required by Civil Code, §§ 2466, 2468, is matter of defense, and compliance with such provisions need not be averred and proved by plaintiff.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Luis Obispo county; V. A. Gregg, Judge.

Action by Neil Cook and Sterling Cook, copartners under the name of Cook Bros., against Tilman Fowler and others, on a promissory note. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Thomas Rhodes, for appellants. Venable & Goodchild, for respondents.

SEARLS, C. Defendants appeal from a final judgment against them and in favor of plaintiffs for $561.75 and costs upon a promissory note made by defendants. There is no statement or bill of exceptions. There is but a single point made by appellant. It is that the complaint shows that plaintiffs were copartners under a designation not showing the names of the persons interested as partners, and that they have failed to aver or prove a compliance with the provisions of sections 2466 and 2468 of the Civil Code, by filing and publishing a certificate stating the names and place of residence of the copartners as therein provided. The point is not well taken. The failure to make, file, and publish the certificate in question is matter of defense, to be set up by defendants, and, not having been so taken, is waived. Phillips v. Goldtree, 74 Cal. 151, 13 Pac. 313, and 15 Pac. 451; Carlock v. Cagnacci, 88 Cal. 600, 26 Pac. 597. The judgment appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: VANCLIEF, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

(101 Cal. 105)

EGENER v. JUCH et al. (No. 19,155.)[1]

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 11, 1894.)

ATTACHMENT—NONRESIDENTS

Persons actually in the state, engaged in professional work, are not "nonresidents," within the meaning of Code Civil Proc. §§ 537, 538, authorizing attachment in certain cases.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; Walter Van Dyke, Judge.

Action by George Egener against Emma Juch and others. From an order dissolving the attachment issued, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Jay E. Hunter and Creighton & Creighton, for appellant. W. E. Dunn, for respondents.

McFARLAND, J. This is an appeal by plaintiff from an order of the lower court dissolving an attachment. The validity of the attachment depended upon the question whether or not the respondents were "not residing" or "nonresidents" of this state at the time the writ issued. Code Civil Proc. §§ 537, 538. At that time they were actually in the state engaged in their professional work, and were served personally in the state with summons. The affidavits used on the motion conflicted as to where their legal residence was, and, considering the decision of this court in Hanson v. Graham, 82 Cal. 631, 23 Pac. 56, to the effect that "the residence referred to by the attachment law is an actual, as contradistinguished from a constructive or legal, residence or domicile," we cannot say that the court below was wrong in holding that respondents were not nonresidents, within the meaning of the sections of the Code above referred to. The order appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: DE HAVEN, J., FITZGERALD, J.

(101 Cal. 107)

WATTERSON v. SALDUNBEHERE. (No. 18,172.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 17, 1894.)

WATER RIGHTS—APPROPRIATION—JOINDER OF CAUSES.

1. The right to the use of water flowing in a stream may be acquired by actual appropriation, without compliance with the provisions of Civil Code, § 1410 et seq., for acquisition of water rights.

2. One may in the same action seek damages for injury to water rights and injunction.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Mono county; W. H. Virden, Judge.

Action by Mark Watterson against Domingo Saldunbehere. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appealed. Affirmed.

N. D. Anderson and Chas. L. Hayes, for appellant. Richard S. Miner, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. The plaintiff brought this action to recover damages for the diversion and pollution of a stream of water in Mono county, and to obtain an injunction restraining the further diversion and pollution thereof. The plaintiff had judgment, from which, and from an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals.

The facts of the case may be briefly stated as follows: Prior to March 23, 1881, one J. P. McLaughlin made application at the proper United States land office to purchase certain land situate in Mono county, and containing 221 55-100 acres, under the desert-land act of March 3, 1877. On the day named he received from the receiver of the land office a final receipt showing full payment of the land applied for. On July 22, 1887, McLaughlin, by a bargain and sale deed duly executed and recorded, conveyed to the plaintiff the said land, together with all and singular the tenements, hereditaments, and appurtenances thereto belonging. On September 18, 1891, a United States patent for the said land was issued in the name of McLaughlin, and thereafter delivered to the plaintiff. Extending through the said land, for a distance of about one and a half miles, was a small, natural water course, known as "Dexter Canyon Creek," which carried, in ordinary seasons, about 150, and never more than 250, inches of water. For more than 10 years before the commencement of this action, plaintiff and his grantor had appropriated, and been using, during the spring, summer, and fall months, when not interrupted by defendant, all the waters of this stream for irrigating the said land, for watering stock, and for domestic, culinary, and other useful purposes, and all the waters of the stream were necessary for such purposes. By thus using the water to irrigate the land they had reclaimed the same, or a large part thereof, from its desert condition, and made it productive and valuable grass land. In June, 1892, plaintiff was irrigating his land, and was raising thereon a valuable crop of grass, and was also pasturing thereon, and watering from the stream, about 3,000 head of sheep. The defendant was engaged in the business of raising and grazing sheep, and was traveling about with them from place to place to find pasturage. Early in June, 1892, he drove about 6,000 head of his sheep upon the land lying along the banks of the said creek, and some two and a half miles above the plaintiff's land, and kept them there for more than a month. He allowed his sheep to pass over, into, and up and down the stream, thereby breaking down its banks, which were sandy and friable, and causing large quantities of sand and sediment to fall into the water, and to be carried down and deposited upon plaintiff's land, to its injury. The water was also made unfit to be used for the purpose of irrigating plaintiff's land or watering his sheep, and he was damaged thereby. Early in July, defendant constructed a ditch, and by means of it diverted from the stream about one-sixth of all the water flowing therein, and threatened to continue such diversion. Plaintiff commenced this action on the 21st of July, 1892, and obtained a temporary injunction, which, by the final judgment, was made perpetual.

---

[1] For opinion on rehearing, see 35 Pac. 873.

The findings are 18 in number, and are very full and explicit. The contention of appellant is that 14 of these findings, covering all of the disputed questions in the case, were not justified by the evidence, and hence that the judgment should be reversed. It would subserve no useful purpose to review the findings separately, and state the evidence which tends to support them. After carefully going over the record, I am satisfied that there was evidence amply sufficient to justify them all, and that the judgment cannot, therefore, be reversed on this ground.

The objection that neither McLaughlin nor the plaintiff ever made any valid appropriation of the water, for the reason that they never complied with the provisions of the Civil Code for the acquisition of water rights, (section 1410 et seq.,) is without merit. The evidence clearly shows that McLaughlin and the plaintiff had actually appropriated and used the water for more than 10 years before the defendant interfered with it, and the law is now settled that, where there has been an actual appropriation of water, a right to it is acquired, without following the course laid down in the Code. De Necochea v. Curtis, 80 Cal. 397, 20 Pac. 563, and 22 Pac. 198; Burrows v. Burrows, 82 Cal. 564, 23 Pac. 146; Wells v. Mantes, (Cal.) 34 Pac. 324.

There was no error in overruling the demurrer to the complaint. The two causes of action were properly united, and each stated facts sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to the relief demanded.

There was no error in the refusal of the court to grant the defendant's motion for a nonsuit. The evidence clearly showed that the plaintiff had been damaged by the acts of defendant, and was entitled to relief.

There was also no error in the ruling of the court sustaining the plaintiff's objection to the following question asked the witness Juan Inda by defendant: "Did you herd and water sheep on the North fork of Dexter Canyon creek in the years 1885, '86, '87, '88, '89, '90, '91, and '92?" The objection was that the evidence sought, as to all the years other than 1892, was immaterial and incompetent, and we think it was clearly so. We advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: VANCLIEF, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

100 Cal. 635

BROWN v. CAMPBELL et al. (No. 15,057.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 30, 1893.)

ATTACHMENT—PROPERTY SUBJECT TO LEVY—LIMITATION OF ACTIONS—RES JUDICATA.

1. An attachment of property fraudulently conveyed by a judgment debtor, at the time of the attachment standing in the names of the fraudulent grantee and trustees in a trust deed of the property made by such grantee to secure a debt, is in legal effect an attachment of the surplus moneys arising from a subsequent sale of the property under the trust deed.

2. A foreign judgment does not make one a judgment creditor in California, within the rule permitting only judgment creditors to attack a conveyance for fraud; and, until a judgment is obtained in California on the foreign judgment, the statute of limitations does not begin to run.

3. Though a judgment has not been appealed from, it is not a bar to a subsequent action between the same parties, involving the same subject-matter, if the time for appeal has not expired, since the action in which such judgment was rendered must be deemed still pending. Code Civil Proc. § 1049.

4. Findings will not be disturbed on appeal where there is a substantial conflict in the evidence.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; William T. Wallace, Judge.

Action by one Brown against Campbell and Kent, trustees in a trust deed executed by plaintiff, to recover surplus moneys left after a sale of the property under the trust deed, and payment of the debt secured thereby. One Priest, who claimed the surplus, was made a defendant, and filed an answer and cross complaint, and the Anglo-Californian Bank was permitted to intervene. From a judgment for defendant Priest, and an order denying a new trial, plaintiff and the Anglo-Californian Bank appeal. Affirmed.

James A. Waymire and Wm. T. Baggett, for appellants. T. Z. Blakeman and H. C. Campbell, for respondents.

DE HAVEN, J. This action was originally brought by the plaintiff against the defendants Campbell and Kent to recover the sum of $2,549.50, surplus in their hands, arising upon the sale of certain real property conveyed to them in trust to secure an indebtedness of plaintiff to the San Francisco Savings Union. These defendants answered, admitting that, after the payment of plaintiff's indebtedness secured by the trust deed, there remained in their hands the sum demanded by plaintiff; but they also alleged that one Priest claimed to be entitled to recover such surplus, and they asked for an order requiring him to be brought into court as a party to the action, and that they be permitted to pay the fund in controversy into court, to be disposed of by the judgment in the action. This order was made, and thereafter Priest filed an answer, and also a cross complaint, in which he alleged, in substance, that, prior to the sale of the real property by the defendants Campbell and Kent under the deed of trust, he had levied an attachment upon such property in an action brought by him against one Joseph Brown in one of the superior courts of this state to enforce a personal demand, and in that action he recovered a judgment on April 5, 1887, for a sum exceeding $8,000; and that he again attached the same property, prior to the sale under the trust deed, in another action brought by him in this state against Joseph Brown, and in which latter action he recovered a judgment against Brown, on January 8, 1888, for the sum of $9,353.50. The cross complaint further alleges "that both of said judgments are for one and the same cause of action, and both were recovered against the said Joseph Brown (who was not a resident of the state of California) upon constructive service of summons." Priest further alleged in his cross complaint that the land sold under the trust deed was the property of his said debtor, Joseph Brown, and was by him conveyed to the plaintiff on October 3, 1883, for the purpose of hindering, delaying, and defrauding the creditors of such debtor. The Anglo-Californian Bank was also permitted to intervene, and claims a right to a portion of the fund in controversy by virtue of a mortgage executed by the plaintiff subsequent to the date of the deed of trust above referred to. The plaintiff and the intervener demurred to the cross complaint of the defendant Priest, upon the ground, among others, that the cause of action therein stated is barred by certain sections of the Code of Civil Procedure, prescribing the limitation for actions, and, the demurrer being overruled, they filed an answer to the cross complaint. The action was tried by the court without a jury, and, upon the findings made, judgment was rendered in favor of the defendant Priest, in accordance with the prayer of his cross complaint. The plaintiff and the Anglo-Californian Bank, intervener, have appealed.

The questions arising upon this appeal are: First. Did the defendant Priest secure a lien upon the fund in controversy by reason of the attachment proceedings in either of his actions against Joseph Brown? Second. Is the cause of action stated in the cross complaint barred by the statute of limitations? Third. Is the right of Priest to the relief given him by the judgment appealed from barred by a judgment in a former action brought by him against the plaintiff and the other defendants, and which involved substantially the same matters embraced in the cross complaint in this action? And, lastly, are the findings of the court justified by the evidence?

In an action against a nonresident for the recovery of money, when there has been no personal service of process on the defendant within the state in which the action is pending, and no appearance therein by the defendant, no judgment can be given, other than one in the nature of, or having the effect of, a judgment in rem, against such property of the nonresident as may have been specifically attached in such action. Anderson v. Goff, 72 Cal. 65, 13 Pac. 73; Blanc v. Mining Co., 95 Cal. 524, 30 Pac. 765; Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 741; Cooper v. Reynolds, 10 Wall. 308. In this latter case, in discussing the effect of a judgment in an action brought to establish a personal demand against a nonresident only constructively served with process, and in which an attachment is levied upon the property of the defendant, Mr. Justice Miller, speaking for the supreme court of the United States, said: "If the defendant appears, the cause becomes mainly a suit in personam, with the added incident that the property attached remains liable, under the control of the court, to answer to any demand which may be established against the defendant by the final judgment of the court; but, if there is no appearance of the defendant, and no service of process upon him, the case becomes in its essential nature a proceeding in rem, the only effect of which is to subject the property attached to the payment of the demand which the court may find to be due to the plaintiff. * * * No general execution can be issued for any balance unpaid after the attached property is exhausted. No suit can be maintained on such a judgment in the same court, or in any other; nor can it be used as evidence in any other proceeding not affecting the attached property; nor could the costs in that proceeding be collected of defendant out of any other property than that attached in the suit." Such being the well-established rule of law, it follows that, inasmuch as Joseph Brown was a nonresident, and not personally served with process within this state in either of the actions of Priest v. Brown, the question whether there was made in either of those actions any valid attachment upon the property involved here is a material one; for, unless such attachment was made, the defendant Priest is not entitled to subject the fund in controversy here to the payment of either of the judgments obtained by him against Joseph Brown. It is argued by the appellant that the attachment in neither of the actions of Priest v. Brown binds the surplus which afterwards came into existence by the sale of the real property upon which the attachments were previously levied. This contention, although a plausible one upon its first statement, is, in our opinion, not sound. The attachment, at least in the second action of Priest v. Brown, was levied upon the entire interest of the judgment debtor in the land described in the trust deed. If, as the court below found, that land was originally conveyed to the plaintiff by the judgment debtor for the purpose of defrauding the creditors of the latter, and the trust deed was accepted by the San Francisco Savings Union without notice of this fact, then the interest remaining in the judgment debtor, subject to attachment and execution by his defrauded creditors, was the entire interest reserved to the fraudulent grantee by the terms of the trust deed, viz. the right to a reconveyance upon payment of the indebtedness secured by the deed, and, in case of default in its payment, and a sale of the land in accordance with the terms of the trust deed a right to the surplus which might come from the proceeds of the sale after satisfaction of the debt secured. This right so reserved constituted an equitable interest in the land, and it was this equitable interest which was attached by the defendant Priest; and, when the land was subsequently sold under the trust deed, the attachment immediately fastened upon the surplus moneys realized by the sale. The right to recover these moneys in the event of a sale of the land by the trustees was a part of the thing attached in levying upon the entire equitable interest reserved to the fraudulent grantee by the trust deed. A conveyance by the plaintiff of all his interest in the land attached prior to its sale under the trust deed, would have vested in his grantee, without notice of the rights of the creditors of Joseph Brown, the equitable right to such surplus, (Eddy v. Smith, 13 Wend. 488,) and the same right would have passed to a purchaser under an execution sale of plaintiff's interest in the land (Coats v. Stewart, 19 Johns. 298;) and, if the right to recover such surplus follows a conveyance of the land out of which the surplus arises, and passes under an execution sale of the land itself, it would seem clear that such right would also be subject to the lien of an attachment levied upon the land, or upon such an interest therein as gives to the owner the right to demand and recover such surplus from the person in whom the legal title may have been vested in trust. "An equity of redemption in real estate is subject to the lien of a judgment. If, before the sale under a decree of foreclosure, the judgment is docketed against the defendant, it would be a lien on the surplus proceeds arising from the sale." 2 Freem. Judgm. (2d Ed.) § 349. And we think it equally true that if, before the sale of the equity of redemption, either under a decree of foreclosure or under a power, a valid attachment is levied upon the equity of redemption, such attachment is a lien upon the surplus proceeds, and they would be subject to be applied, upon execution, to the satisfaction of a judgment in favor of the attaching creditor in the action in which the attachment is issued. If it were otherwise, the lien of an attachment upon such equity of redemption could be defeated by a sale of the property out of which the equity arises, thus destroying the whole object of the attachment, and rendering it entirely barren of any beneficial results to the plaintiff procuring the issuance of the writ. Our conclusion upon this point is that the defendant Priest, by virtue of the attachment proceedings in Priest v. Brown, acquired the right to subject the surplus proceeds arising from the sale of the land attached to the satisfaction of the judgment obtained by him in that action. The attachment of the judgment debtor's interest in the land then standing in the names of his grantee and the trustees named in the trust deed, was, in legal effect, an attachment of the surplus moneys arising from the subsequent sale.

2. The cause of action stated in the cross complaint is not barred by either section 343, or subdivision 4 of section 338, of the Code of Civil Procedure. The defendant's cause of action to subject the fund in controversy, or the property from which it was derived, to the payment of the indebtedness due to him from Joseph Brown, did not accrue at the date of the alleged fraudulent conveyance, but only when he obtained a judgment against his debtor upon which an execution would issue in this state. The general rule as to the time when a creditor acquires the right to maintain an action to set aside a fraudulent conveyance made by his debtor is thus stated at page 522, second edition, of Bump on Fraudulent Conveyances: "No creditor can be said to be delayed, hindered, or defrauded by any conveyance until some property out of which he has a specific right to be satisfied is withdrawn from his reach by a fraudulent conveyance. Such specific right does not exist until he has bound the property by judgment, or by judgment and execution, as the case may be, and has shown that he is defrauded by the conveyance in consequence of not being able to procure satisfaction of his debt in a due course of law. Then, and then only, he acquires a specific right to be satisfied out of the property conveyed, and shows that he is a creditor, and is delayed, hindered, and defrauded by the conveyance." In accordance with this rule, it has been held in this state that the statute of limitations does not begin to run against such an action by a creditor until he has obtained such a judgment against his debtor, because until then he has no right of action. Forde v. Insurance Co., 50 Cal. 302; Ohm v. Superior Court, 85 Cal. 545, 26 Pac. 244. Nor would the cause of action then accrue if the creditor had not discovered the facts constituting the fraud upon his rights. Gates v. Andrews, 37 N. Y. 657. In construing a statute of the state of New York similar to subdivision 4 of section 338 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as applied to an action by a creditor to set aside a fraudulent conveyance of his debtor, the court of appeals in that state, in the case last cited, say: "It is urged by the counsel for the respondents that the construction of the above clause is that the action shall be deemed as accruing upon the discovery of the fraud by the party aggrieved thereby, whether his right of action is then perfect or not. I think this construction erroneous. The provision is not that the cause shall be deemed to accrue upon such discovery, but to prevent the running of the statute it shall not be deemed to have accrued before such discovery; thereby providing for a class of cases where the right of action was perfect, but became barred by the statute before the discovery of the facts upon which such right depended." The earliest of the judgments referred to in the cross complaint, and sought to be enforced against the money in controversy here, was not obtained until April, 1887, and the cross complaint in this action was filed in February, 1889, less than two years thereafter. It is true that both judgments mentioned in the cross complaint are based upon a judgment obtained in Texas by the defendant against plaintiff's grantor in the year 1884; but the existence of this Texas judgment in favor of defendant did not make the defendant Priest a judgment creditor in this state, within the meaning of the rule which permits only judgment creditors to attack a conveyance made by the judgment debtor to defraud his creditors. The Texas judgment created an obligation in favor of the defendant, and against plaintiff's grantor, Joseph Brown, but it was an obligation which could not be enforced in this state without suit; and, until defendant recovered his judgment upon it here, he occupied only the position of a creditor at large, without any right to subject any specific property of his debtor within this state to the satisfaction of the obligation created by such foreign judgment. Buchanan v. Marsh, 17 Iowa, 494; Crim v. Walker, 79 Mo. 335; Claflin v. McDermott, 12 Fed. 375; Tarbell v. Griggs, 3 Paige, 207.

3. The plaintiff and the intervener also pleaded, in bar of the right of the defendant Priest to the relief demanded in the cross complaint, a judgment of the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, entered on November 24, 1888, in the action of Priest v. Brown et al., and the said defendant also pleaded the pendency of the same action in abatement of this. In that action the defendant Priest was plaintiff, and the other parties hereto were defendants, and it involved substantially the same matters alleged in the cross complaint; and it was therein adjudged that the conveyance made by Joseph Brown to the plaintiff in October, 1883, was not made with intent to hinder, delay, or defraud the creditors of the former. That judgment was not a bar to the matters alleged in the defendant's answer as a defense, nor to the same matters set out in the cross complaint, and upon which he demanded the relief given him by the court below. It had not become final when the cross complaint was filed, nor yet when the action was tried; and the doctrine of res adjudicata only applies to final judgments. The time to appeal from the judgment of November 24, 1888, had not expired when the cross complaint was filed, and, although no appeal had been taken therefrom, the action was still pending within the legal meaning of that term, (Code Civil Proc. § 1049;)[1] and the judgment was not a bar to a retrial of the matters alleged in the cross complaint, under the rule announced by this court in Harris v. Barnhart, 97 Cal. 546, 32 Pac. 589; Naftzger v. Gregg, (Cal.) 33 Pac. 757; In re Blythe's Estate, (Cal.) 34 Pac. 108. But while the judgment in Priest v. Brown et al. was not, for the reason stated, a bar to the cause of action alleged in the cross complaint, still the pendency of that action would have been good ground for the continuance of this until the final determination of the former action, or would have been a sufficient basis for an order dismissing the present action upon motion of the plaintiff, notwithstanding the affirmative relief demanded by the defendant Priest in his cross complaint, and the refusal of the court to have granted either of such motions would, perhaps, have been erroneous; but no such motion was made by the plaintiff, and the trial proceeded without objection, the plaintiff still insisting upon the judgment in Priest v. Brown et al. as an estoppel, and as ground for a judgment in his favor. Under these circumstances we cannot say that the court erred in proceeding to the trial, although it might well have continued the case, of its own motion, until the final determination of the former action.

---

[1] Section 1049 provides that an action is deemed to be pending from the time of its commencement until its final determination upon appeal, or until the time for appeal has passed, unless the judgment is sooner satisfied.

4. It is claimed that the findings are not sustained by the evidence. We think, however, the case falls within the rule which does not permit us to disturb the findings of the trial court when there is a substantial conflict in the evidence relating thereto. We do not deem it necessary to particularly discuss some of the minor points made in the brief of the attorney for the appellant. We have considered them all, and find no error which would justify us in reversing the judgment and order appealed from. Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: FITZGERALD, J.; McFARLAND, J.; HARRISON, J.; GAROUTTE, J.

DONNELLS v. MARTIN. (No. 15,465.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 19, 1894.)

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Santa Clara county; W. G. Lorigan, Judge.

Action by Donnells against Martin. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Craig & Meredith, for appellant. J. C. Campbell, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The findings support the judgment, and there are no specifications of error or insufficiency of evidence. The judgment and order are therefore affirmed.

---

101 Cal. 1

DUFF et al. v. DUFF. (No. 14,968.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 2, 1894.)

PLEADING—AMENDMENT—NEW TRIAL—EVIDENCE —FINDINGS.

1. After a new trial has been granted, it is not error to refuse permission to file a new answer, which does not present any new issue or defense.

2. On motion for a new trial as to the whole case the court may grant it in part and deny it in part, thereby leaving its former determination upon a portion of the issues to remain.

3. Where the order granting a new trial states that it is ordered as to the issues whether there was a valuable consideration paid by defendant for the property, and whether he is the owner thereof, and a consideration of the entire order shows that the concluding clause was used as the equivalent of the conclusion of law to be drawn from the finding on the issue of payment of a valuable consideration, the only triable issue is the payment of a valuable consideration.

4. On a new trial it is proper to exclude evidence on the issues formerly determined, and as to which a new trial has not been granted. Beatty, C. J., dissenting.

5. Admissions by a grantee that he held the property in trust for the grantor are admissible to show that he did not pay a valuable consideration therefor.

6. It is proper for the findings, on a trial of the issue for which a new trial has been granted, to set forth the proceedings on the former trial, the subsequent order granting the new trial, and the findings made on the former trial modified by the order, in addition to the finding on the issue tried.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Humboldt county; Edwin A. Davis, Judge.

Action by Julia K. Duff and another against Robert P. Duff. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

S. M. Buck, W. C. Belcher, and Horace L. Smith, for appellant. J. H. Gillett, J. G H. Weaver, L. D. McKisick, and Wilson & Wilson, for respondents.

HARRISON, J. Upon a former trial of this action the court rendered its decision in favor of the plaintiffs for a portion of the property involved, and in favor of the defendant for another portion. Both parties moved for a new trial, and the court below denied the motion of the defendant and granted that of the plaintiffs, limiting the new trial to the determination of a single issue. From these orders, and the judgment against him, the defendant appealed, and this court affirmed the orders and judgment appealed from. 87 Cal. 104, 23 Pac. 874, and 25 Pac. 265. When the cause again came on for trial in the court below, the defendant, Robert P. Duff, asked leave to file an amended answer, which was refused by the court, and this ruling is now assigned as error. The answer which was presented, and which he asked leave to file, did not, however, present any new issue, or any defense to the action, which was not embraced in the original answer, and the court did not err in denying his request to file it.

At the trial the court excluded certain evidence offered by the appellant, and it is now urged by him that under the order for a new trial he was at liberty to offer any evidence which would tend to establish his ownership of the property as to which the new trial was ordered; while, on the part of the respondents, it is claimed that the new trial was limited to ascertaining whether the appellant had paid a valuable consideration for this property. The closing part of the order by which the new trial was granted, as shown by the record before us, is as follows: "The motion of the plaintiffs is granted, and a new trial ordered as to the issue

Was there a valuable consideration paid for the property conveyed by deed to R. P. Duff in blocks 28 and 51, and is he the owner thereof?" It is claimed by the appellant that in the order itself the word "issue" is written "issues," and the original order has been produced in support of this claim; but, as we view the case, this variance is immaterial. The order itself is in the nature of a "speaking order," inasmuch as it contains matter which is explanatory and illustrative of the mere direction which is given by it. The cause had been tried, and all of the issues of fact found in favor of the plaintiffs, except that the court found that the appellant had paid a valuable consideration for the lands described as being in blocks 28 and 51. Upon the decision thus made the defendant moved for a new trial, alleging as the grounds that the several findings against him were unsupported by the evidence; and in the same order by which a new trial was granted to the plaintiffs as to blocks 28 and 51 his motion for a new trial was denied, and this order was affirmed by this court. It was thus definitely adjudged that William R. Duff was the owner in fee of these blocks in 1863; that Richard Duff entered into the possession thereof as his servant and agent, by virtue of the power of attorney executed to him, and that under this power of attorney he made conveyances of these blocks to Robert P. Duff; that William R. Duff did not in his lifetime, or the plaintiffs thereafter, have any knowledge or information of the said conveyances until within three years before the commencement of this action; and that the plaintiffs' cause of action was not barred by the statute of limitations. The court, in its order granting the new trial as to these blocks, expressed its satisfaction with its previous findings of fact and conclusions of law in every respect except the finding as to the payment of a valuable consideration for the property in these blocks, and expressly declared that all of the findings in relation to the statute of limitations, discovery of facts constituting the fraud, and every issue upon which it was necessary to pass showing the plaintiffs' right to maintain the action, were applicable to these blocks; but was of the opinion that it had not properly weighed the evidence that had been presented upon this question. Accordingly, it granted the motion of the plaintiffs upon the single issue which it had found against them in its decision, viz. the payment of a valuable consideration for the conveyance of these blocks. The right of a party to move for a new trial upon a single issue is well established, (Town Co. v. Neale, 78 Cal. 63, 20 Pac. 372;) and, if the motion be made for a new trial as to the entire action, the court may grant it in part and deny it in part, leaving its former determination upon a portion of the issues to remain. This court has frequently remanded a cause with directions to the trial court to find upon a single issue, leaving the other findings to remain as a part of the record. Marziou v. Pioche, 10 Cal. 545; Soule v. Dawes, 14 Cal. 247; Argenti v. San Francisco, 30 Cal. 463; Kinsey v. Green, 51 Cal. 379; Glascock v. Ashman, 52 Cal. 420; Billings v. Everett, Id. 661; Goodlett v. Investment Co., 94 Cal. 303, 29 Pac. 505; Tunis v. Association, 98 Cal. 285, 33 Pac. 63. The trial court has the same right in this respect before an appeal as this court has after an appeal to limit the scope of a new trial, and the affirmance by this court of such order establishes the correctness of the order made in the individual case.

The closing part of the order, "and is he the owner thereof," is not to be regarded as an additional issue of fact to be also tried anew by the court. While ownership is sometimes called an issuable fact, it is also a mere conclusion of law, dependent upon the actual facts in the case; and the circumstances under which the term was here used show that such is the interpretation to be placed upon it. If the entire question of ownership in these blocks was to be again investigated, the direction for a new trial as to the payment of a valuable consideration therefor was unnecessary and meaningless; for if the appellant was to be at liberty to establish a title in himself, independent of such payment, or to show that he had become the owner through another source than by means of such payment upon the conveyance to him from Richard Duff, it was idle for the court to direct a new trial upon this issue. A consideration of the entire order shows that this closing clause was used by the court as an equivalent of the conclusion of law to be drawn from the finding of fact that should be made upon the evidence that might be presented on the issue of payment of a valuable consideration.

The evidence which the appellant sought to introduce was not only irrelevant to this issue of payment before the court, but it did not tend to establish any ownership in him. The value of this property at the time of the conveyance to him, or of the property whose title was determined at the former trial, as well as the fact that the plaintiffs had received the benefit of certain property not involved in the litigation, was irrelevant to any question of ownership, and could not have tended to establish any ownership in the appellant. Whether William R. Duff was indebted to his father in an amount greater than the value of the property at the time it was conveyed to Robert P. Duff was also irrelevant for the purpose of establishing ownership. The statement by the appellant in his offer to make such proofs that said indebtedness "still exists" was in disproof of the proposition that it formed the consideration for the conveyance, or that the value of this property had been applied as a part payment upon that indebtedness. It did not appear that the indebtedness was a valid, existing obligation against William R. Duff; and the note which was offered in proof thereof by its terms had long since been barred by the statute of limitations. The offer by the appellant to show that he had been in adverse possession of these blocks since 1869 was inconsistent with his previous testimony that he did not take such possession until after the death of his father in 1874, but a sufficient reason for excluding this testimony was that this issue of the statute of limitations had been passed upon at the former trial, and was not now open for investigation. The same observation may be made upon the offer to show that William R. Duff knew about the transfer of these blocks from his father to the appellant. The court properly excluded the offer to show this fact by the deposition of Charles Duff, for the reason that the property in question was not conveyed until after the alleged interview between him and William R. Duff.

The court did not err in receiving the deposition of Ryan. His testimony that the appellant had admitted to him that he held the property in trust tended to show that he did not pay a valuable consideration for it.

After the trial upon the issue for which the new trial had been granted, the court, in making its finding thereon, set forth the proceedings upon the former trial, and the subsequent order of the court granting a new trial, and to the findings that had been made upon the former trial, as modified by the aforesaid order, added its own finding upon the issue tried by it. There was nothing improper in this action of the court. As several of the findings upon the former trial were applicable to the property involved in the subsequent trial, and had been affirmed by both the trial court and this court, it was a matter of convenience that all the findings which related to this property should be placed together, in order that the entire record, including the judgment to be entered thereon, might be more readily examined and understood. If instead of so doing the court had merely found upon the issue upon which the new trial had been granted, the legal effect and result would have been the same, for the conclusion of law to be drawn and the judgment to be entered in the case would not depend upon such finding alone, but would find their support in the entire record. Whichever course the court should adopt would be immaterial, so far as the rights of the parties are concerned, but for the sake of convenient reference the course adopted by the court is preferable. The objection that the other findings were not supported by any evidence at the last trial is trivial, and merits no consideration, as the court expressly states that it adopts the said facts found by the judge from the testimony introduced in the action at the former trial as findings of fact herein, so far as the same are applicable to this property. See Chandler v. Bank, 73 Cal. 320, 11 Pac. 791, and 14 Pac. 864. The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: McFARLAND, J.; GAROUTTE, J.; FITZGERALD, J.; PATERSON, J.

DE HAVEN, J., being disqualified, did not participate in the foregoing decision.

BEATTY, C. J., (dissenting.) With respect to most of the points discussed in the foregoing opinion I concur in the conclusions of the court, but upon one proposition I am obliged to dissent. The findings made on the former trial of the case upon the issues arising under the plea of the statute of limitations do not, as I construe them, apply to those lots (in blocks 28 and 51) as to which the judgment was in favor of defendant, and as to which a new trial was ordered; and therefore I think it was essential to make such findings on the last trial in order to sustain a judgment against the defendant as to those lots. If I am correct in this view, the trial court erred in excluding the evidence offered by the defendant relating to those issues. It is no doubt true that the evidence adduced at the former trial would have sustained findings against the plea of the statute as fully with respect to blocks 28 and 51 as with respect to the other tracts, and the terms of the order granting a new trial show very clearly that the trial judge would have made such findings applicable to all the lots if he had deemed it material. But in fact they were not so made by their terms, and I am satisfied that the judge had no power to extend their operation by his order granting a new trial. I am the more inclined to give weight to this objection because I have never been able to concur in the decision against the defendant upon the questions affecting the integrity of the original transaction out of which the litigation has arisen, and because I am convinced from reading the opinion of the judge who presided at the last trial that he decided the issue to which he confined the evidence—the question, that is to say, whether the defendant paid a valuable consideration for the lots in blocks 28 and 51—not upon his own unbiased views as to the effect of the evidence before him, but upon a mistaken view as to the effect of the judgment of this court affirming the order granting the plaintiffs a new trial. 87 Cal. 104, 23 Pac. 874, and 25 Pac. 265. He seems to have held that, because the evidence on the last trial was substantially the same as that upon which this court sustained the order for a new trial, he was therefore bound by our decision to find the issue against the defendant; but our judgment had no such effect. When a new trial has been ordered by the superior court of an issue as to which the evidence is conflicting, this court affirms the order, even though the evidence may appear to preponderate in favor of the findings vacated by the order; and the effect in all cases is to leave the superior court free to find the fact according to its own independent view of the weight of the evidence, whether it is the same or different from that given at the former trial. The result of this erroneous view of the effect of our former judgment has been to deprive the defendant of a fair trial of the question which most directly involves the whole merits of the controversy. For these reasons I dissent from the judgment.

101 Cal. 82

RANDALL v. DUFF et al. (No. 15,253.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 6, 1894.)

JUDGMENT—RES JUDICATA.

An attorney in fact, without consideration, conveyed land to D., who mortgaged it. The true owners sued D. to set aside the conveyance, and filed a lis pendens. Afterwards, the mortgagee foreclosed without making such owners parties, and R. bought the land, and obtained a deed. He then sued to quiet title against such true owners, and they filed a cross bill, asking to be allowed to redeem. Held, that the final findings and judgment in the suit by such owners against D. were conclusive against R., though neither he nor the mortgagee was a party to it.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Humboldt county; E. A. Davis, Judge.

Action by A. W. Randall against Julia K. Duff and Agnes Duff, heirs at law of William R. Duff, deceased, and William L. Duff, administrator, to quiet title. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Modified and affirmed.

S. M. Buck and W. C. Belcher, for appellant. E. W. McKinstry, Crittenden, Foote & Van Wyke, and L. D. McKisick, for respondents.

BEATTY, C. J. The opinions delivered upon a former appeal herein (see 79 Cal. 115, 19 Pac. 532, and 21 Pac. 610) contain a sufficient statement of the nature of the controversy. The facts of the case of Duff v. Duff (which is inseparably connected with this case) will be found fully set out in an opinion just filed disposing of the third appeal in that case, (35 Pac. 437,) and in the reports of the two former appeals, (71 Cal. 513, 12 Pac. 570, and 87 Cal. 104, 23 Pac. 874, and 25 Pac. 265.) By our former judgment herein the cause was remanded for a new trial, which has been had, resulting in a judgment for the defendants, from which the plaintiff appeals.

The last trial took place subsequent to the affirmance by this court of the judgment and orders under review on the second appeal of Duff v. Duff, 87 Cal. 104, 23 Pac. 874, and 25 Pac. 265, and the principal errors assigned by the plaintiff in support of his present appeal are based upon the several rulings of the superior court, to the effect that the judgment and findings given and made on the second trial of Duff v. Duff, and affirmed here, as above stated, were admissible in evidence and conclusive against him. It is contended that these rulings were erroneous, because this plaintiff was not a party, and is not in privity with any party, to Duff v. Duff. It is true he was not a party to that action, and equally true that there was no reason for making him a party, unless, after his acquisition of R. P. Duff's interest, he had chosen to come in and defend. When the action was commenced, neither he nor the mortgagees under whom he claims had the slightest interest in the controversy, which involved nothing except the question of ownership of the mortgaged premises, subject to their liens. They had no more interest in the result of that controversy than they would have had in a subsequent conveyance of the mortgaged premises by the mortgagor to a third party; and no more right to control or influence its issue than they would have had to prevent such conveyance. The court in that case was dealing only with the right of redemption, and, the validity of their liens being unassailed, it was no concern of the mortgagees which of the contending parties might be adjudged the owner. If that controversy had been concluded by a final judgment in favor of the plaintiffs before the foreclosure proceedings, (as it has been since,) it would scarcely be contended that the mortgagees could have compelled the plaintiffs in the foreclosure suits to retry in every such suit all the issues which had been fully litigated and finally determined in their favor as against the mortgagor. To any claim or attempt to do so the obvious answer would have been that a decree for the sale of all the interest of both sets of contending claimants, and a proper application of the proceeds, was all the relief to which the mortgagees were entitled, so far as the mortgaged premises were concerned; and that, as to the surplus proceeds of the sale and the right of redemption, the decree in Duff v. Duff was conclusive, being a determination between the only parties interested. And as this would have been so in the case supposed, it must be equally so in the case as it is, for, as to the right of redemption, Randall claims and can claim only through Robert P. Duff, and that by title subsequent to the commencement of the action of Duff v. Duff and notice of lis pendens.

The doctrine upon which the plaintiff relies to carry the inception of his title back beyond the commencement of the action of Duff v. Duff, and to the date of the mortgages, has no application to this case. It may be true that the title of a purchaser at foreclosure sale relates back to the mortgage as against the parties to the foreclosure, but it does not cut out the title of a subsequent purchaser, or the lien of a subsequent incumbrancer by recorded conveyance who has not been made a party. On the former appeal of this case we decided that these defendants held substantially the same relation to the mortgagees as a subsequent grantee by recorded conveyance, and to cut off their right of redemption it was equally essential to have made them parties to the foreclosure suits, which was not done. If they had been made parties, this long controversy need never have arisen. Their interest in the land, as well as that of Robert P. Duff, would have passed by the foreclosure sale; and, unless a redemption had been made within six months, the absolute ownership would have vested in the purchasers as of the date of the mortgages. Or, if a redemption had been made, the purchasers and the mortgagees would have had their money, with interest and costs; everything, in short, to which they or either of them had any vested right at the date of the filing of notice of lis pendens in Duff v. Duff; and it would have made no sort of difference to them whether the redemption was made by one or the other of the parties to the action of Duff v. Duff. Whoever redeemed, they would have got all they were entitled to receive. But for some reason the mortgagees of R. P. Duff omitted to make the successors of William R. Duff, of whose claim to the ownership of the mortgaged premises they had at least constructive, and therefore legally sufficient, notice, parties to their foreclosure suits; and whether this omission was due to want of actual knowledge of the matters being litigated in Duff v. Duff, or to a deliberate choice, founded upon whatever motives, the inconvenient consequences must fall upon those to whose fault the omission was due, and not upon innocent parties. Among the consequences of the omission to make the successors of William R. Duff parties to the foreclosure of the Ritchie and Fiebig mortgages was the necessity of prosecuting another action in some form to bar or determine their right of redemption; and the present action by the purchaser under the foreclosure proceedings, though in form an action to quiet title, is in effect nothing more nor less than a suit to foreclose the mortgages as against the plaintiffs in Duff v. Duff, just as their cross complaint is in effect a suit to redeem.

In the form which the litigation assumed through the mistake or choice of the plaintiff and his predecessors he was subjected to the necessity of relitigating in this action the validity and amount of the mortgage liens, but the mortgagees could not by their disregard of the regular procedure for the enforcement of their rights compel the defendants to relitigate with them or their successor, in what is practically another suit to foreclose their mortgages, the rights finally determined in the action of Duff v. Duff. As to all the rights involved in that action plaintiff is the successor of Robert P. Duff, with notice of lis pendens, and a judgment that binds his grantor is equally binding upon him. The fault of his argument on this branch of the case is that it ignores the double relation in which he stands to the premises in controversy. To establish his right he must show himself the successor of the mortgagees, and also of the owner of the land, or right of redemption. As to the latter, he has nothing to rely upon except a proceeding which undoubtedly vested him with whatever interest Robert P. Duff had; but it has been determined in an action between Robert P. Duff and the defendants, of the pendency of which he and his predecessors had notice before the commencement of the proceedings under which he claims, that Robert P. Duff had no title, and that what was apparently his property was, in fact, the property of the defendants. As to the interest so litigated, the judgment and finding are necessarily conclusive, not only upon Robert P. Duff, but upon all who claim under or through him by virtue of such proceeding. We do not find anything in the decisions cited by appellant in support of his contention which is not easily reconcilable with what has been said upon the points discussed, and the propositions laid down are of such an elementary character that we do not deem it necessary to cite the authorities which support them. For the reasons given we do not think the court erred in any of its rulings upon the effect of the judgment and findings in Duff v. Duff, or in admitting (under the stipulation of the parties) the testimony given by R. P. Duff in that action, or the testimony of Ryan.

The second principal assignment of error relates to the rulings of the court construing and applying the order granting a new trial to the plaintiffs in Duff v. Duff upon a single issue. All the questions presented by this assignment have been settled by the recent decisions filed in Duff v. Duff, 35 Pac. 437, which involved substantially the same questions, and it must be held upon the authority of that case that the superior court did not err in any of these rulings. The same may be said of the rulings referred to in the third specification of error. Substantially the same rulings were considered and approved in Duff v. Duff, and can no longer be questioned.

The remaining specifications of error relate to that part of the interlocutory and final decrees in regard to the accounting. With respect to these matters we cannot say that the findings as to the various items and amounts debited to the respective parties are unsupported by the evidence, or that the charge against plaintiff for rents that he might have realized by proper management of the property after it came into his possession was unauthorized. He was not a mortgagee in possession, and was not entitled to the benefit of the rule applicable to that case. So far as relates to his possession of the property, he stood in the shoes of R. P. Duff, and is accountable to the defendants for the rents and profits to the same extent that Duff would have been. But plaintiff was also the successor to the mortgagees, and entitled, as against the defendants, to receive all that was equitably due on the mortgages, including interest on the amount secured up to the date of payment or tender. The superior court allowed him interest on said amount, and other sums with which he is credited only up to March 15, 1885, the date of the filing of the cross bill, upon the ground that it contained a sufficient tender by defendants to stop interest. We do not think, however, that anything contained in the cross bill amounts to a sufficient tender or offer to redeem to stop interest, and therefore we think the court erred in not allowing interest to the plaintiff on the amounts credited to him down to the date fixed by the decree for computing the interest on defendant's credits; wherefore the judgment of the superior court is affirmed in all respects except as to this matter of interest, as to which the judgment is reversed, and the cause is remanded to the superior court with directions to amend its decree by allowing interest to the plaintiff down to March 1, 1892, and by reducing the judgment against him correspondingly.

We concur: HARRISON, J.; McFARLAND, J.; GAROUTTE, J.; PATERSON, J.; FITZGERALD, J.

DE HAVEN, J., being disqualified, did not participate in the foregoing decision.

101 Cal. 37

PARK & LACY CO. v. WHITE RIVER LUMBER CO. et al. (No. 18,205.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 5, 1894.)

SALE OF PERSONAL PROPERTY — WHAT CONSTITUTES — "LEASE" — REPLEVIN — WHEN MAINTAINED.

1. Where the owner of personal property delivers it to another under a writing called a "lease," whereby the title is to remain in the "lessor," and the "lessee" agrees to pay, at a time named, a certain sum as "rent," and providing that, in case of failure to pay such sum at the time specified, any sum paid shall be forfeited, and the "lessor" be entitled to take possession of the property, but that on payment of such sum the title shall pass to the "lessee," the transaction is a sale, and not a lease.

2. Where personal property is delivered to the purchaser under a conditional contract of sale, whereby the seller, on failure of the purchaser to pay the purchase price, may recover the property, an action and recovery of judgment by the seller on the purchase-money note is a confirmation of the sale, and he cannot thereafter maintain an action to recover the property.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Tulare county; Wheaton A. Gray, Judge.

Action by the Park & Lacy Company against the White River Lumber Company and Warren D. Parson to recover possession of certain personal property. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendants appeal. Reversed.

J. A. Hannah, for appellants. Bradley & Farnsworth and H. A. Powell, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. This is an action to recover possession of certain personal property or its value. Defendants appealed from the judgment, and order denying a motion for a new trial. Plaintiff, being the owner of certain personal property, consisting of machinery, etc., gave to defendants a writing, the substantial portions of which are as follows: "Lease. The Park and Lacy Company, of San Francisco, Cal., lessors, hereby lease unto the White River Lumber Company and Warren D. Parson, of Tulare county, Cala., lessees, the following property, for the period of nine months from the 15th day of June, 1889, to wit: [Then follows a description of the property.] Said property is to be used only at Arbor Vitae, Tulare county, state of California, and said lessees are to pay to said lessors, at San Francisco, for the use of said property, the sum of $3,064, payable as follows: All on the 15th day of March, A. D. 1890. Said lessees agree that they will pay the rent at the times and in the manner aforesaid. * * * It is further agreed that time is of the essence of this agreement, and, upon a failure of the lessee strictly to keep and perform any of the covenants or provisions hereof by them agreed to be performed, then and thereupon, without any notice, this instrument shall be deemed to be canceled, and of no further effect as against lessors, and all right and interest of lessee in or to said property shall cease; and all rent by lessee theretofore paid shall belong to lessors as full payment for the prior use of said property, and lessors shall be entitled to take unto their possession all of said property. Said lessors further agree that, upon strict performance by lessee with all the foregoing covenants and provisions by them to be kept and performed, they shall (but not otherwise) have the right to purchase said property by the prompt payment to lessors of the sum of $3,064." During the progress of the trial, respondent's counsel admitted that the $3,064 referred to in the last clause of the contract was the same sum of money that was to be paid as rent, and that, upon the payment of said sum, the title to the property would pass to defendants; and, indeed, it is fairly apparent from the writing itself. This sum of money was not paid at the time agreed upon, and subsequently the present action was brought to secure possession of the property.

The nature of the judgment to be rendered in this case is determined entirely by the construction to be given the writing from which we have quoted. In addition to this writing, upon the same date a mortgage was given to plaintiff by one Hilton, upon certain real estate, to secure a promissory note for $650, payable by defendants to plaintiff, and also to secure the sum of $3,064, specified in the so-called "lease." This paper was not a lease. Calling it a lease did not establish the fact. This is peculiarly a case where there is nothing in a name, for the contents of the paper determine its true character. It is said in Heryford v. Davis, 102 U. S. 235: "What, then, is the true construction of the contract? The answer to this question is not to be found in any name which the parties may have given to the instrument, not alone in any particular provisions it contains disconnected from all others, but in the ruling intention of the parties, gathered from all the language they have used. It is the legal effect of the whole which is to be sought for. The form of the instrument is of little account." That the writing is not a lease is settled beyond all dispute by the one fact that, upon the payment of the amount stated in the contract, the title was to pass irrevocably to defendants. This contract either transferred the title of the property to defendants, and thus is a sale, perfect and complete, or it is a conditional sale; and, as to the character of the judgment that should be rendered, it is immaterial which of these constructions be placed upon it. If it was an absolute sale at the time it was entered into,—and the fact that a mortgage was given to secure the amount therein specified (which was nothing less than the purchase price) is strongly indicative that such was its legal effect,—then plaintiff has no title in the property, and no right to its possession. If it was a conditional sale, the transfer of title being dependent upon a payment of the purchase price, plaintiff still is not entitled to recover, for the following reason: Several months prior to the commencement of the present action, plaintiff brought suit against these defendants and Hilton, mortgagor, to recover upon the aforesaid note, and also to recover the said sum of $3,064, and asked that the real estate mortgaged to secure these amounts be sold, etc. That case went to trial upon issue joined, and, as appears by the opinion of the judge, while a foreclosure of the mortgage was denied, judgment was ordered against these appellants for the full amount claimed by the complaint. The course thus pursued by plaintiff defeats its rights in the present action, if the writing be construed as a conditional sale. If the money had been paid as agreed, the title would have passed to defendants; and, the money not being paid as agreed, the plaintiff could either recover the property or sue for the purchase price. But the pursuit of one remedy necessarily excluded the other. It was not entitled both to the purchase price and the property; and an action brought to recover the purchase price, as was done in this case, is a ratification of the sale. This principle is forcibly put in Bailey v. Hervey, 135 Mass. 174: "They could not treat the transaction as a valid sale and an invalid one at the same time. If they reclaimed their property, it must be on the ground that they elected to treat the transaction as no sale. If they brought an action for the price, they would thereby confirm it as a sale. Two inconsistent courses being open to them, they must elect which they would pursue, and, electing one, they are debarred from the other. Reclaiming the goods would show an election to forego the right to recover the price; but, instead of reclaiming the goods in the first instance, they brought an action against Bailey for the price, made an attachment of his property by trustee process, entered their action in court, and he was defaulted. They were thereupon entitled to judgment against him. * * * They had thus made a decisive election to treat the transaction as a sale before reclaiming the goods, and under such an election the title passed to Bailey." See, also, Butler v. Hildreth, 5 Metc. (Mass.) 49. For the foregoing reasons, it is ordered that the judgment and order be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: PATERSON, J.; HARRISON, J.

---

101 Cal. 115

HOWELL v. HOWELL. (No. 18,250.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 20, 1894.)

APPEAL—DISMISSAL—GROUNDS.

An appeal regularly taken should not be dismissed on respondent's motion merely because there is no bill of exceptions embodying the evidence on which the trial court acted, as the lack of a bill of exceptions is ground rather for a judgment of affirmance.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Tehama county; E. A. Bridgford, Judge.

Action by Elizabeth Howell against J. W. Howell for divorce. Plaintiff obtained judgment by default, and thereafter filed a supplemental bill for alimony. From an order granting alimony, and from orders striking out the answer, and refusing to permit defendant's counsel to cross-examine plaintiff's witnesses, defendant appeals. Plaintiff moves to dismiss the appeal. Motion denied.

L. V. Hitchcock and A. M. McCoy, for appellant. Chas. G. Nagle, (W. Henry Jones, of counsel,) for respondent.

BEATTY, C. J. This is an action by a wife for a divorce on the ground of desertion Defendant, being absent from the state, was not personally served with summons, but, upon substituted service and his default, judgment was given in September, 1890, dissolving the marriage, awarding to the plaintiff the custody of the minor children, and setting apart to her use all the community property in California. More than a year after the entering of this judgment,—in December, 1891,—the defendant having come within the state, the plaintiff filed a petition in the nature of a supplemental complaint, setting forth that the defendant was possessed of a large amount of property in Idaho, the proceeds and increase of community property which he took with him at the time he deserted her, and praying for an order upon him to show cause why he should not be required to pay her permanent alimony, counsel fees, etc. Such order having been made, and served upon the defendant, he appeared and demurred to the petition, and, his demurrer being overruled, afterwards filed an answer. Pending the hearing, other orders were made by the court,—one requiring the defendant to give security for the payment of any judgment that might be recovered against him, and another directing him to appear before a notary and give his deposition. For disobedience of the latter order his answer was stricken out by one order, and by another his attorneys were debarred from cross-examining the witnesses produced by the plaintiff at the hearing of her petition. After an ex parte hearing the court made an order or decree requiring the defendant to pay to the plaintiff $100 per month permanent alimony. From this order or decree, and also from the orders striking out his answer and debarring his attorneys from cross-examining the plaintiff's witnesses, the defendant has appealed, and the plaintiff now moves to dismiss the several appeals because there is no bill of exceptions embodying the papers and evidence upon which the superior court based its action.

When an appeal has been regularly taken from an order of the superior court, the lack of a bill of exceptions embodying and authenticating its proceedings is not a ground for dismissing the appeal, but rather for a judgment of affirmance, if, as is usually the case, there is, in the absence of such bill of exceptions, nothing in the record upon which the action of the superior court can be properly reviewed. It is true, this court has in such cases sometimes granted a motion to dismiss, the effect of the order being the same as a judgment of affirmance. This motion, however, presents an occasion for calling attention to the essential difference between a case in which the applicant has failed to take the proper steps for bringing his appeal before the court, when only the respondent has the right, under our rules, to make a motion to dismiss, and a case in which the appellant has, or is supposed to have, failed to make a record which, on being looked into, will disclose error in the judgment or order appealed from, when a motion to dismiss by the respondent is simply an effort to advance the hearing of the cause on its merits. In such cases the court has, as above stated, sometimes granted the motion when it was very apparent that the record before us was insufficient to enable us to review the errors assigned. But the present case is not of that sort. The principal order appealed from is in form, in substance, and effect a judgment, and it is contended by the appellant that it may be reviewed, and must be reversed, upon the judgment roll. The questions presented are not free from difficulty, and involve the whole merits of the appeal. We are, therefore, not inclined to consider them on this motion in advance of other cases entitled to precedence. Motion denied.

We concur: McFARLAND, J.; DE HAVEN, J.; PATERSON, J.; HARRISON, J.

---

101 Cal. 90

BURBANK v. DENNIS. (No. 19,297.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 11, 1894.)

Deceit—Corporations — Liabilities of Promoters to Stockholders — Evidence—Testimony of Stenographer.

1. Promoters of a corporation, who falsely represent that the price paid by the corporation for property conveyed by them to the corporation is the cost thereof to themselves, are liable to the stockholders for their profits in the transaction, though the property is worth the amount paid by the corporation.

2. Under Code Civil Proc. § 2047, allowing a witness to refresh his memory as to a fact by anything written by himself at the time the fact occurred, where a party examined before trial failed to sign his deposition, the stenographer who took the evidence may refresh his recollection from his transcript of the notes, and testify as to the statements made by such party.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; W. H. Clark, Judge.

Action by A. L. Burbank against L. W. Dennis and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant Dennis appeals. Modified.

Wells, Monroe & Lee and W. P. Gardiner, for appellant. Wilson & Lamme, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. The plaintiff, as a stockholder of the San Gabriel Valley Land & Water Company, a corporation, brought this action against L. W. Dennis, John P. Sanborn, Frederick D. Sanborn, and the San Gabriel Valley Land & Water Company to recover a large sum of money, claiming such moneys to be the property of the corporation defendant, unlawfully held by defendants John P. Sanborn and L. W. Dennis. Judgment was recovered for the sum of $83,000 and interest, and this appeal is prosecuted by defendant Dennis from the judgment and order denying his motion for a new trial.

The following allegations of the complaint give a general idea of the cause of action relied upon to support the recovery: "That during or about the month of March, 1887, the defendants L. W. Dennis, John P. Sanborn, and Frederick D. Sanborn entered into an arrangement and agreement, as promoters, for the purpose of organizing the said defendant corporation, with a view of purchasing certain lands in the said county of Los Angeles, which said lands were to be, after the organization of said corporation, conveyed to the same for the purpose of selling the same, and in which corporation the said defendants Dennis and the Sanborns were to become interested as stockholders. That the said defendant Dennis and the said Sanborns proceeded to procure contracts of purchase, as aforesaid, of the said lands from the various owners of the same, and did so contract with Story, Stetson, and Hall for about 240 acres, with one Ames for about 200 acres, with one J. N. Clapp for about 70 acres, with L. L. Bradbury for about 200 acres, with one Gibbs for about 170 acres, with L. H. Titus for about 200 acres, and with James Ford for about 50 acres, and, according to the terms and conditions of the said various contracts, specified parts and portions of the purchase price of the same were to be paid in cash, and certain other parts and portions of such purchase price were to be deferred, and were to be paid with certain specified rates of interest. That, at all times while the said defendants were procuring the said contracts for the purchase of said lands, they represented to the plaintiff and other of the proposed stockholders of the proposed corporation that they were acting for and on behalf of all the parties interested, or to become interested, in the said venture, and who were to become stockholders of such proposed corporation, and at all times held themselves out as the agents of the said proposed stockholders, who were the parties furnishing the money necessary for the purchase of the said lands." The complaint further alleges that $200,000 was paid to Dennis and Sanborn by the prospective stockholders of the corporation defendant, and that contracts and deeds to these various parcels of land were taken in the name of John P. Sanborn, and partial payments made thereon from the aforesaid money. It is further alleged that, after the incorporation, the lands were conveyed to said corporation defendant, and Dennis, for himself and his associates, the Sanborns, reported to said corporation that they had paid, on account of the purchase price of said lands, $193,666.62, when in truth they had paid but $97,666.62. Plaintiff asks judgment for the difference between the amount actually paid by said Dennis and the amount which he reported to the corporation that he had paid upon the purchase price.

As a salient point in the case, it must further be borne in mind that the contract price at which the syndicate of buyers, that was subsequently merged into the defendant corporation, was to take these various pieces of realty, was the lump sum of $537,000; and the amount alleged to be retained by the defendants in no way affected the amount of the gross sum to be paid by the corporation for the lands, for the entire sum of $193,666.62 was charged to Dennis upon the purchase price of $537,000. But it is claimed that the lands actually cost but $442,000, and consequently the defendants (agents) retained of the corporation's money the overplus, amounting to $95,000. The fact that partial payments, only, were made upon the various tracts, and that the deferred payments were secured by mortgage upon the land, seems to be entirely foreign to the matter under consideration, and, as to the principles of law here involved, the case as made by the complaint stands before us exactly as though it were a cash transaction throughout, the corporation, acting through its agents, buying lands and paying $537,000 therefor, when the actual cost was only $442,000, the agents absorbing the difference. There is no question but that the foregoing facts outline a sound cause of action, and, if the findings of the court and the evidence are in line with such theory, then plaintiffs should recover.

The findings of fact are considerably broader than the allegations of the complaint; but there is no substantial variance between the theory upon which the complaint is formulated and the theory upon which the recovery is had, as evidenced by the findings of the court. Upon inspection it is readily perceived that they rest upon the same general lines. Even conceding that the complaint relies for a judgment upon false representations as to the amounts of first payments made, and that the findings tend to indicate a recovery upon the theory of false representations as to the original cost price of the property, yet it is practically the same thing. If the corporation was bound in law to pay $537,000 for the property, then it was bound in law to pay $193,666.62 when it did pay it. By both complaint and findings the fraud of Sanborn and Dennis practiced upon the prospective stockholders and the corporation is the keystone of the situation. Not alone the fraud practiced is the material element in both complaint and findings, but it is fraud practiced by the defendants as the confidential agents of the parties complaining. Both complaint and findings assert a violation of confidential relations, and a betrayal of the trust reposed in defendants by the parties dealing with them. The measure of damages relied upon in the complaint and recognized by the judgment is the same, and we think that the presence of a substantial variance, as contended for by appellant's counsel, is not apparent.

We now pass to a consideration of the evidence, the findings, and the general principles of law bearing on a question of the character here presented. Frederick D. Sanborn was not served with summons, and the only appellant in this case is L. W. Dennis, with whom alone we are called upon to deal. Some embarrassment arises from the fact that these various tracts of land, during the pendency of the negotiations which led up to the formation of the corporation, were valued in entirety at the lump sum of $537,000, and no valuation was placed upon them in severalty; and it was not until after the formation of the corporation, and at the time when Dennis made his report to the corporation showing the application of the $193,666.62, that any definite idea was had by the stockholders as to the valuation of this realty by parcels, and those valuations, it appears, were arbitrarily placed by Sanborn or Dennis, or both, in that report. From the general conduct of the original negotiations by the investors of this large sum of money, it is apparent that land speculation was rife in Los Angeles county in those days, and haste in the culmination of this transaction was exercised at the expense of future trouble and embarrassments, which a little care, and a little less haste, would readily have averted. We will summarize some of the facts which are beyond dispute: Dennis was a real-estate agent selling on commissions; Sanborn was a speculator in land, of moderate means. Upon March 11, 1887, Sanborn, for himself and various relatives and friends, purchased the Stillson and Hall tract of land for $26,000, and took the deed in the name of his nephew, Frederick D. Sanborn. Upon April 4th he entered into a contract of purchase of the Clapp tract for $20,000,—$1,000 cash; the papers being placed in escrow to await the examination of title. Upon April 5th he entered into a contract to purchase the Ames tract for $60,000, paying thereon $5,000. Upon April 9th he entered into a contract of purchase of the Gibbs tract for $51,000, and paid thereon $5,000. At about the same time he procured either written or oral options for short periods upon the Ford and Bradbury tracts; but no contracts of purchase were entered into, no moneys paid, and the lands finally passed to the corporation at cost price; hence they are not involved here. Sanborn, about this time, also procured an oral option for 30 days upon the Titus tract for $187,000, As to the Stillson and Hall tract and the Clapp tract, Dennis was a stranger, but at least as to some of the other tracts he was an agent of the owners in these negotiations, and probably was also working in the interest of Sanborn. Sanborn was securing these lands for speculative purposes, with the intention of interesting eastern capitalists therein; but about the 20th of April Dennis suggested that home capitalists would interest themselves in the venture. The suggestion was acceptable, and thereupon negotiations with various parties began, which culminated, on the 30th day of April, in a written agreement. In this agreement Dennis, Sanborn, and the other prospective stockholders of the corporation, in consideration of $1 received each from the other, agreed to purchase these lands for $537,000, and to expeditiously organize a corporation to handle them. The interest of each party in the venture was specified therein, Sanborn taking a one-fourth interest, and Dennis a one-fifth. Dennis appears to have been the moving spirit in the negotiations during these times, although Sanborn was near at hand, the agreement itself being drawn up by him. Sanborn in his testimony claims that, dating from the 20th day of April, Dennis was acting for these home capitalists, while Dennis insists that he was acting for Sanborn. The testimony seems to indicate that he was acting for all parties concerned, especially for himself. About the 5th of May it was determined that $200,000 would be required immediately to make first payments, and to keep alive Sanborn's contracts, options, etc.; and soon thereafter that amount was raised, and paid to Dennis to be applied to these purposes. The corporation was finally organized upon the 20th day of May, and, about June the 1st, Dennis reported that he had paid $193,666.62 to Sanborn upon these lands; and in this report the particular amount that had been applied upon the purchase of each tract, and also the amount of the deferred payments upon each tract, and when due, were separately stated. The disposition by Dennis of this $193,666.62 caused the present litigation.

Cook, Stock, Stockh. & Corp. Law, § 651, referring to the promoters of a corporation, says: "A promoter is one who brings about the incorporation and organization of a corporation. He brings together the persons who become interested in the enterprise, aids in procuring subscriptions, and sets in motion the machinery which looks to the formation of a corporation. A promoter is considered in law as occupying a fiduciary relationship towards the corporation." This definition is approved in Water Co. v. Flash, 97 Cal. 610, 32 Pac. 600. As to events transpiring subsequent to April 20th, there is no question but that these defendants, Dennis and Sanborn, stood in the position of promoters of the corporation that was subsequently organized. That these defendants were promoters is well evidenced by the facts already stated, and numerous other circumstances which it is not necessary here to detail. Appellant especially fills the test demanded of a promoter in every respect, and he himself testifies that, as to all the things done and said by him looking towards the transfer of this land, he was the agent of his codefendant Sanborn; and upon this appeal we must agree with him as to such agency. It appears to be conceded by both appellant and respondent that the law bearing upon the facts of this case is well put by Mr. Justice Sharswood in Densmore Oil Co. v. Densmore, 64 Pa. St. 43; and the application of the principles of law there declared to the facts of this case furnishes the legal solution to the present litigation. In that case it is said: "There are two principles applicable to all partnerships or associations for a common purpose of trade or business, which appear to be well settled on reason and authority. The first is that any man or number of men, who are the owners of any kind of property, real or personal, may form a partnership or association with others, and sell the property to the association at any price that may be agreed upon between them, no matter what it may have originally cost, provided there is no fraudulent misrepresentation made by the vendors to their associates. They are not bound to disclose the profit which they may realize by the transaction. * * * The second principle is that where persons form such an association, or begin or start the project of one, from that time they do stand in a confidential relation to each other, and to all others who may subsequently become members or subscribers, and it is not competent for any of them to purchase property for the purpose of such a company, and then sell it at an advance, without a full disclosure of the facts."

The first interrogatory that necessarily presents itself to our consideration is, was Sanborn the owner of these various tracts of land upon April 20th?—that being the date of the inception of the negotiations which terminated in the creation of the corporation, and the date from which the defendants occupied a position of trust and confidence towards those who subsequently became the stockholders of the corporation. As to the Titus tract, Sanborn was in no sense the owner of it. He had not paid a dollar towards its purchase, and had no word of writing to indicate any interest therein. It was bought with the corporation's money, and all transactions pertaining to the sale of it occurred subsequent to the said 20th day of April. The profit of $25,000 charged to the corporation upon this tract is not justified in the law, and the corporation has been injured to that extent. It must be conceded that the Hall and Stillson tract, for the purposes of this case, was owned by Sanborn; and we also think the Clapp, Ames, and Gibbs tracts had been purchased by him, and were owned to such an extent, at least, as to establish his status as the owner thereof prior to his becoming a promoter, within the rule declared in the Densmore Oil Company Case. It may be fairly said that under his contract of purchase he was the owner of these three parcels of realty. See Howell v. Budd, 91 Cal. 342, 27 Pac. 747. Sanborn, being the owner of these tracts prior to the commencement of confidential relations with the complainants, had the right to dispose of his property to the corporation at any price he saw fit to ask and the corporation saw fit to pay. As the vice chancellor said in Foss v. Harbottle, 2 Hare, 490: "I begin the transaction at this time. I have purchased land, no matter how, or from whom, or at what price. I am willing to sell it at a certain price for a given purpose." Of course, the fraud and deceit of the vendor, practiced towards the parties contemplating the purchase, would afford grounds for relief under any circumstances, but the fixing of the amount of the purchase price by the vendor is a matter in which he is entitled to the widest latitude. The valuation upon the various tracts of land, as shown by Dennis' report to the corporation, does not appear to be questioned, and by such valuation the lands of Sanborn were transferred to the corporation at a profit to him of $48,000, less $7,500 which he paid to perfect the title to the Clapp tract. While Sanborn had the right to dispose of his land to the corporation at any figure upon which all parties concerned might agree, yet such sale must be made without any false representations upon his part. Getty v. Devlin, 54 N. Y. 403; Densmore Oil Co. v. Densmore, supra. As to false representations on the part of the defendants, the court found that, as a consideration and inducement for the prospective stockholders to enter into the venture, "defendants John P. Sanborn and L. W. Dennis represented to, and promised and agreed with, each and all of the persons above mentioned, that all of such lands as they then had, or might thereafter acquire, should be put in and conveyed to such proposed corporation at the same price and consideration as the said L. W. Dennis and John P. Sanborn had paid, or agreed to pay, therefor to the party or parties from whom they then had or might thereafter obtain the same." The evidence is entirely sufficient to support this finding. While many of the interested parties only testify generally to the understanding that all this property should pass to the corporation at cost price, and that they would not have participated in the venture if the fact had been to the contrary, yet the witnesses Sterling and Burbank testify directly to the statements of appellant, Dennis, made to them to that effect.

As to this branch of the case the conditions are these: Sanborn was the owner of several tracts of land on April 20th. At that time he and Dennis became the promoters of the defendant corporation, sold this property to the corporation, and at such sale represented that it was being sold at its original cost to them. The representation was false, and was made at a time when these parties were not dealing with each other as strangers at arm's length, but, on the contrary, at a time when they were closely allied in a joint venture, and when all the duties and responsibilities resulting from confidential relations rested upon them: and a strict performance of these duties and responsibilities is always inexorably demanded by the law. This principle is recognized in Phosphate Co. v. Erlanger, 5 Ch. Div. 73, and approved in Ewell's Evans on Agency, (page 284,*) in the following language: "A promoter is in a fiduciary relation to the company which he causes to come into existence. If he has a property which he desires to sell to the company, it is quite open for him to do so; but upon him, as upon any other person in a fiduciary position, it is incumbent to make full and fair disclosure of his interest and position with respect to that property. There is no difference in this respect between a promoter and a trustee, steward, or other agent." Morawetz on Corporations (section 545) intimates that the true doctrine hardly goes to the length here stated, but still says the "promoters" are bound to exercise the highest degree of fairness in their dealings. The question of disclosure or concealment of information which should be communicated is not here involved. It is a question purely of false representations as to a substantial matter; and false representations upon the part of one party, entering into the very inception of a joint business venture, will nullify the entire transaction whenever the matter comes before a court of justice. At the time the sale was made, these parties occupied fiduciary relations, and those relations prohibited the conduct practiced by the defendants, as depicted by the finding of the court. In the eyes of the law the fact that these lands, at this time, were of the full value of the purchase price, in no way relieved appellant of the duties and responsibilities resting upon him as a fiduciary. This principle is fully illustrated in Bentley v. Craven, 18 Beav. 75.

It is now claimed that all parties had knowledge of the cost price of these various tracts of land prior to the conveyance to the corporation, by virtue of a personal inspection of the original contracts given by the owners to Sanborn; that they acted with their eyes open; and that it is now too late to rely upon these false representations as the basis of an action. It is probably true that such knowledge came to the officers of the corporation as to some of the tracts, but that event occurred long after the $193,666.62 was collected, and passed to the possession of Dennis and Sanborn. Again, such knowledge by the directors would not be knowledge to the stockholders. A fraud practiced upon the stockholders could not be ratified, or even waived, by the directors. This question was directly passed upon in Simons v. Mining Co., 61 Pa. St. 221.

Again, it is insisted that if the defendants practiced fraud in the sale of the lands, and thereby caused the corporation to pay more therefor than they in right should have paid, the remedy is not in the nature of the judgment here recovered, but the action should be for a rescission by reason of the fraud committed. We are not in harmony with such views. In the case of Getty v. Devlin, 54 N. Y. 403, a case very similar to the one at bar, in speaking as to the proper remedy, it is said: "But I think, under the complaint in this action, the four defendants may be compelled to account for the profits they made on the real estate, and which they fraudulently appropriated to the exclusion of their associates. The court can ascertain what the land actually cost the four defendants, and hold them to account for the balance. This balance equitably belongs to those who paid the money, and the plaintiffs can in this action recover their pro rata share thereof." The principles declared in Water Co. v. Flash, supra, also justify the remedy here sought and obtained. In an able and elaborate article found in 16 Amer. Law Rev., at page 671, the status, duties, and responsibilities of promoters are considered, and the true principle appertaining thereto is well stated, as follows: "The substance of the law is that promoters are corporate fiduciaries. Transactions with their companies wherein they deal honorably, with full disclosure, and without seeking to influence the action of the corporation, will be upheld; but transactions in which they suppress or misrepresent material facts, or otherwise deceive the company, or corruptly control its action, are fraudulent, and the company may elect either wholly to set aside such transactions, or to recover the promoter's secret profits." About the 5th day of May, John P. Sanborn returned to his home in Michigan, but prior to his departure he gave his nephew Frederick D. Sanborn a power of attorney to act for him in the collection of moneys, making of contracts, deeds, etc., in furtherance, probably, of the merger of the venture then on hand into the corporation about to be formed. At about this time the $193,666.62 was paid to Dennis, and portions of it passed to the original vendors through the medium of himself and Frederick D. Sanborn; and thereupon contracts of purchase were taken in the name of John P. Sanborn to the Ford, Bradley, and Titus tracts, and possibly new contracts, as to some of the others. The prospective stockholders becoming alarmed over the fact that they had expended such a large amount of money, and possessed no written evidence as to their interest in these various properties, upon May the 18th secured from Frederick D. Sanborn, as attorney in fact of John P., a statement in writing to the following effect: "Know all men by these presents, that whereas, I, John P. Sanborn, have purchased, [naming the various tracts of land here involved;] and whereas, a corporation is about to be formed, known as the San Gabriel Valley Land and Water Company; and whereas, the subscribers of stock of said corporation are the real purchasers of said lands, although the contracts thereof are made to me: Now, therefore, I agree that as soon as the organization is completed I will transfer all my right, title, and interest, etc., to the corporation." This writing was offered in evidence as the declaration or admission of John P. Sanborn that he had purchased this property for the corporation, and under objection it was admitted for such purpose. We shall not review the legal soundness of the ruling of the court in this regard, for, if error was committed, we think it harmless. If we look into the opinion of the court, as appellant suggests, this evidence appeared to have some weight, as tending to show an original purchase for the corporation; yet in the next succeeding clause of the opinion the judge says that there is ample evidence to support that allegation of the complaint aside from the writing. Neither does there appear to be any finding of fact that Sanborn actually purchased these lands for the corporation or the prospective stockholders, and for this reason the ruling of the court against appellant becomes immaterial. But, in addition, and as conclusive of the entire matter, we do not think any finding of fact that Sanborn purchased these lands for the contemplated corporation, or that he subsequently represented to the parties that he had so purchased them, is material to the recovery or necessary to support the judgment. As we have heretofore fully indicated, the acts of Sanborn and Dennis subsequent to the 20th of April justify the recovery had, and hence their conduct prior thereto is not an essential element of the case.

An attempt was made to take the deposition of the appellant, Dennis, prior to the trial; but after the examination was had, his testimony being taken down and transcribed by a phonographic reporter, he either neglected or declined to subscribe to the same. At the trial the reporter was placed on the witness stand, and, after refreshing his recollection from his transcription of the notes, under objection testified to the statements of Dennis made at that time. Dennis being an active party to the litigation, there can be no question but that his statements pertaining to the subject-matter of the action, wherever and whenever made, would be competent evidence against him. But the question here presented is whether the reporter, not having a definite and well-defined recollection of the statements so made, after he had refreshed his recollection as far as possible from the writing, will be allowed to read the contents of the memoranda to the court. There appears to be some difference of opinion among courts and law writers, as to the proper practice at common law; but under our statute (section 2047, Code Civil Proc.[1]) the course here adopted is expressly allowed. In the case of People v. Lem You, 97 Cal. 224, 32 Pac. 11, the practice was approved as justified by the foregoing provision of the Code; and in the case of People v. Gardner, 98 Cal. 127, 32 Pac. 880, the identical question was presented, and this court said: "The remaining objection to the admission of the evidence of the witness Briar does not seem to be well founded, in view of the last provision of section 2047 of the Code of Civil Procedure." Appellant's contention that the reporter's original notes are the basis from which he should have been required to refresh his recollection will not be considered, as such objection was not brought to the attention of the trial court. However, we do not intimate there is any merit in the point.

This action is brought by a dissatisfied stockholder, and a previous demand upon the corporation to commence the suit, and a refusal upon its part so to do, are made sufficiently plain from the record. There are several allegations of the complaint which have no support in the evidence, but they are immaterial, and, as a consequence, findings thereon against appellant become harmless. Appellant should be allowed a credit of $7,500, paid to perfect the title to the Clapp tract, and should only be charged with a profit of $25,000 upon the Titus tract. For those reasons we think the judgment should be for the sum of $65,500, with legal interest thereon from the 4th day of June, 1887. The cause is remanded, with directions to the trial court to modify the judgment to that effect.

We concur: PATERSON, J.; HARRISON, J.

---

101 Cal. 113

Ex parte GALLAGHER. (No. 21,079.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 19, 1894.)

CONVICTION—REVERSAL—REHEARING—AFFIRMANCE—HABEAS CORPUS.

On application for writ of habeas corpus for failure to bring petitioner to trial after reversal of his conviction and granting of a new trial, orders recalling the remittitur and granting a rehearing, resulting in an affirmance of the conviction, cannot be impeached.

Application of B. F. Gallagher for writ of habeas corpus. Writ denied.

W. F. Aram, for petitioner. C. E. Snook, Dist. Atty., for respondent.

BEATTY, C. J. This is a petition for a writ of habeas corpus, which discloses the following facts: Petitioner was convicted in the superior court of Alameda county of a felony. On appeal to this court the judgment of the superior court was reversed and the cause remanded for a new trial. 33 Pac. 890. Our decision was filed August 16, 1893, and on the 25th of the same month the remittitur was issued, and on the 26th it was filed in the office of the county clerk, where it still remains. On the 28th an order was made by the superior court setting the cause down for a retrial on October 27, 1893, but on the 26th of October that court, of its own motion, dropped said cause from its calendar, and ever since said date has refused to retry said cause, restore it to the calendar, or dismiss it, notwithstanding the defendant has never consented to the delay, but has always been ready for trial, and has frequently demanded a trial or a dismissal of the action. During all of said time the defendant has been and still is confined in the county jail under no other authority than a commitment based on said charge of felony, upon which he was convicted as above stated. He contends that said imprisonment, in view of the facts alleged, is illegal, and that he is entitled to be discharged from custody.

---

[1] The section provides that a witness may refresh his memory respecting a fact by anything written by himself at the time such fact occurred, but that the writing must be shown to the adverse party, who may cross-examine the witness upon it if he desires.

If the facts disclosed by the petition were all the material facts of the case, it might be that the petitioner would be entitled to be set at liberty. But there are other material facts, of which we can take notice, because they are disclosed by our own records of the proceedings in the action of the people against the petitioner. The remittitur in that cause was issued within 10 days after the decision was filed, solely because the attorney general consented to and requested the order, and within 30 days after the decision the remittitur was recalled upon motion of the attorney general, based upon his statement made in open court that he had been induced to consent to its issuance by a message falsely purporting to come from the district attorney of Alameda county, and requesting him to make the motion. After the remittitur was so recalled, a petition for a rehearing of said cause was filed on the part of the people, and granted by the court, whereupon counsel for the defendant (this petitioner) moved the court to set aside its orders recalling the remittitur and granting a rehearing, which motion was, after argument, denied. The cause was then resubmitted, and on December 22, 1893, a decision was filed affirming the judgment and order denying a new trial. These facts are a complete answer to those set up in the petition, which appears to be a collateral attack upon the orders recalling the remittitur and granting a rehearing. We are entirely satisfied that those orders were proper, and that they cannot be impeached in this proceeding. The writ is denied.

We concur: DE HAVEN, J.; McFARLAND, J.; PATERSON, J.

101 Cal. 135

STATE INVESTMENT & INS. CO. v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO et al. (No. 15,496.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 25, 1894.)

INSURANCE COMPANY—ACTION BY ATTORNEY GENERAL TO DISSOLVE — RECEIVER — POWER OF COURT TO APPOINT — INSOLVENCY ACT — CONFLICTING STATUTES.

1. Pol. Code, § 600, provides that when the insurance commissioner ascertains that a person engaged in the insurance business is insolvent he must require the person to repair the capital stock. Section 601 provides that if the deficiency in stock is not made up the commissioner shall inform the attorney general, who must commence an action in the name of the people, and apply for an order requiring cause to be shown why the business should not be closed; and if such person is insolvent, or the interests of the public so require, the court must decree a dissolution of such corporation, and the winding up of its affairs, and the distribution of its effects. Held, that the court, on decreeing the dissolution of a corporation in such action, has no power to appoint a receiver, or assume control of its effects.

2. Code Civil Proc. § 565, empowers the superior court to appoint receivers of a corporation on its dissolution on application of any creditor, stockholder, or member. Civil Code, § 400, provides that on the dissolution of a corporation, "unless other persons are appointed by the court," the directors or managers at the time of its dissolution are trustees of the creditors and stockholders, and have full power to settle its affairs. Held, that such statutes do not authorize the court to appoint a receiver of an insurance company on dissolution thereof in an action brought by the attorney general.

3. Insolvent Act 1880, § 8, providing for an adjudication of involuntary insolvency on the petition of five or more resident creditors, is not made inapplicable to insurance corporations by Pol. Code, § 601, providing for the dissolution of such a corporation in an action brought for that purpose by the attorney general.

4. Where an insolvent insurance company is dissolved on application of the attorney general, the court has no power to appoint a receiver to take charge of its effects "during the pendency of" an appeal by the corporation.

5. On petition of creditors of an insurance company under Insolvent Act 1880, the superior court of San Francisco, department 10, adjudged such corporation to be insolvent. Afterwards the attorney general applied in department 4 of such court, under Pol. Code, § 601, to dissolve such corporation for insolvency, and the insolvency proceedings were transferred to department 4. Held, that such transfer did not confer on the court any greater jurisdiction in the action by the attorney general than it otherwise had.

In bank.

Application by the State Investment & Insurance Company for a writ of prohibition to the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, state of California, Hon. J. C. B. Hebbard, judge thereof, and F. W. Van Reynegom, commanding respondents to desist from further proceeding on a certain judgment and order appointing Van Reynegom receiver of such company, and directing him to take charge of its property. Peremptory writ granted.

Sullivan & Sullivan, for petitioner. W. H. H. Hart, Atty. Gen., Lindley & Eickhoff, and Samuel Rosenheim, for respondents.

HARRISON, J. Application for writ of prohibition. The State Investment & Insurance Company was incorporated under the laws of this state December 1, 1871, with a capital stock of $400,000, for the purpose of doing a fire insurance business in the city and county of San Francisco, and very soon thereafter organized, with its capital stock fully paid, and commenced the transaction of business. June 1, 1893, certain creditors of the corporation, whose debts aggregated $49,000, filed a petition in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, setting forth facts constituting acts of insolvency on the part of the corporation and alleging that the said corporation was insolvent, and praying that it be adjudged an insolvent debtor. Upon filing this petition, the court made an order requiring the corporation to show cause before it, in department No. 10, on the 13th of June, why it should not be adjudged an insolvent debtor, and in its said order forbade it from transferring any of its property until the further order of the court. This order was duly served upon the corporation, and on the return day thereof it appeared in court in obedience thereto, and, the hearing having been continued until the 14th day of July, the court on that day made its order adjudging it to be an insolvent debtor, within the intent and meaning of the insolvent act of 1880. July 13, 1893, upon the information of the attorney general, an action was commenced in said superior court by the people of the state of California against the said corporation and its directors, under the provisions of section 601 of the Political Code, for its dissolution and the winding up of its affairs and distribution of its assets. In the complaint in this action it was alleged that in April, 1893, the insurance commissioner entered upon an examination of the affairs of the said corporation, and, on the 10th of May, as the result thereof, ascertained and declared that on the 1st of January, 1893, the capital stock of the corporation was impaired to the extent of $227,442.73, and thereby reduced to a sum below $200,000, viz. to the sum of $172,557.27, and that by reason thereof the said corporation was, on the 1st day of January, 1893, insolvent; that thereupon the said insurance commissioner, on the 10th of May, 1893, revoked the certificate of authority to do business as an insurance company which had been previously issued to it, and required said corporation to discontinue the issuance of new policies, or the renewal of any previously issued, and also to repair its capital stock to its original amount, within 60 days thereafter, by an assessment upon its stockholders; that said corporation failed to make up the deficiency of its capital within said 60 days; that on the 10th day of July the insurance commissioner reported these facts to the attorney general; that since the 1st day of January the business of said corporation had been so conducted that on the 10th day of July its capital had become impaired to the extent of $302,100. Upon filing this complaint the clerk of the court issued a summons directed to the defendants therein named, and upon its issuance the judge of the court, in department No. 4, made an order of injunction restraining the corporation, its directors, agents, attorneys, and creditors, and each of them, and all others acting in aid or assistance of them, from carrying on any litigation, and from interfering with or taking possession of any of the assets of said corporation, and appointed the respondent Van Reynegom temporary receiver to take possession of the assets of the corporation, and directed that the corporation show cause before said court on the 11th day of August why it should not be closed for business, and why it should not be dissolved, and its assets distributed to its respective creditors. August 10th the defendants answered the complaint, admitting the insolvency of the corporation, setting up the proceedings that had been taken against it upon the aforesaid petition in insolvency, and that it had been therein declared and adjudicated an insolvent debtor, and that such adjudication had become final, and asked that its assets be distributed under the provisions of the insolvent act of 1880. August 24, 1893, the matter having been fully heard before the court, the judge rendered his decision, in which he found the facts substantially as alleged in the complaint and answer, and also found as a fact "that the business of said corporation should be closed; that the interests of the public so require; that said corporation defendant should be dissolved, its affairs wound up, and the assets distributed; that by reason of litigation now pending, and the race between creditors for preference, the assets of said defendant corporation are being injured and wasted, and by reason thereof distribution under the provisions of section 601, Pol. Code, will be prevented, unless injunction issue out of this court, and receiver be appointed to take possession of its assets; that, unless such injunction issue and receiver be appointed, irreparable injury, which cannot be compensated in damages to the state, will result, in that it will defeat the operation and enforcement of the insurance laws of the state of California." Judgment was thereupon rendered in this proceeding "that said defendant, the State Investment & Insurance Company, which is a corporation organized and existing by virtue of the laws of the state of California, be, and the same is hereby, dissolved; that the affairs of said corporation be wound up, and that a distribution of the effects of said defendant corporation be made under the control of said court in the above-entitled action." By said judgment the court also appointed the respondent Van Reynegom as receiver of all the property, estate, and effects of the corporation, and directed every person and official having any property belonging to it to deliver the same into his possession; and provided that such receiver should have power and authority, under the control of the court, and in obedience to its orders, to hold and dispose of the property of said corporation, and to wind up its affairs and distribute its property and effects. From this judgment the defendants appealed to this court on the 26th of August, and on the 28th of August the superior court, upon the motion of the attorney general, made an ex parte order appointing Van Reynegom receiver of the property of the corporation, to keep and preserve the same during the pendency of said appeal. From this latter order the corporation also appealed, and on the 30th of August, after the taking and perfecting of said appeal, the court made another order, reciting its former one appointing the receiver, and that he had qualified as required therein, by which it "finally appointed" him receiver pending the appeal. September 15th the petitioner herein made an application to this court, setting forth that under the foregoing orders the said receiver claims to be entitled to the possession of its property, and had made demand therefor, and that the superior court had instructed said receiver to demand and take into his possession all of the estate and effects of the petitioner; and prayed for a writ of prohibition directed to the respondents herein, commanding and directing them to refrain and desist from further proceeding upon the said judgment or orders with reference to any property of said corporation, and from interfering with or disturbing the possession or control of the corporation as to any of its property or effects. Upon this application an alternative writ of prohibition was issued, and upon return thereto the respondents filed an answer, substantially in the nature of a demurrer to the petition, in which they contend that the proceedings in insolvency were superseded by and merged in the proceedings for the dissolution of the corporation, and that the court in which this latter proceeding is pending had jurisdiction to make the orders, and to wind up the affairs and distribute the effects of the corporation.

Section 8 of the insolvent act of 1880 provides that "an adjudication of insolvency may be made on the petition of five or more creditors, residents of this state, whose debts or demands accrued in this state, and amount in the aggregate to not less than five hundred dollars; provided that said creditors, or either of them, have not become creditors by assignment within sixty days prior to the filing of said petition;" and section 36 of the act declares that "the provisions of this act shall apply to corporations," and "whenever any corporation is declared insolvent all its property and assets shall be distributed to the creditors; but no discharge shall be granted to any corporation." Upon filing the petition authorized by section 8 the court takes jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the insolvency, and upon the service of the order requiring the alleged insolvent to appear in answer thereto, provided by section 9, it acquires jurisdiction over the debtor. The order of the court forbidding the debtor to transfer any of his property, which is authorized by section 9, is in the nature of a provisional attachment or sequestration of his estate, and brings it under the control and dominion of the court. Section 12 provides that the court may, upon the default of the debtor, or after a trial upon the issues in the proceeding, make an order adjudging that he is, and was at the date of filing the petition, an insolvent debtor; hence this adjudication of insolvency has relation to the time when the petition was filed, and renders void any intervening transfer or incumbrance of his property. The superior court therefore acquired jurisdiction over the estate of the petitioner on the 1st day of June, when the petition for its insolvency was filed; and on the 13th of June, when the corporation appeared in answer to the order to show cause, the court had acquired entire jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the petition and of the insolvent. The jurisdiction thus acquired gave to the court full authority to carry out the provisions of the insolvent act, and to have the estate of the insolvent distributed to the creditors under its supervision and control; and, if the court had proceeded in the matter, and had distributed the estate without interference on the part of the court which had jurisdiction of the proceedings for the dissolution of the corporation, it would not be contended that its orders and judgment would not be conclusive. The insolvent act does not exclude any corporation from its provisions, but its declaration that "the provisions of this act shall apply to corporations" includes corporations organized for the purpose of insurance as well as others. It is contended, however, by the respondents herein that the act, so far as it was originally applicable to insurance corporations, has been superseded by the provisions of section 601 of the Political Code, in which provision is made for the dissolution of such corporations. It is not claimed that there is any express declaration in the section to that effect, or that there has been an express repeal of these provisions of the insolvent act; but it is urged that the provisions of the two statutes are inconsistent, and that, inasmuch as section 601 was amended in 1887, and is the latest legislative declaration, it must prevail over the insolvent act of 1880. The argument from the relative dates at which the several statutes were enacted is not entitled to much consideration, for the reason that the substance of section 601, and all that can be accomplished under its provisions, was on the statute books for many years prior to the enactment of the insolvent act of 1880; the only change in the section, made in 1887, being to limit the time within which the attorney general should institute proceedings thereunder. If any argument is to be drawn from the respective dates of their passage, it would be that, if there is any inconsistency between the two statutes, the insolvency act would prevail over the other. We are, however, of the opinion that there is nothing inconsistent between the two statutes, and that each is operative over the principal subject for which it was enacted; that the provisions of the insolvent act embrace insurance corporations; and that the provisions of section 601 of the Political Code are intended to secure merely the dissolution of a delinquent insurance corporation, and do not confer upon the court which decrees the dissolution the power to distribute its effects to the stockholders and creditors.

The first legislation in this state providing for a supervisory control of the business of insurance was the act of March 26, 1868, (St. 1867-68, p. 336.) By that act the office of insurance commissioner was created, whose duty it was to examine into the financial condition of all persons and corporations who might desire to transact the business of insurance within this state, and to issue to such as may be found to be in a solvent condition, within the meaning of that act, a certificate of authority to transact such business, and making it unlawful for any corporation to transact such business without first receiving such certificate of authority. This act was re-enacted in 1872, in section 594 et seq. of the Political Code, and many of these sections have since, from time to time, been amended. The "insolvency" of an insurance corporation which will authorize the commissioner to revoke his certificate of authority, or to require it to refrain from doing business until it shall have repaired its capital, is not the ordinary commercial insolvency, but is such as is defined by the statute, (Palache v. Insurance Co., 42 Cal. 418,) and, so far as applicable to the petitioner herein, is defined in section 602 of the Political Code as follows: "Whereever provision for the liabilities of any person engaged in the business of fire insurance in this state for losses reported, expenses, taxes and reinsurance of all outstanding risks, estimated at fifty per cent. of the premiums received and receivable on all fire risks, would so far impair the capital stock paid in as to reduce the same below two hundred thousand dollars, or below seventy-five per cent. of said capital stock paid in. such person is insolvent." St. 1887, p. 19. By section 600, whenever the insurance commissioner ascertains that any person engaged in the insurance business is insolvent, "within the meaning of this chapter," he must revoke the certificate granted, and require the person to repair the capital thereof within such period as he may designate; and by section 601 it is provided that in case upon such requisition the deficiency of capital is not made up as required by the provisions of the Political Code, the commissioner must communicate the fact to the attorney general, and that officer "must, within twenty days after receiving such communication commence an action in the name of the people of this state in the superior court of the county where the person in question is located, or has his principal office, against such person, and apply for an order requiring cause to be shown why the business should not be closed; and the court must thereupon hear the allegations and proofs of the respective parties, as in other cases. If it appears to the satisfaction of the court that such person is insolvent, or that the interests of the public so require, the court must decree a dissolution of such corporation, and the winding up of its affairs, and the distribution of the effects of such person; but otherwise the court must enter a decree annulling the act of the commissioner in the premises, and authorizing such person to resume business." These provisions of the Political Code are of a governmental character, and are enacted by the legislature in the discharge of its functions to provide for the welfare of the people, in affording security to them in such insurance as they may choose to effect upon their property, and to protect them against fraudulent schemes of insurance, or deception by plausible inducements which may be held out for their patronage. The legislature, in authorizing a corporation to be formed for the purposes of insurance, has attached to it as a condition of its continued existence that it shall comply with the requirements of these sections, and has fixed the forfeiture of its charter as a penalty for noncompliance. Its power to prescribe such conditions, as well as its right to revoke the charter or to dissolve the corporation, is unquestioned, and it may avail itself of such mode in the exercise of the power as it may choose. Its visitatorial power over the corporations of its creation is as extensive as its power to authorize their creation, and it may exercise this power directly by itself, or it may declare a dissolution of the corporation as the result which shall follow a judicial investigation. In whatever mode the power may be exercised, it is but the administration of the legislative power of the state. In sections 600–602 of the Political Code the legislature has conferred the initiatory step for their visitatorial power upon the insurance commissioner, and has declared that if, upon a judicial investigation thereof, it shall be ascertained that his acts have been authorized, and that the corporation has failed to comply with his requirements, a dissolution shall follow. These sections are found in the chapter of the Political Code entitled "Executive Officers," and the object of the action authorized by section 601 is to make effective the acts of the insurance commissioner in revoking the certificate of authority by dissolving the corporation for its failure to comply with such requirement. The jurisdiction of the superior court to decree a dissolution of any corporation exists only by virtue of statutory authority. It does not possess this authority by virtue of its inherent general jurisdiction in equity, (Neall v. Hill, 16 Cal. 145; French Bank Case, 53 Cal. 495; Havemeyer v. Superior Court, 84 Cal. 327, 24 Pac. 121,) either at the suit of an individual (Folger v. Insurance Co., 99 Mass. 267) or at the suit of the state, (Attorney General v. Utica Ins. Co., 2 Johns. Ch. 371;) and, as its jurisdiction is derived from the statute, it is limited by the provisions of the statute, both as to the conditions under which it may be invoked and the extent of the judgment which it may make in the exercise of this jurisdiction, (Verplanck v. Insurance Co., 1 Edw. Ch. 84.) There is no provision in section 601 by which the court is authorized to appoint a receiver or to assume control or management of the estate of the corporation, and under that section the court has no authority to make any order affecting the corporation or its property until after it has heard the allegations and proofs of the respective parties. When the attorney general commences the action, the only order which the court is authorized to make is one requiring the corporation to show cause why its business should not be closed. Until the return day of this order the court can neither enjoin the corporation from doing business, nor can it disturb it in the possession of its estate; and if, upon the hearing at the return day, it shall not be shown to the satisfaction of the court that the corporation is insolvent, within the meaning of the statute, its only function is to annul the act of the commissioner. The provision in the section that the court must also decree a winding up of the affairs of the corporation and a distribution of its effects does not declare that such winding up and distribution shall be under the direction of the court which has decreed the dissolution, or, indeed, under the direction of any court, but merely that its affairs shall be wound up, and its effects distributed. In Attorney General v. Bank of Niagara, Hopk. Ch. 354, the chancellor held that, even though proceedings were pending at law for the dissolution of a corporation, he had no authority to aid them by an injunction, for the reason that such action would be to prejudge the question which was yet to be determined in the court of law. In Re Boynton Saw & File Co., 34 Hun, 369, it was held that proceedings for the dissolution of a corporation were purely statutory, and that the only power or authority which the court possessed was such as had been conferred by the statute, and that, as the statute gave no authority to appoint a temporary receiver, such appointment was void, saying: "The statute does not give the court control over the corporate property until the decision is made upon the return to the order to show cause." See, also, In re Waterbury, 8 Paige, 380; Ward v. Farwell, 97 Ill. 615; People v. Seneca Lake Grape & Wine Co., 52 Hun, 178, 5 N. Y. Supp. 136. Section 400 of the Civil Code provides that upon the dissolution of a corporation, "unless other persons are appointed by the court, the directors or managers of the affairs of such corporation at the time of its dissolution are trustees of the creditors and stockholders or members of the corporation dissolved, and have full power to settle the affairs of the corporation." The power of the court to appoint other persons, which is implied in this section, does not authorize the court to take upon itself the power to settle its affairs, or to appoint a receiver for that purpose. It was held in the Havemeyer Case that the court in which proceedings had been taken for a dissolution of the corporation did not, by virtue of its judgment for a dissolution, have jurisdiction to appoint a receiver to wind up the affairs of the dissolved corporation. It was said in that case: "When a corporation is dissolved, its property vests in its stockholders, subject only to the claims of creditors, and is thereafter held upon the same tenure, and subject to the same conditions, as similar property owned by other natural persons. What others may do, they may do. They owe no further or higher duty to the public, and are under no other restraints." Page 378, 84 Cal., and page 133, 24 Pac. The proceedings in that case were under section 803, Code Civil Proc., but it was held that the provisions of section 400, Civil Code, apply in all cases of dissolution, whether voluntary or involuntary; and the reasoning therein and the conclusions reached are applicable to the present proceeding. Each is a proceeding on the part of the state for the purpose of revoking the franchise that had been granted to exercise corporate powers, and the function of the state, as well as its interest in the disposition of the property of the corporation, is no greater in the one case than in the other. The power of a court to appoint any persons in the place of those who are directors of the corporation at the time of its dissolution is given in section 565, Code Civil Proc., and the authority given therein is the measure of its power. That section gives to the superior court of the county in which the corporation carries on its business authority to appoint one or more persons to be receivers or trustees of the corporation upon its dissolution, "on application of any creditor of the corporation or of any stockholder or member thereof," and, unless such application is made, the court has no authority to make the appointment. Its jurisdiction to make such appointment rests upon an application therefor by either a creditor or a stockholder, and can neither be invoked at the instance of a stranger nor assumed by the court of its own motion. Bangs v. McIntosh, 23 Barb. 600. If there should chance to be no directors in office at the time of the dissolution, or if for any reason the directors of the corporation ought not to be intrusted with the subsequent control of its affairs, the court can appoint others in their place, (Civil Code, § 2289;) but the persons so appointed become trustees in the place of the directors, and with the same powers and responsibility that are conferred by section 400 upon the directors in office at the time of its dissolution.

The only parties to the present action are the people of the state and the delinquent corporation. When the object for which the action is authorized—the revocation by the state of the franchise which it conferred—has been accomplished, there would naturally be no further action for the court to perform. The state has no interest in either the assets of the corporation or its debts, and when it has secured the dissolution of the corporation its functions in the action have ceased. See People v. Cement Co., 131 N. Y. 144, 29 N. E. 947. The statute does not authorize either the attorney general or the insurance commissioner to exercise any further direction or control in the affairs of the dissolved corporation, or in the distribution of its assets; nor has the state or any of its officers any interest in having the creditors receive from the assets of the corporation the amounts in which it may be indebted to them; and it is no concern of the state how or when the assets of the corporation shall be divided between the stockholders. Notwithstanding the decree of dissolution, the property still belongs to the stockholders, and the right to wind up the affairs of the corporation and to distribute its effects is given by the statute to the directors, and they can be deprived of this control over the property of the corporation only at the instigation of a creditor or stockholder. It must be considered that the insolvency upon which the dissolution of the corporation is authorized under section 601, Pol. Code, is a statutory, and not an actual, insolvency; and, as the liabilities of an insurance corporation are contingent upon a future event, rather than an existing indebtedness, under the watchfulness which the commissioner is required to exercise over the corporation, it would rarely happen that an insurance corporation which was in actual business would be actually insolvent, except some great conflagration had exhausted its resources. And it is also to be observed that in the complaint in the present instance there is no charge of actual insolvency, other than the impairment of the capital stock of the corporation; nor is there any reference therein to any of the creditors of the corporation, except as it may be inferred from the recital in the finding above quoted. If in fact the corporation is only technically insolvent,—that is, insolvent within the definition given by the statute,—no reason can be assigned why the court should interfere with the management of its business. The property of the corporation still belongs to the stockholders, and it would require an express statutory declaration to that effect to authorize a court, in a proceeding wherein the only parties are without any interest in this property, to assume to itself, or to take from them, the control and management thereof. They have the same right to the control of their property as has any other individual, and the court is not authorized to take under its protection the interests of those who do not seek to invoke its aid for themselves.

When the appeal from the judgment was perfected, its execution was suspended until the determination of the appeal, (Havemeyer v. Superior Court, supra,) and while that appeal is pending the court cannot carry into execution that part of its judgment authorizing the appointment of a receiver. The effect of an appeal from a judgment when the proceedings thereon are stayed is to preserve the rights of the parties to the controversy in the same condition as they were prior to the entry of the judgment. Dewey v. Superior Court, 81 Cal. 64, 22 Pac. 333; Dulin v. Coal Co., 98 Cal. 304, 33 Pac. 123. As the court could not take the estate of the corporation into its custody, or exercise any control over it, before the judgment of dissolution, it could have no property under its control which it was authorized to "preserve" pending the appeal from its judgment; but, if it could appoint a receiver to take the appellant's property from its custody and keep it in his possession during the pendency of the appeal, it would exercise an authority after the judgment greater than it possessed before its entry, and the effect of the appeal would thus be destroyed. For this reason the court had no jurisdiction to appoint Van Reynegom as receiver of the effects of the corporation "during the pendency of the appeal." The transfer of the proceedings in insolvency, after the order of adjudication had been made, from the department in which they had been pending to the department in which the action for dissolution was pending, did not confer upon the court any greater jurisdiction in the latter matter than it previously had had. Each of these proceedings was statutory in its character, and was to be conducted in the manner and within the limits prescribed by the statute under which it had been instituted. The application of the petitioner must be granted, and the writ of prohibition made peremptory.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; McFARLAND, J.; DE HAVEN, J.; FITZGERALD, J.

101 Cal. 152

HARRISON v. HEBBARD, Judge. (No. 15,492.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 25, 1894.)

INSURANCE—DISSOLUTION OF CORPORATION — CONTEMPT—VIOLATION OF VOID ORDER.

In an action by the attorney general to dissolve an insolvent insurance company the court has no authority, on decreeing dissolution, to appoint a receiver, and restrain such corporation, its directors, agents, attorneys, creditors, etc., from carrying on any litigation, and from interfering with or taking possession of any of its assets; and disobedience to such order does not constitute contempt.

In bank.

Application by Robert Harrison for a writ of prohibition to J. B. C. Hebbard, judge of the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, to prohibit respondent from hearing a certain order to petitioner to show cause why he should not be adjudged guilty of contempt, and punished for disregarding a certain order made by respondent. Writ granted.

Edward R. Taylor and C. W. Cross, for petitioner. A. Ruef, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. Application for writ of prohibition. The matters embraced herein are closely connected with those involved in State Inv. & Ins. Co. v. Superior Court, 35 Pac. 549, (just decided,) and the facts therein stated need not be here repeated. The petitioner herein, as attorney for certain creditors, filed in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco their petition in involuntary insolvency against the State Investment & Insurance Company, a corporation. The hearing of the petition was set for the 10th day of June, 1893, in department 10 of that court, before Hon. W. H. Levy, J., and was continued from that date until July 14th. On the 13th of July an action was commenced in the same court by the people of the state against the State Investment & Insurance Company; and at its commencement the respondent herein, who presided over department 4 of that court, made an order "that until further order in the premises said defendant corporation, its directors, agents, attorneys, and creditors, and each of them, and their agents, attorneys, and solicitors, and all others acting in aid or assistance of them, be, and are hereby, restrained from carrying on any litigation, and from interfering with or taking possession of any of the assets of said corporation." When the hearing of the proceedings in insolvency came on before the court in department 10, on the 14th of July, the making of this order of injunction was brought to the attention of the court and of the petitioner herein, but the petitioner disregarded the order, and proceeded with the application in insolvency, and obtained from the court in the department in which those proceedings were pending an order adjudging the corporation to be an insolvent debtor. Upon an affidavit of these facts having been brought to the attention of the judge who had issued the order of injunction, he caused an order to be served upon the petitioner herein requiring him to show cause why he should not, on account of those facts, be adjudged guilty of contempt and punished therefor. The present application is to prohibit the respondent from hearing the said order to show cause, or taking any steps thereunder, upon the ground that in so doing the court is proceeding in excess of its jurisdiction. In State Inv. & Ins. Co. v. Superior Court we have held that in the action brought by the people against the corporation for its dissolution the statute has not conferred upon the court any authority to take charge or management of the effects of the said corporation; that it has no authority to appoint a receiver pendente lite, and that upon the entry of the judgment of dissolution its functions in the action are at an end; and that it has no authority to assume the distribution of the effects of the corporation and the winding up of its affairs. Under these principles it follows that the order of injunction issued by the court at the commencement of the proceedings for the dissolution of the corporation was without authority, and that the petitioner was not guilty of any contempt in disregarding the same. The subsequent order of the court requiring him to show cause why he should not be punished for violating this order is equally without authority, and it follows that his petition for a writ of prohibition must be granted; and it is so ordered.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; McFARLAND, J.; DE HAVEN, J.; FITZGERALD, J.

---

100 Cal. 525

LOS ANGELES COUNTY v. LANKERSHIM. (No. 19,235.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 24, 1894.)

COUNTY TREASURER—LIABILITIES—PAYMENT OF WARRANTS.

Where the law requires all county school moneys to be apportioned, and the warrants drawn on the special funds, a finding that a payment of a school warrant was made from the general school fund is not equivalent to a finding that the warrant was not drawn on any special fund, so that the treasurer was liable for an illegal payment.

In bank. On petition for rehearing. Rehearing denied.

For main opinion, see 35 Pac. 153.

PER CURIAM. Response to petition for rehearing. The principal point decided in this case was that the county treasurer, when he has no notice of the illegality of the demand, or of the fact that no requisition has been made upon the auditor, or of any other fact to put him upon inquiry, may safely pay a warrant drawn upon the school fund, if it is in due form, and bears the genuine signature of the auditor or his deputy; and the judgment of the superior court was reversed on the findings, because, while they show that the money here in controversy was paid by the treasurer out of the school fund, on what purported to be a warrant for the amount so paid, they do not show that such warrant was not genuine and in due form, and do not show any other fact that ought to have deterred the treasurer from making the payment on presentation of the warrant. In their petition for a rehearing, counsel for respondent contend that this proposition, conceding its soundness, has no application to this case, because the findings show that the payment was made from the general school fund, whereas the law is that all county school moneys must first be apportioned to the several school districts, and all requisitions made and warrants drawn upon the special funds so created; from which they argue that the warrant in this case, having been drawn upon the general school fund, (meaning, we suppose, the unapportioned school moneys,) bears upon its face the evidence of its illegality. But the fact that the money was paid from the unapportioned school fund, while it may be evidence that the warrant was not drawn upon any special or district fund, is not conclusive evidence of such fact, and still less is it the equivalent of a finding to that effect. The finding only means that the treasurer charged the payment against the school fund without specifying the district, and it is quite consistent with this fact to suppose that the warrant may have been properly drawn against the fund of some particular district. In short, the judgment is erroneous, because not supported by findings definite and conclusive as to one point essential to the liability of the defendant. Conceding, without deciding, that the law governing the disposition of county school moneys is as respondent states it, a warrant drawn upon the general fund would be illegal on its face, and not merely illegal in a technical sense, but would carry evidence that it was not based upon any lawful demand or requisition from the county superintendent. We have not held or intended to intimate that the treasurer and his sureties would not be liable for money paid on such a warrant. But, on the other hand, if the warrant was, as we assume, regular on its face, and bore the genuine signature of the auditor, we do not think that the amount paid can be recovered in this action merely because the payment was charged to the wrong account. Upon a new trial, the facts as to the warrant may be proved, and the findings so framed as to show whether it was legal on its face or not. Rehearing denied.

---

101 Cal. 197

Ex parte AH CUE. (No. 21,041.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 26, 1894.)

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—STATE CHINESE EXCLUSION ACT—VALIDITY.

Act March 20, 1891, (St. 1891, p. 185,) intended to prohibit Chinese from coming into the state, and to prescribe the terms on which those residing in the state may remain or travel between different points in the state, is in conflict with Const. U. S. art. 1, § 8, giving the general government authority to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and is void.

In bank.

Petition by Ah Cue for a writ of habeas corpus to secure his discharge from the custody of the chief of police of the city and county of San Francisco. Writ granted, and petitioner discharged.

Thos. D. Riordan and Harvey S. Brown, for petitioner. Atty. Gen. Hart, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The petitioner was at the date of the issuance of the writ herein imprisoned by the chief of police of the city and county of San Francisco, charged with the alleged crime of "unlawfully coming in, being, and remaining within the limits of the state of California," in violation of an act of the legislature of this state approved March 20, 1891, (St. 1891, p. 185,) entitled "An act to prohibit the coming of Chinese persons into the state, whether subjects of the Chinese empire or otherwise, and to provide for registration and certificates of residence, and determine the status of all Chinese persons now resident of this state, and fixing penalties and punishments for violation of this act, and providing for deportation of criminals." The main purpose of this act, as shown by its title and by its provisions, is to prohibit Chinese persons from coming into the state, and also to prescribe terms and conditions upon which those residing within the state shall be permitted to remain or travel between different points in the state. The power thus attempted to be exercised is one which belongs exclusively to the general government by virtue of its authority to regulate commerce with foreign nations, (section 8, art. 1, of the constitution of the United States,) relating, as it does, to a subject-matter in which all the people of the United States are concerned, and not alone those of the state of California. Congress, in the exercise of its constitutional power, has prescribed the terms upon which the Chinese now here shall be permitted to remain within the United States; and it is beyond the power of the state to impose any further conditions. Ah Kow v. Nunan, 5 Sawy. 563. See, also, Chinese Exclusion Case, 130 U. S. 604, 9 Sup. Ct. 623; Fong Yue Ting v. U. S., 149 U. S. 711, 712, 13 Sup. Ct. 1016. The statute under which the petitioner is held is so plainly in excess of the power of the state, and in conflict with the constitution of the United States, that any extended discussion of its provisions is wholly unnecessary. The petitioner is discharged.

Ex parte LIPPMAN. (No. 21,045.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 26, 1894.)

In bank.

Petition by one Lippman for a writ of habeas corpus to secure his discharge from the custody of the chief of police of the city and county of San Francisco. Writ granted, and petitioner discharged.

Thos. D. Riordan and Harvey S. Brown, for petitioner. Atty. Gen. Hart, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Upon the authority of Ex parte Ah Cue, 35 Pac. 556, (No. 21,041, just decided by this court,) the petitioner is discharged.

Ex parte LIPPMAN. (No. 21,044.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 26, 1894.)

In bank.

Petition by George Lippman for a writ of habeas corpus to secure his discharge from the custody of the chief of police of the city and county of San Francisco. Writ granted, and petitioner discharged.

Thos. D. Riordan and Harvey S. Brown, for petitioner. Atty. Gen. Hart, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Upon the authority of Ex parte Ah Cue, 35 Pac. 556, (No. 21,041, the opinion in which has been this day filed,) the petitioner is discharged.

101 Cal. 200

NORTHERN COUNTIES INV. TRUST, Limited, v. CADMAN et al. (No. 19,271.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 29, 1894.)

EXECUTION—SALE OF REAL ESTATE—PUBLICATION OF NOTICE—RIGHT OF SHERIFF TO SELECT NEWSPAPER.

Where, before sale of real property on execution, notice thereof must be published "in some newspaper" of the county, if there be one, (Code Civil Proc. § 692,) and an officer selling without such notice forfeits $500 to the aggrieved party, besides actual damages, (section 693,) the sheriff, and not the plaintiff, has the right to select the newspaper in which such notice shall be published.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Orange county; J. W. Towner, Judge.

Action by the Northern Counties Investment Trust, Limited, against John Cadman and others, in which there was a judgment for plaintiff, and an execution issued. From an order denying plaintiff's motion for an order directing the sheriff to publish notice of sale of real estate on such execution in a newspaper designated by its attorney, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Smith & Winder and Victor Montgomery, for appellant. F. O. Daniel and Chas. S. McKelvey, for respondents.

VANCLIEF, C. This appeal is from an order made after judgment denying plaintiff's motion for an order directing the sheriff to publish notice of sale of real estate on execution in a certain newspaper selected and designated by plaintiff's attorneys. The record contains no part of the judgment roll, nor anything to show the nature of the action, the substance of the judgment, or the form or substance of the execution, except that it required the sheriff to sell real property "under a decree and writ rendered and issued herein," and placed in the sheriff's hands by plaintiff's attorneys for service, with their written instructions to publish notice of the sale in the newspaper designated. The bill of exceptions shows that the motion was supported by, and heard upon, the affidavit of one of plaintiff's attorneys alone, the material substance of which is that, having contracted for the publication of the notice in a daily paper,—the Daily Evening Blade,—he gave the sheriff "written instructions, signed by affiant and his associate counsel, requesting and directing said sheriff to advertise said notice of sale of said property in the Daily Evening Blade for the length of time required by the statute;" but that the sheriff ignored and disregarded said instructions, and commenced the publication of said notice in the Weekly Gazette, a weekly paper published in the same county, (Orange,) having, as affiant is informed and believes, a circulation "of about four hundred," whereas he is informed and believes the Daily Blade has a circulation "of about seven hundred." "That the judgment in this case is for a large sum, and plaintiff will be put to heavy costs in connection with the sale of said land, and, as plaintiff is a nonresident, it wishes to avoid the necessity of bidding in said land, or any part thereof, and to secure, if possible, purchasers at said sale who will take said property at such figures as will justify the plaintiff in permitting them to buy the same." Counsel for appellant state in their brief that the action was to foreclose a mortgage, and that the decree was one of foreclosure "in the usual form," and that "a copy of said decree, with a writ for the enforcement of the same, was issued by the clerk, * * * and delivered by appellant's counsel to the sheriff," with the aforesaid written instructions, but give no further information of the contents of the decree, or of the "writ for the enforcement of the same." It may therefore be presumed or assumed, as against the appellant, that the execution conformed to that part of section 684 of the Code of Civil Procedure which provides that "when the judgment requires the sale of property the same may be enforced by a writ reciting such judgment, or the material parts thereof, and directing the proper officer to execute the judgment by making the sale and applying the proceeds in conformity therewith." Newmark v. Chapman, 53 Cal. 558. Section 692, Code Civil Proc., provides: "Before the sale of the property on execution, notice thereof must be given as follows: * * * 3. In case of real property, by posting a similar (written) notice * * * in three public places of the township or city where the property is situated, and also where the property is to be sold, and publishing a copy thereof once a week for the same period, in some newspaper published in the county, if there be one." And by section 693 it is enacted that "an officer selling without the notice prescribed by the last section forfeits five hundred dollars to the aggrieved party, in addition to his actual damages." It is admitted that these sections apply to sales on execution of foreclosure decrees; and it is clear that they enjoin upon the sheriff both the duty and the responsibility of posting and publishing the notices of sale as prescribed, which injunction necessarily implies the duty and responsibility of selecting the places where the notices are to be posted, and the newspapers in which they are to be published, since they are not specified. He is required to post the notices in three public places in the township, etc., and to publish them in some newspaper in the county once a week, under a heavy penalty, besides his responsibility for all damages. The penalty and responsibility are inconsistent with the alleged authority of the plaintiff to dictate the places or papers in which the notices are to be published, and consistent only with his duty and power to determine and select the places and newspapers in which to publish the required notices. Richardson v. Tobin, 45 Cal. 31; County of San Mateo v. Maloney, 71 Cal. 206, 12 Pac. 53; Publishing Co. v. Whitney, 97 Cal. 283, 32 Pac. 237; In re O'Sullivan, 84 Cal. 444, 24 Pac. 281. Moreover, the requirement of notice of sales on execution is quite as much for the benefit and protection of the defendant as of the plaintiff; and the defendant, if not insolvent, ultimately pays the expense of publication. Why is not he, at least, equally with the plaintiff, entitled to dictate to the sheriff how and where he shall publish notice of sale? And, if equally entitled, who is to decide when they disagree? I think the order should be affirmed.

We concur: TEMPLE, C.; BELCHER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the order appealed from is affirmed.

---

101 Cal. 122

CRAIG v. SAN BERNARDINO INV. CO.

(No. 19,262.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 25, 1894.)

JUDGMENT—BY DEFAULT—VACATING.

A judgment by default is properly vacated where defendant was misled by a statement by plaintiff, a lawyer, that the nonresidence of his codefendants extended his time of answering.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Bernardino county; George E. Otis, Judge.

Action by John W. Craig against the San Bernardino Investment Company and others for the value of certain shares of stock in the investment company. From an order vacating a judgment by default, plaintiff appeals Affirmed.

Willis & Cole and Goodall & Leonard, for appellant. Harris & Gregg, for respondents.

TEMPLE, C. This appeal is from an order vacating and setting aside a default and judgment, and permitting the defendants to answer. The application was based on many grounds, one of which was that the default was through excusable neglect, and the order was upon terms. Suit was brought to recover the value of certain shares of the corporate stock of the corporate defendant, on the ground that the said defendant refused to transfer the shares on its books, and issue a new certificate to plaintiff, who was the purchaser and assignee of the stock. Summons was served upon the secretary of the corporation, who was also a director, and it does not appear that any other officer of the corporation was aware of the controversy. The secretary, as he states in his affidavit, inquired of the plaintiff, who is a lawyer, if the fact that some of the defendants resided in another county would give all defendants 30 days within which to answer, and was informed that it would. For this reason he did not at once refer the matter to an attorney, but waited until he could see the regular attorney of the corporation, who resided at Los Angeles. But for this assurance, he would have answered in time. This is more than a mere mistake of law. The agent of the corporate defendant was misled, unintentionally no doubt, by the opposite party. Plaintiff should not be allowed to profit by this, even though it was with no design of gaining an unfair advantage. There is a sufficient showing of merits. The affidavit shows that the corporation never did refuse to transfer the stock, and that the plaintiff has obtained a judgment for $71,750 for stock, which was not then, and has not been since, of the value of more than $2,050. I think the order should be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C.; VANCLIEF, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the order appealed from is affirmed.

---

100 Cal. 514

WILSON v. SAMUELS et al. (No. 15,333.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 25, 1894.)

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; Eugene R. Garber, Judge.

Action by J. H. Wilson against D. Samuels and another. For former report see 35 Pac. 148. Modified.

Naphtally, Freidenrich & Ackerman and A. G. Eels, for appellants. Geo. D. Collins, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The judgment heretofore rendered in this court on December 26, 1893, is hereby modified so as to read as follows: "Judgment and order reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial."

---

4 Cal. Unrep. 429

FERGUSON v. McBEAN. (No. 19,232.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 22, 1894.)

PLEADING—SUFFICIENCY OF COMPLAINT—REVIEW ON APPEAL—CONFLICTING EVIDENCE—ACTION ON CONTRACT—EVIDENCE—COMPETENCY—HARMLESS ERROR.

1. A complaint alleging that plaintiff demanded payment of a specified sum, that defendant refused payment, and that the sum is due and unpaid, sufficiently alleges nonpayment of the sum alleged to be due.

2. Where the evidence is conflicting, the verdict should not be disturbed.

3. Plaintiff, having made a contract to purchase land from C., assigned it to defendant, who agreed to pay plaintiff a certain sum if he purchased the land from C. Held, in an action to recover such sum, that it was competent to show the circumstances attending the making of the contract of assignment; it being disputed whether C.'s sale of the land to defendant's stepson was under the contract between C. and plaintiff, and the relations between defendant and his stepson in regard to the entire transaction being a material issue raised by the pleadings.

4. It was proper to deny defendant's motion to strike out plaintiff's evidence as to conversations with a third person, not in the presence of defendant, and to retain such evidence till plaintiff's evidence was in, as other evidence might show that such third person was authorized to represent defendant.

5. Evidence that a third person agreed to pay plaintiff a part of the sum sued for was properly excluded, since defendant could not be relieved from his written obligation by such person's agreement to pay it, unless plaintiff released him.

6. Evidence that defendant's stepson told another person that he was representing defendant, and was ready to consummate the trade, was competent to show that the purchase was made under the contract assigned to defendant.

7. It was also competent to corroborate defendant's statement, after the sale, that he had purchased the property.

8. The possession and production by defendant's stepson, at the time of the transaction, of the assignment of the contract by plaintiff to defendant, were competent to show that he was defendant's agent.

9. The admission of testimony that plaintiff said defendant was represented by his stepson at the sale was not cause for reversal, when plaintiff had already testified to the circumstances connected with the assignment of the contract, and that the stepson was a party to the assignment, though it was not so stated therein.

10. Plaintiff having made the contract with C. personally, and having assigned it to defendant, evidence that plaintiff made the contract with C. at the request of one R. was properly excluded, as such fact would not alter defendant's liability.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; E. S. Torrance, Judge.

Action by M. L. Ferguson against Alexander McBean on contract for the sale of lands. There was judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Hendrick & Younkin and E. Crossman, for appellant. Rowell & Rowell and Hunsaker, Britt & Goodrich, for respondent.

HAYNES, C. This action was originally brought against McBean and A. V. Bills. The defendants demurred to the original complaint upon the ground that Bills was improperly joined as a defendant. The demurrer was overruled, and, upon the trial, plaintiff had judgment. Upon appeal by defendants it was held that the demurrer should have been sustained, and the judgment was reversed, with leave to the plaintiff to amend her complaint. See 91 Cal. 64, 27 Pac. 518. Respondent thereupon dismissed the action as to Bills, and amended her complaint in the matters made necessary by the dismissal of the action as to Bills, but retained, in substance, all of the allegations contained in the original complaint connecting Bills with the transaction. For a statement of facts of the case, see the opinion of Mr. Chief Justice Beatty upon the former appeal, 91 Cal. 66, 27 Pac. 518.

The only questions presented upon this appeal which were not disposed of by the former appeal arise upon a demurrer to the amended complaint, and upon certain specifications of insufficiency of the evidence to justify the findings of fact, and upon exceptions to the admission and exclusion of evidence. The demurrer to the amended complaint was properly overruled. The allegations that plaintiff demanded payment of a specific sum, that defendant refused to pay said sum, "and that the same is now due and unpaid," sufficiently allege the nonpayment of the sum alleged to be due from the defendant to the plaintiff. As to the sufficiency of the evidence to justify the findings of fact in the several particulars specified by appellant, it is sufficient to say that upon each of these findings the evidence was materially conflicting, and, under the numerous decisions of this court, cannot be disturbed.

The respondent, called as a witness in her own behalf, was asked by her counsel the following question: "State the circumstances attending the making of the contract between you and McBean, set out in the complaint, wherein you assigned to McBean your interest in the contract theretofore made by you with the Colton Land & Water Co." It was objected by appellant that the question was irrelevant and immaterial, and not in issue in the case; that the contract was in writing, was set out in the complaint, and its execution admitted by the answer; and that evidence was inadmissible under those circumstances to prove either its contents or the circumstances under which it was executed, or that any other persons were parties to the same; and that the contract is not ambiguous. The objection was properly overruled. There were other questions in issue beside the terms and execution of the contract signed by McBean, and as to which the circumstances attending the making of the contract of assignment to McBean were both relevant and material. One of these questions was whether the sale and conveyance of the property by the Colton Land & Water Company to Bills was under the contract between the Colton Land & Water Company and respondent. If the circumstances called for by the question tended to elucidate the matter above suggeested, it was material and competent. So, too, the relation between McBean and Bills in reference to the entire transaction, and each part of it, was a material matter put in issue by the pleadings, and, the issue being material, any competent evidence tending to sustain the issue on the part of the plaintiff was proper. The motion to strike out all the answer to the foregoing question, "except such portions as pertain to the identification of the contract," was also properly denied. It is not essential to the admissibility of evidence that it should prove the issue under which it is offered. It is only necessary that it should tend to prove the issue, or some part of it. We think the answer clearly tended to sustain a material issue, and was therefore properly retained.

Respondent was asked certain questions in chief as to conversations with Bills not in the presence of McBean, to which objections were made. The court overruled these objections, saying that "any conversation with Bills does not bind McBean unless he is connected with it. It is only a question of the order of proof, and it may as well come in one time as another." Defendant afterwards moved to strike out all the testimony of this witness relating to the conversations that she had with Bills, on the ground that no authority from McBean had been shown authorizing Bills to act as his agent in any manner, and that her testimony, so far as it relates to Bills, is wholly irrelevant and immaterial, which motion was denied, and defendant excepted. The motion to strike out was premature, and was properly denied. The court did not abuse its discretion in permitting the evidence to be given at that stage of the case. It involved only the power of the court to control the order of proof; and, even conceding that the testimony of this witness did not then tend to show that Bills was authorized to represent McBean, if it did not show that it was not so authorized, it was proper to retain it until all of plaintiff's evidence was in, as other evidence might, and as we think did, show that he was so authorized.

Upon cross-examination the plaintiff was asked: "Whose $1,000 was that that was paid for the first payment?" An objection on the part of the plaintiff was sustained, to which the defendant excepted. This point was settled upon the first appeal. See 91 Cal. 73, 27 Pac. 518. Besides, if the court erred in sustaining this objection, it was rendered harmless by subsequent evidence that this $1,000 was furnished to her by Raynor.

Plaintiff was asked, upon cross-examination, the following question: "Did Raynor agree to pay you some portion of the $3,000, or the whole of it?" Plaintiff's objection was properly sustained. The defendant had entered into a written obligation to pay the money demanded, and could not be relieved from that obligation by Raynor's agreement to pay it, unless, in consideration of that agreement, the plaintiff released McBean; and this was not included in the question nor proposed to be shown.

The testimony of Mr. Mintzer that the property was sold to Bills under the contract made with plaintiff was both material and relevant. The conversation between Bills and Mintzer, testified to by the latter, in which Bills said he was there representing McBean, and was ready to consummate the trade, was competent and material for the purpose of showing that the purchase was made under the contract assigned to McBean by the plaintiff. The absence of McBean did not affect the testimony upon that point, at least. As to its bearing on the question of Bills' agency for McBean, it corroborated the statement of McBean, made to the witness after the sale, "that he had become the purchaser of the property; that he meant to put in larger pipes." So, too, the possession and production by Bills, at the time of the transaction, of the assignment of the contract by plaintiff to McBean, was a circumstance which tended to prove that he was the agent of McBean, and corroborated his statement that he represented McBean.

The subsequent conversation between Mintzer and McBean in regard to the sale of lots made by Mintzer after the contract with plaintiff, and before the conveyance to Bills, was also relevant and material. As urged by counsel, there was no issue in the case as to who was entitled to these lots, or the proceeds of them; but the fact that McBean raised a question in regard to them, and claimed the unpaid portion of the money for which they were sold, was very cogent and convincing evidence of three important facts in controversy, namely: (1) That the purchase, by whomsoever made, was made under this contract, as otherwise no possible claim could be made for lots sold after the date of the contract, and before the sale on July 13th; (2) that McBean was the real purchaser at that sale; and, if so, (3) that Bills was in fact his agent in the transaction. His interest in these lots could only have been acquired under the contract and by the sale made by the Colton Land & Water Company ostensibly to Bills. It does not affect the force of this evidence that Raynor had an interest in the purchase, and that Bills also represented him, for, so far as the Colton Land & Water Company and the plaintiff were concerned, he could serve Raynor only as the agent of McBean, who held the sole title to the contract. The objection to the testimony of the witness Mintzer that Mrs. Ferguson told him that Bills was there to represent McBean does not appear to have been sufficiently presented to the court below; but, assuming it to have been properly taken, the answer of the witness does not justify a reversal of the judgment. The plaintiff had already testified to the circumstances connected with the assignment of the contract to McBean, and that Bills was in fact a party to the assignment, though not so expressed in it. She had given evidence, as had also the witness upon the stand, tending to show the agency of Bills. Besides, if it were conceded that the court erred in overruling defendant's objection to this testimony, it is clear that the error was harmless, as the testimony abundantly shows, as we have just seen, that Bills was in fact the agent of McBean. The fact of the agency being sufficiently established by other testimony, and especially by the conduct and declarations of the defendant himself, he could not be injured by testimony erroneously admitted upon the same fact.

P. A. Raynor, called on behalf of the defendant, was asked the following question: "State at whose instance she obtained that contract." This question was asked for the purpose of showing that the contract here sued upon was obtained by Mrs. Ferguson from the Colton Land & Water Company at the instance and request of Raynor. This evidence was clearly immaterial. The plaintiff made the contract with the Colton Land & Water Company personally, and it was assigned to the defendant, who agreed in writing that, under the circumstances and conditions therein expressed, he would pay to her the sum of $3,000. The obligation of the defendant, it is clear, could not be affected by the fact that Raynor, or any one else, had instigated the plaintiff to procure the contract.

W. E. Raynor, a witness for defendant, having testified that the mortgage given by his father to Bills for $35,000 included the unpaid purchase money of McBean's water right, as well as of the remainder of the land, was asked by defendant the following question: "State what was the relative consideration for the giving of that mortgage, as between McBean's water contract and Bills' interest in the land." Plaintiff's objection thereto was properly sustained. It will be observed that the mortgage was made to Bills alone. The question concedes that it included the unpaid consideration of the water right, which belonged to McBean, and assumes that the land conveyed by Bills to Raynor was in fact owned by Bills, and that McBean had no interest in it. The question at issue was as to McBean's interest in the land purchased from the Colton Land & Water Company under the Ferguson contract. How the relative value of the land and the water could possibly tend to show who in fact owned the land is beyond comprehension. If the witness had answered that the purchase price of the water included in the mortgage was one-fourth, it would have tended neither more nor less to prove the ownership of the land than would the answer that it was three-fourths. The question as to the relative value of these interests was therefore wholly immaterial. Finding no material error in the record, the judgment and order appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C.; SEARLS, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, said judgment and order are affirmed.

101 Cal. 131

BRANDENSTEIN v. HOKE et al., (BRANDER, Intervener.) (No. 18,233.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 25, 1894.)

LEVEE DISTRICTS—CONSTITUTIONAL LAW — BONDS —ESTOPPEL.

1. Act March 25, 1868, (St. 1867–68, p. 321,) which requires the county board to erect a levee district whenever a petition therefor shall be presented by persons in possession of more than half the land in the proposed district, without submitting the question of tax to a vote of the people in such district so erected, is unconstitutional, since no discretion is vested in the board to reject the petition, no notice is required to be given to landowners who do not join therein, and no opportunity for contest is allowed. Moulton v. Parks, 64 Cal. 166, 30 Pac. 613, approved.

2. A levee district organized under an unconstitutional law is not a corporation de facto, and may set up the unconstitutionality of the law to defeat the collection of bonds issued by it.

3. Such district is not estopped from denying liability on the bonds by the fact that it retained the proceeds arising from their sale, and paid interest on them for several years.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Sutter county; E. A. Davis, Judge.

Mandamus by Joseph Brandenstein against William T. Hoke and others, defendants, and George L. Brander, intervener, to compel defendants to levy a tax to pay bonds issued by a levee district. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Ben Morgan, for appellant. A. C. McLaughlin, Dist. Atty., F. C. Lusk, and M. E. Sanborn, for respondent. Henry Thompson, (Philip P. Galpin, of counsel,) for intervener.

GAROUTTE, J. The defendants other than George L. Brander, an intervener, are the supervisors of the county of Sutter, and, as such, are ex officio members of and constitute the board of reclamation fund commissioners of levee district No. 5. The plaintiff is the holder of certain bonds of said district, which were issued and sold for the purpose of securing funds to carry on improvements in such levee district. A writ of mandate is prayed for, requiring said board of fund commissioners to take certain steps provided in the statute looking towards the levy and collection of a tax upon the property within the limits of the district, to be applied in liquidation of the principal and interest of plaintiff's bonds. The matters here involved are purely matters of law, and the first and principal question presented involves the constitutionality of the following section of an act of the legislature, passed March 25, 1868, (St. 1867–68, p. 321:) "Sec. 21. Whenever a petition shall be received by said board of supervisors from persons in possession of more than one-half of the acres of any specified portion of said county, asking to be set apart and erected into a levee district, said board shall at once erect such territory into a levee district, and place it under the provisions of this act, to be called levee district No. 2, 3, and so on, as the case may be, provided that it shall not be required to submit the question of tax to a vote of the people of any district so erected." We cannot bring ourselves to the conclusion that it is necessary to enter into an extended discussion for the purpose of demonstrating the unconstitutionality of the foregoing provision of the statute of this state. That it is violative of fundamental principles of constitutional law is apparent upon the slightest inspection. It will be observed that one petitioner, having the possession of a majority of the acreage of the territory, which he desires to form into a levee district, has the absolute right to form such district. No notice to his neighbors is required. No opportunity for protest is allowed. No discretion is vested in the board of supervisors to reject the petition, or even change its proposed boundaries. The duty of the board is entirely perfunctory. The lands of the petitioner's neighbors may need no reclamation. They may consist of plateaus, where flood waters are never known. They, being of great value, may be placed within the lines of the proposed district for the single purpose of bearing the brunt of the taxation which is sure to follow the creation of the district. While these matters may be considered trifles in the eyes of the legislature, yet in the eyes of the law a practice of the things countenanced by this provision involves a violation of man's gravest constitutional rights. This is an attempted delegation of power to one or more unknown persons to deal with their neighbors' property with an iron hand, untrammeled by any of the requirements that are always and everywhere recognized by courts and constitutions as absolutely necessary to be observed before one man may do aught to interfere with another's property. This provision of the statute was reviewed by the court in the case of Moulton v. Parks, 64 Cal. 166, 30 Pac. 613, and it was there declared to be violative of the constitution of this state. Appellant insists that the matter was not before the court, and that the views there expressed were obiter dicta. It is not necessary for us to pass upon that contention here. If those views were dicta, they are dicta no longer, for we heartily approve of them, as containing a sound exposition of the law. We also refer to People v. Bennett, 29 Mich. 451, in support of the views we have expressed. That case contains an elaborate discussion of the principle here involved, and, both as to the facts and the law, occupies much broader ground than the case at bar.

It is claimed that this levee district is at least a corporation de facto, and that defendants will not be allowed to set up the unconstitutionality of the law under which it was organized for the purpose of defeating this proceeding; and Dean v. Davis, 51 Cal. 406, is relied upon to support this doctrine. That case does not extend to the limits insisted upon. While it is true that the regularity of the proceedings taken in the organization of a corporation cannot be questioned collaterally, still that principle does not arise in this case. This is not a question of regularity of proceedings. The matter here presented is, was there any law whatever under which a corporation similar to this so-called "levee district" could be organized at all? If there is no such law, then there is neither fund commissioners nor corporation, and a void law is no law. It is said in Norton v. Shelby Co., 118 U. S. 442, 6 Sup. Ct. 1121: "An unconstitutional act is not a law. It confers no rights. It imposes no duties. It affords no protection. It creates no office. It is, in legal contemplation, as inoperative as though it had never been passed."

It is also insisted that respondents are estopped from disputing the validity of the bonds by retaining the benefit derived from the proceeds of their sale, and also by the payment of interest upon them for several years. We cannot assent to this view. It might possibly have some weight if the district was a corporation organized under a valid law, and these bonds were issued ultra vires, although the principles declared in Sutro v. Pettit, 74 Cal. 332, 16 Pac. 7, seem to negative such contention. But here the principle cuts underneath all mere questions of irregularity of organization, or even the ultra vires issuance of bonds, for there is no organized body or person or persons against whom to urge a waiver or plead an estoppel. It is ordered that the judgment be affirmed.

We concur: HARRISON, J.; PATERSON, J.

100 Cal. 543

STEWART et al. v. SUPERIOR COURT.

(No. 15,482.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 25, 1894.)

Department 1. Application by Julia V. Stewart and W. B. Prentice for writ of review. Modified.

For former report, see 35 Pac. 156.

Gibson & Titus and V. E. Shaw, for petitioners. E. W. Britt, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. It appearing to the court that the demurrer to the petition was submitted without answer being filed, under a misapprehension as to the effect of such submission under subdivision 3, rule 26, it is ordered that the judgment heretofore entered herein be modified to read as follows: "The demurrer to the petition is overruled, and it is ordered that the writ issue as prayed for."

4 Cal. Unrep. 440

DREW et al. v. HICKS et al. (No. 19,199.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 25, 1894.)

NUISANCES—PRESCRIPTIVE RIGHT—AMENDMENT—SURFACE WATERS.

1. The rule that a right to maintain a nuisance cannot be acquired by prescription applies only to public, and not to private, nuisances.

2. Where evidence showing a prescriptive right to maintain a private nuisance has been admitted without objection that it is not within the issues made by the pleadings, it is an abuse of discretion to refuse to allow defendant to amend his answer so as to allege the right.

3. The rule that land is subject to the flow of surface water from higher land does not apply to surface water turned on the lower owners by artificial changes made by those owning land above them.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Bernardino county; John L. Campbell, Judge.

Action by H. L. Drew and C. W. Fairbanks against Sarah A. Hicks and William Curtis to enjoin defendants from constructing a bulkhead so as to turn water on plaintiffs' premises. From judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Reversed.

Rolfe & Freeman, Harris & Gregg, and Paris & Satterwhite, for appellants. Willis, Cole & Craig and C. W. C. Rowell, for respondents.

HAYNES, C. Appeal from the judgment, and an order denying defendants' motion for a new trial.

This case and the case of Drew v. Cole, (No. 19,143, filed Feb. 4, 1893,) 32 Pac. 229, (not reported in California Reports,) were tried together in superior court, and decided upon the same evidence. In Drew v. Cole, findings and judgment were for defendants, and upon appeal the judgment was affirmed, and a petition for rehearing denied. For a description of the premises of the respective parties, and a general statement of the facts involved, see Drew v. Cole, supra.

The complaint in Drew v. Cole was filed October 14, 1891, and in this case the complaint was filed November 9, 1891. The cases were different as to the specific relief sought, though depending largely upon the same facts, and involving in the main the same questions of law. That case was brought to enjoin the defendants from constructing a bulkhead in a wash or ravine in Colton avenue, which separates the lands of plaintiffs and defendants, whereby the water would be prevented from flowing down that avenue, and would be turned, as was alleged, upon the premises of the plaintiffs. The defendants answered, and also filed a cross complaint alleging that there was a natural water course over the lands lying to the eastward, which entered plaintiffs' premises at the southeast corner; that plaintiffs had built a dam across that water course at said corner of their land, and had excavated the ground on that portion of the avenue next plaintiffs' premises, whereby the water was turned down the avenue, and cut the ravine therein, and flooded defendants' lands, and, if the dam was allowed to remain, would cause them irreparable damage, —and prayed that it be abated as a nuisance, and for an injunction. Findings and judgment went for the defendants, dismissing the complaint, and granting the prayer of the cross complaint. In this case the complaint alleges, substantially as in the former complaint, "that the general trend of that section of the country is sloping at various grades from east to west and from southeast to northwest down to and across the premises of the defendants, and, in times of heavy storms, rain falling upon the same, or any large body of water flowing thereon, not absorbed by the soil, will, and always has, except when obstructed or diverted from its natural course as hereinafter stated, flowed in wide sheets of water down to, upon, and across the premises of said defendants," and charges that defendants, with a malicious and wrongful design to cause the water to flow down California street on the easterly side of defendants' premises, and with intent to discharge the same upon and across plaintiffs' premises, erected an embankment from two to four feet high along the east line of defendants' lands, (that being the west side line of California street,) and that, on top of said embankment on defendant Curtis' land, he attached wires to cottonwood trees, with the design to intercept brush and debris, which would constitute a barrier to the flow of water, and turn it down to and upon plaintiffs' land. The prayer is that the embankment and wire fence be abated as a nuisance.

The learned judge who tried these cases prepared a written opinion, in which he stated the material or more important facts found by him, and his conclusion thereon, and this opinion was signed and filed February 4, 1892; and afterwards, on the 15th, formal findings were signed and filed in this case, the latter following quite closely the language of the complaint. In several important and controlling particulars, the facts in the latter are wholly inconsistent with the facts stated in the opinion filed by the court, and are also irreconcilable with the findings in Drew v. Cole in respect to facts equally pertinent and material to this case as to that. It is true that in Drew v. Cole there was no issue as to the embankment and wire fence, and the right of the defendants to maintain them was not adjudicated, while here that is the sole issue, and the sole right to be adjudicated. This conflict of findings, however, does not necessarily require a reversal of this case. If, upon all controlling questions of fact, the evidence was materially conflicting, we would be obliged to affirm both judgments, because of such conflict, unless there were other grounds for a reversal.

Appellants contend, not only that the findings are not justified by the evidence, but that the court erred in denying defendants' motion for leave to amend their answer to conform to the proofs given and received without objection. In the written opinion of the learned judge, which is incorporated in the statement on motion for a new trial, it is said: "I am satisfied that the testimony discloses the fact that the Hicks embankment is to-day substantially as it existed for the past fifteen years. From the testimony and examination of the premises, I am equally well satisfied that the embankment is above the natural surface of the ground, and the only right defendant Hicks could have to maintain the same would be by reason of the fact that she had acquired a prescriptive right to do so. This contention is urged by counsel for defendant Hicks in their argument on the final submission of the cause. After a careful examination of the pleadings, however, I do not see how their position can be maintained. Under our system of practice, he who would avail himself of the privilege of the statute of limitation must do so by a demurrer or answer. No such objection having been taken in this case, it is to be deemed as waived." Counsel for defendants then gave notice of a motion to amend their answer, on the ground that the allegations of the pleadings do not conform to the facts proven at the trial, and therewith served a copy of the proposed amendment. Upon the hearing the motion was denied. Defendants excepted, and took a bill of exceptions thereto, and this refusal to permit the amendment is assigned as one of the grounds upon which their motion for new trial was based. Respondents, while controverting the fact that the embankment is in the same condition as formerly, cite authorities to the proposition that continuance of a nuisance for any length of time does not give a prescriptive right to maintain it. If that is true, as applied to the circumstances of this case, the motion to amend was properly denied, as it would not aid the defense. The first case cited to this proposition is Mills v. Hall, 9 Wend. 315. But this case does not sustain respondents' proposition. If this embankment is a nuisance, it is a private one. In the case cited it was claimed that the dam corrupted the air, by which the health of plaintiff's family was affected. The defendants moved for a nonsuit upon the ground that, the dam having been continued for 20 years, no action would lie. The court said: "There is no such thing as a prescriptive right, or any other right, to maintain a public nuisance. * * * If the defendants have for twenty years been permitted to overflow the plaintiff's land with their mill pond, so far as the injury to the land is concerned, they have by that length of possession acquired a right to use it in that manner, and are not responsible in damages to the plaintiff. So a man may overflow his own land; but, if such overflow spread disease and death through the neighborhood, it must be abated, and he must respond in damages for any special injury which any individual may have sustained from it." All the cases cited by respondents to this point are cases of public nuisance. But this question has been settled in this state, as well as elsewhere. In Learned v. Castle, 78 Cal., at page 461, 18 Pac. 872, and 21 Pac. 11, it was said: "And to thus wrongfully cause water to flow upon another's land, which would not naturally flow there, is to create a nuisance per se. It is an injury to the right, and it cannot be continued because other persons might have a low estimate of the damages which it causes. And especially is this so when the continuance of the wrongful act might ripen into a right in the nature of an easement or servitude." See, also, Richards v. Dower, 64 Cal. 64, and other authorities cited in support of the above quotation. I think the court erred in not granting the amendment, as all the evidence in relation to the purposes for which the embankment was made, and the length of time it had been maintained, had been received without any objection, or any suggestion that it was not within the issues. Nor does it appear that it would have caused any delay in the disposition of the case, or that it would have made it necessary to take other or further testimony, while it is conceded by the learned judge that if the issue had been made the proofs already before him would have required a different judgment. If the facts had been found in relation to the embankment as indicated in the opinion of the court, it would be quite clear that a judgment for defendants, which those facts required, could not have been sustained, because not within the issues; and in such case the judgment would have been reversed, and the cause remanded, in order that the answer might be amended to correspond with the facts proved and found, as was done in Bryan v. Tormey, 84 Cal. 130, 24 Pac. 319. Justice would clearly have been promoted by the amendment, and no wrong would have been inflicted upon the plaintiff by allowing it; and under such circumstances it was an abuse of discretion to deny the motion. Or if, for any reason, the court was of the opinion that good practice required its denial, it was still sufficient ground for granting a new trial, followed by leave to amend the answer, since it clearly appeared that, such amendment being made, the facts required a different judgment.

Most of the questions likely to arise upon a new trial have been noticed in the opinion in Drew v. Cole, supra, though some of them might be made more specific, and which are especially called to our attention in respondents' brief.

So far as the embankment is concerned, a prescriptive right to maintain it would make them immaterial, though we cannot assume that there may not be different evidence upon that point; but in any event the right to maintain the wire fence does not appear to have been acquired by prescription.

We do not question the proposition laid down by respondents, that where two fields or farms adjoin, and one is lower than the other, the lower must necessarily be subject to all the natural flow of water from the upper one. But this question is not always to be tested by the conditions existing at the time the suit is brought. What is meant by "the natural flow" is to be taken as of a time when its course has not been changed or affected by artificial means. As stated by the supreme court of Ohio, "The lower owes a servitude to the upper to receive the water which naturally runs from it, provided the industry of man has not been used to create the servitude." Butler v. Peck, 16 Ohio St. 334. See Ogburn v. Connor, 46 Cal. 352, where Butler v. Peck, and Washb. Easem. (2d Ed.) p. 427, to the same effect, are cited and approved. This principle is equally applicable to both plaintiffs and defendants. If before the surface of the lands above were changed, and natural channels or washes in which surface waters flowed were obstructed, the water did not flow over defendants' lands "in times of usual, ordinary, and expected freshets," they have a right to protect themselves against surface water turned upon them by artificial changes made by those owning the land above them, and, so far as they find it necessary for their protection, turn the water to channels where it originally flowed, provided they have not delayed until a right by prescription has been acquired against them. Nor does the flow of water over lands in case of extraordinary freshets, or such as are not expected or reasonably anticipated, affect the question. The supreme court of Pennsylvania, speaking of "usual, ordinary, and expected freshets," for the consequences of which one might be liable, said: "A flood is another thing. It may not come for years together. When it does come, it is a visitation of Providence, and the destruction it brings must be borne by those on whom it happens to fall."[1] A cloud-burst, such as the record shows occurred in 1891, could not aid materially, if at all, in determining the "natural flow" of surface water as it formerly existed, nor affect the rights of any of the parties to this case. It was one of those inevitable calamities which are to be borne without complaint, and cannot convert a fence or an embankment, otherwise lawful and proper, into a nuisance which may be abated. I think the judgment and order appealed from should be reversed, with leave to the defendants to amend their answer.

We concur: VANCLIEF, C.; BELCHER, C.

HARRISON and GAROUTTE, JJ. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order appealed from are reversed, with leave to the defendants to amend their answer.

---

[1] McCoy v. Danley, 20 Pa. St. 89.

PEOPLE v. CORNWELL. (No. 21,073.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 25, 1894.)

CRIMINAL LAW—VERDICT—FIXING DEGREE.

Since there are two degrees of burglary, a verdict of guilty which does not fix the degree, as required by Pen. Code, § 1157, whenever a crime is distinguished into degrees, is erroneous, though the court charged that there could be no conviction of a higher offense than burglary in the second degree. People v. Bannister, (Cal.) 34 Pac. 710, followed.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; W. R. Dangerfield, Judge.

Thomas Cornwell was convicted of burglary, and appeals. Reversed.

W. I. Brobeck and P. A. Bergerot, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Hart, for the People.

PER CURIAM. On the authority of People v. Bannister, (No. 21,014; opinion filed Nov. 10, 1893,) 34 Pac. 710, the judgment and order of the superior court herein are reversed, and the cause remanded.

---

4 Cal. Unrep. 436

DAVIS v. EAMES et al. (No. 19,284.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 25, 1894.)

MINES AND MINING—AGREEMENT TO PURCHASE.

A contract giving an option to purchase a mine, wherein the vendors covenant to sink a shaft of at least 100 feet, imposes on them the absolute duty of sinking the shaft to the agreed depth, though they find no evidence that the mine contains enough valuable ore to justify them in purchasing it. Woodworth v. McLean, 11 S. W. 43, 97 Mo. 325, distinguished.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; Lucien Shaw, Judge.

Action by A. E. Davis against A. W. Eames and others for breach of contract. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Wilson & Lamme, for appellants. Houghton, Silent & Campbell, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. This is an action to recover damages for an alleged breach of contract by the appellants. The case was tried by the court without a jury, and judgment was entered against appellants for the sum of $700 and costs, from which, and from an order denying their motion for a new trial, they appeal. The facts are substantially as follows: The respondent, being the owner of a certain mining claim, known as the "Todd Mine," entered into a written contract with the appellants, by which, in consideration of the covenants and agreements to be performed on their part, he agreed to convey to them the property within four months for the sum of $6,000; and they covenanted and agreed to at once enter upon the mine, and sink a shaft thereon to the depth of at least 100 feet, and to crosscut the ledge on the 50-foot level, and at the bottom of the shaft to crosscut again at least 10 feet, and to make such other developments thereon as they might deem proper. They were also to have all the ore taken from the mine in doing this work. In pursuance of the terms of the contract, appellants entered upon the mine and sunk a shaft to a depth of 56 feet. At the 50-foot level they ran a crosscut a distance of 47 feet, and struck a granite wall, which they penetrated about 3 feet. They then, without the plaintiff's consent, discontinued work in the shaft, and never afterwards did any more work in it, or sunk any other shaft in the mine. There were croppings on the surface of the mine, and seams leading out from the croppings, containing paying ore. The shaft was started on one of these seams, and from it defendants took some three or four tons of ore, which yielded about $20 per ton; but it gave out at a depth of about 26 feet, and below that point they found no ore in the shaft or crosscut. They afterwards prospected on the surface, and spent some $1,200 in so doing, but did not, as they thought, find evidence that the ledge contained valuable ore in sufficient quantities to justify them in paying for the mine, and thereupon they abandoned the contract. It is admitted that it would have cost at least $700 to sink the shaft the remaining 44 feet and make the 10-foot crosscut at the bottom; and, as a reason for not completing the contract in this regard, the witness James, who was an experienced miner in charge of the work, and interested with defendants therein, testified: "One of the reasons why we felt that we could not comply with the written contract, and why we wanted it modified, was because it would require steam works to sink the shaft deeper, which would have cost a good deal."

Counsel for appellants say in their brief "that the only question to be considered is whether, under the facts and circumstances disclosed by the record, the respondent is entitled to anything in excess of nominal damages;" and they insist that he was not in fact damaged in any sum or to any extent by the failure to sink the shaft to the depth agreed upon, and hence that the court erred in awarding damages in the sum of $700. In support of this position, counsel cite and rely upon the case of Woodworth v. McLean, 97 Mo. 325, 11 S. W. 43. That was an action to recover damages for breach of a written contract. Plaintiffs owned a mining claim in New Mexico, and conveyed to McLean two-thirds of it as a consideration for the contract in question. The contract provided that McLean, within two years, and at his own expense, should cause a shaft of certain dimensions to be sunk to "the depth of five hundred feet on the vein of ore cropping out on said claim." McLean sunk the shaft, as agreed, to a depth of 330 feet, but refused to carry it further. There was evidence for defendant to the effect that the work was stopped at that point because the vein of mineral had given out entirely. The plaintiffs were awarded nominal damages only, and appealed. The appellate court said: "Plaintiffs regard this contract as obliging McLean to sink the shaft five hundred feet, in any event, irrespective of all intermediate developments. Their entire argument here rests on that assumption. We think the language of the agreement does not reasonably bear that interpretation. Its intent and purpose were to secure a development of the claim in a manner to 'subserve the mutual interests of the parties,' and, on the completion of the work, two-thirds of the shaft (as part of the entire claim) was to belong to McLean. The latter stipulated to sink the shaft five hundred feet 'on the vein of ore cropping out on said claim.' If, in the progress of the work, all indications of valuable mineral ceased, and the vein of ore ran out entirely, there was no obligation on McLean to proceed further. The question whether the vein of ore had ceased is one of fact, to be tried in the usual way. As the work stopped within the five hundred feet, the burden of proof rested on him to show that the vein of ore (along which the shaft was to proceed) had terminated, for the contract itself asserts the existence of the vein at the beginning. But on establishing that fact the requirements of the contract would be met, and there would be no breach whatever. The measure of damages for failing to continue a mining excavation, such as this, to the point fixed by the contract, is the reasonable price or value of the work necessary to complete the shaft to the agreed depth. But this rule is not applicable, in view of the language and evident purpose of the contract here considered, unless the vein of mineral continued to the point where McLean ceased work." That case is plainly distinguishable from this. In that the decision was based upon the theory that as, by the terms of the contract, the shaft was to be sunk on the vein of ore cropping out on the claim, the requirements of the contract were fully met and complied with when the vein wholly gave out. In this case the contract is different. Here, the appellants were given the right to sink the shaft at such point as they might select, without reference to any vein or croppings, and to make such other and further developments as they might deem proper, and to take and appropriate to their use all ore extracted from the mine while doing the work. The obvious purpose of respondent was to have the mine opened to a depth of at least 100 feet, in case appellants declined to purchase it; and of appellants, to satisfy themselves by making the stipulated explorations of the value of the property, before completing the purchase. The obligation of appellants to sink the shaft to the agreed depth was absolute, and was the consideration for the option given them. There were no modifying terms in the contract. The claim that the supposed value of the mine would not have been increased by sinking the shaft to the agreed depth, but would probably have been lessened, is based upon theory, and not upon evidence or common knowledge. Respondent insisted that appellants should complete the shaft and crosscut in accordance with the contract, and we think he had a right to do so. The general rule as to the measure of damages in a case like this is correctly stated in Woodworth v. McLean, supra, and we think that rule applicable here, "in view of the language and evident purpose of the contract here considered." The judgment and order appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: SEARLS, C.; VANCLIEF, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

---

101 Cal. 125

WEIR et al. v. MEAD et al. (No. 18235.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 25, 1894.)

EXECUTOR'S BOND—NONEXECUTION BY PRINCIPAL—LIABILITY OF SURETIES.

An executor's bond, purporting to be the joint obligation of the principal and sureties, and the several obligation of the sureties, but signed only by the sureties, and not by the principal, as required by Code Civil Proc. § 1388, is absolutely void.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Sierra county; Stanley A. Smith, Judge.

Action by James C. Weir and others against Michael H. Mead, Benjamin Pauly, and others, on an executor's bond. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendants other than Mead appeal. Reversed.

Frank R. Wehe, for appellants. F. D. Soward, for respondents.

BELCHER, C. Hiram G. Weir was a resident of Sierra county, and died in August, 1883, leaving a last will, by which he devised all his property to the respondents in this action, and in which he named the defendant, Mead, as the executor thereof. The will was duly admitted to probate by the superior court of Sierra county in October following, and letters testamentary were ordered to be issued to Mead "upon giving bond required by law in the sum of six thousand and five hundred dollars." A bond was thereafter approved by the judge, and filed by the clerk of the court, which recited: "That I, Michael H. Mead, as principal, am held and firmly bound unto the state of California in the sum of six thousand and five hundred dollars, lawful money of the United States of America, in which sum I am also jointly bound with each of my sureties hereinafter named. * * * And we, Robert Forbes, [and five others,] as sureties, are severally held and firmly bound, and jointly with said Michael H. Mead are held and firmly bound, unto the said state of California, in the following sums, respectively, * * * for the payment of which, well and truly to be made, we and each of us, respectively, bind ourselves, our and each of our heirs, executors, and administrators, jointly and severally as aforesaid, firmly by these presents." Then follow the conditions of the bond, and the signatures of the six sureties. Mead, the principal, never signed the bond, but, on the day it was filed, letters testamentary were issued to him by the clerk, and there was indorsed thereon the usual oath for the faithful performance of his duties. Thereupon, he took possession of all the property of the estate of the decedent, and thereafter continued to act as executor of the said will until June 9, 1890, when a decree was duly made and entered in the matter of the said estate, settling his final account, and distributing the residue of the estate, consisting of $1,262.69 in money, to the legatees named in the will, who are the plaintiffs and respondents here. Mead never paid to the distributees any part of the money so distributed to them; and in November, 1892, they commenced this action on the said bond, to recover the same, making Mead and four of the sureties signing it parties defendant. Mead failed to appear, and his default was duly entered. The other defendants answered, and, among other things, denied in effect that the so-called "bond" ever became a valid bond, or imposed any obligation upon them, for the reason that it was never signed or executed by Mead, the principal named therein. The case was tried by the court without a jury, and judgments in proper form were entered in favor of the plaintiffs, from which, and from an order denying their motion for a new trial, the defendants other than Mead appeal.

Our Code provides that "every person to whom letters testamentary or of administration are directed to issue must, before receiving them, execute a bond to the state of California, with two or more sufficient sureties, to be approved by the superior court, or a judge thereof." Code Civil Proc. § 1388. The plain meaning of this provision is that the principal and sureties must sign the bond before letters can be issued, for obviously there can be no execution without signing. It will be observed that the bond in suit here is not in form the joint and several obligation of all the parties, as it should be, but is the joint obligation of the principal and sureties, and the several obligation only of the latter. The question, then, is, was the bond, —it not having been executed by the principal,—valid for any purpose; and can the appellants, who signed it as sureties, be held liable thereunder? In City & County of Sacramento v. Dunlap, 14 Cal. 421, the action was upon a bond which purported to be the joint bond of the principal and sureties, but was signed only by the sureties; and the question for determination was whether the intended principal or the sureties were bound by it. It was held that the plaintiff could not recover upon the bond; and the court, speaking through Field, C. J., said: "The liability of the sureties is conditional to that of the principal. They are bound if he is bound, and not otherwise. The very nature of the contract implies this. The fact that their signatures were placed to the instrument can make no difference in its effect. It purports on its face to be the bond of the three. Some one must have written his signature first, but it is to be presumed upon the understanding that the others named as obligors would add theirs. Not having done so, it was incomplete, and without binding obligation upon either;" citing Bean v. Parker, 17 Mass. 591; Wood v. Washburn, 2 Pick. 24; Sharp v. U. S., 4 Watts, 21; Fletcher v. Austin, 11 Vt. 447; Johnson v. Erskine, 9 Tex. 1. The learned justice then refers to certain decisions in other states which might seem to announce a different doctrine, and says that they were based upon bonds which were both joint and several, and he intimates that the liability might be different on the two kinds of bonds. In People v. Hartley, 21 Cal. 585, the action was upon a bond which was construed to be the joint obligation of the principal and sureties, and the several obligation of the sureties, so far as regards the amount for which each undertook to be liable. The bond was signed by the sureties, but not by the principal. The opinion in this case was also delivered by Field, C. J.; and it was held that the rule declared in City & County of Sacramento v. Dunlap was applicable, and that the bond imposed no binding obligation upon the sureties. In Kurtz v. Forquer, 94 Cal. 91, 29 Pac. 413, the action was upon a bond which was alleged to have been executed by two of the defendants as principals, and by the other defendants as sureties. The bond purported to be the bond of all the defendants, but it was in fact signed only by the sureties. It was held that the plaintiff might recover on the bond, and that the cases of City and County of Sacramento v. Dunlap and People v. Hartley, supra, were not in point, "because in those cases the bonds sued on were strictly joint, and not several, while in the case at bar the obligation is expressly joint and several." In Murfree on Official Bonds the law is thus stated: "A bond purporting to be that of a principal and his sureties, joint in form, and only several in recited limitations of the liabilities of the sureties, is absolutely void, if it is not executed by the principal. Being a joint bond, his signature was necessary to its validity, for the defects which can be cured upon their suggestion in the complaint do not embrace the absence of the signature of the principal obligor. Without his signature, the instrument is not his deed. There is no bond of his, in which defects can be suggested and cured." Section 252.

In other states the decisions are conflicting upon the question whether the sureties can be held liable on a bond which purports to be joint and several, but has not been signed by the principal. The last case to which our attention is called, bearing upon this question, and deciding in effect that sureties may be so held, is Trustees v. Sheik, 119 Ill. 579, 8 N. E. 189. The opinion in the case is an able one, and it reviews quite fully the decisions on both sides of the question. It is said: "We have given the authorities bearing on the question due consideration, and we are not inclined to adopt the view held by the courts, that a bond signed by the sureties without the signature of the principal may not be binding upon those who execute it, as was held in the case cited from Missouri, and other like cases. If the sureties saw proper to bind themselves without the principal executing the bond and becoming bound, we think they might do so, and their undertaking is one that may be enforced in the courts by an appropriate action. The fact that the principal obligor in this case failed to sign the bond was a mere technicality, which ought not to affect the rights of any of the parties concerned." On the other hand, the last case to which our attention is called, holding the other way, is a decision by the supreme court of South Dakota in Board v. Sweeney, 48 N. W. 302. In this case, too, the opinion is quite able and clear; and, after reviewing at length all the prior decisions on both sides of the question, it reaches a conclusion directly contrary to that reached by the supreme court of Illinois. It is said: "After a careful review of the authorities, and the reasoning upon which they are based, we think the better rule is that an official bond, in which the officer is named as principal, but which is not executed by him, is prima facie invalid, and not binding upon the sureties." It is not necessary here to cite or comment upon the numerous cases reviewed in the opinions last referred to, as this case clearly falls within the rule declared in the two California cases first cited. That rule is well supported in other states, and we think it should be followed here. There is a remark made by the supreme court of Michigan in the case of Johnston v. Kimball Tp., 39 Mich. 187, which we think applicable to this case, and we therefore quote and adopt it: "Our statutes plainly contemplate that the treasurer shall himself be a party to his own official bond; and, while we are not prepared to hold that a bond knowingly and intentionally given without his concurrent liability will not bind the obligors, we are of opinion that where he purports to be obligor, and does not sign the bond, there must be positive evidence that the sureties intended to be bound without requiring his signature before they can be held responsible." Here there was no evidence that the sureties intended to be bound without requiring the principal's signature, but on the contrary the evidence introduced as to one of them tended to show that he did not so intend. It follows that the judgment and order should be reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to the court below to enter judgment in favor of the appellants.

We concur: SEARLS, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, it is ordered that the judgment and order be reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to the court below to enter judgment in favor of the appellants.

101 Cal. 178

LEVEE DIST. NO. 9 v. FARMER et al.

(No. 18,159.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 26, 1894.)

HIGHWAYS—VACATION—RIGHTS OF ABUTTING OWNERS.

1. An order of the board of supervisors laying out a new road, and vacating an old one, is not void because it fails to show on its face that there is any connection or relation between the two roads, if the surveys and descriptions of the new and the old roads show the connection.

2. The vacation of a highway established by statutory proceedings is not a taking of property from an abutting owner for a public use requiring compensation to be first made to him, since he has no interest in such highway that is not common to the public, and must be held to have acquired and improved his property in view of the statute authorizing the vacation of such highways.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Sutter county; E. A. Davis, Judge.

Action by Levee District No. 9 against L. P. Farmer and others to enjoin defendants from vacating a road. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

M. C. Barney and W. T. Phipps, for appellant. A. C. McLaughlin, Dist. Atty., W. H. Carlin, and M. E. Sanborn, for respondents.

HAYNES, C. Appellant brought this action against the individuals composing the board of supervisors of Sutter county, two persons who were overseers of road districts, and others who were owners of lands through which a certain road ran, to enjoin them from closing up or vacating said road. Appellant is a corporation organized to maintain a levee along a portion of Feather river to prevent overflows, and the part of said road in question is contiguous, for the greater part of its distance, at least, to the levee; and the complaint alleges that it is the only inlet or outlet to the levee for the purpose of protecting or repairing the same, and charges that the defendants are preparing and threatening to, and will, unless restrained by the court, fence, plow up, and destroy the same, without any legal right or authority so to do, to plaintiff's great and irreparable damage. The prayer is for a temporary restraining order and a perpetual injunction. The answer of defendants, in addition to denials, alleged that on January 6, 1892, the board of supervisors ordered the road abandoned and discontinued, such order to take effect May 1, 1892. Upon the trial, defendants had findings and judgment in their favor, from which judgment the plaintiff appeals. The facts appear in a bill of exceptions. At the commencement of the trial, counsel for defendants suggested that, if the orders of the board of supervisors alleged in the answers were valid, that would dispose of the case, and proposed that the first proofs be directed to that issue, to which counsel for plaintiff assented. The proceedings of the board were thereupon put in evidence by defendants, and plaintiff put in no evidence whatever. The principal question, therefore, is as to the validity of the order vacating the road.

Appellant attacks the validity of the order mainly upon two grounds: (1) That the petition upon which the proceedings were based was for laying out and establishing a new road, and vacating an old one, and (2) that it did not appear from the proceedings that there was any connection or relation between the two, as that the construction of the new road rendered the old unnecessary. It requires neither discussion nor authority to sustain the proposition that two wholly disconnected objects cannot properly be joined in the same proceeding and order; and while these proceedings do not expressly, or in direct language, show that the new road is but an alteration of the old, making a portion of the old road unnecessary, the surveys and descriptions of the new road and the old, which were put in evidence, sufficiently show that fact. The portion of the old road vacated is about two miles in length, and the points where the new diverges from it at one end, and unites with it at the other, are given, while the courses of the surveys show that the divergence is at no place considerable,—perhaps not exceeding 40 rods. The petition was signed by the required umber of qualified persons; the descriptions of the road sought to be established and the one to be vacated were definite, and did not show that they were disconnected matters which ought not, or could not, be joined in the same proceeding; and as to all facts tending to show whether the power of the board ought, or ought not, to be exercised, either by granting or denying the petition in whole or in part, the board exercises judicial functions, (Damrell v. San Joaquin, 40 Cal. 158; In re Grove Street, 61 Cal. 453; Waugh v. Chauncey, 13 Cal. 11;) and its judgments are final, and cannot be attacked collaterally, but may be reviewed upon certiorari where the jurisdiction of the board has been exceeded, (Fall v. Paine, 23 Cal. 303; Murray v. Mariposa Co., 23 Cal. 495; Damrell v. San Joaquin, 40 Cal. 154; Bixler v. Board, 59 Cal. 701.)

This disposes of all the objections to the introduction of the records, except the one now to be noticed, and upon which appellant principally relies, viz.: That the provisions of the Political Code which purport to confer the power upon the board of supervisors to vacate public roads are unconstitutional, because they do not authorize the board to assess the damages caused thereby to abutting owners, nor in any manner provide for compensation to them, and that the rights of such abutting owners are property which under the constitution cannot be taken away or damaged without compensation. We are not cited to any case in this state where the question thus made has been called to the attention of the court or decided. Appellant cites Elliott, Roads & St. p. 114; but this citation has no material bearing upon the question. The author is there discussing the rights of abutting owners arising from the dedication of streets by the owner of the soil, and improvements made on the faith of such dedication, as is clearly shown by the cases cited in the footnote. One of these cases (Story v. Railroad Co., 90 N. Y. 122) was where the city owned certain lands, and surveyed and platted them into lots and streets, and sold them, the deeds therefor containing a covenant on the part of the grantor to make the streets, which "shall forever thereafter continue and be for the free and common passage, and as public streets and ways, for the inhabitants and all others," etc.; and it was held that the covenantees could not be deprived of the street without compensation. Another case cited is Le Clerq v. Gallipolis, 7 Ohio, 218. There the corporation owned the lands, and platted them, and designated a certain portion as a public square, and placed a value on the lots at which they were sold, the value of those on the public square being higher "because it was forever inalienable and to be kept open;' and it was held "that where land is dedicated to the use of the inhabitants of a town one or more, especially one whose property is affected in value, may enforce the execution of the trust." In the first of these cases the right of the abutter rested upon a covenant in his deed from the city, and in the second upon a trust created for his benefit, which the trustee could not disregard. Here, however, there was no dedication, nor any covenant on the part of the public, nor any trust in the public of the land upon which the road was laid for the use of the appellant or of the public. Whatever trust existed in the state was of an easement, not for the use or benefit of appellant, but for the use of the public, to continue for such time only as the use thereof by the public should be necessary. But it does not appear probable that the levee was built because the road was there, or on the faith that it would never be vacated, but because the river was there and likely to overflow; and therefore appellant is not within the authority he cites. Appellant, however, cites us to the statement of the same author at page 662, where the broad proposition is asserted that "the right which an abutter enjoys as one of the public, and in common with other citizens, is not property in such sense as to entitle him to compensation on the discontinuance of the road or street, but, with respect to the right which he has in the highway as a means of enjoying the free and convenient use of his abutting property, it is radically different, for this right is a special one. If this special right is of value,—and it is of value if it increases the worth of his abutting premises,—then it is property, no matter whether it be of great or small value. * * * For this reason we think the discontinuance or vacation of a street in such manner as to prevent access to the property of an adjoining owner is a 'taking' of property within the constitutional inhibition, and cannot be lawful without compensation to such owner." The cases cited by the author do not sustain the proposition. Cincinnati City v. White's Lessees, 6 Pet. 431, was where lands were dedicated and set apart "forever" as a common. Petition of Concord, 50 N. H. 530, was under a statute which provided: "On petitions for discontinuance of highways referred to the county commissioners, if they report for the discontinuance, they shall assess the damages occasioned to any person thereby." Common Council v. Croas, 7 Ind. 9, related to an alley in the city, and it was held that real estate dedicated for a street or alley could not be reclaimed by the donor without the consent of the owners of the property adjoining such street or alley. The court, in its opinion, called attention to the distinction between the modes of establishing streets in a town and of common roads,—that the former is a dedication by the owner, and the latter by appropriating private property to a public use by the state by the exercise of the right of eminent domain. Haynes v. Thomas, 7 Ind. 38, was also a case involving the dedication of land for a public street, and in no way bears upon the question now under consideration. The case cited from 50 Ind. 537 (Butterworth v. Bartlett) arose under a statute which provided that, upon the vacation of a highway, one through whose land the highway passed, who should be injured by the vacation of it, should be entitled to damages for such injury. Two other cases cited by the author related to the right of an owner, whose lot abutted on a street, to damages resulting from the use of the street by railroads, such use being an additional servitude. The only case cited by the author in which the question at bar was discussed is Pearsall v. Board, 74 Mich. 558, 42 N. W. 77; and the opinion in that case concludes as follows: "The statute of 1887, at page 185, recognizes the right of Mrs. Pearsall to her damages in this case, and has undertaken to provide a mode for obtaining them, but it is not the one authorized by the constitution." The reporter adds, in a footnote, that the act provided for a jury of six freeholders instead of twelve.

Schaufele v. Doyle, 86 Cal. 107, 24 Pac. 834, and Brown v. City of Seattle, 5 Wash. 35, 31 Pac. 313, 32 Pac. 214, cited by appellant, were each cases of injury to abutting property resulting from a change of grade of an existing street in a city, whereby a change in the surface of the lot was made necessary to its convenient use and enjoyment, as by grading or filling, or changing approaches. In these cases, as in multitudes of others of like character, much is said about the rights and property of the abutting owner in the street; but what is said must be read in the light of the facts of each particular case. No one questions that an abutter upon a country highway has an interest in the easement created for public use; but it does not follow that such abutter is entitled to damages upon the vacation of such highway, nor that the vacation of it is a taking or damaging of private property for public use. The interest of each abutting owner is the same. Though it may be of greater use or benefit to one than to others, it is a common right, created in the same way, for the same purpose, of the same duration, and subject to be discontinued when the interests of the public, for whose benefit it was created, requires it,—that is, when it ceases to be necessary for public use. The easement is created for the public, not for an individual, though an individual may have a private way even by condemnation. Nor does the fact that a way may be necessary for a single abutter affect the conclusion that it is no longer necessary as a public road. If it were otherwise, no public road could be vacated so long as it could be shown that it was necessary for a single abutter, and thus the public could be required to maintain what is in fact a private way. That an abutter may be injured by the discontinuance or vacation of the road is conceded; but "there is no contract with surrounding property owners that a public improvement shall always exist as at present, and no damages will be allowed for its discontinuance, notwithstanding improvements have been made on the supposition that they will remain, and notwithstanding property has been thereby enhanced in value." Mills, Em. Dom. § 317. In Iowa the supreme court say: "We have held that the vacation of a highway does not take from an individual residing thereon his property, either for public or private use, and that he cannot recover damages therefor, although he may suffer inconvenience and loss therefrom." Barr v. City of Oskaloosa, 45 Iowa, 275. The supreme court of Pennsylvania said: "But by the vacation of Washington street no private property was taken or applied to public use;" and the court further held that the power of the legislature was not restrained in that regard by the provision in the constitution requiring municipal corporations to make compensation for private property taken, injured, or destroyed by the construction or enlargement of their works, highways, or improvements, and which also provided that private property should not be taken or applied to public use without just compensation. McGee's Appeal, 114 Pa. St. 471, 8 Atl. 237. The supreme court of Illinois said: "It is not true, in fact or in law, that defendant has either taken or damaged plaintiff's property for public use. It has taken no property for public or any other use. That of which complaint is made is the vacating of certain streets. In no sense can that act be construed as either taking or damaging private property for public use, as those terms are used in the constitution." City of East St. Louis v. O'Flynn, 119 Ill. 200, 10 N. E. 395.

Whatever of apparent hardship there may be in particular cases where roads have been created by use when the country was new, as in this state, and for the temporary convenience of a sparsely settled country, a greater hardship would be entailed upon the public if those roads could not now be vacated or changed to meet the present changed situation without compensating those whose premises may abut thereon for the loss or inconvenience they may sustain, as, if that were the rule, none would consent to the change, and the added burden would be an embargo upon the creation of new and more desirable roads. The creation of highways by use, or under the statute, creates an easement for the benefit of the public for such time only as the public necessities and convenience may require, and creates no covenant or obligation in favor of an abutter that it shall always exist; but, on the contrary, the statutes, while providing for the establishment and maintenance of highways, also provide for vacating the same, and abutters must be held to have acquired and improved their property in view of that fact; and hence no one can acquire a legal interest in it other than that which is common to all, and this common interest the authority relied upon by appellant concedes does not entitle an abutter to damages upon the vacation of the road. The public use ceases upon such vacation, and an injury to the appellant consequent upon such ending of the use cannot be held to be a taking or damaging for a public use. The first order of the board of supervisors was valid, and the second order, passed to meet an objection made by appellant, was unnecessary, and did not affect the validity of the first. The plaintiff having introduced no evidence, the findings were proper. If the fact or extent or amount of the injury sustained by appellant had been found by the court, it would not avail to sustain a bill for an injunction, since it was damnum absque injuria. The judgment appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: VANCLIEF, C.; SEARLS, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

101 Cal. 118

LEE v. SOUTHERN PAC. R. CO. (No. 19,215.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 25, 1894.)

APPEAL—GRANTING NEW TRIAL — ASSUMPTION OF RISK BY SERVANT—DEFECTIVE MACHINERY.

1. An order granting a new trial on the ground that the verdict is excessive will not be reversed merely because the supreme court differs with the trial court as to what would have been a just compensation, unless it appears that the trial court abused its discretion.

2. An employe does not assume the risk of injury from a defect in the machinery which is known to him, unless the danger arising from the defect is also known or reasonably apprehended by him.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; W. H. Clark, Judge.

Action by Charles A. Lee against the Southern Pacific Railroad Company for personal injuries sustained while in defendant's employ. There was judgment for plaintiff, and from an order granting a new trial he appeals. Affirmed.

Cole & Cole and Del Valle & Munday, for appellant. John D. Bicknell, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Action to recover damages for personal injuries. The plaintiff had judgment, and now appeals from an order granting defendant's motion for a new trial.

In the latter part of July, 1888, plaintiff was employed by defendant as a brakeman on a freight train, and continued in that service until November 13, 1888, when he sustained the injury complained of. At the time of the accident he was about 23 years of age, had from childhood been in good health, and prior to his employment by defendant had had no experience in railroad service. The additional facts disclosed by the record, so far as necessary to be stated, are that on the day of the accident the train on which plaintiff was employed had barely time to reach Honby siding in time for the south-bound passenger train to pass. The "helper" engine was in front of the train engine, and when near the siding cut loose from the train, and went ahead to couple to a flat car on the side track, and push it forward so as to let the freight train in on the siding, plaintiff going with the helper to make the coupling. After he let the engine in on the siding, he stepped upon the pilot to make the coupling, and as they were approaching the flat car he stooped to raise the coupling bar; and when it was partially raised the engine jolted in running over a defect in one of the rails, and caused his foot to slip off the bottom frame of the pilot. That the side track was only partially ballasted, which permitted his foot to catch against a tie, and prevented him from drawing it up, and that in consequence he was thrown off, and one of the wheels of the engine ran over his leg, making it necessary to amputate it about four inches below the knee. He remained in the hospital seven months. As to the condition of the track, he testified, in substance: That it was only partially ballasted, leaving a part of the tie exposed, against which his foot caught. That this side track was about in the same condition as the others along the road. That they were made of refuse iron,—"old rails that are hammered down and battered out, full of ridges and everything; * * * full of hollows and ridges and chuck holes all through, or all along, in lots of places." That the track was pretty well grown over with weeds and grass. That he never ran over a side track that was not a mass of ruts and hollows, all over it, and this was no exception to the rule. Upon cross-examination he testified: That all the side tracks were used,—this, he supposed, as much as the others. That he thought he had been on it, but could not state positively. That he looked at it from the train, lots of times, as he went along there, the same as all the rest of them; knew it was there; saw it grown over with weeds, in a neglected condition. That he did not know, of his own knowledge, that there was any such defect in that rail. That he did not see the hole there in that rail. Other testimony tended to show that at that place there was a chuck hole eight or ten inches long and an inch to an inch and a half deep. There was testimony on the part of the defendant tending to show that the side track was in proper condition; but, as the plaintiff's knowledge of the condition of the siding is principally involved, it is not necessary to state the defendant's testimony in this connection. It seems to be conceded that the mode adopted by the plaintiff to make the coupling was usual and proper. Plaintiff brought the action to recover for the injury upon the theory that, through the negligence of the defendant, its side track was imperfectly constructed, defective, out of repair, and unsafe. The jury returned a verdict for $25,000 damages. The grounds upon which defendant's motion for a new trial was granted, as appears from the opinion of the court, which is printed in the transcript, were: (1) That the damages were excessive. (2) That the injury suffered by plaintiff occurred while he was engaged in the business he was employed to perform, and that the accident which occasioned it resulted from the ordinary risks of such employment, the plaintiff being aware of the condition of the side track where the accident occurred.

1. Subdivision 5 of section 657, Code Civil Proc., permits new trials to be granted upon the ground of "excessive damages appearing to have been given under the influence of passion or prejudice." This provision has been in the statute since 1851, and has been frequently considered. Aldrich v. Palmer, 24 Cal. 516, is perhaps the leading case. See, also, Boyce v. Stage Co., 25 Cal. 473; Wheaton v. Railroad Co., 36 Cal. 591; Wilson v. Fitch, 41 Cal. 385; Harris v. Zanone, 93 Cal. 72, 28 Pac. 845. These cases hold that in actions of this character the law does not attempt to fix any precise rules for ascertaining what is a just compensation, but, from the necessity of the case, leaves the assessment of the damages to the good sense and unbiased judgment of the jury, whose province it is to make the assessment; that while the verdict in these cases, as in all others, is subject to review by the court, it will not be disturbed merely upon the ground that the damages are excessive, nor because the opinion of the court differs from that of the jury, but only where it appears that the excess has been given under the influence of passion or prejudice. Where this does appear, it is as much the duty of the court to grant a new trial as it is where any of the other statutory grounds exist. So the appellate court, in reviewing the action of the court below in granting a new trial upon this ground, will not reverse the order merely because it differs with the trial court as to what would have been just compensation, unless the difference of opinion is such as to justify the conclusion that the court abused its discretion; and upon this ground the order appealed from should be affirmed.

2. As to the second point discussed by the court in its opinion, to wit, the sufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict, we will pass it by without extended notice at this time. The court viewed the evidence of the case in the light of the law it gave to the jury in the following instruction: "(4) I instruct you that it is the duty of an employe of a railroad company to see that the machinery and appliances used by him are in repair, so far as this can be done by the exercise of such care and prudence as should be exercised by an ordinarily careful and prudent man engaged in such business; and if you believe that the plaintiff in this case knew, or by the exercise of ordinary prudence and care should have known, the alleged defect in the track before the happening of the accident, and continued his work without objection, then he assumed the risk, and cannot recover." This instruction is too broad. It is not only necessary that an employe should know of the defect in the machinery, in order to hold that he assumed the risk, but the danger arising from the defect must also be known or reasonably apprehended by him. Farren v. Sellers, 39 La. Ann. 1019, 3 South. 363; Cook v. Railway Co., 34 Minn. 47, 24 N. W. 311; Russell v. Railway Co., 32 Minn. 230, 20 N.

W. 147; Wuotilla v. Lumber Co., 37 Minn. 153, 33 N. W. 551; Sanborn v. Trading Co., 70 Ca. 261, 11 Pac. 710; Shear. & R. Neg. (4th Ed.) § 212. In the case of Martin v. Railway Co., 94 Cal. 326, 29 Pac. 645, this court goes to still greater lengths, and declares the doctrine that knowledge by the employe of both the defect in the machinery and the danger arising therefrom do not, in all cases, absolutely bar a recovery for personal injuries received. The order appealed from is affirmed.

(100 Cal. 672)

SCHMIDT et al. v. BRIEG et al. (No. 15,132.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 30, 1893.)

TRADE-MARK—WHAT WILL BE PROTECTED—"SARSAPARILLA AND IRON"— INFRINGEMENT — DAMAGES—INJUNCTION.

1. The words "Sarsaparilla and Iron" are generic terms, and cannot be appropriated as a trade-mark, Civ. Code, § 991, providing that a trade-mark shall not include any designation "which relates only to the name, quality, or description of the thing."

2. The fact that such generic terms do not in fact indicate the character, kind, or quality of the article manufactured by persons claiming them as a trade-mark, and on which they are used as such, does not give such persons the right to their exclusive use.

3. Where a person, with intent to divert to himself the business of others, prepares and sells an article similar to that manufactured and sold by such others, and in doing so uses labels and devices so closely resembling those used by the latter as to lead purchasers, while using ordinary care, to believe that they are purchasing the imitated article, he is liable to such other manufacturers in damages, and will be enjoined from continuing the use of such labels and devices, though these do not constitute a trade-mark.

4. Plaintiffs sued defendants for infringement of a trade-mark, and manufacturing and selling an article in imitation of one sold by plaintiffs, and for an injunction, about two years after they discovered the imitation; but they had before brought suit against other infringers, and defendants had changed their label on account of a decision therein. Held, that plaintiffs should not be denied damages because of delay in bringing suit.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; F. W. Lawler, Judge.

Action by Schmidt and others against Brieg and others to recover damages for infringement of a trade-mark and for an injunction. From a judgment for plaintiffs, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendants appeal. Order affirmed. Judgment modified and affirmed.

James G. Maguire, E. S. Salomon, and Henry Eickhoff, for appellants. John L. Boone and Langhorne & Miller, for respondents.

PATERSON, J. This is an action for an injunction, and to recover damages for an infringement of plaintiffs' trade-mark and labels. The facts found by the court below are substantially as follows: In the year 1887 plaintiffs commenced to manufacture and sell a new and valuable medicinal compound or beverage, and adopted and used in connection with the sale thereof the name "Sarsaparilla and Iron." By reason of the superior character of the medicinal constituents employed in the manufacture of the beverage or compound it became widely known and highly esteemed by the trade, and identified and distinguished by dealers and consumers under the designation of "Sarsaparilla and Iron." This name was not at that time in use or known as a designation of any similar article of manufacture on sale. For the purpose of identifying the beverage as being of their manufacture, and to distinguish it from other articles of a similar nature, plaintiffs have affixed to the bottles containing the same their own labels, devices, and trade-mark, specimens of which are attached to the complaint herein. The article has become widely known to the public and to buyers and consumers thereof as the beverage manufactured and sold by the plaintiffs, not only through the name "Sarsaparilla and Iron," but through said labels; and up to the time of the infringement, hereinafter referred to, large sales and great profits had been made by the plaintiffs. The defendants, since the month of December, 1888, willfully disregarding the rights of the plaintiffs, and with the intention to divert to themselves the business of the plaintiffs, and the profits and gains thereof, have fraudulently prepared, sold, and now continue to manufacture and sell, throughout the state of California, an article or beverage in imitation of the plaintiffs' beverage, having the same taste, flavor, and appearance as plaintiffs' article, with the intent to deceive and defraud the public and to injure and defraud the plaintiffs. They have put their beverage in bottles and packages similar to those used by the plaintiffs, and have labeled their bottles with labels, names, marks, and devices similar to those used by the plaintiffs. Copies of these labels are attached to the complaint. These marks and devices so closely resembled those used by the plaintiffs as to be calculated and liable to deceive purchasers and consumers of plaintiffs' article, and to lead them, although exercising ordinary care and prudence, to believe that the article contained therein is the plaintiffs' article, greatly to the diminution and damage of the business and profits of plaintiffs derived therefrom. The defendants' beverage in imitation of the plaintiffs' compound or beverage is inferior to that put up by the plaintiffs, and by reason thereof the reputation of plaintiffs' article has been greatly injured, but there is no deleterious or poisonous substance in the defendants' beverage. By reason of the wrongful acts of the defendants the plaintiffs have sustained damage in the amount of $3,539.25. Upon these findings the court concluded that the plaintiffs were entitled to an injunction perpetually restraining the defendants from "preparing, putting up, selling, or offering for sale said or any imitation of plaintiffs' article, or any article under or bearing the name of 'Sarsaparilla and Iron,' or any article under or bearing a colorable or other imitation of said name, or any article bearing said false labels, (Exhibit B,) or any imitation of the said labels of plaintiffs, or any article bearing upon or connecting therewith any of the said names, devices, or trade-marks of the plaintiffs which are shown upon said labels or exhibits. Also that plaintiffs were entitled to recover said sum of $3,539.25 and costs." A decree was entered accordingly.

1. Words which are merely descriptive of the character, quality, or composition of an article cannot be monopolized as a trademark. Thus it has been held that the words "Iron Bitters" are so far indicative of the qualities of an article as to fall within the scope of the rule, (Chemical Co. v. Meyer, 139 U. S. 542, 11 Sup. Ct. 625,) and that name is no more generic than the name "Sarsaparilla and Iron." Our Code provides that a trademark shall not include any designation "which relates only to the name, quality, or description of the thing." Civ. Code, § 991. Words in common use are the common property of the people, and no one can acquire an exclusive right to such words by adopting them as his trade-mark, unless they be used out of their ordinary acceptation, and as a fancy name. The general rule is opposed to the use of mere words as a trade-mark; but if all of the words be used under a new combination in the way of a fancy name or designation, they may constitute a valid trademark, if they do in fact indicate origin or ownership. Lawrence Manuf'g Co. v. Tennessee Manuf'g Co., 138 U. S. 546, 11 Sup. Ct. 396. We think the words "Sarsaparilla and Iron" are generic terms, and were used for the purpose of indicating, not so much the origin, manufacture, or ownership of the beverage, as the quality of the article itself. In Canal Co. v. Clark, 13 Wall. 327, the court said: "True, it may be that the use by a second producer, in describing truthfully his product by a name or combination of words already in use by another, may have the effect of causing the public to mistake as to the origin or ownership of the property; but if it is just as true in its application to his goods as it is to those of another, who first applied it, and who, therefore, claims an exclusive right to use it, there is no legal or moral wrong done." We held here that a person is not entitled to the exclusive use of the words "Antiquarian Book Store" as a trade-mark. Choynski v. Cohen, 39 Cal. 501. See, also, Browne, Trade-Marks, § 164; Raggett v. Findlater, L. R. 17 Eq. 29. The words "Sarsaparilla and Iron" describe ingredients well known to the public. The word "sarsaparilla" means a root, or its extract, and iron, as used in connection with the word "sarsaparilla," must mean a solution of the metal iron. But it is claimed by respondents that the words "Sarsaparilla and Iron" do not, in fact, indicate the character, kind, or quality of their beverage; that it is not a composition of sarsaparilla and iron, but a solution of various substances; that it contains only a small quantity of sarsaparilla and a small quantity of iron, and the name was given to the beverage only as a name by which it might be known, without in any way being descriptive. But it is sufficient to say in answer to this claim that the name given to the article is either generic, or it is of such a character that it can as well be applied to defendants' beverage as to the plaintiffs'; and, this being so, as was said in Canal Co. v. Clark, supra, although the use of the name may have the effect of causing the public to mistake as to the origin or ownership of the product, "if it is just as true in its application to his goods as it is to those of another, who first applied it, * * * there is no legal or moral wrong done," the words or combination being of such a character as to designate respectively well-known articles of commerce.

2. It will be observed from our statement of the facts that the court found the defendants willfully, with intention to divert to themselves the business of the plaintiffs, and secure the profits and gains thereof, prepared and sold large quantities of an inferior imitation of the defendants' beverage, and in doing so had used labels, marks, and devices so closely resembling those used by the plaintiffs as to deceive the purchasers, and lead them, although exercising ordinary care, to believe that they were purchasing plaintiffs' beverage. Upon this finding the plaintiffs were entitled to judgment, independently of the validity of the trade-marks in question. In Lawrence Manuf'g Co. v. Tennessee Manuf'g Co., supra, Mr. Chief Justice Fuller said: "Undoubtedly an inferior and fraudulent competition against the business of the plaintiff, conducted with the intent on the part of the defendant to avail itself of the reputation of the plaintiff to palm off its goods as plaintiff's, would, in a proper case, constitute ground for relief;" and in the course of his opinion referred to an English case, in which Lord Justice Lindley remarked that, "although the plaintiffs had no exclusive right to the use of the words 'Stone Ale' alone as against the world, or any right to prevent the defendant selling his goods as having been made at Stone, 'yet, as against a particular defendant, who is fraudulently using or going to fraudulently use the words with the express purpose of passing off his goods as the goods of the plaintiffs, it appears to me that the plaintiffs may have rights which they may not have against other traders.'" A competing business firm is bound to deal fairly in placing its rival article upon the market; and, if it clearly appears that the defendants have closely imitated the plaintiffs' labels and style, and have done obvious damage to the latter's business through the unlawful business methods employed, the plaintiffs are entitled to relief upon the ground of fraud. Sperry v. Milling Co., 81 Cal. 258, 22 Pac. 651; Pierce v. Guittard, 68 Cal. 68, 8 Pac. 645. Cases are not wanting of injunctions issued to restrain the use even of one's own name, where such use is made with such additions as to intentionally deceive the public, and make them believe he is selling the goods of another. McLean v. Fleming, 96 U. S. 251; Chemical Co. v. Meyer, supra. See, also, Food Co. v. Baumbach, 32 Fed. 212; California Fig Syrup Co. v. Improved Fig Syrup Co., 51 Fed. 297; Id., 4 C. C. A. 264, 54 Fed. 178; Stone Co. v. Wallace, 52 Fed. 438. There is abundant evidence in the record to support the finding of the court. The defendant's label is a palpable imitation in form and design of the plaintiffs' label. Both have the same general appearance, except in color,—one being blue, the other red. Both have crescent-shaped neck labels for the bottle, lined and lettered in similar form. Both have the word "Sarsaparilla" at the top of the label in large letters, and the word "Iron" printed in the border of the lower half of the label. Both have parallel lines running across the middle of the label with the name of the manufacturers between the same. The monogram of the defendants occupies the same position upon their label as the trade-mark of the plaintiffs upon the label of the latter. Both labels have the words, "A great blood purifier," and "Cures all skin diseases," printed in the lower half of the label. In fact the only material difference between the two labels in design and appearance exists in the colors, but this is no defense. Browne, Trade-Marks, § 236. The difference in color is a mere probative fact,—a circumstance to be considered by the court in determining the ultimate question as to whether the defendants' devices so closely resembled the plaintiffs' labels as to deceive the public. The court below has found the fact that the purchasers have been deceived by the acts of the defendants, and we cannot say that this finding is not supported by the evidence. As was said in McLean v. Fleming, supra: "What degree of resemblance is necessary to constitute an infringement is incapable of exact definition as applicable to all cases. All that courts of justice can do in that regard is to say that no trader can adopt a trade-mark so resembling that of another trader as that ordinary purchasers buying with ordinary caution are likely to be misled." See, also, Improved Fig Syrup Co. v. California Fig Syrup Co., 4 C. C. A. 264, 54 Fed. 178. The testimony shows clearly that the size, form, design, ornamentation, and phraseology of plaintiffs' label were studiously followed by the defendants in the preparation of their own, and that the latter was used and intended to be used as a close imitation of the plaintiffs' label, and for the purpose of leading the public to believe that the beverage contained in the bottles upon which the defendants' labels were placed was the identical article manufactured by the plaintiffs.

3. The appellants insist that the plaintiffs should not be allowed to recover any damages, because of the delay in commencing this action. This claim is set up for the first time in this court, and appears to be an afterthought. There is nothing in the answer, or in the report of the proceedings at the trial below, indicating an intention to set up such a defense. The point ought to have been raised at least at the time the motion for a nonsuit was made, the facts having come out in the evidence of the plaintiffs; but conceding for the purposes of the discussion that, notwithstanding the failure of the defendants to set up the plea of laches until this time, it should still be considered, we think the contention is not supported by the admitted facts. The action was commenced about two years after the plaintiffs discovered the infringements, and the record shows that plaintiffs had, prior to the bringing of this action, brought suit against other infringers, and that the defendants not only had notice of this prior litigation, but had changed the color of their label on account of a decision in the court below. The doctrine of laches, as applied to stale claims in matters of trust, does not apply with full force to cases of infringement. Browne, Trade-Marks, § 685.

It follows from the views we have expressed that the judgment of the court is erroneous in two particulars. The plaintiffs were not entitled to a decree restraining the defendants from preparing, putting up, offering for sale, or selling the beverage in question. There is nothing in the complaint upon which a judgment awarding to plaintiffs the exclusive right to manufacture the beverage as against the defendants can be predicated. The decree is also erroneous in so far as it enjoins the defendants from making, offering for sale, or selling any beverage or article under the name of "Sarsaparilla and Iron." As we have seen, the plaintiffs have not the exclusive right to the use of those words. In other respects the decree is correct. The restraining portion of the decree should simply have enjoined the defendants from selling or offering for sale any beverage or article bearing the labels shown by Exhibit B, attached to the complaint, and from selling or offering to sell any article or beverage under any marks, signs, devices, or labels calculated or liable to deceive purchasers and consumers of plaintiffs' article, or the public generally, or to lead them, while exercising ordinary care and prudence in purchasing, to believe that the article contained in the defendants' bottles and packages is the plaintiffs' article.

The order denying the defendants' motion for a new trial is affirmed. The cause is remanded, with directions to the court below to modify the decree in accordance with the views herein expressed. As so modified the judgment will stand affirmed.

We concur: McFARLAND, J.; GAROUTTE, J.; HARRISON, J.; FITZGERALD, J.

---

4 Cal. Unrep. 417

SCHMIDT et al. v. WELCH et al. (No. 15,136.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 30, 1893.)

TRADE-MARK—INFRINGEMENT—DAMAGES—INJUNCTION.

Where labels used on bottles containing medicine manufactured by defendants in no respect resemble labels used by plaintiffs on bottles containing similar medicine put up by them, except that both labels have thereon the words "Sarsaparilla and Iron," plaintiffs are not entitled to an injunction or to damages.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; F. W. Lawlor, Judge.

Action by Schmidt and others against Welch and others to recover damages for infringement of a trade-mark and for an injunction. From a judgment for plaintiffs, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendants appeal. Reversed.

James G. Maguire, E. S. Solomon, and Henry Eickhoff, for appellants. John L. Boone and Langhorne & Miller, for respondents.

PATERSON, J. The facts found by the court below in this case are in all respects the same as those found by the court in Schmidt v. Brieg, (this day filed,) 35 Pac. 623, except as to the amount of damages. A decree like the decree in the Brieg Case was entered, the damages, however, being fixed in this case at $3,163.70. In the Brieg Case we held that the plaintiffs were not entitled to the exclusive use of the words "Sarsaparilla and Iron" as a trade-mark, but that they were entitled to a decree restraining the defendants from selling or offering to sell any beverage under the label, Exhibit B, attached to the complaint therein, and to an affirmance of the judgment for damages and costs. Our decision in that case is based upon the finding of the court that the defendants, with intent to divert to themselves the business of the plaintiffs and the profits and gains thereof, and to deceive the public, had fraudulently prepared and sold an inferior article in imitation of the plaintiffs' beverage, and, with intent to deceive and defraud the public and injure and defraud the plaintiffs, had caused said inferior article to be put up in bottles and packages similar to those used by the plaintiffs for their article, and sold under labels, marks, and devices similar to the names, labels, marks, and devices used by the plaintiffs. The fraudulent acts complained of and found consisted in the unlawful and studied imitation of the plaintiffs' label under which the latter's beverage had been sold and become widely known as a valuable and useful beverage, and a source of great profit to them. In the case at bar, however, the defendants' label is in no respect similar to that used by the plaintiffs. With the exception of the words "Sarsaparilla and Iron" there is nothing in defendants' label in form, design, or lettering similar to the plaintiffs' label. The larger label is diamond-shaped, with a flowery border, instead of the strong parallel lines found in the plaintiffs' border. There is no attempt to imitate the trademark in the upper portion of the plaintiffs' label, nor the peculiar and uneven letters in the crescent-shaped label. The name of the manufacturer, "Pioneer Soda Works, S. F.," appears in large letters across the widest portion of the label. Unless we are prepared to hold, therefore, that the defendants are not entitled to put any paper labels upon their bottles, the finding of the court as to the effect of the defendants' label cannot be sustained. Inasmuch as the plaintiffs have no exclusive right to the use of the words "Sarsaparilla and Iron," we think it cannot be said that the use of the defendants' label is an infringement of the plaintiffs' label, or in any manner fraudulent. Judgment and order reversed.

We concur: McFARLAND, J.; GAROUTTE, J.; HARRISON, J.; FITZGERALD, J.

(101 Cal. 164)

BURNHAM et al. v. STONE et al. (No. 19,255.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 26, 1894.)

APPEAL—PROTECTION OF WRIT TO OFFICER—FORCIBLE TAKING POSSESSION BY LANDOWNER—LIABILITY FOR DEATH—INSTRUCTIONS.

1. In an action against a constable and the members of his posse for killing one who resisted them while executing a writ of restitution, plaintiff cannot for the first time on appeal insist that one of defendants did not plead the writ in justification, if no objection was made to the evidence showing such justification, and no request was made that it be restricted to those defendants who pleaded the writ.

2. A description, in a judgment for the possession of land, and in the writ of restitution, by reference to certain buildings, includes the land on which they are situated, notwithstanding an error in the description by government subdivisions; and the officer executing the writ is not liable as a trespasser for the killing of one resisting him in his attempt to obtain possession of the buildings.

3. An owner of land wrongfully held by another is not civilly liable for the killing of the occupant while resisting the owner's attempt to regain possession without the use of more force than was reasonably necessary.

4. A verdict, though correct on the evidence, will be reversed for an erroneous instruction which cuts off a substantial defense on the merits.

5. The fact that a judgment is fraudulently obtained does not render the officer who executes a writ issued thereon, which is regular on its face, a trespasser.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; E. S. Torrance, Judge.

Action by John H. Burnham and others against Levi P. Stone, James Stone, and others for the death of Jenny Burnham. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant James Stone appeals. Reversed.

Luce & McDonald, for appellant. Haines & Ward and Works & Works, for respondents.

HAYNES, C. Appeal from an order denying the motion of the defendant James Stone for a new trial. The action was brought by John H. Burnham and his two minor children to recover damages for the alleged wrongful killing of Jenny Burnham, the wife of the plaintiff John H. Burnham, and the mother of the minor plaintiffs. The third paragraph of the complaint is as follows: "That on the 18th day of January, 1888, the said defendants, Levi P. Stone, James Stone, George Morris, D. M. Breedlove, Arch Freeman, and W. H. H. Dinwiddie, maliciously, willfully, fraudulently, and unlawfully contriving, conspiring, and confederating together to attack, assault, and remove, with force and arms, one Elizabeth Goings and one Percy Goings from their prior and peaceable possession and occupation of the following described lands and the dwellings thereon, situated in said county of San Diego, state of California, to wit, the southeast quarter of the northwest quarter of section five, (5,) in township eleven (11) south, of range two (2) west, S. B. M., did then and there, in the prosecution of their said malicious, willful, fraudulent, and unlawful conspiracy and confederation, enter upon said premises with force and deadly weapons, and did there willfully and maliciously attack, assault, and shoot to death the said Jenny Burnham, then lawfully and peacefully being upon the said premises." All the defendants except Freeman answered, appellant answering separately. The only error assigned is that the court erred in its instructions to the jury given at plaintiff's request.

An outline of the facts in the case, so far as they appear to be uncontroverted, is as follows: That Levi P. Stone, one of the defendants, was the owner of the S. E. ¼ of the N. W. ¼ of section 5, in a given township and range, upon which there was a dwelling house, a honey house, and a chicken house; that, during his temporary absence, Elizabeth Goings and her son, Percy Goings, entered upon said premises and took possession, claiming that it was government land and open to settlement, and refused to deliver possession to Stone upon his demand. Afterwards Stone commenced an action in forcible entry and detainer against said Elizabeth and Percy Goings before a justice of the peace, and in his complaint described the land as the "S. W. ¼ of the N. E. ¼, and N. ½ of S. E. ¼, and S. E. ¼ of S. E. ¼, of section 5," but before the trial he amended the complaint, as to the description, so as to read: "That at the time hereinafter mentioned, and for eight years prior thereto, he was in the peaceable and actual possession and occupation, and entitled to the possession, of all that certain piece, parcel, and tract of land described as follows, to wit: S. ½ of N. E. ¼, and N. ½ of S. E. ¼, of section 5, in township 11 S., range 2 W., S. B. M., and comprising 160 acres of land, and of the dwelling house, honey house, and chicken house thereon." As a matter of fact these buildings were on the S. E. ¼ of the N. W. ¼ of the section. Upon the trial the plaintiff, Levi P. Stone, had judgment for the restitution of the premises described in the amended complaint, and a writ of restitution "in due and sufficient form" was issued thereon, and delivered to the defendant D. M. Breedlove, a constable, for service. The writ is not set out in the record, and whether it contains the added description of the buildings does not appear with certainty. The statement simply says: "The judgment and writ followed the description of the premises given in the amended complaint." The constable then went to the premises on which the buildings were, and which were occupied by the Goings, and demanded that they vacate the premises, but they refused to do so. The constable then left, saying he would be back in the afternoon. About 2 o'clock he returned with Levi P. Stone, James Stone, and another, and found Mrs. Burnham, Mrs. McConnehey, Percy Goings, and Mrs. Goings in the house, with the doors barred, and said they would not go off. The constable then told them that if he had to put them off by force he would try and get enough to do it next morning. The next day (January 17, 1888) he returned with Levi P. Stone, James Stone, Arch Freeman, George Morris, and Stockman Reed, and in the effort to execute the writ, or to obtain possession, Stockman Reed, one of the constable's posse, and Percy Goings, John McConnehey, and Mrs. Burnham were killed or mortally wounded. The jury returned a verdict against all the defendants for $30,000 actual damages, and, in addition thereto, against Levi P. Stone, $10,000, and against this appellant for $2,000 exemplary damages.

So far as the record discloses, no question seems to have been made but that the defendants would have been justified in all that they did if the judgment and writ of possession had described the subdivision of the section upon which the buildings occupied by the defendants in the writ were situated. Respondents contend, however, that as appellant did not, by his answer, justify under the writ and command of the constable, the question of the sufficiency of the writ is immaterial. It clearly appears from the instructions given to the jury at plaintiff's request that the defendants, no exception being named, did plead the writ in justification; and the record discloses no objection made by plaintiffs to the evidence tending to show justification under the writ, nor any request that it be restricted to those defendants who had pleaded the writ. Under these circumstances, appellant contends that respondents are estopped from raising the question upon appeal. Appellant testified, without objection, as follows: "The way I happened to go at that time was that Constable Breedlove required me to go help him dispossess the Goings under a writ that had been issued to him as constable of Bear Valley township, and I went in accordance with his command." We think that appellant's contention upon this point must be sustained, under the authority of Murdock v. Clarke, 90 Cal. 431, 27 Pac. 275, and, if so, that he is entitled to review the instructions of the court relating to justification under the writ and the command of the officer.

The complaint alleged, and the defendants conceded, that the premises occupied by the Goings was the S. E. ¼ of the N. W. ¼, and the record shows without qualification or contradiction that the defendant Levi P. Stone was the owner of it, and had been in possession of it for seven or eight years prior to the entry of the Goings, who entered unlawfully during his temporary absence. The instructions are too long to copy in full in this opinion, but in substance the jury were instructed, at the request of plaintiffs, that in going upon the land for the purpose of obtaining possession by force, or show of force, all the defendants were trespassers, and their entry unlawful, and because thereof each defendant was liable for the killing of Mrs. Burnham, although the killing was not intended, contemplated, aided, abetted, or advised by him; that if he aided, abetted, or encouraged the unlawful entry upon the premises, it was sufficient to fix his liability; and that such entry was unlawful unless the writ of possession covered or included the premises where the homicide occurred; but the court did not instruct the jury whether, as matter of law, the reference to the buildings thereon, in the description of the premises contained in the writ, if it did contain such description, did or did not so control the erroneous description by the subdivisions of the government survey as to include the buildings where the homicide occurred, and operate as a justification to the officer and all who acted under his authority, but, on the contrary, expressly left the jury to find whether the writ did cover the property where the shooting occurred. The jury were further instructed that if they found that Levi P. Stone testified before the justice of the peace that said buildings were on unsurveyed land, and that he knew at that time that the buildings were on the S. E. ¼ of the N. W. ¼, and if they should further find that but for such testimony he would have been unable to obtain such verdict and to recover such judgment, and that he and the other defendants entered under color of said writ, and, in the attempt to execute the same, Mrs. Burnham was killed, that not only was said writ of restitution no justification to any of the defendants engaged in such undertaking, but that they were authorized to infer express malice on the part of Levi P. Stone, and to consider such conduct on his part as one of the circumstances to be taken into account in fixing the damages as against him. These instructions were erroneous in several particulars. Assuming that the writ of restitution contained the added description of the land by reference to the "dwelling house, honey house, and chicken house thereon," the court should have instructed the jury, as matter of law, that such description included and covered the land on which they were situated, notwithstanding the erroneous description by government subdivisions. Any description which will enable the officer executing the writ to clearly identify the premises is sufficient. Freem. Ex'ns, (2d Ed.) § 471, in speaking of writs of possession, declares this to be the general rule. In Lawrence v. Davidson, 44 Cal. 177, (an action of ejectment,) the court said: "We cannot see upon the record that the description of the excepted tract is necessarily impossible or incapable of identification in the field. The bay of San Francisco is an object referred to; the 'Dows Claim' and the 'Fairbanks Claim,' which may, so far as we know, be well-ascertained objects, are mentioned too." See, also, Helm v. Wilson, 76 Cal. 476, 18 Pac. 604. No more satisfactory means of identifying the property could ordinarily be given than the description of the three buildings mentioned. It could not be expected or intended that the constable should survey the lands for the purpose of identifying them, and even if he had done so, he had a right to regard the description by survey as erroneous, and to execute the writ upon the premises identified by the buildings.

In view of a new trial, and of the possibility that the writ does not refer to the buildings as a part of the description of the land, it becomes necessary to consider the instructions upon the supposition that the writ did not cover the premises from which it was attempted to evict the defendants in the writ. In such case the instructions were also erroneous. It is conceded that Levi P. Stone was the owner of the buildings and premises where the homicide occurred, and that he had a right to the possession at that time. Mrs. Burnham made no claim that she was entitled to the possession. Her mother and brother were in possession, and the record shows that when the constable, after demanding that they vacate the premises the morning of the day before the homicide, and being met with a refusal, returned in the afternoon, he found Mrs. Burnham there with the others in the house, and with the doors barred. She was also there when the constable and owner of the premises returned the next day with the posse, and at least aided and abetted her mother and brother in retaining possession. Under these circumstances, if she had survived, she could not have maintained an action for assault and battery, or for any injury she might have sustained in an endeavor of the owner to obtain possession, even if the effort were forcible. In Canavan v. Gray, 64 Cal. 5, 27 Pac. 788, it was held that, where the owner of real property having the right of possession makes a forcible entry, the person in wrongful possession cannot maintain an action of trespass; that the remedy provided by statute for a forcible entry is exclusive. This case is amply sustained by the authorities upon that subject. Washb. Real Prop. *396, after quoting the modern English doctrine as expressed by Baron Parke, says: "And the law, as generally adopted in the United States, may be assumed to be substantially as laid down by Baron Parke. If the owner of land wrongfully held by another enters and expels the occupant, but makes use of no more force than is reasonably necessary to accomplish this, he will not be liable to an action of trespass quare clausum, nor for assault and battery, nor for injury to the occupant's goods, although, in order to effect such expulsion and removal, it becomes necessary to use so much force and violence as to subject him to indictment at common law for a breach of the peace, or under the statute for making forcible entry." The same author adds: "The uniform current of authority in the United States sustaining the same doctrine is broken only by the decisions in Vermont and Illinois." The general ground upon which these authorities are based is that, at common law, trespass would not lie against the owner if he were entitled to the possession, as in such case the person in possession, being in wrongfully, could maintain no action against the owner unless unnecessary force was used, and that, the statutes of forcible entry and detainer having provided a remedy in such cases, that remedy is exclusive, so far as the wrongful possessor is concerned; but the public, being interested in preserving the peace, may punish the owner for resorting to force. Canavan v. Gray, supra, proceeds upon this ground. In Jackson v. Farmer, 9 Wend. 201, it is said: "Statutes of forcible entry and detainer punish criminally the force, and in some cases make restitution, but so far as the civil remedy goes there is none whatever." See, also, Low v. Elwell, 121 Mass. 309; Souter v. Codman, 14 R. I. 119, and notes; Stearns v. Sampson, 59 Me. 569. In Kellam v. Janson, 17 Pa. St. 469, it is said: "An action is well founded only when a right is invaded; but the plaintiff's right ceased by the entry of defendant,—an act that completely obliterated the shadow of right cast by the plaintiff's possession. A complaint against the assumption of possession is a complaint against the assertion of a right, and a demand that the law shall give the plaintiff damages for the loss of that which it was wrong for him to have." In Sterling v. Warden, 51 N. H. 232, it is said: "It is clearly the English law, and, as we believe, the strongly preponderating opinion of the American courts, that no civil action lies against a landlord for regaining with force the possession of the demised premises, unless there is an excess of force, and then only for such excess."

In the light of these authorities the instruction that the entry upon the premises by force, or show of force, was unlawful, and that, if appellant aided and abetted such entry, he was liable for the death of Mrs. Burnham, though he did not aid, abet, advise, or encourage the actual killing, is erroneous. No liability for damages was created against any of the defendants for the entry upon the land, nor for the expulsion, or attempted expulsion, of the occupants by force, unless more force or violence was used than was reasonably necessary; and no such qualification appears in the instructions given to the jury. It is quite true that appellant did not, in his answer, plead the ownership and right of entry of Levi P. Stone. The case was tried, however, without any apparent reference to the issues made by appellant's answer, and all the facts were given in evidence without objection or limitation. The court stated to the jury the substance of the complaint; that all the defendants except Freeman had answered denying the allegations of the complaint, and alleging that Mrs. Burnham and others acting with her first assaulted them; that they used no more force than was necessary to protect themselves from injury; and also alleged facts tending to justify themselves under the writ of restitution. The jury were expressly instructed that the question of the title to the land was not before them; that, "admitting that Stone was the owner of the land, and that Mrs. Goings was wrongfully in possession of it, this gave Stone, or any one acting with or for him, no right to enter upon the land by force or show of force, and take possession of it, or exclude or remove Mrs. Goings or any one else from the land; and, if you find that the defendants went upon the land in the manner and for the purpose mentioned, their entry was unlawful, unless justified for other reasons, and the defendants would be liable for the consequences resulting therefrom."

Counsel for respondents suggest that, the verdict being right upon the evidence, the judgment should not be reversed because of an erroneous instruction. That there are cases where the judgment should stand, notwithstanding an erroneous instruction, is not questioned; but, where the erroneous instruction is such as to cut off a substantial defense on the merits, the rule suggested can have no application. The case was not tried upon a theory which would justify this court in looking at the evidence to determine whether unnecessary force was used by the defendants, and that became a vital question, assuming that the writ did not cover the premises upon which the entry was made by them.

The jury were also instructed, in substance, that, if Levi P. Stone obtained his verdict and judgment before the justice by false swearing, the writ was no protection to the defendants. But the fact that a judgment is fraudulently obtained does not render the officer a trespasser who executes a writ, regular on its face, issued on such judgment. Simms v. Slacum, 3 Cranch, 306. The question as to its effect upon the defendant Levi P. Stone is not pertinent here.

No other questions need be noticed. The order appealed from should be reversed, and a new trial granted.

We concur: VANCLIEF, C.; BELCHER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the order appealed from is reversed, and a new trial granted.

---

101 Cal. 187

PALMER v. ATCHISON, T. & S. F. R. CO.

(No. 19,198.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 26, 1894.)

CARRIERS OF GOODS — DELAY — ACTION FOR DAMAGES—COMPLAINT—CONNECTING LINES — PROBABLE DELAY — CONTRACT MADE IN ANOTHER STATE.

1. A complaint in an action for delay in transporting goods, which alleges the time between the receipt and delivery, and that they were not transported within a reasonable time, is good against a general demurrer, without alleging what is a reasonable time for such transportation.

2. Though two days before a carrier accepted goods for shipment over its own and connecting lines a snowstorm commenced on a connecting line a thousand miles away, it will not be presumed to have known that an unusual storm had set in, of which it was bound to speak as a fact liable to cause delay, where severe storms in that latitude were up to that time unknown, and the road might reasonably be expected to be open when the goods reached it.

3. Under Civil Code, § 2196, declaring a carrier liable for delay only when caused by want of ordinary care, and section 2201, stating that a carrier accepting freight for a place beyond its route must, unless otherwise stipulated, deliver to a connecting line, when its liability ceases, a carrier receipting for goods to be shipped beyond its line, with the stipulation that it will not be responsible as carrier any further, is not liable for delay in delivering the goods to the connecting carrier, due to the latter's inability to receive them.

4. In an action on a contract made in another state it will be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that the law of that state is the same as that of California.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; E. S. Torrance, Judge.

Action by Oscar Palmer against the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad Company. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. Reversed.

Hunsaker, Britt & Goodrich and A. Brunson, for appellant. Luce & McDonald and Dodson & Ecker, for respondent.

SEARLS, C. This action was brought to recover from defendant, a corporation, and a common carrier, damages sustained by plaintiff by reason of the alleged failure of defendant to transport from Kansas City, Mo., to San Diego, Cal., and deliver to the plaintiff within a reasonable time, five car loads of furniture. Plaintiff had a verdict for $1,000, upon which judgment was entered. Defendant appeals from the judgment and from an order refusing a new trial.

Plaintiff's recovery was founded upon the second count of his complaint. To this a demurrer was interposed, which appellant contends should have been sustained, but which was overruled. The portion of the complaint to which objection is taken may be epitomized as follows: On the 24th day of December, 1887, the defendant, for a valuable consideration, undertook to receive and carry over its road from Kansas City to San Diego, and deliver to plaintiff within a reasonable time, five car loads of furniture, etc. That defendant received the same at the date mentioned for the purpose of transportation aforesaid, but did not, as it undertook to do, transport said goods to San Diego within a reasonable time, and did not deliver the same to plaintiff until on or about February 15, 1888. The objection goes to the point that the complaint should have specified what was a reasonable time for the transportation of the goods between the two points, and, failing to do so, was open to an attack upon the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. In the absence of a special demurrer directed to this point, we think the general allegation of a failure to transport and deliver within a reasonable time was sufficient. The form used by the pleader is substantially that laid down by Chitty as sufficient in actions ex contractu, in his work on Pleading. 2 Chit. Pl. p. 103. It was admitted at the trial that the Atchison, Topeka & Sante Fe Railroad terminated at Albuquerque, N. M., and that the Atlantic & Pacific ran from Albuquerque into California, and connected at Barstow with the California Southern, which extended to San Diego; the three roads thus forming a through line from Kansas City, Mo., to San Diego, Cal., each road being operated by a different company. The five car loads of goods were delivered to defendant at Kansas City, directed to the plaintiff at San Diego as follows: Two cars December 24, 1887; one car December 27, 1887; two cars January, 1888. The company furnished to the shipper bills of lading, which, so far as important here, were as follows: "Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe R. R. Co., K. C. Station, 12-24-1887. Will receive the under-noted property, and transport it over the road, and deliver to consignees, or the next company of carriers, (if the same is going beyond its line of road,) for them to deliver to the place of destination of said property; it being distinctly understood that this company shall not be responsible as common carriers for said property beyond its line of road, or while at any of its stations awaiting delivery to such carriers; the company being liable as warehousemen only. Abernathy Fur. Co. Shipper, to Oscar Palmer, Consignee, San Diego, California," etc. Then follow usual description and number of car, signed, "Wm. Carroll for the Co." The bills of lading for the several cars were the same, except as to dates, numbers, etc. The evidence shows without substantial contradiction that on the 5th day of January, 1888, a snowstorm of unprecedented severity commenced over the mountain region traversed by the Atlantic & Pacific Railroad, which lasted for a period of ten days to two weeks, blocking the road, and practically stopping the transportation of freight, during which time some 683 loaded cars accumulated at Albuquerque and in its vicinity, with the result that when the road was again open it was, say, 30 days before the accumulated freight was finally passed over the road. The Atlantic & Pacific Company seems to have made every effort to open its road. It rented some 38 locomotives, in addition to 46 owned by it, most of which, for many days, were engaged in an effort to open the road, and no labor or expense was spared in the work. The yards and side tracks of the Atlantic & Pacific road became filled with cars, until they could receive no more, when they notified the defendant to hold all cars at Albuquerque until they were able to receive and forward them. This unexpected blockade on the Atlantic & Pacific is shown to have been the sole cause of the delay of plaintiff's goods. There is no showing of delay upon defendant's road, except as the cars were held by it at and near its western terminus because the Atlantic & Pacific could not receive and forward them. All the goods were shipped prior to the storm, except those in the two cars shipped January 7th; and, when the storm was over, the cars were sent forward from Albuquerque in the order received.

It must be conceded that a railroad company receiving freight for transportation over its own and connecting lines, which, by reason of some fact known to it and unknown to the shipper, is liable to detention beyond the usual time occupied in transit, should inform the shipper of such fact, in order that the latter may exercise his judgment as to the propriety of making the shipment. There is not, however, any evidence in the record tending to show that defendant had, at the date of the last shipment, on January 7th, any knowledge of the storm which then, and since the 5th, had been prevailing on the mountain division of the Atlantic & Pacific. Very slight evidence would be sufficient notice of such a fact had the storm been near at hand, or on its own road, but when we consider that it was upon another road, over 1,000 miles away, and in a region where storms of the nature and duration of the one in question were unknown up to that time, we cannot see how, in the absence of evidence, defendant can be presumed to have known that an unusual storm had set in, any more than it would be presumed to know the length of time it would continue, or the great depth to which the snow would fall. In passing judgment on this question we are not at liberty to view it in the light of present known facts, but must confine ourselves to the facts apparent when defendant received the freight. We must bear in mind that the blockade occurred in a latitude and at a point where a like storm was not to be expected, and where, if snow fell, it might be expected to be of short duration; and that freight received at Kansas City, and requiring several days to reach the point in question, might reasonably be expected to meet an open road by the time it reached the point of difficulty. Under such circumstances, had the proofs shown knowledge of the storm on the part of defendant at the date of receiving the goods, it cannot be said as a matter of law that a failure to notify the shipper was negligence, but only that it was such evidence of negligence as should be submitted to the jury to determine whether there was in fact negligence on the part of defendant.

Respondent claims that defendant was aware, when it received the goods, that there was a great blockade of freight on its different connecting lines, to haul which they were unprepared, and that this unusual press of business, coupled with inadequacy of rolling stock, was the cause of the delay; that defendant had notice of these facts, and should have notified the consignor of plaintiff, and, failing so to do, it is liable. The testimony on this point is to the effect that it was the busy season of the year for traffic and travel to southern California; that a large volume of freight was moving westward over the road. The testimony shows, however, that "the principal reason for the delay was on account of the snowstorm, for, had it not been for the snowstorm, the delay would not have occurred. The rush of freight or the rapid increase of freight over usual traffic did not cause the delay for this reason. * * * The snowstorm alone was the primary cause of the delay, of the accumulation of freight, which I have described. By primary cause I mean the line was open for business before the snowstorm, and was running regularly, and then, when the snowstorm came, that it took such a large amount of motor power to open up the line that, while we were clearing it, no freight or passenger traffic could be moved over the mountain division, and in the mean time it allowed freight to greatly accumulate at other points." The same witness, after describing the storm and the efforts to keep the Atlantic & Pacific open, says: "I do not see that the delay could have been avoided. If that snowstorm had not happened, Mr. Palmer's cars would have gone through all right. The line was running on good time previous to the storm." Thus much is quoted as a sample of the evidence on the part of defendant, which, we think, establishes the fact without substantial conflict that the delay complained of occurred upon the Atlantic & Pacific road, and was occasioned by the storm upon the mountain division of that road, and that the operators of such road used every reasonable effort to keep the line open. "A common carrier is liable for delay only when it is caused by his want of ordinary care and diligence." Civ. Code, § 2196. "Accordingly it has been held that when the carriers' canal boat was run into by a scow, which made it necessary for him to stop for repairs, the delay thereby occasioned was excusable, (Parsons v. Hardy, 14 Wend. 215;) or when he was delayed by deep snow, which made the road temporarily impassable, (Ballentine v. Railroad Co., 40 Mo. 491;) or the washing away of a bridge over a stream by a freshet, which it was necessary for the carrier to cross, (Railroad Co. v. Ragsdale, 46 Miss. 458.) * * * So a railroad company will be excusable for delay in the delivery of goods, when, having running powers upon another road, it is obstructed by the negligence of the latter." Livingston v. Railroad Co., 5 Hun, 562; Hutch. Carr. § 331. The measure of liability of a common carrier of merchandise in case of its loss or injury is very different from that imposed upon him for delay in transporting and delivering such merchandise. In the former case he is liable for its value in any event, except from some inherent weakness, defect, or vice, or from the spontaneous action of the property itself, or the act of a public enemy, or the act of the law, or "any irresistible superhuman cause," (Civ. Code, § 2194;) while for delay he is, as before quoted, only liable for a want of "ordinary care and diligence." Railroad companies may bind themselves by contract not only to convey over their own, but over connecting, lines, and may bind themselves to deliver goods within a given time, (Pereira v Railroad Co., 66 Cal. 92, 4 Pac. 988;) but, in the absence of such contract, express or implied, they are only bound to transport them to the termini of their own lines, and to deliver them to the connecting carrier for transportation to their final destination; and that within a reasonable time, (Hutch. Carr. §§ 145, 159b, 154, 102, 103a, and cases cited.)

The English courts hold that where goods are delivered to a railway company, to be transported beyond the terminus of its line by a connecting company, the presumption is that the company receiving them is liable for loss, injury, or delay occurring beyond its own line. Muschamp v. Railway Co., 8 Mees. & W. 421, is the leading English case upon this question. The rule as enunciated in that case was that when the carrier accepts for carriage goods directed to a destination beyond its own route it assumes, by the very act of acceptance, in the absence of any express contract on the subject, the obligation to transport them to the place to which they may be directed. This rule has been steadily adhered to in the English courts. On the other hand, the majority of the American courts have held that, in the absence of any other contract than that implied by an acceptance of the goods for carriage, the obligation of the carrier extends only to the end of his route, and a delivery there to the next connecting carrier to further or complete the carriage; and that, in order to be bound, there must be a positive agreement, express or implied, extending the liability. Nutting v. Railroad Co., 1 Gray, 502; Gray v. Jackson, 51 N. H. 9, and cases cited. From the review of the cases in Gray v. Jackson it will be seen that the rule is by no means uniform in this country. Our Civil Code has, however, settled the question in this state. Section 2201 is as follows: "If a common carrier accepts freight for a place beyond his usual route, he must, unless he stipulates otherwise, deliver it at the end of his route in that direction to some other competent carrier carrying to the place of address, or connected with those who thus carry, and his liability ceases upon making such delivery." That there was no stipulation on the part of the defendant to be responsible beyond the terminus of its line, and that it expressly limited its liability to its own road, is attested by its receipt for the goods, which in such cases amounts to a bill of lading, in which, as it might do, it expressly limited its liability to transportation over its own road. Pollard v. Vinton, 105 U. S. 7; Hutch. Car. §§ 121, 122; Civil Code, § 2176. The law of the place where the contract is made governs in determining the liability of the carrier, unless the parties at the time of making it had some other law in view. Liverpool & G. W. Steam Co. v. Phenix Ins. Co., 129 U. S. 397, 9 Sup. Ct. 469; In re Missouri Steamship Co., 42 Ch. Div. 321; Hazel v. Railway Co., 82 Iowa, 477, 48 N. W. 926; Fonseca v. Steamship Co., 153 Mass. 553, 27 N. E. 665. There are exceptions to this rule, founded upon the supposed intention of the parties, gathered from circumstances surrounding the transaction. Ryan v. Railroad Co., 65 Tex. 13. Thus much is said to indicate that the question is not overlooked. The cause, so far as can be determined from the record, was tried upon the theory that the law of California is applicable. There is no suggestion that the law of Missouri, where the contract for transportation was made, was put in evidence. Under such circumstances, we are not at liberty to assume as a fact that the state of Missouri has a special statute on the subject, but must presume as a question of law that the law of that state is the same as our own. Norris v. Harris, 15 Cal. 226; Hill v. Grigsby, 32 Cal. 56; Taylor v. Shew, 39 Cal. 540; Brown v. Gas-Light Co., 58 Cal. 426; Marsters v. Lash, 61 Cal. 622; Shumway v. Leakey, 67 Cal. 458, 8 Pac. 12. Judged by our own statute, and by the lawful limitation which defendant might and did embrace in its bill of lading, it was bound to transport to Albuquerque, and deliver to the Atlantic & Pacific, connecting road, within a reasonable time, plaintiff's goods. This it is shown to have done, except as it was prevented without fault of its own by the inability of the Atlantic & Pacific to receive them when they reached the terminus of defendant's line. That the delay was caused upon the Atlantic & Pacific road by act of God, or "irresistible superhuman cause," is, we think, clearly established. The scintilla of evidence to the contrary is not sufficient to establish a substantial conflict; but, waiving this question, the negligence or want of it, on the part of the connecting road, is not one for which this defendant, under its contract and the statute, can be held liable. It follows that the evidence is insufficient to justify the verdict, and it is against law. The judgment and order appealed from should be reversed, and a new trial ordered.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; VANCLIEF, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order appealed from are reversed, and a new trial ordered.

---

101 Cal. 160

HART v. CARNALL-HOPKINS CO. (No. 15,467.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 26, 1894.)

JUSTICE'S JURISDICTION—POSSESSION OF LAND.

An action to recover money paid to defendant under a contract to locate plaintiff on vacant government land, in which the issue is whether the land on which plaintiff was located was in fact vacant, is an action involving the possession of real estate, of which, by Code Civ. Proc. § 838, a justice of the peace has no jurisdiction.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; J. C. B. Hebbard, Judge.

Action by J. D. Hart against the Carnall-Hopkins Company for breach of contract, originally brought in justice's court. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appealed to the district court, where judgment was again rendered for plaintiff. Defendant again appeals. Plaintiff moves to dismiss. Denied.

Wm. H. Chapman, for appellant. Edwin L. Forester, Fisher Ames, and S. V. Costello, for respondent.

PATERSON, J. This action was brought in the justice's court, to recover the sum of $299.99, on a contract which reads as follows: "San Francisco, July 22, 1892. Received of J. D. Hart, Esq., one hundred ($100) dollars, in full payment for ten (10) shares of the capital stock of the San Carlos Oil Company, and our services for locating the said J. D. Hart, Esq., on the limit of the number of acres allowed by the homestead law, not to exceed one hundred and sixty (160) acres. Said location to be on vacant government land in San Benito county, California. The Carnall-Hopkins Company, by Gibbs & Zimmerman, Mngs. C. A. Dep." It is alleged in the complaint that defendant failed to locate the plaintiff on certain vacant government land, or any land at all. In a verified answer, the defendant denied each and every allegation of the complaint, and alleged that a determination of the action would necessarily involve the question of title and possession of real property, that the defendant did locate plaintiff on vacant government land in San Benito county, and that no person had any valid claim thereto at the time. Judgment was entered in favor of the plaintiff for the sum of $165, $10 interest, and costs of suit. Thereupon the defendant appealed to the superior court on questions of law and fact, where judgment was again entered in favor of plaintiff, and from this judgment defendant has appealed to this court. Respondent has moved to dismiss the appeal on the ground that, as the justice's court had jurisdiction of the cause of action, the judgment of the superior court was final.

Our Code provides that "the parties to an action in a justice's court cannot give evidence upon any question which involves the title or possession of real property * * *; and if it appear from the answer of the defendant, verified by his oath, that the determination of the action will necessarily involve the question of title or possession to real property, * * * the justice must suspend all further proceedings in the action, and certify the pleadings * * * to the superior court of the county."[1] The constitution gives the superior court jurisdiction in "all cases at law which involve the title or possession of real property. The question is whether the issue as framed in the justice's court involved the title or possession of real property." In Holman v. Taylor, 31 Cal. 338, the court said: "The idea intended to be embodied in the phrase, 'cases at law which involve the title or possession of real property' may be expressed by the paraphrase, 'cases at law in which the title or possession of real property is a material fact in the case, upon which the plaintiff relies for a recovery, or the defendant for a defense.'" In Copertini v. Oppermann, 76 Cal. 181, 18 Pac. 256, it was held that a vendee's right to recover a sum less than $300 in the justice's court, caused by a defect in the title of the vendor, depended primarily upon whether the defendants had a defective or good title, which they had contracted to sell, and that the superior court had original jurisdiction to hear and determine the controversy, although the amount claimed was less than $300. It is clear, we think, that the fact that the land was not vacant, that is to say, that it was in the possession of another, claiming the right to hold the same, "is a material fact in the case, upon which the plaintiff relies for a recovery." The court could not decide the issue without determining the question whether the land upon which the defendant attempted to locate the plaintiff was, in fact, in the possession of another. Although the nature of the evidence cannot be considered in determining the question of jurisdiction, it may not be improper to say, in illustration of the test given, that the evidence in the record shows clearly that the main question before the court below was whether or not the land was vacant, and, to show that it was not, the respondent himself introduced a decision of the register and receiver, showing that one Benvenga had made actual settlement on the land, and was a bona fide settler thereon at the time Hart attempted to make an entry. The evidence further tends to show that Benvenga was in the actual possession of the land. "The superior court had original jurisdiction of the subject-matter, and the fact that the case gained ingress to it by a way other than the front door in no manner affects its jurisdiction to hear and determine the cause." City of Santa Barbara v. Eldred, 95 Cal. 381, 30 Pac. 562.

Motion denied.

I concur: DE HAVEN, J.

HARRISON, J. I concur in denying the motion. The complaint alleges that the plaintiff paid to the defendant $100 in consideration of its agreement to "locate" him on certain vacant government land in the county of San Benito, and that the defendant had wholly failed to carry out its agreement. In its answer the defendant alleges that it did so "locate" the plaintiff, and that the property on which the location was made was "open to location," and that no other person had any "valid claim thereto," and that, in consequence thereof, the determination of the action involved the title and possession of real property. From these averments we cannot determine whether the title or possession of real property is necessarily involved. What significance must be given to the term "locate" must depend upon the sense in which it was used by the parties to the agreement, and whether the property upon which the defendant claims to have "located" the plaintiff, in purported performance of its agreement, was "open to location," or whether any person had a "valid claim" thereto, may present questions involving the title or possession of real property. Upon the present motion we are limited to the averments in the pleadings, and cannot look at the evidence introduced in support thereof. If, upon the hearing of the appeal on its merits, it shall appear that the case before the court below did not involve the title or possession of real estate, we can then dismiss the appeal; but, upon the matter as now presented, the motion should be denied.

---

[1] Code Civ. Proc. § 838.

---

101 Cal. 154

DOUGALL v. SCHULENBERG et al. (No. 19,238.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 26, 1894.)

APPEAL—MATTERS NOT APPARENT OF RECORD—LIMITATION.

A finding by the trial court that plaintiff's cause of action is not barred by the statute of limitations will not be disturbed on appeal where the amended complaint alone appears in the record, and there is nothing to show when the original complaint was filed, or the action begun.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; W. L. Pierce, Judge.

Action by Duncan Dougall against A. R. Schulenberg and George Campbell on two promissory notes. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant Schulenberg appeals. Affirmed.

M. S. Babcock, for appellant. Luce & McDonald, for respondent.

TEMPLE, C. This action is based upon two promissory notes dated upon the same day, and alike in every respect, except that one is made payable six months after date and the other twelve months after date. The following is a copy of one of them: "$500. Windsor, Ont., March 5, 1884. Six months after date, for value received, we promise to pay to the order of Duncan Dougall, at the Canadian Bank of Commerce, here, the sum of five hundred dollars. George Campbell. A. R. Schulenberg." It is averred in the complaint that at the time of the execution of the note and at the time when it became due and payable both defendants were nonresidents of the state of California, and so continued until within a period of less than two years before the commencement of the action. Only Schulenberg was served with summons. He answered, and, with other defenses, pleaded the statute of limitations, to wit, that the cause of action was barred by the first subdivision of section 339, Code Civ. Proc. The cause was tried by the court without a jury, and the fifth finding of fact is that the cause of action "was not at the commencement of this action, and is not now, barred by the provisions of subdivision 1 of section 339 of the Code of Civil Procedure of the State of California, or by any other statute of said state." Judgment was thereupon entered for the plaintiff, and the defendant made a motion for a new trial upon the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence to justify the decision, and specified that the evidence was insufficient to justify the finding that the two promissory notes sued on were not barred at the time of the commencement of the action by the provisions of subdivision 1 of section 339, Code Civ. Proc. The court declined to award a new trial, and defendant appeals both from the order and from the judgment.

The motion for a new trial was made upon the minutes of the court, and the statement of the case was subsequently settled. The complaint had been amended, and the original complaint is not in the record, nor is there anything showing when the suit was commenced. The amended complaint was filed September 2, 1890. Aside from proof of demand and refusal of payment, the only evidence in the statement consists of the two notes and testimony of defendant Schulenberg, who testified for plaintiff. Witness said he first came to this state on the 13th or 14th day of May, 1887. That he came for the purpose of locating, and remained from four to six weeks, during which time he bought some property for his father. He then returned to Ontario, where he remained until January 15, 1888, when he again started for California, arriving in five or six days, and has remained ever since. Since the notes were, in express terms, payable in Ontario, and both of the payors were nonresidents of this state when the cause of action accrued, the statute only commenced to run in their favor when they came to this state, and if afterwards they left the state the time they were so absent would not be a part of the time within which the suit must be commenced. Code Civ. Proc. § 351. The defense of the statute of limitations must be specially pleaded, otherwise a complaint is good although it shows on its face that the cause of action is barred. If, therefore, it was necessary for the plaintiff to allege that his case was within some exception to the statute of limitations, because it was presumably barred, it was only necessary for him to do so to prevent a demurrer on that ground. It was still necessary for the defendant to plead the statute to raise any issue upon that subject. This he did as above stated. This plea is equivalent to saying that plaintiff's action was not brought within two years after the cause of action accrued, or, perhaps, in this case, to the statement that the defendant had been in this state for more than two years after the cause of action accrued and before the action was commenced. In either case there is implied in the plea an averment of the time when the action was commenced. This might have been by demurrer, which would mean nothing except upon the supposition that the court knew without proof when the suit was commenced, for such fact would not appear by allegation. So, too, when it is pleaded in the answer, the time of the commencement of the action need not be proven.

Appellant claims that the objection was made on his motion for a new trial, in which he specified that finding 5 was not justified by the evidence, therefore the statement is presumed to contain everything upon that subject. This court has often said that in such case it will be presumed that the statement contains all the evidence upon that subject; but this was not a matter of evidence.

Again, to obtain a reversal the appellant must show error. Here, taking the record as it is, appellant has shown none. We cannot presume that the action was commenced when the amended complaint was filed. The presumption is conclusive that it was not. It was commenced some time before,—how long we have no means of determining. There is an entire absence of a fact, without which we can form no opinion upon the question presented. The appellant should have brought the original complaint here as a part of the judgment roll. It was so said in Redington v. Cornwell, 90 Cal. 49, 27 Pac. 40. See, also, Abbott v. Douglass, 28 Cal. 296. It is true it has often been said that a pleading which has been wholly superseded by an amended pleading is no longer a pleading in the case. For most purposes this is true. It can no longer be looked to for the issues to be tried, or for admissions, yet in some respects it may still be material. In this case, for instance, it was necessary to know when the action was commenced, and the position of the defendant might have been that the amended complaint stated a new cause of action, as to which the suit was commenced only when the complaint was amended. To determine such question, the original complaint must be examined. Courts take judicial notice of those facts the existence of which they must ascertain without evidence. If we may take notice of this fact in this case, we are still not informed, and the practice has prescribed a mode in which that information should be afforded. It was the duty of the appellant to furnish this information. He not only declines to do so, but claims that we cannot now be informed, and that, therefore, upon the record as it is, the case should be reversed. I think the judgment and order should be affirmed, both on the ground that he has failed to furnish a proper record, and also on the ground that no error appears. If, however, we can assume that the suit was commenced when the respondent states it was, the result must be the same. Deducting the period during which the defendant was absent, he had not been in this state two years when the suit was commenced. Appellant contends that this time cannot be deducted, and relies upon Palmer v. Shaw, 16 Cal. 93. I find nothing in that case which tends to support the appellant. Defendant is within the very words of the statute. He was out of the state when the cause of action accrued, and after it accrued he departed from the state. Appellant says there was no allegation in the complaint of a departure from the state after the cause of action accrued, and therefore no proof on the subject was relevant. Admitting that this is a case where the plaintiff must aver and show that he is within an exception to the statute, it was but a variance. Substantially it is averred that the defendant had not been in the state two years when the action was commenced. If this is not sufficiently specific, still there was no objection to the evidence at the trial, and the defendant was not, and could not have been, injured. I think the order and judgment should be affirmed.

We concur: VANCLIEF, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the order and judgment appealed from are affirmed.

101 Cal. 175

JAFFE v. LILIENTHAL. (No. 15,358.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 26, 1894.)

BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—DELAY IN FILING—REVIEW —CONTINUANCE—ABSENCE OF PARTY.

1. Code Civ. Proc. § 650, provides that a bill of exceptions, when settled, must be signed and certified as allowed by the judge, and shall then be filed. Held that, the judge having, nearly a year after the settlement and allowance, by order reciting that good cause appeared therefor, allowed a filing nunc pro tunc, his action could not be reviewed, the circumstances not being shown.

2. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 594, authorizing a continuance "for good cause" in the absence of a party, it should be granted on an affidavit of plaintiff and his physician that he is confined by illness to his room in another state, and affidavits of plaintiff and his attorney that the plaintiff's presence is necessary, and that the attorney does not know the names of the witnesses or the details of the case.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Tulare county; Wheaton A. Gray, Judge.

Action by Louis Jaffe against Sol. Lilienthal, administrator of Solomon Lowenberg. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

I. I. Brown, for appellant. Lamberson & Middlecoff, for respondent.

HAYNES, C. On the 21st of December, 1891, this cause was set for trial for January 6, 1892. On that day plaintiff's attorney moved for a continuance upon affidavits of the plaintiff and his physician showing, in substance, that the plaintiff, who then, and for about a year prior thereto, resided in Seattle, Wash., was confined to his room by an attack of acute rheumatism, to which he was subject, and was wholly unable to move or leave his room, and, in the opinion of his physician, would not be able to leave his room in less than two months. The affidavit of plaintiff further stated that his presence at the trial was indispensably necessary; that he was the only person who knew the whereabouts of the witnesses necessary to be called on his behalf; that their names had not been communicated to his attorney, nor the matters to which they would testify. D. M. Delmas, Esq., attorney for plaintiff, also presented his own affidavit that plaintiff's presence was necessary; that he did not know the names of plaintiff's witnesses, nor the details of the case. No counter affidavits were presented. The continuance was denied, plaintiff's attorney left the court room, and a judgment was entered for nonappearance of the plaintiff, and plaintiff appeals.

Plaintiff's bill of exceptions was settled and allowed February 3, 1892, but was not then filed. On January 5, 1893, the court made an order reciting that, "good cause appearing therefor," said bill of exceptions should be filed nunc pro tunc as of February 3, 1892. Respondent contends that the bill of exceptions was not filed in time, and cites section 650, Code Civ. Proc., the last clause of which is as follows: "When settled, the bill must be signed by the judge or referee, with his certificate to the effect that the same is allowed, and shall then be filed with the clerk." Whether the delay was "unreasonable," as claimed by respondent, was for the court to determine. The circumstances which the court held were sufficient to justify the order do not appear. In the absence of a bill of exceptions setting out the facts, this order cannot be reviewed. We think the court erred in not granting a continuance.

Respondent suggests that it does not appear that plaintiff was a witness, nor that his attorney used any diligence to prepare for the trial. It seldom happens that a trial can be properly had in the absence of the plaintiff, even where he is disqualified as a witness, especially where it is to be tried upon oral testimony. With all the care that can reasonably be taken by both attorney and client, some matter of vital importance is liable to be overlooked by them until the trial calls it to the recollection of the plaintiff, and this is especially true in relation to matters purely in rebuttal. It is the right of parties to be present at the trial of their cases. This right may be waived, and should be held to be waived, where the absence of the party is voluntary, and under circumstances which ought not to induce a reasonable man having a due regard for the rights and interests of others and of the public, all of whom are interested in the due and prompt administration of justice, to absent himself. So far as the want of preparation on the part of the attorney is concerned, the most laborious and painstaking preparation on his part would not have prevented the sickness and absence of his client; nor does it appear that, if the plaintiff had not been sick, the necessary preparation could not have been made after the case was set for trial.

Respondent further contends that the affidavits do not show the materiality of the evidence expected to be obtained. The application for continuance was not made under section 595, Code Civ. Proc., but under section 594, which authorizes the court, "for good cause," to postpone the trial in the absence of a party. The consequences of a dismissal of an action because of the absence of a plaintiff should always be considered, especially where any reasonable excuse is shown for his absence, as where a plea of the statute of limitations could be interposed to a new action. In such case the dismissal is the absolute destruction of the plaintiff's right, and so serious a penalty should not be imposed unless the due administration of justice clearly requires it. The judgment appealed from should be reversed.

We concur: VANCLIEF, C.; SEARLS, C.

FITZGERALD and DE HAVEN, JJ. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment appealed from is reversed.

McFARLAND, J. I concur in the judgment.

---

4 Cal. Unrep. 446

JOHNSON v. JOHNSON. (No. 15,273.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 26, 1894.)

DIVORCE—CRUELTY—AWARD OF COMMUNITY PROPERTY.

1. A complaint alleging extreme cruelty, in that "about three years ago" defendant, without cause, struck plaintiff, and since has continually, whenever they have been together, used vile language to her, is not demurrable as failing to specify the acts relied on.

2. Plaintiff's physician testified, inter alia, that her nose had been flattened by a blow that defendant admitted having struck her, but said he did not mean to, and seemed ashamed. Their son swore that he had heard his father call his mother insulting names as long as she lived with him. Since the assault, plaintiff had been generally sick in bed, and her husband's language seemed to make her worse. Held sufficient proof of "extreme cruelty," consisting of a blow and abusive language, to the injury of plaintiff's health.

3. Plaintiff being an invalid, and defendant more than able to make his living, it was proper for the court, while allowing no permanent alimony, to give plaintiff, besides most of the household furniture, the whole community house and lot, which was worth only $3,000, and was subject to a mortgage of $2,500.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; F. W. Lawler, Judge.

Action for divorce by Ane Johnson against Neils Johnson. Decree for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Nagle & Nagle, for appellant. Neils Johnson and R. B. Wallace, for respondent.

VANCLIEF, C. Action for divorce on the ground of extreme cruelty, in which the plaintiff prevailed. Besides the divorce, the decree awarded to plaintiff the custody of an infant son of the parties and the greater portion of the community property, but no permanent alimony. Defendant appeals from the judgment, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

1. Defendant demurred to the complaint on the grounds that it is ambiguous, uncertain, and unintelligible, in that it does not appear therefrom "when or where defendant was guilty of the alleged extreme cruelty," nor "what was the nature, character, or extent of the alleged acts of extreme cruelty." The allegations of the complaint charging cruelty are as follows: "That during their marriage defendant has been guilty of extreme cruelty to plaintiff, in this: That about three years ago said defendant struck plaintiff without cause, thereby rendering her insensible, and since said time said defendant has wrongfully and unjustly, and without any provocation, continually used vile and offensive language to plaintiff whenever said plaintiff and defendant have been together, thereby inflicting upon said plaintiff grievous mental suffering, by reason of which mental suffering so inflicted by defendant, as aforesaid, plaintiff has been injured in health to such a degree that, by reason of the infliction of said mental suffering as aforesaid by defendant, said plaintiff has become sick, and her health has been greatly impaired. That further cohabitation between the plaintiff and defendant will endanger the physical health and the life of this plaintiff." This seems sufficiently definite as to the times, nature, and extent or degree of the cruelty; and, from the averment that it was commenced by a beating three years before the commencement of the action, and was thence continued by abusive language "whenever said plaintiff and defendant have been together," it must be understood that the places were wherever "said plaintiff and defendant had been together" during that period of three years, which places were presumably as well known to the defendant as to plaintiff. The demurrer does not specify, as a deficiency, that the abusive language is not set out. As against the objections specified in the demurrer, I think the complaint is barely sufficient.

2. The findings as to the fact of extreme cruelty are in the language of the complaint, and therefore support the judgment in this respect; and it is not denied that they are sufficient in all other respects.

3. The evidence was sufficient to justify the findings. The plaintiff testified to all the acts of cruelty alleged, and was sufficiently corroborated by the testimony of her physician and her son. As to the beating, the physician testified, among other things, that by a forcible blow her nose was crushed down flat on her face, and that defendant admitted he struck her, but said he didn't intend to, and appeared to be ashamed of what he had done. As to his abusive language, the son testified: "I have heard my father call my mother hard names, such as 'whore,' 'bastard,' and 'son of a bitch.' My mother's testimony in this regard is true. He called her such names as long as she was home." It appeared without controversy that, during the greater portion of the time after the beating, the plaintiff was sick, and thereby confined to her bed; and the tendency of the evidence is to prove that defendant's abusive language aggravated her disease.

4. Appellant contends that his offenses were condoned by the plaintiff. But condonation was not pleaded by defendant, (Bishop, Mar. & Div. §§ 619, 645;) and, if it had been pleaded, there is no evidence tending to prove it, unless the mere fact that she continued to cohabit with him until the last of a long series of acts of cruelty had such tendency by implication. Conceding that, under some circumstances, cohabitation after having suffered acts of cruelty implies condonation, it must be remembered that "all condonation, especially the implied, is upon the condition both that the offense shall not be repeated, and likewise that continually afterwards the party forgiven shall treat the other with conjugal kindness; whereupon a breach of the condition revives the original right of divorce." 2 Bish. Mar. & Div. § 308; Civ. Code, § 117. And section 118 of the Civil Code further provides: "Where the cause of divorce consists of a course of offensive conduct, or arises in case of cruelty from successive acts of ill treatment which may aggregately constitute the offense, co-habitation, or passive endurance, or conjugal kindness, shall not be evidence of condonation of any of the acts constituting such cause, unless accompanied by an express agreement to condone." There is no evidence and no pretense of any express agreement to condone.

5. The house and lot awarded to plaintiff was community property, and subject to a mortgage of $2,500 and seven months' interest thereon. In his answer, defendant alleged this property to be worth only $3,000, and admitted the mortgage as above stated. The greater portion of the household furniture was also given to plaintiff. Appellant contends that the court erred in awarding the whole lot and house to plaintiff; but I think the allowance was proper and just. It appeared that plaintiff was in bad health, and that defendant was able to earn more than was necessary for his support. I think the order and judgment should be affirmed.

We concur: SEARLS, C; BELCHER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

(100 Cal. 609)

In re LUX'S ESTATE. (No. 15,146.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 29, 1894.)

In bank. On rehearing. Denied.
For opinion on appeal, see 35 Pac. 345.

PER CURIAM. The order of May 13, 1892, directing the executors to pay to the widow an allowance of $1,000 per month for her support during the period named therein, has been reversed, and there is nothing said in the opinion filed in this case which can be properly construed as a direction to the superior court in settling the accounts of the executors to only credit them on account of the payments made by them for the support of the widow with the amount named in the reversed order. In settling the accounts the court will credit the executors with such sum as it finds was reasonably and properly advanced by them for the purpose named. In declaring this general principle, the court in its opinion simply explained how the account should have been stated upon the findings appearing in the record of the case; but, as these findings fell with the order reversed, the court will necessarily make new findings, and upon them will state the account in accordance with the general rule announced in the opinion. If the court shall, upon the new hearing, find $1,000 per month, or any greater or less amount, a reasonable sum to be applied for the support of the widow, then the executors should be credited with the amount so found to be reasonable and proper. Rehearing denied.

(101 Cal. 222)

BROWN v. FRESNO RAISIN CO. (No. 18,206.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 31, 1894.)

PARTNERSHIP—INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY OF PARTNER—COUNTERCLAIM.

Defendant may counterclaim for goods sold and delivered to a partnership on the individual credit of plaintiff, one of the partners.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county; M. K. Harris, Judge.

Action by one Brown against the Fresno Raisin Company. From a judgment for defendant on a counterclaim, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

L. L. Cory, for appellant. Geo. E. Church, for respondent.

DE HAVEN, J. The defendant recovered a judgment for $104.45, balance due upon a counterclaim, and the plaintiff appeals. The plaintiff was a member of the firm of Brown & May, and there was evidence from which the court was justified in finding that the raisins delivered by the defendant to that firm were sold and delivered upon the individual credit of the plaintiff, and, this being so, the finding of the court that such goods were sold and delivered by defendant to the plaintiff, and that the counterclaim of defendant was established, cannot be disturbed; for it is well settled that a partner may contract on his own account, and make himself alone liable for the property bought for the copartnership, if the vendor choose to accept such individual liability. 1 Lindl. Partn. (2d Amer. Ed.) pp. *179–192; Sylvester v. Smith, 9 Mass. 119. We discover no error in the rulings of the court in relation to the admission of evidence. Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: McFARLAND, J.; FITZGERALD, J.

4 Cal. Unrep. 403

FIRST NAT. BANK OF CHICAGO v. CALIFORNIA NAT. BANK OF SAN DIEGO. (No. 19,261.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 29, 1893.)

ASSUMPSIT—MONEY LENT—EVIDENCE.

1. G., plaintiff's vice president, being at the C. Hotel in defendant's town, was asked by the latter's president for a loan on collateral, $25,000 to $40,000, and agreed to make it on proper security. N., who was present, writing G. about a note which said president proposed to send, "to obtain this loan, as I understand it," gave his opinion about certain notes, defendant's stock, etc. A note for $25,000 was made to G., vice president, by four of defendant's directors and its cashier. The president, in sending the collaterals, wrote G. that he believed they were, in substance, "about what was spoken of at the C. Hotel when Mr. N. was with us." On receipt of the collaterals, plaintiff credited defendant with $25,000, less discount, and paid it on defendant's orders. Held, that a finding that plaintiff lent defendant $25,000 was justified.

2. In an action by one bank against another on a note, and for money loaned, where defendant asserts that plaintiff bought the note, proof of the negotiations for the loan, and that defendant received its proceeds, is not incompetent as varying the written instrument.

3. In an action by one bank against another for money loaned, and on a note representing the balance due, the loan and balance being established, it is immaterial whether the note was authorized by the directors.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; George Puterbaugh, Judge.

Action by the First National Bank of Chicago against the California National Bank of San Diego on a promissory note, and for money loaned. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Luel & McDonald, for appellant. Tippet, Boone & Neale, for respondent.

SEARLS, C. This appeal is prosecuted from a final judgment in favor of plaintiff, and from an order denying motion for a new trial. There are three counts in the complaint, as follows: (1) Upon a promissory note for $12,500, dated October 19, 1881, made by "California National Bank, per J. W. Collins, Pres.," upon which a payment of $2,500 was admitted; (2) a cause of action upon an overdraft for $9,862.95, which was admitted, except that defendant claimed that the $2,500 credited in the first cause of action should be applied to the second; (3) a cause of action for the recovery of $25,000, loaned by plaintiff to defendant May 18, 1891, with a credit thereon of $15,000.

The findings are in favor of plaintiff, and are sufficient to support the judgment. By the second finding it appears that "the first and third counts of plaintiff's complaint relate to the same indebtedness." According to these findings, the plaintiff on the 18th day of May, 1891, loaned to the defendant $25,000 at defendant's request; that defendant paid the interest thereon up to the 19th day of October, 1891, and $12,500 on account of the principal, and that on said last-named date the defendant made its promissory note to the plaintiff for $12,500, being for the balance due on account of said loan, payable thirty days after date, with interest at 7 per cent. per annum; that defendant received the consideration for said note; that the same is due and unpaid, except the sum of $2,500, paid thereon December 22, 1891. The court further finds, as to the $2,500, that it was not collected for the use of the defendant, as averred in the answer, but was collected by the plaintiff on a promissory note deposited with it by defendant as collateral security for the $12,500 note of plaintiff, etc.

The contention of appellant is that the finding of the court that plaintiff loaned to the defendant $25,000 on the 28th day of May, 1891, is not supported by the evidence. It is in proof that a promissory note for $25,000, made by five individuals, payable to "L. J. Gage, Vice President," was sent to the plaintiff in Chicago; and the theory of appellant is that plaintiff discounted the note, and there is certainly some evidence in support of the theory. On the other hand, it appears that Gage, the vice president of the plaintiff bank, located in Chicago, was in San Diego; that the president of the defendant bank negotiated with him for a loan of $25,000 to $40,000, offering to put up, as collateral, notes, bank stock, etc.,—anything, in short, that plaintiff wished; and it was finally arranged that, with proper security, plaintiff would make the loan to defendant. H. F. Norcross, who was present at the negotiations, was afterwards requested to write to Gage, vice president of plaintiff, and did on or about May 21, 1891, write in reference to some note which defendant's president proposed sending "to obtain this loan, as I understood it." In this letter he gave his opinion of certain notes, and the value of defendant's stock, etc. The $25,000 note was made by four of the directors of defendant, and its cashier. In sending on the collaterals to Chicago, Collins, the president of defendant, wrote to Gage that he believed they were, "in substance, about what was spoken of at the Coronado Hotel [where the negotiations had occurred] when Mr. Norcross was with us." Upon the receipt of these collaterals, of which there seems to have been a considerable number, plaintiff placed the $25,000, less interest, to the credit of defendant, and paid it out on its drafts and orders. This is not all of the evidence going to show a loan of the $25,000 by plaintiff to defendant, but is sufficient to show a substantial conflict in the evidence, and to uphold the finding of the court in favor of such loan.

Defendant at the trial objected to the testimony in reference to negotiations on the part of plaintiff and defendant for a loan of money by the former to defendant, and that the latter received the funds, upon the ground that it was immaterial, irrelevant, and incompetent, and that it tended to vary and contradict the written instrument, to wit, the promissory note for $25,000 already in evidence. We do not see that it did anything of the kind. The third cause of action was for money loaned by plaintiff to defendant. This evidence tended to support that cause of action; and the fact that defendant contended that it was not a loan by plaintiff, but a purchase of the promissory note in question, did not militate against the admissibility of the evidence.

On the 19th day of October, 1891, the defendant, having paid the interest on the loan and $12,500 of the principal, made its promissory note for the remaining $12,500, payable 30 days after date, with interest, etc. This note was signed as follows: "California National Bank of San Diego, per J. W. Collins, Pres." Appellant contends that this note is not shown to have been authorized by the board of directors of the defendant, and that the president of the defendant, not having been specially empowered so to do, could not bind the defendant by making this note. Respondents meet this contention: (1) By reference to the record, which shows that a meeting of the board of directors of defendant "held in February, 1891, a resolution was passed by the board of directors to authorize Mr. Collins, the president, to borrow $100,000 from some eastern national bank." The record also shows that in January, 1891, J. W. Collins was elected president, and that section 19 of the by-laws of defendant requires "all contracts, checks, drafts, etc., shall be signed by the president, vice president, or cashier." (2) Authorization implied from course of conduct of business of defendant. (3) That defendant, having received and retained the consideration for which the note was given, with notice, is estopped from denying the validity of the note. We need not notice all of these propositions in detail. Under the first of them, which authorized the president to borrow from some eastern national bank $100,000, we think it clear that authority was conferred to borrow a less sum from plaintiff, a national bank of Chicago. Ordinarily, the power of a bank to borrow money on time implies the power to give its negotiable note on time. Morse, Banking, § 63. We may waive all this, however, and the case stands thus: In May, 1891, defendant borrowed from plaintiff $25,000. Of this sum it paid $12,500, and in October following gave its promissory note for the balance due. The complaint contains two counts for this cause of action. In the third it seeks to recover the balance due on account of the loan. In the first count plaintiff seeks a recovery on account of the note. Being for the same subject-matter, it cannot recover upon both counts; but, if the note was unauthorized, it may still recover upon the count for money loaned. The very object of different causes of action upon the same transaction is to meet just such contingencies as the present; hence, the loan having been established, and plaintiff's right to a recovery therefor fixed, the question of the right of the president of the defendant to bind it by the execution of a promissory note in evidence of the indebtedness becomes of no moment in a case where, like the present, plaintiff has counted upon its claim in each form. The judgment and order appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: TEMPLE, C.; BELCHER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

---

101 Cal. 9

BARKER et al. v. MASKELL et al. (No. 19,206.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 3, 1894.)

CHATTEL MORTGAGES—FURNITURE IN LODGING HOUSE—FORECLOSURE.

Civil Code, § 2955, provides that mortgages may be made on furniture used in lodging or boarding houses, "when mortgaged to recover the purchase money of the articles mortgaged." Held, that a petition in an action by mortgagees to foreclose a mortgage on furniture used in a lodging house need not show that the mortgage was given to secure the purchase money of such furniture, since it is valid, as between the parties to it, though not given for such purpose.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles, County; Walter Van Dyke, Judge.

Action by O. J. Barker and others against John Maskell and E. A. Rhodes to foreclose a chattel mortgage. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant Maskell appeals. Affirmed.

The petition alleged that on the 5th day of November, 1890, defendants executed to plaintiffs a certain note, which is set out, and dated October 23, 1890. It also alleged that at the same time, to secure the payment of such note, defendant Maskell executed to plaintiffs a chattel mortgage dated October 23, 1890, which is also set out. The mortgage describes the property as furniture used in a certain lodging house belonging to the mortgagees. It contains a copy of such note, and recites that such note is given as the purchase price of the furniture "above described, and for no other consideration." The petition then alleged that, at the time of the execution of the mortgage, all the property described therein belonged to plaintiffs; that it was sold to be used in such lodging house, and the "mortgage was given to secure the purchase price thereof, to wit, the amount of said note, to the plaintiffs, and for no other consideration, and the said promissory note was given as an evidence of said indebtedness," etc.; and that the note was due and unpaid.

Hugh J. & Wm. Crawford, for appellant. A. M. Stephens, for respondents.

DE HAVEN, J. The action is for the foreclosure of a mortgage upon certain furniture and upholstery used in a lodging house in the city of Los Angeles. The mortgage was executed to the plaintiffs by one of the defendants, for the purpose of securing a promissory note made by himself and the other defendant. We think it sufficiently appears from the complaint that the note was given for the purchase price of the property mortgaged; and therefore the mortgage is one to secure the purchase money of the articles mortgaged, and valid under section 2955 of the Civil Code.[1] But even if it should be conceded that the complaint is ambiguous, and fails to show that the mortgage was given for the purpose of securing the purchase price of the property therein described, still the mortgage is valid as between the parties to it, and the complaint states a good cause of action from either point of view. There was no error in overruling the demurrer. Judgment affirmed.

We concur: FITZGERALD, J.; McFARLAND, J.

---

[1] Civ. Code, § 2955, provides as follows: "Mortgages may be made upon * * * upholstery and furniture used in hotels, lodging or boarding houses, when mortgaged to secure the purchase money of the articles mortgaged. * * *"

(101 Cal. 198)

GRANGERS' BANK OF CALIFORNIA v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO. (No. 15,323.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 26, 1894.)

SUPREME COURT—REHEARING—CASES OF ORIGINAL JURISDICTION.

The power to order a rehearing in bank, after a decision in one of the departments, conferred on the supreme court by the constitution, applies, not only to cases of appellate jurisdiction, but also to cases of original jurisdiction; and hence, in such cases, a motion for rehearing, and not for a new trial, is the proper practice.

On motion to set aside an order granting a rehearing. Denied.

For former report, see 33 Pac. 1095.

McFARLAND, J. This proceeding is on original petition in this court for a writ of prohibition. There was a decision here in favor of petitioner, August 19, 1893, but within 30 days thereafter, an order of this court was made, granting a rehearing. Petitioner now moves to set aside said order granting said rehearing upon the ground that the court had no power to make it, contending that a motion for a new trial was the proper remedy. The point was substantially determined against petitioner's contention in Re Tyler, 71 Cal. 374, 12 Pac. 289. It may be further said that the present constitution provides that the judgment of a department of this court shall be final in 30 days, unless before that time ordered into bank; and that there has been a rule of this court, ever since its origin, that a judgment of the court in bank shall be final in 30 days, unless before that time a rehearing shall have been granted. Neither the constitution nor the rule makes any distinction between cases of appellate jurisdiction and cases of original jurisdiction; and, indeed, most of the cases here which are in form original are, like the case at bar, in their nature appellate. Therefore, to apply to this court those parts of the Code of Civil Procedure about new trials, etc., which are evidently intended to regulate procedure in the superior courts, would be to overturn the constitutional provision above mentioned, as well as the ancient rule and uniform practice of the court. A motion for a new trial, with its attendant consequences and delays, would suspend a judgment rendered here beyond the time fixed by the constitution and the rule. Many of the provisions of the Code about procedure have reference to appeals, and were intended as means for the perfection of records in the superior courts upon which cases might be reviewed in the appellate court; but in an original proceeding here this court has its own record. The general powers of this court to grant rehearings is fully discussed and declared in the opinion delivered by Beatty, C. J., in the Jessup Case, 81 Cal. 459, 21 Pac. 976, and 22 Pac. 742, 1028. The motion to set aside the order granting a rehearing is denied.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; DE HAVEN, J; HARRISON, J.; PATERSON, J.

(4 Cal. Unrep. 463)

OGDEN v. PACKARD. (No. 19,306.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 31, 1894.)

FORECLOSURE OF MORTGAGE—ATTORNEY'S FEES—DISCRETION OF COURT.

On appeal from a judgment foreclosing a mortgage which provides for the allowance of reasonable attorney's fees on foreclosure, the allowance will not be disturbed if the appeal is brought up on the judgment roll alone, without exceptions, and there is nothing in the record to show that the court abused its discretion in making the allowance.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Bernardino county; George E. Otis, Judge.

Action by Matthew B. Ogden against C. E. Packard. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

W. J. McIntyre, for appellant. Irvington & Adair, for respondent.

VANCLIEF, C. Action to foreclose a mortgage which provided that, "in the event of the foreclosure of said mortgage, reasonable attorney's fees shall be taxed by the court, and included and paid in the bill of costs." It is alleged in the complaint that $500 is a reasonable attorney's fee to be allowed under said provision of the mortgage. The answer simply "denies that $500 is a reasonable attorney's fee," without stating whether such fee is unreasonably large or unreasonably small, or what sum would be a reasonable fee. The court found the amount due on the mortgage notes to be $16,571.65, and fixed and allowed as plaintiff's attorney's fees the sum of $500, and for the payment of these sums ordered a sale of the mortgaged property in the usual mode. Findings of fact were waived, but the amount due on the notes and the sum allowed for attorney's fees are recited in the decree. The defendant brings this appeal from the final decree, upon the judgment roll, and without any exceptions; and the only point made is that the court exceeded its discretionary power in fixing and allowing plaintiff's attorney's fees, and asks that the judgment be modified by deducting from the attorney's fees $350. There is nothing in the record tending to show any abuse of the discretionary power of the court; and, indeed, for aught that appears, the appellant may have expressly acquiesced in the order fixing the attorney's fees. I think the judgment should be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

4 Cal. Unrep. 462

RUSS LUMBER & MILL CO. v. ROGGENKAMP et al. (No. 19,242.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 30, 1894.)

MECHANICS' LIENS—NOTICE TO OWNER.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1184, requiring the owner of a building to retain sufficient funds to pay a claim for materials, furnished by a material man who has given notice of his claim to such owner, a material man who serves the required notice acquires a prior right to the fund in the hands of the owner, due the contractor, though the contractor subsequently abandons the contract.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Bernardino county; John L. Campbell, Judge.

Action by the Russ Lumber & Mill Company against William Roggenkamp, W. H. Pierce, J. Lee Burton, and the Union Bank of Redlands to enforce a mechanic's lien. From a judgment for plaintiff against defendant Roggenkamp, personally, said defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Goodcell & Leonard, for appellant. Curtis, Oster & Curtis, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This action was brought to foreclose a mechanic's lien upon a dwelling house constructed for defendant Roggenkamp, and owned by him. All the defendants made default, except the defendant Roggenkamp; and he alone prosecutes this appeal upon the judgment roll. Defendant Roggenkamp entered into a written contract with the defendant Pierce for the construction by the latter of the building in question, for the price of $2,750, and this contract was made and filed as required by law. The plaintiff furnished material to the contractor, Pierce, for which there is still due the plaintiff the sum of $977.23. On June 26, 1891, the plaintiff served upon defendant Roggenkamp written notice that he had furnished material to the contractor to the amount of $963.87. At that time there was due the contractor $687.50, and to become due the further sum of $2,062.50. On July 3, 1891, the contractor ceased work, and abandoned the contract. The work was continued by Roggenkamp, under the supervision of his architect, defendant J. Lee Burton, and the building completed on October 23, 1891. Plaintiff filed its claim of lien on December 18, 1891, which was 56 days after the completion of the building. The lien was disallowed, and judgment rendered against defendant Roggenkamp, personally, for the sum of $687.50, with interest and costs. The sole question involved in the case was passed upon in Bates v. Santa Barbara Co., 90 Cal. 543, 27 Pac. 438. A careful perusal of the brief of appellant fails to convince us either that this case can, in principle, be distinguished from that, or that the question here was not necessarily involved there. The judgment appealed from is affirmed, upon the authority of Bates v. Santa Barbara Co., supra.

101 Cal. 20

McDONALD v. SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA RY. CO. (No. 19,308.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 31, 1894.)

PLEADING—VERIFIED DEFENSES—EVIDENCE—CONVEYANCE OF RIGHT OF WAY — CONSTRUCTION AND EFFECT.

1. Statements made in the special defenses in a verified pleading are not evidence against defendant on issues in other defenses contained in the same answer.

2. A conveyance to a railroad company of a right of way over the grantor's land, for its road, as already constructed and operated, to enable the company to use it as it was then using it, bars the grantor's right to damages for injury to his land, caused by the maintenance and operation of a defective bridge thereon, constructed before the execution of the conveyance.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Bernardino county, John L. Campbell, Judge.

Action by William McDonald against the Southern California Railway Company for damages to plaintiff's premises, caused by a defectively constructed bridge. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Elmer E. Rowell and W. J. Hunsaker, for appellant. A. Brunson, Paris & Allison, and Goodcell & Leonard, for respondent.

TEMPLE, C. This is an appeal by the defendant from the judgment, and order refusing a new trial. Practically, the complaint and the amendments thereto contain four counts. The first charges that defendant is a corporation, owning and operating a railroad in this state, and, for the use of its railroad, in December, 1889, erected a trestle bridge over Lytle creek in the county of San Bernardino, and, in constructing the same, failed to use due and ordinary care in providing for the passage of water, debris, and flood wood under the same in time of flood; that on the 23d day of December, 1889, during a heavy flood, owing to the said negligent construction of the bridge, debris, flood wood, sand, and gravel accumulated under the bridge, choking up the channel, and causing the water to overflow, and damage plaintiff's land, to his injury in the sum of $4,000. The second count contains the same facts, with the addition that defendant did not use proper care and diligence in removing wood, debris, etc., from the bridge, but negligently permitted its accumulation, thereby causing the water to run against and wash away plaintiff's land, to his damage, etc. The third count charges that defendant constructed across the creek a modern pile and stringer bridge, which was an unlawful construction, and caused accumulations, obstructing the flow of water; that its construction was due to negligence and want of ordinary care, etc. The last count charges that the spaces between the piles or trestles were not wide enough, or high enough, to permit the free passage of water; that, as constructed, the bridge would inevitably cause an accumulation of drift, etc., choking up the stream, and that defendant, well knowing its defective nature, nevertheless carelessly continued its use, and failed and neglected to remedy the defects, whereby damage resulted. Each count, or statement of a cause of action, is specifically answered by the defendant, and to each cause of action several defenses were set up. The different answers, however, are very similar. First, there are specific denials of the material allegations of the complaint. The answer denies that defendant was a corporation prior to November 7, 1889, or that it owned or operated a railroad prior to that date, that it built the bridge in question, or that it was negligently constructed. The specific charges of negligence and damage are denied. As a separate defense, charges contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff. As another separate defense, that the injury was by accident, or caused by the elements, and was the act of God. As another separate defense, that on the 7th day of November, 1889, this defendant was formed by the consolidation of three named corporations, one of which was the California Central Railway Company, which last-named company built the bridge in question, and there was, therefore, a misjoinder of parties, in that the California Central is not made a party herein. Still another separate defense avers that, on the 17th of September, 1889, the plaintiff executed and delivered to the California Central Railway Company a deed, which is fully set out, and which purports to convey a right of way, over described land, "for the main track of said railroad, as the same is now located, constructed, and operated," and which contains the following language: "And I do hereby grant to said grantee the right to exercise the right to use the said street for railroad purposes, as it is now doing for its main track, and I do hereby acknowledge full and entire satisfaction or payment of any and all damages sustained by me, by reason of the construction of said railroad upon said street, and by reason of the operation thereof, and, particularly, do I acknowledge payment for damages for any injury caused by the construction of said railroad in front of my property hereinbefore described." It is then averred that, at the date of the deed, the California Central Railway Company owned and operated a line of railroad, which was constructed upon and over said bridge, which was then, and at all times, necessary to the said company in the use of its railroad; that the bridge is constructed upon the property and right of way so conveyed. The consolidation of the three corporations is again set out, to show that defendant has succeeded to the rights of the California Central Railway Company, and it is claimed that the deed is a bar to plaintiff's right to recover.

On the trial, and at the commencement thereof, it was stipulated in open court as follows: "For all purposes of this trial, it is admitted and conceded by both plaintiff and defendant: First. That the bridge and road mentioned in plaintiff's complaint were built and constructed in the year 1886 by the California Central Railway Company, and not by this defendant, and that, at the commencement of this action, and the commencement of action No. 4,033, this defendant was using said bridge and road, and operating its road thereon, and over such bridge, as grantee and successor of said California Central Railway Company. It is admitted that, at the time of the commencement of this action, and that at the time of the commencement of action No. 4,033, plaintiff in this case was the owner of the property, described as belonging to him in the complaints in both actions herein, and that this present defendant had no corporate existence until on or about the 7th day of November, 1889."

One of the findings of fact reads as follows: "The defendant did not construct the bridge mentioned in the complaint. Said bridge was constructed, prior to November 7, 1889, by the California Central Railway Company, a corporation; and after the construction of said bridge, to wit, on November 7, 1889, the defendant was formed by the consolidation af three certain railway corporations, to wit, said California Central Railway Company, the California Southern Railway Company, and the Redondo Beach Railway Company, and, upon such consolidation being effected, the defendant, on November 7, 1889, became the owner of said bridge and of said railroad crossing, and the same commenced the operation of said railroad, and thereafter continuously, until the commencement of this action, the defendant was the owner of said bridge, and in the possession, use, and operation thereof."

The difference between this finding and the admission is obvious. The admission is to the effect that the defendant is the grantee of the California Central Railway, while the finding is to the effect that the defendant is a consolidated company, of which the California Central Railway is a constituent. Under one hypothesis, defendant could only be held responsible for knowingly using a structure which was a nuisance, while on the other it is liable for negligence in its construction. Defendant, in its motion for a new trial, based partly upon the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence, objects to this finding, and charges that there was no evidence whatever tending to show the consolidation, and the fact is against the express admission. Respondent does not claim that there was evidence to support the finding, but contends that appellant cannot complain, for it is so expressly averred in defendant's verified answer. So it is, many times over, but only in so many separate and distinct defenses. To each cause of action, however, there is a defense which consists of denials only, and which contains no such allegation.

Are the statements made in the special defenses in a verified pleading evidence against the party upon issues tendered in other defenses contained in the same answer? Respondent claims that it was so held in Bell v. Brown, 22 Cal. 678. In that case, in a somewhat elaborate opinion, the court held that a defendant may set up as many defenses as he has, and cannot be deprived of any because they are inconsistent. The learned justice, however, says: "There is this difference, however, between verified and unverified pleadings, that, if the truth of the fact is directly averred in any part of the former, whether in a complaint or answer, and then in any other part of the same pleading, whether in the statement of several causes of action in the complaint, or in separate defenses in the answer, the same fact is directly contradicted or denied, the person verifying it is guilty of perjury, for both cannot be true; and the averment which bears most strongly against the party so pleading will be taken as true upon the trial." In the opinion it is shown that one may verify certain inconsistent defenses, and yet not commit perjury. For instance, one may deny the execution of a note sued upon, and yet, in another defense, plead payment, or the statute of limitations. In legal theory, the second defense would admit the execution of the note, and the third admits its execution, and that it has not been paid. Yet one may claim that it is forged, and yet that he has paid it; and, also, in case that he fails in his proofs as to either point, that it is barred. But could not the defendant, in such a case, also plead as a defense that the note was procured by fraud? Of course, this involves a statement that he did, in fact, execute the note. If this statement may be used as conclusively settling the issue raised by the denial, then the defendant is practically, not allowed to interpose all the defenses he has. The matter is again discussed in Buhne v. Corbett, 43 Cal. 264. There it is said there is no distinction between verified and unverified pleadings, in this respect. Billings v. Drew, 52 Cal. 565, presents the question as suggested in the foregoing illustration, and holds that the statement in one defense cannot be used as evidence upon another issue, because to so hold would deprive the defendant of the benefit of his denials. This I understand to be the universal rule. Pom. Code Rem. § 724; Botto v. Vandament, 67 Cal. 333, 7 Pac. 753.

Respondent contends that, if this finding in regard to the consolidation of the corporations be stricken out, still the findings left are sufficient to support the judgment. One count in the complaint, as we have seen, is based upon the proposition that the defendant continued to maintain the bridge, knowing that it was a dangerous nuisance. Upon this issue the court finds: "From November 7, 1889, until the time of the commencement of this action, the defendant, well knowing all the facts hereinbefore found, willfully and negligently kept, used, and maintained said bridge, so constructed, and willfully and negligently failed to take any means or precautions to remedy the obstruction of said bridge, or to provide for the free or safe passage of the flood water thereunder, when charged with brush, trees, or other debris, or to protect the plaintiff's said land from injury thereby." This finding is also attacked in the motion for a new trial, but I think this court would not be justified in saying it is unsupported by the evidence. There was much testimony to the effect that the bridge was an improper one for use at that place. Of course, defendant was constantly using it, and it was its duty to have it constantly inspected, and kept in repair. The character of the stream was quite obvious, and, although the defendant was but a few months old, its managers were not without experience. All the evidence tending to show the nature of the structure, and of the stream, may be said to have a bearing upon the question of defendant's knowledge of the defects in the structure, and its inadequacy for emergencies which were likely to arise. We are, therefore, driven to consider the defense based upon the deed given by plaintiff to the California Central Railway Company, the grantor of defendant. The execution of the deed is admitted, and it is averred and found that "said bridge and all approaches thereto are located within the right of way in said deed described, and constitute part of the premises thereby granted to the California Central Railway Company." Respondent attempts to avoid this point by claiming that there is no evidence to sustain this finding, and it is declared in the statement that it contains all the evidence given at the trial. But this finding is not attacked, and cannot be, by the respondent, in this way. It is, no doubt, an embarrassing position to be placed in, when there is a favorable judgment, based upon findings which may be held to show that the judgment ought to have been the other way. The only safety for a party in that position is to attack the erroneous finding himself, unless the consequence of the defect could only be to necessitate a new trial.

Upon the main question, appellant cites us to three cases, which apparently fully sustain its proposition: McCarty v. Railway Co., 31 Minn. 278, 17 N. W. 616. The defendant entered upon plaintiff's land, and built an embankment, upon which it constructed its road. Thereafter it compromised with the owner, and took a deed conveying the land used as a right of way. Held, that the deed licensed the maintenance of the road and embankment as already constructed, and that defendant was not liable because it continued to maintain the embankment with insufficient culverts, thereby obstructing the natural flow of water from plaintiff's meadow. Radke v. Railway Co., 41 Minn. 350, 43 N. W. 6, is, in all respects, like the last. Referring to the other case, it is said: "The decision must be deemed to rest upon the ground that, from the sale and unqualified conveyance to the railroad company of the premises upon which its road and embankment had already been permanently constructed, and where it was to be expected to remain, it was to be presumed that the grantor consented to the continued existence of such permanent improvements, for the enjoyment and use of which the purchase and conveyance of the land was obviously made. * * * It cannot affect the case that he may not then have apprehended the full extent of the injury which could result from this in the future." To the same effect is Hoffeditz v. Mining Co., 129 Pa. St. 264, 18 Atl. 125. This decision was affirmed in Updegrove v. Railroad Co., 132 Pa. St. 541, 19 Atl. 283; and in McMinn v. Railroad Co., 147 Pa. St. 5, 23 Atl. 325. The principle of these cases seems to be that one, having conveyed the land with the structure, for the purpose of enabling the purchaser to continue to use it as it was then using it, cannot deprive the purchaser of the benefit by claiming that it constitutes a private nuisance. Respondent has cited us to no case which holds a contrary doctrine. I feel constrained, therefore, to sustain this position of the appellant. Respondent, in his brief, claims that the finding is not only entirely unsupported by the evidence, but is untrue. The plaintiff did not claim to own the land across the river, or attempt to convey it, but only up to the river on one side of it. Since the appellant is here asking for a new trial, I think a new trial should be awarded, even if the findings would justify a judgment for the defendant. I therefore recommend that the judgment and order be reversed, and a new trial granted.

We concur: BELCHER, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order appealed from are reversed, and a new trial granted.

(101 Cal. xviii)

McDONALD v. SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA RY. CO. (No. 19,309.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 31, 1894.)

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Bernardino county; John L. Campbell, Judge.

Action by William McDonald against the Southern California Railway Company for damages to plaintiff's premises, caused by a defectively constructed bridge. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Elmer E. Rowell and W. J. Hunsaker, for appellant. A. Brunson, Paris & Allison, and Goodcell & Leonard, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This case is, in all essential respects, like the case with the same title, (No. 19,308,) 35 Pac. 643, and on the authority of that case the judgment and order are reversed, and a new trial ordered.

(4 Cal. Unrep. 450)

WATKINS v. WILHOIT et al. (No. 18,167.)[1]

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 26, 1894.)

ASSIGNMENT FOR BENEFIT OF CREDITORS—RECORD—LIMITATION.

1. Under Civ. Code, § 3465, which declares an assignment for the benefit of creditors "void" as against nonassenting creditors, unless recorded as required by sections 3463, 3464, no preliminary suit is necessary by a nonassenting creditor to set aside an unrecorded assignment before he can maintain a creditors' bill to apply the assignor's property in the assignee's hands on a judgment against the assignor.

2. The fact that an unrecorded assignment may be valid as between the parties does not render it merely voidable as against nonassenting creditors, since Civ. Code, § 3465, expressly declares it "void" as against them.

3. The right to bring a creditors' bill to set aside an assignment for the benefit of creditors as in fraud of plaintiff's rights accrues when the execution on plaintiff's judgment against the assignor is returned unsatisfied, and not when the assignment was made.

4. Civ. Code, § 1170, which provides that an instrument is deemed to be recorded when deposited in the recorder's office for record, must be read in connection with section 1213, which requires the instrument to be "recorded as prescribed by law" before subsequent purchasers are charged with constructive notice of its contents; and hence no notice is imparted until the instrument is actually placed on record in the proper book, and then it relates back to the date of deposit for record.

5. The negligence of the recorder in recording a conveyance in the wrong book cannot affect third persons, but the injury must fall on the parties to the conveyance, since they are the "parties aggrieved," within the meaning of the county government act, (section 133,) making the recorder liable to the parties aggrieved in three times the amount of damages occasioned by his negligence.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county; Ansel Smith, Judge.

Action in the nature of a creditors' bill by C. G. Watkins against R. E. Wilhoit, B. F. Langford, and M. E. Bryant. From a judgment sustaining a demurrer to the complaint, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

John B. Hall, for appellant. F. T. Baldwin, P. S. Wilkes, and J. C. Campbell, for respondents.

VANCLIEF, C. This action is of the nature of a creditors' bill in equity to subject property in the hands or under the control of the defendants Wilhoit and Langford to the payment of a judgment at law against defendant Bryant in favor of the plaintiff. A demurrer to the complaint having been sustained, and plaintiff having declined to amend his complaint, judgment passed for defendants. The plaintiff has appealed from the judgment upon the judgment roll containing a bill of exceptions showing that the demurrer was sustained on the grounds "that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and that the action is barred by the statute of limitations."

[1] Rehearing granted.

The complaint shows that on June 2, 1890, the plaintiff recovered a judgment against Bryant for the sum of $2,342.60 on a promissory note made by the latter to the former on January 17, 1885, and that no part of the judgment has been paid. That before, and on February 16, 1886, said Bryant was indebted to others besides the plaintiff, and was then, and ever since has been, insolvent, though he was then the owner of considerable real and personal property in the county of San Joaquin, where he resided. That on said 16th day of February, 1886, he executed to defendants Wilhoit and Langford and one Charles Bamert a deed purporting to convey to them all his real and personal property, except such as was exempt from execution, in trust for the benefit of all his creditors, without preference to any, except as provided by law, "to sell and dispose of said real estate and personal property, and to collect the said book accounts and choses in action, using a reasonable discretion as to the times and modes of selling and disposing of said estate as it respects making sales for cash or on credit, at public auction or by private contract or sale, with the right to compound for the said book accounts and choses in action, taking a part for the whole where and when the trustees deem and decree it expedient so to do." Then, after applying the proceeds to the payment of his debts according to law, to pay the surplus, if any, to him, Bryant. This instrument, with an inventory of the property thereby assigned attached thereto and made a part thereof, and the written acceptance of the trust by Wilhoit and Bamert, are fully set out in the complaint. It is next alleged that said instrument has never been recorded in the office of county recorder of said county in any book of records therein of grants, deeds, or transfers of real estate, or in any book kept in said office for the recordation of conveyances or mortgages of either real or personal property, or otherwise or elsewhere recorded in said office, save and except that the instrument was, on the 16th day of February, 1886, transcribed into a book kept in said office, labeled "Book G, Miscellaneous." That within 30 days after the date of said instrument, pursuant to an order of a judge of the superior court, Wilhoit, Langford, and Bamert executed a bond, with sureties, for the faithful discharge of the trust, as required by section 3467 of the Civil Code, and thereupon took possession of all the property described in said instrument, claiming title thereto as assignees. "That said plaintiff at no time, either before or at the time of or since the execution of said instrument, assented to the execution thereof, or to any matter or thing therein contained, and has never assented to any act of said Wilhoit, Langford, and Bamert, or any or either of them, done or claimed to be done in the execution of the trust in said instrument mentioned." That at different times between February 16, 1886, and the commencement of this suit, said Wilhoit, Langford, and Bamert have sold and disposed of all said property, real and personal, and have received from the sales of said lands $4,000, from the sale of said personal property, $4,000, and from rents, issues, and profits of said real property a sum not less than $10,000; and that the said Wilhoit and Langford "now have in their hands or under their control the full sum of eighteen thousand dollars,—proceeds of the property of said Bryant, so as aforesaid coming into their hands, to which they assert no right or claim other than a right or claim under said pretended assignment of February, 1886;" said Bamert having died in January, 1891. That on January 29, 1892, plaintiff caused to be issued and placed in the hands of the sheriff an execution on his said judgment against Bryant upon which on March 29, 1892, the sheriff indorsed his return that he had "levied upon all moneys, goods, credits, effects, debts due or owing or any personal property of any kind belonging to M. E. Bryant, the judgment debtor named in the annexed writ, and in the custody or under the control of R. E. Wilhoit and B. F. Langford, or either of them;" and proceeds to state the acts constituting a garnishment as required by law, to which Wilhoit and Langford orally answered that they did not owe Bryant anything, but declined to make any written answer; and further returned that he had "made diligent search and inquiry, and had not been able to find any property of any kind in San Joaquin county belonging to M. E. Bryant out of which he could make the sums due on the annexed execution," and the same is returned unsatisfied. It is next alleged that Wilhoit, Langford, and Bamert have not, nor has either of them, accounted for or paid to any creditor of Bryant said funds in their hands, and have refused to deliver the same, or any part thereof, to the sheriff for the satisfaction of said execution, and claim that they rightfully hold the same for the uses and purposes of said pretended assignment. It is further alleged that said pretended assignment is, and ever has been, null and void as against the plaintiff, and that plaintiff has a lien on said money in the hands of Wilhoit and Langford for the payment of his said judgment. The prayer of the complaint is that it be adjudged that the instrument of February 16, 1886, is null and void as against the plaintiff; that plaintiff has acquired a valid lien upon the funds in the hands of Wilhoit and Langford for the payment of his judgment against Bryant; that they pay said judgment, with interest and costs, from said funds; and that plaintiff have such other and further relief as the court may deem equitable.

The foregoing is the substance of the complaint so far as pertinent to the issues of law raised by the demurrer. It should be observed that the assignment was made under title 3, pt. 2, of division 4 of the Civil Code, before the amendment thereof in March, 1889. The grounds of the demurrer are: (1) That the complaint does not state a cause of action; (2) that the action appears to be barred by section 338, and also by section 343, of the Code of Civil Procedure; and (3) that the complaint is uncertain, and also ambiguous in certain specified particulars. The theory of the complaint is that, as between the defendants and the plaintiff, the assignment of Bryant to the other defendants is void, and that plaintiff is entitled to pursue the $18,000 in their hands or under their control for the satisfaction of his judgment, as though that assignment had not been attempted. If, upon the facts alleged, this position can be sustained, I think the complaint states a cause of action not barred by the statute of limitations, with sufficient certainty, and without ambiguity.

1. It is claimed by appellant that the assignment is void for the reason that it was not recorded. Section 3458 of the Civil Code provides that an assignment for the benefit of creditors "must be in writing * * * and recorded as required by sections 3463 and 3464." Section 3459 provides: "Unless the provisions of the last section (3458) are complied with, an assignment for the benefit of creditors is void against every creditor of the assignor not assenting thereto." Sections 3463 and 3464 provide that the assignment "must be recorded" and the inventory "filed with the recorder," etc., in the county or counties as therein stated. Section 3465 provides: "An assignment for the benefit of creditors is void against creditors of the assignor, and against purchasers and incumbrancers in good faith and for value, unless it is recorded * * * pursuant to section 3463 within twenty days after the date of the assignment." Section 3466 requires that "where the assignment embraces real property, it is subject to the provisions of article 4 of the chapter on recording transfers as well as to those of this title." Article 4 of the chapter on recording transfers (sections 1213 and 1215) shows that assignments for benefit of creditors embracing real property must be recorded as conveyances of real property. Section 3473 enacts that "an assignment for the benefit of creditors, which has been executed and recorded so as to transfer the property to the assignee, cannot afterwards be canceled or modified by the parties thereto without the consent of every creditor affected thereby." In view of these provisions, I think the assignment was void as to plaintiff, who was a creditor at the time of the assignment, and did not assent thereto; and therefore that it interposes no obstacle to the relief sought by this action, which is to have Bryant's property, in the hands of Wilhoit and Langford, applied to the satisfaction of plaintiff's judgment against Bryant. The assignment being void "against the creditors of the assignor who did not assent thereto, and against purchasers and incumbrancers in good faith and for value," (section 3465,) no preliminary suit by the plaintiff against the parties to it, to set it aside, was necessary. As against the parties to the assignment, at least, nothing more than plaintiff's election to disregard it was necessary.

Yet it is contended by counsel for respondents that the assignment has so far operated upon and affected the plaintiff as to prevent him from pursuing Bryant's property in the hands or under the control of Wilhoit and Langford, otherwise than by suit in equity to set it aside, on the ground that it is merely voidable, and that he is not at liberty to disregard it as being void as against him, although the statute declares it to be so; that the word "void" is often used in the sense of "voidable merely," and must have been used in that sense in the sections of the Civil Code above quoted, for the reason that an assignment for the benefit of creditors is valid as between the parties to it, though not recorded. The theory which seems to have led counsel for respondents to this conclusion is that an instrument or contract cannot, at the same time, be valid as between the parties to it and void as against third persons whose rights it purports or was intended to affect; and that it must have the intended effect upon such third persons, until they avoid it by procuring a decree of a court of equity setting the instrument aside so far as it affects them. Yet upon this theory the instrument would still be valid as between the parties to it, after having been nullified as to third persons, and would have its intended effect upon the parties, and also upon the subject-matter not taken to satisfy the decree in favor of third persons; and therefore would at the same time be valid between the parties, and void as to third persons whom it was intended to affect. It follows that the theory propounded is not sound, and that a contract may, at the same time, be binding upon one or all of the parties to it, and wholly void as others whom it was intended to bind or affect; and surely the legislature has the power to make it so. While it is true that the word "void" has been inappropriately used by lawyers and judges, it nevertheless has a determinate meaning in law when applied, as an adjective, to contracts, statutes, and other acts intended to effect some purpose or purposes; which meaning is that such contracts, statutes, or acts are totally ineffectual for the purposes, or for a part of the purposes, intended. If totally ineffectual for any purpose intended, they are simply void. If totally ineffectual as to only a part of such purposes, they are only relatively void. This distinction is not identical with that between void and voidable, since a voidable act or contract takes effect as intended, and continues to be effectual to all intents and purposes until it is set aside or nullified as to all or some part of the persons or things which were before affected by it. For example: The contracts of infants and contracts procured by fraud, if not otherwise against law or the policy of law, are not void, but only voidable, because they take effect when made, and remain effectual until avoided; whereas void acts, though in the form of contracts or statutes, never take any effect as such; and acts which are only relatively void are denied any effect, even temporary, against a part or class of the persons or things that they purport or were intended to bind or affect. As bearing directly and indirectly upon these distinctions, see Whart. Cont. § 28, and notes; and Pearsoll v. Chapin, 44 Pa. St. 13. Therefore, when the legislature has declared an act or instrument void, or relatively void, it must be understood to have used the word "void" in its primary and ordinary sense as above defined, unless it be made apparent by the context, or by some other statute in pari materia, that it was used in a different sense. But, as applied to assignments for the benefit of creditors in the Civil Code, I perceive nothing in the context, and find nothing in either of the Codes, indicating that the word was used by the legislature in any other than its ordinary sense.

But conceding, for the sake of argument merely, that the assignment in question is only voidable, and that the object of this action is to set it aside, as contended by respondents' counsel, still the action is not barred by either of the sections of the statute pleaded, unless the cause of action accrued more than three years before the commencement of the action. It is properly conceded that the action is a creditors' bill in equity to enforce the application of Bryant's property in the hands of and claimed by Wilhoit and Langford to the satisfaction of plaintiff's judgment against Bryant. That such an action is allowable in this state, notwithstanding the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure for proceedings supplementary to execution, there never has been any question since the decision in the case of Swift v. Arents, 4 Cal. 390. And see Swinford v. Rogers, 23 Cal. 234; Reed v. Goldstein, 53 Cal. 296; Harmon v. Page, 62 Cal. 448. But it is essential to the cause of such an action that the plaintiff should have exhausted his remedy at law, otherwise a court of equity has no jurisdiction of the creditor's bill, (3 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1415;) and the fact that an execution has been returned nulla bona is conclusive that the legal remedy has been exhausted, (Baines v. Babcock, 95 Cal. 591, 27 Pac. 674, and 30 Pac. 776; Taylor v. Bowker, 111 U. S. 110, 4 Sup. Ct. 397.) In the last-cited case the court, by Mr. Justice Harlan, said: "We are of opinon that the complainant's cause of action should not be deemed to have accrued until the return of the execution." Page 117, 111 U. S., and page 400, 4 Sup. Ct. Plaintiff obtained judgment against Bryant June 2, 1890, on which execution was issued January 29, 1892, and returned nulla bona March 29, 1892. This action was commenced May 7, 1892, less than two months after the return of the execution, and less than two years after the rendition of the judgment. Since the judgment was a necessary condition precedent to the creditor's bill, it follows that the action was not barred by any statute of limitation.

It is further claimed by respondents that the depositing of the assignment with the recorder on the day of its date was a recordation thereof as required by law, though it has never been transcribed in any book of records in which the law requires deeds, grants, or transfers of real estate to be recorded, and only in a book in which miscellaneous instruments are recorded in supposed accordance with the twelfth subdivision of section 124 of the county government act, which book, however, is not expressly authorized, and for it no index is required to be kept. In support of this point, section 1170 of the Civil Code is cited, and solely relied upon, which reads as follows: "An instrument is deemed to be recorded when, being duly acknowledged or proved and certified, it is deposited in the recorder's office with the proper officer for record." Literally interpreted, without regard to other provisions of the Codes in pari materia, and without considering the various objects of recording different instruments, or the differing legal consequences of failing to record, this section would seem to make the depositing of any instrument with the recorder equivalent in effect to the actual recording of it in the appropriate book, though it should never be so recorded; and without such an interpretation it will not answer the purpose for which it is cited by respondent. Yet no case has been cited, and I have been able to find none, in which it has been held that the transcribing of an instrument in a different book from that in which the law requires it to be recorded effects the object of the law, or answers any lawful purpose; but there are many cases to the contrary. In the first place, it is to be observed that section 1170 does not state the effect of recording, nor of a failure to record, any kind of an instrument; such effect generally being declared in each distinct provision of the statute requiring a specific class of instruments to be recorded; but the effect is not uniform in all the classes. For instance, sections 1213 and 1214, Civ. Code, declare the effect of recording, and also of a failure to record, conveyances of real property, but the effect of a failure to record such conveyances is not commensurate with that of a failure to record an assignment of real property for the benefit of creditors; since the latter, without being recorded, is void, not only against subsequent purchasers and mortgagees without notice and for value, but also against nonconsenting creditors of the assignor, without regard to actual notice. Section 1213 declares that the effect of recording a conveyance of real property is as follows: "Every conveyance of real property, acknowledged or proved, and certified and recorded as prescribed by law, from the time it is filed with the recorder for record, is constructive notice of the contents thereof to subsequent purchasers and mortgagees." By this section no effect is given to the mere filing of the deed for record until it is actually "recorded as prescribed by law," when the actual record is made to relate back to the date of filing with the recorder; and, since section 1213 is the only provision declaring the effect of recording a conveyance of real property, it cannot be said to be inconsistent with section 1170, which says nothing about the effect, but should be read as an addition to and qualification of section 1170; and a fair construction of the two sections, thus read, is that a conveyance is deemed to have been recorded when filed for record only by relation from the time when it was actually recorded. A statute of Missouri provided that every instrument "certified and recorded in the manner prescribed shall, from the time of filing the same with the recorder, impart notice," etc., and it was held under this statute that no notice was imparted until the instrument was actually placed on record, and then it related back to the date of filing for record; and that the statute must be so understood. Terrell v. Andrew Co., 44 Mo. 309. Mr. Webb, commenting on this case, says: "The greater weight of reason, if not of authority, seems to be in favor of this view of the law." Webb, Record Titles, §§ 16–18, and cases there cited. In Sawyer v. Adams, 8 Vt. 175, it was said: "There is but little doubt that 'recording' means the copying of the instrument to be recorded into the public records of the town, in a book kept for that purpose, by or under the superintendence of the officer appointed therefor. This recording may and does take effect from the time the deed or instrument is delivered to the officer, if it is in due time placed upon the records. The delivery of the deed to the town clerk, or his minute on the same that he has received the same for record, is not recording; but the record, if completed, is considered as taking effect from that time." In that case the deed was recorded in an improper book, and the court further said: "The act of the town clerk was as wholly inoperative as if he had written this deed on a slate, or copied it into his family record." See, also, 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. §§ 653, 654; Flanagin v. Wetherill, 5 Whart. 280; Reigart's Appeal, 4 Pa. St. 477; Watson v. Bagaley, 12 Pa. St. 164; Wallace v. Wainwright, 87 Pa. St. 264; Rennie v. Bean, 24 Hun, 123; Dewey v. Littlejohn, 2 Ired. Eq. 495.

The precise point under consideration as to the effect of depositing an instrument for record seems not to have been directly decided in this state; but in Lawton v. Gordon, 37 Cal. 202, it was expressly assumed that the withdrawal of a deed from the recorder's office after filing suspends the effect of recording (constructive notice) during the time it is withdrawn, although it is afterwards returned and copied into the appropriate book without being refiled. Section 130 of the county government act requires the recorder to indorse upon an instrument the date of its reception, to record the same without delay in the order in which it was received, "and must note at the foot of the record the exact time of its reception." In Donald v. Beals, 57 Cal. 399, the facts were that a mortgage to plaintiff was deposited for record on April 15th, and properly indorsed as received for record on that day, but when he recorded it the recorder noted at the foot of the record that it was received for record on April 18th. Held, that the latter date, though inconsistent with the filing, and proved to be erroneous, must prevail over the true date indorsed on the mortgage. This decision, though indubitably correct, is inconsistent with the literal interpretation of section 1170, Civ. Code, contended for by respondents, since it shows that an instrument cannot be deemed to be recorded when deposited with the recorder until it is properly recorded "as prescribed by law." In other words, sections 1170 and 1213, Civ. Code, must be read and construed together. So, in Chamberlain v. Bell, 7 Cal. 293, a prior defective record of a prior deed was held to have imparted no notice to a subsequent purchaser. The defect in the record was the omission of the numbers by which the lots conveyed were described by mistake of the recorder. In the opinion the court cite as authorities, Frost v. Beekman, 1 Johns. Ch. 288, and Sanger v. Craigue, 10 Vt. 555. In Meherin v. Oaks, 67 Cal. 57, 7 Pac. 47, cited by respondents, the instrument defectively recorded was a personal mortgage, of which it was said the defendant had actual notice, and the decision cannot properly be supported on any other ground than such actual notice; but, since actual notice to a nonconsenting creditor of an assignment for the benefit of creditors is immaterial, that case is not in point.

It is suggested that the defendants should not suffer for the negligence of the recorder without their fault. The recorder is "liable to the party aggrieved for three times the amount of the damages which may be occasioned thereby," (County Government Act, § 133,) and the question is, which is the aggrieved party, whose sole remedy is by action against the recorder? Upon this question the cases are divided, but I think the weight of authority, including California cases, is opposed to the view of respondents, (Webb, Record Titles, § 18, and notes,) though Mr. Devlin, in his work on Deeds, (sections 683–696,) expresses a contrary opinion. Whether the party who deposits a deed for record is the aggrieved party whose remedy is against the recorder in case it is not properly recorded depends upon a solution of the question above considered and answered. If the mere deposit of his deed with the recorder by the grantee or assignee is to be deemed a recording, and to have the full legal effect of a record, though not afterwards actually recorded as required by law, then such grantee or assignee is not aggrieved by the negligence or fraud of the recorder; otherwise he is. As against subsequent purchasers and mortgagees, and as to nonconsenting creditors in cases of assignment for benefit of creditors, it is the duty of the grantee, not only to deposit his deed with the recorder, but to see that it is actually recorded in the proper book, as prescribed by law; and, if not so recorded, it has no effect whatever upon creditors of the assignor, nor upon subsequent purchasers or mortgagees in good faith, (Civ. Code, § 3465;) and, therefore, the non-consenting creditors are not aggrieved by the failure to record. As against them, an unrecorded grant or assignment for the benefit of creditors is void, and raises no equities even though they had actual notice of it. Dewey v. Littlejohn, 2 Ired. Eq. 495. And this is admitted by Mr. Devlin, as I understand him, to be a legitimate deduction from the authorities which hold that constructive notice of an instrument does not date from its deposit for record, unless afterwards duly recorded. Sections 683, 684. I think the judgment should be reversed, and the court below directed to overrule the demurrer.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; SEARLS, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is reversed, and the lower court is directed to overrule the demurrer.

DUFFY v. WILHOIT. (No. 18,170.)[1] LITTLEHAL v. SAME. (No. 18,168.)[1] TULLY v. SAME. (No. 18,169.)[1]

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 26, 1894.)

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county; Ansel Smith, Judge.

Three separate actions in the nature of creditors' bills by Duffy, Littlehal, and Tully against R. E. Wilhoit, B. F. Langford, and M. E. Bryant. From judgments sustaining demurrers to the complaint, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

John B. Hall, for appellants. F. T. Baldwin, P. S. Wilkes, and J. C. Campbell, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. Upon the authority of Watkins v. Wilhoit, (No. 18,167; this day decided,) 35 Pac. 646, the judgments herein are reversed, and the court below is directed to overrule the demurrers.

(101 Cal. 216)

SAN DIEGO WATER CO. v. PACIFIC COAST STEAMSHIP CO. et al. (No. 19,200.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 31, 1894.)

PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION—ACTION ON BOND—RECOVERY OF ATTORNEY'S FEES.

Where defendant recovered final judgment in an injunction suit, and thus dissolved a preliminary injunction which plaintiff had obtained by giving bond, defendant could not recover his attorney's fees in an action on the bond, since they were incurred in the suit, and not in an attempt to dissolve the preliminary injunction.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; W. L. Pierce, Judge.

Action by the San Diego Water Company against the Pacific Coast Steamship Company, principal, and A. R. Schulenberg and C. T. Chadwick, sureties, on a preliminary injunction bond. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Works & Works, for appellant. Luce & McDonald, for respondents.

TEMPLE, C. This is an action upon an undertaking alleged to have been given in consideration of an injunction, in an action by the steamship company against the plaintiff, and upon which the individual defendants were sureties. It is denied that any injunction was ever issued in the suit alluded to, and the finding of the court sustains the denial. It appears, however, in the statement that an action was brought to obtain an injunction, and that, before the complaint was filed, the plaintiff obtained an order to show cause why an injunction pendente lite should not be issued. This order contained no restraining clause, but did require the plaintiff to give a bond to the defendant in the sum of $500. In pursuance of this order, the undertaking sued on was given, and recites that the plaintiff is about to commence an action, and to apply for an injunction, "as in the complaint filed in the said action is more particularly set forth and described." The order was made November 10th, and the undertaking approved on the same day. The next day another order to show cause was made, returnable at the same time that the first order was made returnable. This order contained a clause restraining the defendant "pending this order to show cause, and until the further order of this court." There was no appearance by either party at the time the order to show cause was returnable, nor was the motion for an injunction continued or kept alive in any mode. The restraining order, therefore, which is only authorized to be made pending the motion, fell with the motion. Code Civ. Proc. § 530; Hicks v. Michael, 15 Cal. 107. In the last case Judge Field says that an order dissolving such a restraining order is not necessary. It ends naturally with the motion. To that effect, also, is the reasoning in Webber v. Wilcox, 45 Cal. 302, and Lambert v. Haskell, 80 Cal. 611, 22 Pac. 327, although this precise question was not involved in these cases. If the phrase, "and until the further order of this court," could have the effect to prolong the restraining order beyond the pendency of the motion for an injunction, then it would convert the order into a preliminary injunction, which could not be operative until a bond was given. But this order required no bond, and, by making the order to show cause, the court adjudged that a preliminary injunction should not be made until the defendant had been heard. The restraining order is a restraint, of the same nature as an injunction, but the statute not only does not designate it as an injunction, but discriminates between it and an injunction. It is a restraint, pending the conclusion of the court as to whether the party is entitled to a preliminary injunction. The statute does not expressly require an undertaking as a condition for a restraining order, although this court has said one ought to be required. Such undertaking is expressly required as a condition for a preliminary injunction, which does not become operative until the bond is given. But, in this case, there is no specific denial of the allegation in the complaint that the undertaking was given to secure the issuance of the injunction. It may be doubted, therefore, whether the questions above suggested can be raised. I proceed, therefore, to the main question discussed by counsel, which is whether, conceding that a preliminary injunction was issued, and the undertaking sued on was given in consideration of the injunction, plaintiff can recover his attorney's fees. It is admitted that no effort was ever made to dissolve the injunction, except that the case was tried on its merits, and the court, having found against the right of the plaintiff in the injunction suit, dissolved the preliminary injunction. Counsel were simply employed to try the case, and were paid for that service, and for no other. The cost was no greater than it would have been had no preliminary injunction been issued.

---

[1] Rehearing granted.

Appellant's counsel concedes that, ordinarily, such damages cannot be recovered under such circumstances, but he contends that the rule is different where, as here, injunction is the only relief sought in the action, and where it appears that the same questions would arise on a motion to dissolve which are determined by the final judgment. He cites many very respectable authorities, which seem to sustain his contention, and it is, furthermore, indorsed by High, in his work on Injunctions, § 1686. High seems to think the weight of the authorities is to the effect that, if the counsel fees were necessarily incurred in procuring the removal of the illegal restraint, they may be recovered, although the dissolution of the injunction was by the final judgment. In Buford v. Packet Co., 3 Mo. App. 159, it is said: "The principle upon which counsel fees are allowed, upon dissolution of an injunction, does not rest upon a supposed increase of the trial expenses, created by the injunction. It is based upon the fact that defendant has been compelled to employ aid in getting rid of an unjust restriction, forced upon him by the act of the plaintiff." If the sureties could be held responsible, without reference to the terms of their contract, for a conspiracy to aid the plaintiff in the imposition of an illegal restraint upon the defendant, there would be some show of reason in such a rule, but, if the sureties are to be held only on their contract, the admission that the expenditures were not caused by the injunction is fatal to the argument. The sureties did not agree to pay the expense of getting rid of the restraint. Ordinarily, such expense would be caused by the injunction; but it is not always so, and is not when a preliminary injunction is ended by a final judgment for defendant. Here the expenditure was caused by the suit, and not by the injunction. The sureties are liable for expenditures caused by the injunction, and not for those caused by the suit. This whole matter was elaborately discussed in Thurston v. Haskell, 81 Me. 303, 17 Atl. 73, which was a case in all respects like the present. It was there held that counsel fees could not be recovered in such a case. But it is not true that, in any sense, the counsel fees were expended to get rid of the restraint imposed by the preliminary injunction. The fee was, of course, paid to prevent the permanent injunction. But, in such case, the defendant has not been relieved of the restraint imposed by the preliminary injunction. It was a restraint, in terms, during the pendency of the suit only. It continued unchanged during the whole of that period. Its purpose was to hold the defendant until the rights of the plaintiff could be determined. It did so, and then ceased by original limitation. The attorneys were not employed to get rid of it, and never attempted to do so. The defendant acquiesced, and submitted to all the restraint it assumed to impose. It is true we sometimes speak of making the preliminary injunction perpetual. But while the injunction, by the judgment, may be the same in scope and effect, it is a restraint imposed by a new and distinct command. It is a new injunction, which may be, and often is, different in its effect and terms. This was determined in Lambert v. Haskell, 80 Cal. 611, 22 Pac. 327. But I think the question was practically decided by this court in Mitchell v. Hawley, 79 Cal. 301, 21 Pac. 833. Counsel distinguishes that case from the one in hand, on the ground that there injunction was not the sole relief sought. If the foregoing reasoning be correct, that is not a circumstance of any importance. But that case was upon a bond, given in an action brought to enjoin the defendant from violating an alleged patent right, claimed by the plaintiff, and to recover damage for infringing the right. The issue was as to the validity of the claim. Upon that depended the right to the injunction, and to the damage. Nothing else was tried. The claim having been adjudged invalid, the bill was dismissed, and the injunction fell with the claim. The issue would have been the same on a motion to dissolve. This court refused to allow counsel fees, and remarked that the allowance of counsel fees on injunction bonds is exceptional, "and should not be carried beyond the point to which former decisions have taken it." Former decisions have carried the doctrine to the extent that reasonable counsel fees, paid for the sole purpose of procuring a dissolution of an injunction, may be recovered. Unless this rule is to be extended, the contention of appellant on this point cannot be sustained. If this petition be correct, it is not necessary to consider other points raised. I recommend that the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C.; VANCLIEF, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

101 Cal. 224

GODFREY v. MONROE et al. (No. 19,217.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 6, 1894.)

ATTACHMENT—MORTGAGED PROPERTY.

E. conveyed land to H., in trust to sell, and from the proceeds pay E.'s debt to L. Thereafter H. conveyed it to L. by deed absolute, an agreement between E., H., and L. being executed at the same time, reciting that the property was conveyed to secure payment of an indebtedness of E. to L., and providing that, when it was paid by a sale of the land, L. should deed to E. the balance of the land. While the title was in this condition, the land was attached in an action against E. Before judgment was recovered in the action, E. deeded the land to plaintiff and L. quitclaimed it to E. Held, that title under execution sale in the attachment suit related back to the time of the attachment, E.'s interest as mortgagor being subject to attachment.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; W. H. Clark, Judge.

Action by Godfrey against Monroe and others. Judgment for defendants. Plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

P. W. Dooner and E. H. Bentley, for appellant. Wells, Monroe & Lee, for respondents.

PATERSON, J. Action to quiet title. In September, 1886, Ellis, the owner of the land in controversy, by deed of trust conveyed the land to Edward A. Hall, authorizing the latter to sell the property in said deed described, and out of the proceeds pay the indebtedness due from Ellis to the Los Angeles Improvement Company. On December 30, 1886, Hall executed and delivered to said improvement company a deed, grant, bargain, and sale in form, but, as a part of the same transaction, an agreement was entered into between Ellis, party of the first part, Hall, party of the second part, and the Los Angeles Improvement Company, party of the third part, the terms of which state that the party of the first part, by and with the consent of his trustee, to secure payment of an indebtedness amounting to the sum of $11,865.55, evidenced by notes and orders, had caused to be conveyed to the third party the property described in the deed of trust of September 24, 1886. It was provided therein that as soon as said improvement company "shall have received their pay in full, as above stated, and shall be fully reimbursed for such payments as the said J. W. Ellis shall cause them to expend under his orders during the continuance of this contract, which sums shall be payable out of the receipts of the sale of said lands, then the Los Angeles Improvement Company shall deed to said J. W. Ellis the balance of the property remaining unsold." On April 25, 1887, the defendant J. P. Monroe, in an action against Ellis, caused an attachment to be levied upon the property in controversy. On September 29, 1887, Ellis conveyed the land to the plaintiff's grantor, and, on the day following, the Los Angeles Improvement Company executed and delivered to Ellis a quitclaim deed of the property. On October 12, 1887, the defendant Monroe recovered judgment against Ellis in the attachment suit, and a sale of the property upon execution followed in February, 1888.

It is claimed by appellant that the sale under the judgment recovered by the defendant against Ellis did not relate back to the time of the attachment, because, at the time said attachment was levied, the legal and equitable title of the property was in a trustee of Ellis; that an attachment can operate only upon the interest of a defendant at the time the attachment is levied, and not upon any interest he subsequently acquires in the property affected by it. Inasmuch, as under our Codes, any interest, legal or equitable, which a defendant has in lands is subject to attachment, (sections 688, 542, Code Civ. Proc.,) and notwithstanding the fact that every express trust in real property vests the whole estate in the trustees, subject only to the execution of the trust, the author thereof may prescribe to whom the real property to which the trust relates shall belong in the event of the failure or termination of the trust, and may transfer or devise such property, subject to the execution of the trust, it would seem that the contention of the appellant is unsound; but we do not deem it necessary to consider the question discussed in the briefs, as to whether, after the execution and delivery of a deed of trust, the grantor retains any attachable interest. The deed from Hall to the Los Angeles Improvement Company and the agreement accompanying the same, constituted a mortgage with a power of sale; the transaction was consummated by a deed with a separate defeasance, authorizing the improvement company to sell so much of the land as might be necessary to pay the amount of the loan, interest, and charges, and to reconvey to Ellis the property remaining unsold. This form of security is no longer looked upon with disfavor, and our statutes expressly authorize mortgages conferring the power of sale upon the mortgagee or other person. Civ. Code, § 2932. The power given is merely a cumulative remedy, and does not in any way affect the right to foreclosure in chancery. Cormerais v. Genella, 22 Cal. 116. If there be any doubt as to whether an instrument was intended as a mortgage or a deed of trust, such doubt should be resolved in favor of a mortgage with the power of sale. The intervention of a trustee is not always, but is generally, a serious inconvenience and expense. "The mortgagor is apt to suppose that in placing the exercise of the power in the hands of a disinterested third party, whose position in relation to it is merely that of a trustee, he secures for himself the protection of fair dealing. It generally happens, however, that the debtor has to pay for the services of a trustee whose disinterestedness is no more than that of the creditor himself. * * * This form of security has come into very general use in several states, and in Virginia and West Virginia, in particular, has come into universal use in securing debts upon real estate." 2 Jones, Mortg. §§ 1725, 1764, 1769, 1770. The defendant's title under the sheriff's deed, we conclude, relates back to the time of the levy of the attachment.

We see no merit in the claim that the property attached on the 25th of April is not the same property that was conveyed to plaintiff on the 29th of September. The only variance between the descriptions in the attachment proceedings and in the deed is in the evidence as to the number or name of the block. The lots should have been described in the attachment proceedings as being in block D, instead of block 9; but upon reference to the map of Ellis' subdivision, which map was referred to in the conveyances, it appeared to the court that nobody could have been misled. All the lots referred to in the sheriff's description are on the map. There is no block on the map which is known as "Block 9." There are but two blocks on the map, namely, block T and block D. All the lots on the map in block T were levied on by the sheriff, and his return shows it. All that was left of the property, outside of block T, on the map, was in block D. All of the lots in controversy fronted on Belmont avenue. The court did not err, therefore, in holding that the description in the return was sufficient to notify a purchaser of the lots, and to enable the sheriff to identify the same. Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: HARRISON, J.; GAROUTTE, J.

GOULD v. MONROE et al. (No. 19,218.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 6, 1894.)

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; W. H. Clark, Judge.

Action by Gould against Monroe and others. Judgment for defendants. Plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

P. W. Dooner and E. H. Bentley, for appellant. Wells, Monroe & Lee, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. On the authority of Godfrey v. Monroe, (this day filed,) 35 Pac. 761, the judgment and order are affirmed.

---

4 Cal. Unrep. 465

RASKIN v. ROBARTS et al. (No. 19,263.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 31, 1894.)

EXECUTORS—ACCOUNTING—APPEAL—REVIEW OF FINDINGS.

1. An appeal from a decree, not taken within a year from its entry, will be dismissed.

2. Where an executor stated in his petition for the probate of the will that a part of the estate consisted of a sum of money in his hands, and he died without rendering an account, a finding that such sum came into his hands while acting as executor is justified.

3. Where there is no specification in the statement on motion for a new trial that a finding of fact is not justified by the evidence, and counsel do not make that point, the question whether it is justified cannot be considered on appeal from an order denying a new trial.

4. The question whether a conclusion of law is supported by the findings of facts cannot be considered on appeal from an order denying a new trial.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; Walter Van Dyke, Judge.

Action by Charles Raskin, administrator with the will annexed of Jean Leonis, deceased, against John Robarts and another, executors of Miguel Leonis, deceased. From an interlocutory decree for plaintiff, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendants appeal. Appeal from decree dismissed. Affirmed on appeal from order denying new trial.

S. M. White, Brosseau & Thomas, and John Robarts, for appellants. Reymert & Orfila and Wells, Munroe & Lee, for respondent.

VANCLIEF, C. Jean Leonis, plaintiff's testator, died March 6, 1888, leaving his last will, by which he gave and bequeathed to his brother, Miguel Leonis, (defendant's testator,) all and singular, his property, "real, personal, and mixed, of whatsoever nature, and wheresoever the same may be, of which I may be the owner, or of which I may be possessed, or of which I may be entitled to perfect the title thereto, at my death," and nominated said Miguel as the executor of said will, to act as such without bond. On April 16, 1888, the will was admitted to probate in the superior court of Los Angeles county, and said Miguel duly appointed executor thereof, and thereupon Miguel qualified as executor, and continued to act as such until September 20, 1889, when he died testate; and the defendants were appointed executors of his will on October 11, 1889, and on October 24, 1889, first published notice to the creditors of the estate of Miguel, and the term of 10 months within which claims against the estate should have been presented expired on August 24, 1890. On September 3, 1890, the plaintiff, Charles Raskin, was appointed administrator with the will annexed of the estate of Jean Leonis, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Miguel Leonis, which vacancy had continued from the death of Miguel (September 20, 1889) until September 3, 1890. On September 23, 1890, the plaintiff presented to the executors of Miguel's estate the claim upon which this action is based, which is as follows:

"March 19, 1888. Estate of Miguel Leonis, deceased, to Charles Raskin, Adm'r of the estate of Jean Leonis, deceased, debtor:

To recover the sum of two thousand dollars, United States gold coin, with interest, from March 19, 1888, to date, at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum......................	$2,350 00
Fifty head of cattle..............	1,000 00
	$3,350 00

"Said property having been intrusted to Miguel Leonis, deceased, by his brother, Jean Leonis, in his lifetime, and being part and parcel of the estate of Miguel Leonis, deceased."

This claim was rejected by the executors of Miguel on the day of its presentation, and thereafter this action was commenced.

The substance of the complaint, in addition to the facts above stated, is that the money and cattle described in the above claim came to the possession of Miguel Leonis, as executor of Jean Leonis, while he was acting as such, it being then the property of the estate of said Jean Leonis, and that he continued to hold the same in his possession, as such executor, in trust for the benefit of the estate of Jean Leonis, until his (Miguel's) death, and that neither Miguel nor his executors have accounted for or delivered said money and property, or any part thereof, to plaintiff, or to the probate court. The prayer of the complaint is that defendants be required to render an account of said money and cattle, and all other property of the estate of Jean Leonis which came into the possession of their testator, Miguel Leonis, and that plaintiff have judgment against them for the recovery of all such money and property as, upon such accounting, may be found to belong to the estate of Jean Leonis, deceased. The defendants, by their answer, deny all allegations of the complaint relating to the property of the estate of Jean Leonis, and, as a further and separate defense, aver that plaintiff's alleged cause of action is barred by section 1493 of the Code of Civil Procedure. On August 27, 1891, the cause was brought to trial, and the respective parties introduced evidence touching the issues; and the court made written findings in favor of plaintiff, upon which it based the following interlocutory decree: "Wherefore, by reason of the law and the finding aforesaid, it is ordered and adjudged that the said defendants, John Robarts and George L. Mesnager, executors of the last will and testament of Miguel Leonis, deceased, do, within twenty (20) days after the filing of this decree, render to this court in this action a full, just, and true account of the property received by the said Miguel Leonis in his lifetime, as executor of the estate of Jean Leonis, deceased, and particularly of the sum of two thousand dollars, ($2,000,) with interest thereon from the 19th day of March, 1888, at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum, received by the said Miguel Leonis as such executor of the estate of Jean Leonis, deceased, and that said defendants do, in said account, justly, fully, and truly account for all the dealings of the said Miguel Leonis, deceased, with the estate and property of the said Jean Leonis, deceased, including such items as may be claimed by the said defendants to have been paid out by the said Miguel Leonis, as such executor aforesaid, as expenses of administration, and for claims allowed and proven by creditors against the estate of the said Jean Leonis, deceased. It is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that, when said account is filed as herein ordered and adjudged, that a day shall thereupon be set in this court for the hearing of the same, and that thereupon the said defendants shall fully, justly, and truly account to the said plaintiff for all of said property and matters aforesaid, and a settlement of said account be then had in this court, and that thereupon and thereafter a final decree shall be entered herein." The defendants have appealed from this interlocutory decree, and also from an order denying their motion for a new trial.

The appeal from the interlocutory decree should be dismissed; for, conceding that the decree was appealable, (which is, at least, questionable,) the appeal was not taken within a year after entry of the decree.

The appeal from the order denying a new trial was taken in time, but the only point made by appellants on this appeal is that the evidence is insufficient to justify that part of the sixth finding, "that there came to the possession of the said Miguel Leonis, as such executor aforesaid, and while he was acting as such," $2,000 in money, "bearing interest," which was then and there "the property of the estate of said Jean Leonis," and that said Miguel never rendered any account thereof to the probate court. But, waiving the question whether a motion for new trial was proper before final judgment, which has not been raised, (Harris v. Railroad Co., 41 Cal. 394,) I think this finding is justified by the evidence. In his petition for probate of the will, Miguel stated that a part of the estate left by Jean was $2,000, at interest, "in the hands of Miguel Leonis," and it appears that Miguel died without having rendered any account to the probate court.

The court found, as a conclusion of law, that the action "is not barred by the provisions of section 1493 of the Code of Civil Procedure." Conceding this to be a sufficient finding of the fact or facts constituting the alleged bar, notwithstanding it purports to be a conclusion of law, yet there is no specification in the statement on motion for new trial that it is not justified by the evidence, nor do counsel for appellant make the point that it is not sustained by the evidence. Therefore, the question whether it is justified as a finding of fact cannot be considered. Nor can the question whether it is supported, as a conclusion of law, by the findings of fact, be considered on the appeal from the order. Jenkins v. Frink, 30 Cal. 595; Mason v. Austin, 46 Cal. 386; Thompson v. Patterson, 54 Cal. 542; Roberts v. Eldred, 73 Cal. 398, 15 Pac. 16. And it has been held, even, that the error of rendering a judgment on an insufficient complaint cannot be corrected on appeal from an order denying a new trial. Heilbron v. Ditch Co., 76 Cal. 8, 17 Pac. 932; Shepard v. McNeil, 38 Cal. 74. I think the appeal from the interlocutory order should be dismissed, and that the order denying a new trial should be affirmed.

We concur: SEARLS, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, it is ordered that the appeal from the interlocutory order be dismissed, and the order denying a new trial be affirmed.

---

4 Cal. Unrep. 469

SMITH v. ELLIS et al. (No. 19,294.)[1]

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 6, 1894.)

FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES—CONTRADICTORY EVIDENCE—APPEAL.

The mere fact that the parties to a conveyance contradict each other in some particulars, will not warrant a reversal of the trial court's finding that the conveyance was not fraudulent.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Orange county; J. W. Towner, Judge.

Action by W. A. Smith against M. E. Ellis and J. N. Ellis, Sr., to subject certain land to the payment of judgments. Judgment for defendants. Plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

[1] Reversed in banc. See 37 Pac. 400, 103 Cal. 294.

J. T. Houx, for appellant. J. W. Ballard, for respondents.

SEARLS, C. This is an action on the part of a judgment creditor of J. N. Ellis, Sr., to set aside as fraudulent a deed of conveyance of certain land in the county of Orange, executed by said J. N. Ellis, Sr., May 22, 1890, to his daughter M. E. Ellis, and to satisfy plaintiff's judgments out of said land. The defendants had judgment, from which, and from an order denying a new trial, as well as from an order denying a motion of plaintiff to amend his statement on motion for a new trial by inserting therein specifications as to insufficiency of evidence, etc., plaintiff appeals. For the purpose of disposing of the appeal, I shall assume the motion to amend the specifications of the insufficiency of the evidence as having been in fact allowed by the court. The testimony in the case was mainly that of the two defendants, father and daughter, and the two brothers of the latter, and the only question of any importance is, was it sufficient to support the findings? This question can be answered in this wise: If true, it was amply sufficient. There is sufficient contradiction in the testimony of the two defendants to awaken some suspicion as to their truthfulness in my mind. These contradictions may, however, arise largely from ignorance on the part of the witnesses, from a failure to comprehend questions, from forgetfulness, etc., and a judgment formed from an examination of the record cannot, in the very nature of things, be as satisfactory as one based upon a hearing of the witnesses in open court with ample opportunity to not only hear what they say, but to observe their manner, intelligence, apparent honesty, etc. With all these superior opportunities the court below evidently placed faith in their integrity, and by its findings negatived all the charges of fraud. The findings are amply sufficient to support the judgment. I recommend that the judgment and orders appealed from be affirmed.

We concur: VANCLIEF, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and orders appealed from are affirmed.

101 Cal. 250

CALIFORNIA LOAN & TRUST CO. v. HAMMELL. (No. 19,280.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 6, 1894.)

MORTGAGES—PAYMENT—ASSIGNMENT.

When an agent holding for collection a note and mortgage to be delivered up when paid, with a release signed by his principal, assumes instead, on receiving payment, to assign them without recourse, no title in the mortgage passes to one with notice, who has agreed with the mortgagor to pay the debt, and taken other security for it.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; J. W. McKinley, Judge.

Action by California Loan & Trust Company against James Hammell to foreclose a mortgage. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. Reversed.

Guthrie & Guthrie, for appellant. Walter Bordwell, for respondent.

FITZGERALD, J. Action to foreclose a mortgage. Plaintiff had judgment, and defendant appeals. It appears that Cockens, who assumed to act as the agent of Robbins, the owner and holder of the note secured by the mortgage sought to be foreclosed in this action, in making the assignment thereof to plaintiff had no authority whatever to do so. The evidence shows that the note in question was delivered to him by Robbins for collection only, with directions that the mortgage, the release of which he had previously signed and acknowledged, should be delivered upon the payment of the note; that the note was thereafter presented by Cockens, after maturity, for payment, at the request of the maker, to one Avery, who thereupon paid the same for and at the request of plaintiff, in pursuance of an understanding to that effect between all parties. Cockens, however, instead of delivering the note and mortgage upon payment to him of the amount due thereon, as he had been directed by Robbins to do, and which was the limit of his authority, executed, as the pretended agent of Robbins, at the request of Avery, an assignment of the note without recourse to plaintiff. It further appears that Avery stated to Cockens at the time of the making of the assignment that they preferred taking an assignment of the note to paying it off and discharging the mortgage, as they wished to use it in a trade in which they were interested. Upon these facts, of which the plaintiff had due notice at and prior to the alleged assignment, it is clear that no title passed to it thereby. In addition to this, it is equally clear that the note was paid and the debt extinguished by the payment of the amount thereof as stated, which payment had theretofore been provided for and secured to plaintiff by the assignment to it for that purpose of the joint note and mortgage on other land executed by the maker of the note in question and his wife. Judgment and order reversed.

We concur: McFARLAND, J.; DE HAVEN, J.

101 Cal. 246

LA FETRA v. GLEASON et al. (No. 19,204.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 6, 1894.)

ACTION TO FORECLOSE MORTGAGE—SUMMONS AND COMPLAINT—SERVICE ON NONRESIDENT SUBSEQUENT LIENOR.

In an action to foreclose a mortgage as to a nonresident, whose interest in the mortgaged property is subject to the mortgage, personal service out of the state on such nonresi dent is sufficient, under Code Civ. Proc. § 413, which provides for service by publication on such a nonresident defendant, and that "personal service of a copy of the summons and complaint out of the state is equivalent to publication."

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; J. W. McKinley, Judge.

Action by Tylee W. La Fetra against Nellie H. Gleason, Charles Ingles, and others to foreclose a mortgage. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order refusing to set aside a default and allow him to answer, defendant Ingles appeals. Affirmed.

R. Dunnigan and E. H. Bentley, for appellant. S. C. Hubbell, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. This action was brought to foreclose a mortgage executed by defendant Gleason to plaintiff upon certain land in California. The defendant Charles Ingles and a number of other persons were made parties defendant upon the general averment that they claim to have some interest in the mortgaged premises, which interest is averred to be subsequent and subject to the lien of said mortgage. Judgment by default was rendered against all of the defendants, and a decree of foreclosure entered in favor of plaintiff. Defendant Ingles appeals from the judgment. He also appeals from an order denying his motion to set aside his default, and to be allowed to answer.

The appeal from the judgment is based entirely upon the judgment roll, no facts aliunde the record being shown. Practically therefore, appellant is in the same position as one attacking a judgment collaterally; that is, he contends that the judgment roll does not show jurisdiction. The default of appellant was regularly entered, and the court found specially in the decree that he was duly served and made default. This finding (no facts appearing aliunde) is conclusive, unless there is something in some other part of the judgment roll which overcomes or contradicts it. Now, the only other thing in the record on the subject of service is an affidavit annexed to the returned summons, made by one J. L. Dawson, in which he swears that he is over 21 years old, not a party to the action, etc., and that he served the summons personally on appellant by giving him a copy thereof, together with a copy of the complaint, etc., on a certain day, in Clinton county, in the state of Missouri. Appellant contends that this affidavit shows a want of jurisdiction, but we do not think so. It must be borne in mind that the action, as against appellant, is not in personam, but a direct proceeding to reach and affect an interest of appellant in property within this state; in other words, the action is in the nature of a proceeding in rem. In the leading case of Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, the supreme court of the United States holds that while the courts of a state cannot acquire jurisdiction to render a judgment in personam against a nonresident without personal service of process within the state, still they may, without such service, subject property of the nonresident found within the state to the satisfaction of claims of her citizens, and may enforce liens thereon in a direct proceeding instituted for that purpose, as by attachment, or by an action to enforce the lien of a mortgage. In such a case the procedure is against the property, and is, in its nature, in rem. In a proceeding strictly in rem personal service is not necessary; but a state may require that, in such a proceeding, notice or warning must be given, in a prescribed method, to persons claiming interests in the property; and in such event the method must be followed. In this state the statute provides that, in such a case, summons may be served on a nonresident by publication, in pursuance of an order of court based upon an affidavit; and it also provides that, "when publication is ordered, personal service of a copy of the summons and complaint out of the state is equivalent to publication," etc. Code Civ. Proc. § 413. But the affidavit and order for publication are no part of the judgment roll (Estate of Newman, 75 Cal. 220, 16 Pac. 887;) and of course they would not appear in the record which appellant chose to bring here, and over which respondent had no control. Therefore, as there is nothing in the judgment roll inconsistent with the finding by the court of due service of summons, and as appellant shows nothing further on the subject, we will presume, in support of the judgment, that the finding was based upon service made in pursuance of the statute. The judgment must therefore be affirmed.

With respect to the appeal from the order refusing to grant the motion to set aside the default and allow appellant to answer, it would be sufficient to say that the bill of exceptions on the subject merely shows that such a motion was made and denied. There are some affidavits and other documentary matter printed in the latter part of the transcript, but they are not in the bill of exceptions, nor are they in any way identified or made part of the record. If, however, they could be considered, they show no reason for holding that the court abused its discretion in denying the motion. The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: DE HAVEN, J.; FITZGERALD, J.

101 Cal. 252

McCARTNEY v. DENNISON et al. (No. 19,304.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 6, 1894.)

DEED—DESCRIPTION—FORECLOSURE DECREE.

1. There is no objection in a deed to the phrase, "the south one-fourth," or "the south 10 acres," of a government subdivision.

2. A description in a foreclosure decree need not follow that of the complaint in terms, so it show the same land.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; J. W. McKinley, Judge.

Action by Nora McCartney against Lucius Dennison and others to foreclose a mortgage. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendants appeal. Affirmed.

E. C. Bower, for appellants. D. K. Trask, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. This was an action to foreclose a mortgage, and defendants appeal from a judgment in favor of plaintiff. The appeal is taken upon the judgment roll alone, which shows merely the complaint, demurrer thereto, and the judgment. The only point made is that the description of the mortgaged premises in the decree is different from that set forth in the complaint. The description in the complaint, after giving the county and state, is as follows: "The south one-fourth (¼) of the east one-half (½) of the north one-half (½) of the northeast one-fourth (¼) of section 18" of a certain township and range, "containing ten (10) acres of land; also the six (6) acres of land having the same length east and west, being of uniform width north and south, and lying immediately south of and adjoining said first above described parcel; the whole parcel contained in both said descriptions being eighty rods in length from east to west, and thirty-two rods in width from north to south." The description in the decree is as follows: "The south 10 acres of the northeast quarter of the northeast quarter, and the north 6 acres of the southeast quarter of the northeast quarter, of section eighteen (18)" of the same township and range as stated in the complaint. These two descriptions describe exactly the same piece of land. The only plausible objection that can be made to the descriptions is that such terms as "south one-fourth" and "south 10 acres" are not usually applied, in United States government surveys, to legal subdivisions. Under that system, "quarter" is used to designate a square piece of land, as the "southeast" or the "northeast" quarter. But, while the description in question is not ordinarily used by the government in patents of land, there is no reason why it is not sufficient in conveyances between private persons. The south quarter of a piece of land bounded by parallel lines running north and south and east and west may be ascertained as well as the south half, which is used as a government subdivision. If the land, the south quarter of which is covered by the mortgage, had been a city lot, or some other tract of land that had never been known as a government legal subdivision, we apprehend that no one would have questioned the sufficiency of the description; but the fact that the whole piece of which the south quarter is conveyed happens to have been a government subdivision can make no difference. The description is clearly not void for uncertainty. Appellant's assertion that "the description in the decree should follow the complaint" means only that the land described in the decree should be the same as that described in the complaint. Judgment affirmed.

We concur: DE HAVEN, J; FITZGERALD, J.

101 Cal. 254

FREEMAN v. KIEFER.

KIEFER v. FREEMAN et al. (No. 19,259.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 6, 1894.)

EQUITY — RESCISSION OF CONTRACT — FRAUD OF AGENT — LIABILITY OF PRINCIPAL — PARTIES — COSTS.

1. A land company, as plaintiff's agent, induced defendant by fraud to contract to purchase land, and then assigned the contract to plaintiff, who accepted the benefit thereof. Held, that plaintiff was, on rescission, liable to refund all money which he had received from defendant under the contract.

2. Defendant, in rescinding such contract, properly offered to convey all his title in the land under the contract to plaintiff, who was the legal holder of the contract, and for whose benefit it was made.

3. The land company was a proper, though not a necessary, party to defendant's action to rescind the contract.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; William P. Wade, Judge.

Action by Freeman against Kiefer on a contract for the sale of land, and cross action by Kiefer against Freeman and the Centinela-Inglewood Land Company to rescind the contract. From a judgment for Kiefer, the company and Freeman appeal. Affirmed.

Geo. I. Cochran, Henry Bleeker, and A. M. Stephens, for appellants. J. L. Murphey, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The pleadings and findings in this case are voluminous, and we do not deem it necessary to make any particular statement of the matters alleged and found. In our opinion the findings are sufficient to sustain the judgment. While there was some delay on the part of the defendant in rescinding the contract made by her with the Centinela-Inglewood Land Company, we cannot say the delay was unreasonable, and such as to deprive her of the right of rescission under the circumstances shown by the findings; nor can the efforts or willingness on her part to effect a settlement of the controversy between her and the plaintiff growing out of the contract be considered as a waiver of her right to now insist upon its rescission. The Centinela-Inglewood Land Company was simply the agent of the plaintiff in making the contract with defendant for the sale of the land; and the plaintiff, having accepted the benefit of the contract, as well as an assignment thereof from his agent, is equally responsible with the agent for any fraudulent representations which induced it, and is liable to refund to defendant the money which she has paid under the contract, and which has come into the hands of the plaintiff. The plaintiff being the legal holder of the contract made by defendant with the Centinela-Inglewood Land Company, as well as the party for whose benefit it was made, the defendant properly offered to convey to him all her right, title, and interest in the land described, and vesting in her by that contract. The Centinela-Inglewood Land Company was a proper, although not a necessary, party to this action, and the court did not err in giving judgment against it for costs. Judgment and order affirmed.

(103 Cal. 287)

MERRILL v. MERRILL. (No. 19,223.)[1]

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 26, 1894.)

Vendor and Purchaser — Rescission by Vendor—Lien of Vendee for Purchase Money.

The vendor of land placed the deed in escrow under a condition that, in case of the vendee's default in making payments, the sums paid should be forfeited, and the deed delivered to the vendor. The vendee defaulted, and the vendor obtained the deed. Held that, where the vendee recovered judgment in an action for the purchase money paid, she was not entitled to a lien on the land, under Civ. Code, § 3050, which provides that one who pays to the owner any part of the price of land, under a contract of sale, has a special lien on it, independent of possession, for such part as he may be entitled to recover back "in case of failure of consideration."

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; William P. Wade, Judge.

Action by Mattie H. Merrill against F. H. Merrill to recover money paid under a contract for the purchase of land, in which there was a judgment for plaintiff. From a refusal of the court to allow her a lien on the land, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

John D. Pope, for appellant. R. Duningan, J. M. Voss, and W. H. Henning, for respondent.

TEMPLE, C. This is an appeal upon the judgment roll, in which the plaintiff contends that she was not awarded all the relief to which she is entitled upon the pleadings and findings. It is the second appeal in the case. The first appeal was from a judgment on demurrer, and is reported 95 Cal. 334, 30 Pac. 542, where the nature of the contract upon which action is based is fully shown. Plaintiff recovered judgment for the money she had paid upon the contract of purchase, but was not allowed a vendor's lien upon the land. She now insists that the pleadings and findings, taken together, show that she is entitled to such lien, and she asks that the judgment be corrected or modified in accordance with her claim. In pursuance of the contract of purchase, the defendant, who is the vendor, executed a deed, which was placed in escrow, under the condition that, "in case of default in the payment of the sums of money as herein named, * * * then said sums of money are to be considered forfeited," and the deed was to be delivered to the vendor. After paying $3,000, plaintiff made default in the payment of an installment, and thereupon the vendor demanded and obtained the deed, and denied the right of plaintiff to purchase. Apparently the court denied the lien on the ground that the rescission was claimed by defendant because of the default of plaintiff.

Plaintiff relies upon section 3050, Civ. Code, which reads as follows: "One who pays to the owner any part of the price of real property, under an agreement for the sale thereof, has a special lien upon the property, independent of possession, for such part of the amount paid as he may be entitled to recover back in case of a failure of consideration." She claims that when defendant withdrew the escrow deed, and denied her right to a conveyance, he thereby rescinded the contract, and that such rescission was a failure of the consideration; therefore she is entitled to the lien under the statute. For the proposition that it is a failure of consideration she relies upon the case of Glassell v. Coleman, 94 Cal. 261, 29 Pac. 508. In that case the court said: "Upon the election by the plaintiff to rescind the contract by claiming a forfeiture by Wilson of all his rights under the contract, the contract itself, and each of its provisions or terms ceased to be a subsisting or enforceable obligation against Wilson. The only right of action against him then remaining to the plaintiff was for damages for his breach of the contract. The plaintiff could not have a right of action on the contract and at the same time one for its breach. An action for damages for the breach of a contract necessarily implies that the contract has been terminated, * * * and the forfeiture of his right to the land wrought an entire failure of the consideration for his promise to pay for the land." This language must be taken in connection with the facts of the case under consideration. In that case the vendor had notified the vendee that he had forfeited all rights under the contract. The vendor had also brought an action to recover $50,000 damages for the breach of the contract on the part of Wilson. Practically, the case before the court was one to compel Wilson to pay further installments of the purchase money after this forfeiture. It was said that plaintiff could not recover his damage and the purchase money also. When he availed himself of his privilege of forfeiting the rights of the purchaser under the contract there was no consideration to support the promise to pay, and it could not be enforced. It is true, when one sues to recover damages for a complete failure to perform a covenant, he thereby waives performance of that covenant; for he has elected to take damages in lieu of performance, but I doubt whether it be correct to say that by bringing such action he rescinds the contract. Certainly it is not such a rescission as extinguishes the obligation. On the contrary, as said in Wainwright v. Weske, 82 Cal. 193, 23 Pac. 12, by such action he affirms the contract, and bases his right upon it. His recovery may be quite another thing from what he would be entitled to if he elected to rescind; and then he is not compelled to place the other party in statu quo, and his suit does not authorize the adverse party to recover everything of value paid by him. Often a party cannot rescind, but is remitted to his action for damages, because he cannot restore the other party to the condition he would have been in but for the contract. And, again, damages are often stipulated for in a contract, and may be recovered according to its terms. Bishop on Contracts states this doctrine very briefly: "Where a contract requires successive steps to be taken by the respective parties, if, when a step becomes due, the party, either in words or by their equivalent in acts, declines to take it, or is unable, while the other is ready and willing to do his part, the latter may rescind the contract; or, if he chooses, he can sue for the breach. He cannot do both." Bish. Cont. § 827. And again, section 842: "After a contract has been broken, whether by an inability to perform it, by a rescinding against right, or otherwise, the party not in fault may sue the other for the damages suffered; or, if the parties can be placed in statu quo, he may, should he prefer, return what he has received, and recover in a suit the value of what he has paid or done. The pursuing of the latter alternative is called 'rescission.'" It will be seen that, when a breach of the contract has occurred, the party is often put to his election whether he will rescind or sue for damages; and sometimes he cannot rescind, but must sue for damages, because he cannot place the other party in statu quo. Now, both of these courses would so far end the contract that the party suing can no longer insist upon a performance of that covenant for the breach of which he has claimed damages. Both cannot properly be called "rescission;" or, if they can, it must follow that rescission, effected by suing to recover damages for a breach, does not require that the parties shall be placed in statu quo, or authorize a recovery, by the party in the wrong, of money paid.

---

[1] Rehearing granted.

Plaintiff (appellant here) contends that when defendant withdrew the escrow deed, and denied the rights of plaintiff under the contract, he, by his own act, rescinded the contract, and caused a failure of consideration. I do not understand this to be the effect of a rescission of a contract when the rescission extinguishes the obligation. The consideration of the contract has not failed; the contract has simply ceased to exist. Conceding a subsisting contract, and the consideration is ample. Nor do I think it was held in any of the cases cited that a rescission was effected simply by the act of a vendor in claiming a forfeiture. In some of the cases the contract provided that the vendor might rescind upon default of the vendee. In such cases the rescission is by consent of the parties. In others it seems to be held that when the vendor refuses further performance, and claims the damages according to the contract, he abandons the contract, and thereupon the vendee may also abandon it, and reclaim his money. Whether the conclusion be correct or not is not a question here. Unless the rescission is by consent, it is difficult to understand how it has been brought about; for, as respondent justly says, it is, in effect, enacted in section 1691, Civ. Code, that rescission cannot be otherwise effected without a compliance with that section. The idea must be that the abandonment of the contract by the vendor is equivalent to a claim of rescission on his part which may be acquiesced in by the vendee. In Cleary v. Folger, 24 Pac. 280, it was simply held that the vendor was also in default, in that he did not tender a deed on the very day it was due on the contract. Both being in default, either could treat the contract as rescinded. It was not here held that when a vendor refuses to complete performance because of a breach on the part of the vendor, and claims damages as stipulated in the contract, he thereby rescinds or consents to a rescission. It has been said in several cases that this doctrine was announced in Drew v. Pedlar, 87 Cal. 449, 25 Pac. 749. Perhaps it does so hold, but such conclusion seems to be based in that case partly upon the pleadings, in which both parties recognized the fact of a rescission. In other words, it was a rescission by mutual consent. Phelps v. Brown, 95 Cal. 572, 30 Pac. 774, was a suit against a broker who held money deposited by a vendee as a forfeit. It was held that, the parties having rescinded the contract, the broker could not hold the money. There was an actual rescission in that case, and no question was raised which required a discussion showing how a rescission was brought about.

Appellant's judgment is based upon the proposition that the contract had been extinguished by rescission. That could only have been accomplished with her consent, or because of her wrongful act. There was no claim that the consideration had failed, or that a rescission had been had or was sought upon that ground. This cannot be the failure of consideration contemplated in Civ. Code, § 3050. That was intended to secure a party from injury through the wrong or inability to perform of the other party. If the vendee did do himself the injury, he is not injured in the eye of the law. He cannot acquire an equity based upon his own wrong. The Civil Code, in general, was intended to announce rules of law already declared by the courts. This presumption is not of such force as to control the language of the statute, but in all cases of doubt that construction should be preferred which accords with known rules. In equity a vendee had a lien when in possession under a contract if the consideration failed. It was the counterpart of the lien given to the vendor, and the rule in equity is that no such lien exists in favor of one who is in default. One who has himself abandoned the contract, or has refused to perform it according to its terms, is not afforded a lien to secure him from loss because of his own breach of the contract. 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1260, and note. I think the judgment should be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; SEARLS, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

---

101 Cal. 223

SYMONS v. BUNNELL et al. (No. 18,178.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 31, 1894.)

APPEAL—ORDERS.

1. An order striking a statement on motion for new trial is a special order after judgment, within the provision requiring appeals therefrom within 60 days from date.

2. No appeal lies from an order refusing to vacate an appealable order.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Tuolumne county; Joseph H. Budd, Judge.

Action by William Symons against E. F. Bunnell and others. From three orders, defendants appeal. Two appeals dismissed. One order affirmed.

Moses G. Cobb and J. B. Curtain, for appellants. F. D. Nicol, for respondent.

DE HAVEN, J. The order of September 16, 1891, striking the appellants' statement on motion for a new trial from the files, is a special order made after judgment, and the appeal therefrom, not having been taken within 60 days from its date, must be dismissed. Sutton v. Symons, 97 Cal. 475, 32 Pac. 588. The order referred to being itself an appealable order, (Calderwood v. Peyser, 42 Cal. 113; Clark v. Crane, 57 Cal. 633,) no appeal lies from the order refusing to vacate it, and the appeal from this latter order must also be dismissed. In the absence of the statement, the motion for a new trial was properly denied. Sutton v. Symons, 32 Pac. 588. Order denying the motion for a new trial affirmed. The appeals from the order of September 16, 1891, striking the statement from the files, and from the order refusing to vacate the same, are dismissed.

We concur: McFARLAND, J.; FITZGERALD, J.

---

101 Cal. 242

GALLAGHER v. MONTECITO VAL. WATER CO. (No. 19,311.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 6, 1894.)

WATERS AND WATER COURSES—RIGHT TO DIVERT WATER—TITLE BY PRESCRIPTION—CHANGING USE.

1. Where defendant and its predecessors in title diverted the waters of a stream on which plaintiff's land bordered, at a point thereon above plaintiff's land, and for more than five years prior to plaintiff's action to restrain its diversion used the same openly, and adversely to plaintiff and all others, it must be deemed to have acquired a prescriptive right to continue the diversion complained of.

2. The fact that defendant changed the point of diversion, and applied the waters to a use different from that for which they were diverted by its predecessor, furnishes no ground for complaint to plaintiff, if his rights are not injured thereby.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Santa Barbara county; W. B. Cope, Judge.

Action by Gallagher against the Montecito Valley Water Company. There was judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

W. C. Stratton, for appellant. R. B. Canfield and Richards & Carrier, for respondent.

DE HAVEN, J. The plaintiff is an owner of land bordering on the Cold Spring branch of Montecito creek, and this action was brought for the purpose of restraining the defendant from diverting the waters of said stream. The defendant is a corporation organized under the laws of this state for the purpose of supplying water to the inhabitants of a portion of Santa Barbara county, and in its answer alleged that prior to January 14, 1888, John Coe and John W. Coe had acquired a prescriptive right to divert the waters of the Cold Spring branch of Montecito creek to the extent of defendant's diversion, and were then in the enjoyment of that right, and that on that day the defendant recovered a judgment against said John and John W. Coe, condemning their rights in said water; and for a separate defense the defendant alleged that plaintiff's right of action was barred by section 318 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The case was tried by the court, and judgment rendered for the defendant; and from this judgment, and an order denying his motion for a new trial, the plaintiff appeals.

The superior court found that the defendant, on January 14, 1888, recovered against John and John W. Coe the judgment of condemnation alleged in the answer, and "that for a period of more than five years before said 14th day of January, 1888, the said John Coe diverted to his own use, for beneficial purposes, from said stream, and used and enjoyed for beneficial purposes the waters thereof, to an amount greater than the quantity diverted by defendant as aforesaid, under claim of right and title, continuously, openly, notoriously, peaceably, uninterruptedly, and adversely to the plaintiff and to all other persons, and with the knowledge and acquiescence of plaintiff and his predecessors in interest; that a portion of the water so diverted and used by said John Coe was diverted and used upon land bordering on said Cold Spring branch." The court further found that such diversion was continued by the defendant after the judgment condemning the right of the Coes in and to the waters diverted, and that "the defendant and its predecessors in title aforesaid have diverted to their own use from said stream, for beneficial purposes, the water so condemned, as aforesaid, to the extent of the capacity of the box and pipes alleged in the complaint to have been used by defendant for diverting said water, and have used and enjoyed the same for beneficial purposes, continuously, openly, notoriously, uninterruptedly, peaceably, and adversely to the plaintiff and to all other persons, for the period of more than five years next before the commencement of this action." The court also found "that the plaintiff's cause of action is barred by the provisions of section 318 of the Code of Civil Procedure of this state."

It is claimed by plaintiff that these findings are not sufficient to show that defendant has acquired a prescriptive right to continue the diversion complained of. It seems to us, however, that the particular findings above quoted, to say nothing of the general finding to the effect that plaintiff's cause of action is barred by section 318 of the Code of Civil Procedure, are alone sufficient to show a good prescriptive title in defendant to the water in controversy, under the law as declared by this court in Davis v. Gale, 32 Cal. 27; Water Co. v. Crary, 25 Cal. 504; Water Co. v. Richardson, 72 Cal. 598, 14 Pac. 379. It is urged by plaintiff that as Coe was a riparian owner, and the diversion was made upon riparian land, and the water diverted used upon such land, and the court having also found "that a portion of the waters of said Cold Spring branch of Montecito creek was used by plaintiff and his predecessors in title, for lawful purposes, for a period of more than ten years next before the time of the diversion mentioned in the amended complaint, and also since said diversions were made," the findings, when taken together, do not show such an invasion of the rights of plaintiff as would have entitled him to maintain an action therefor because of such diversion and use of the water by Coe, as plaintiff may at all times have had sufficient water flowing by his land for the proper use and enjoyment thereof; and the cases of Ditch Co. v. Crane, 80 Cal. 181, 22 Pac. 76; Anaheim Water Co. v. Semi-Tropic Water Co., 64 Cal. 186,—are cited to sustain this contention. These cases are not in point. In the first one cited, the defendant's ditch was above that of plaintiff, and the court held that a finding to the effect that plaintiff had diverted the water from the stream for more than five years prior to the commencement of the action, adversely to the whole world, the water so diverted being sufficient to fill the ditch of plaintiff "whenever there was water in the stream to fill it," could not, in the nature of things, show a diversion adversely to the defendant, as no right of his could possibly have been affected by such acts of the plaintiff, while in the case at bar defendant's diversion was at a point on the stream above the land of plaintiff. In the case of Anaheim Water Co. v. Semi-Tropic Water Co., 64 Cal. 185, the court simply held that the diversion of water by one riparian owner for use upon riparian land could not be adverse to the rights of a lower proprietor along the stream, so long as there was left flowing in the stream an abundance of water to supply the present and prospective riparian wants and uses of the lower proprietor; but the facts as found by the court here do not bring this case within the rule there declared. The special finding above quoted, and upon which plaintiff relies, is not inconsistent with an adverse user of the water of the stream by defendant and its predecessors, and certainly is not so when it is read in connection with the special findings that Coe, the predecessor of defendant, had become entitled "by prescriptive use and enjoyment of a portion of the waters of the Cold Spring branch of Montecito creek, exceeding in quantity and amount the quantity of said waters diverted by defendant," "and that defendant has not at any time taken or diverted any of the waters of said stream in excess of the quantity so condemned to its use." The special findings do not show that defendant's present diversion and user of the waters in controversy are any more injurious to the riparian rights of plaintiff and other lower proprietors than when the diversion was commenced. On the contrary, it is clear that, as no more water is diverted now than at the commencement, if the present diversion is an infringement upon the equal right of plaintiff to the enjoyment of the water naturally flowing in the stream, it has always been so; and as the diversion was exercised under a claim of right, and in open hostility to the plaintiff, it has ripened into a prescriptive title.

The further point is made that the evidence does not support the findings, but we think the evidence is such that we would not be warranted in reversing the judgment upon this ground. It is shown that defendant has changed the point of diversion, and applied the waters to a use different from that for which they were diverted by its predecessor; but, as the rights of plaintiff do not seem to be injuriously affected by such change, he has no cause for complaint. It seems to be settled that one entitled to the use of water "may change the place of diversion, or the place where it is used, or the use to which it was first applied, if others are not injured by such change." Ramelli v. Irish, 96 Cal. 214, 31 Pac. 41, and cases there cited. We discover no error for which the judgment should be reversed. Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: McFARLAND, J.; FITZGERALD, J.

101 Cal. 238

BANNING v. MARLEAU. (No. 19,207.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 6, 1894.)

REPLEVIN—ANSWER—FINDINGS—VALIDITY OF SALE.

1. Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 627, 667, providing for a judgment for the return of the property or its value if it be in plaintiff's possession, and defendant, in his answer, claim a return thereof, such judgment cannot stand where the answer fails to make the appropriate demand.

2. Plaintiff showed a written bill of sale (such as, under Civ. Code, §§ 1053–1057, vests title on delivery) of the property from H. to her, of date long before defendant's seizure. The court found that, at the date of such seizure, plaintiff was not the owner and entitled to possession; that defendant did not wrongfully come into possession of and detain the property; that H. was the owner and in possession of it, and defendant, a constable, seized it under certain attachments against H. Held bad, as not determining whether plaintiff was in no sense the owner, or whether H.'s sale to her, for want of change of possession, (Id. § 3340,) was void as against his creditors, or, if the latter, that the attachment plaintiffs were his creditors, within the protection of said section.

3. On the question whether a change of possession of an interest in cattle is good as against the seller's creditors, (Civ. Code, § 3340,) the fact must be considered that the buyer was the owner and in possession of the land where the cattle always grazed, and where some of them had been bred.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; Walter Van Dyke, Judge.

Replevin by Mary H. Banning against W. F. Marleau. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

W. S. Wright, for appellant. Dupuy & Dunnigan, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. This is an action to recover certain personal property, or its value. Judgment went for defendant, and plaintiff appeals from the judgment upon the judgment roll and a bill of exceptions. The court found that "the plaintiff is now in possession of said above-described property;" and the entire judgment is that "the defendant, W. F. Marleau, to have and recover of and from Mary H. Banning, the plaintiff herein, the following personal property, viz. [describing it,] and that said property be returned by plaintiff to defendant, or the value thereof, being the sum of six hundred dollars, in case a return cannot be had, be paid by plaintiff to defendant, together with costs and disbursements." But there is no prayer, claim, or demand of any kind in the answer for a return of the property or its value; and, this being so, the judgment for its return cannot stand. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 627, 667; Gould v. Scannell, 13 Cal. 431; Pico v. Pico, 56 Cal. 459. It cannot be reasonably expected that, for the purposes of this case, we should ignore the statute, and overrule former decisions. We might, no doubt, remand the cause, with directions to change the judgment into one which would simply give costs to defendant; but, as we are not entirely satisfied with the case in other respects, we think that the ends of justice require a new trial.

Plaintiff claims ownership of the property sued for, consisting mostly of certain live stock on a ranch; and defendant, a constable, took it as the property of one Hannon, under two writs of attachment issued by a justice of the peace. The findings on the main issues are merely "that on the 30th of November, 1891, in Los Angeles county, Cal., the plaintiff was not, nor has she at any time since said date been, the owner of and entitled to the possession of the property described in the complaint; that the defendant herein, on said date, in Los Angeles county, did not wrongfully come into possession of said property," and does not wrongfully detain the same; and "that on the 30th day of November, 1891, Joseph Hannon was the owner and in possession of the property above described, and on said date the defendant, a constable in said county, seized said property by virtue of two writs of attachment against said Hannon, one in favor of W. H. Harbell, the other in favor of P. J. Hardy, aggregating the sum of $579, which writs were duly issued by W. A. Gaines, a justice of the peace of said county." These findings are not specific enough to show upon what theory the case was decided; that is, whether it was upon the theory that plaintiff was not the owner of the property in any sense, or upon the theory that a sale of said property by Hannon to plaintiff was void as against creditors, for want of delivery and an immediate and continued change of possession, under section 3440, Civ. Code. If the findings mean that, as between plaintiff and Hannon, the latter was, and the former was not, the owner of the property at the time of the attachment, then they are not supported by the evidence; for it clearly appears that Hannon before that time had sold whatever interest he had in the property to plaintiff, and had given her a written transfer of the same, which passed the title. Civ. Code, §§ 1053-1057. If, on the other hand, it was meant that the sale was not followed by such possession as would make it valid as against creditors of Hannon, then it should have been found that the parties attaching were such creditors; and it was not sufficient to merely find that the property was seized under certain writs of attachment. Sexey v. Adkinson, 34 Cal. 346. On another trial the findings on these points can be made fuller and clearer.

The main question in the case seems to be whether there was a sufficient change of possession of the property from Hannon to plaintiff. The property consisted mostly of live stock on a ranch owned at one time by plaintiff and Hannon jointly, but owned exclusively by plaintiff for some years prior to the attachments. As to some of this property there is a conflict of evidence as to whether Hannon ever owned any interest in it, and as to the balance there is a conflict as to whether he ever owned anything more than an undivided interest therein. Whatever interest he had in any or all of it he had sold and transferred to plaintiff, by a written instrument, long before the attachment. He had acted for plaintiff at various times as a sort of general superintendent of the ranch; and, at the time of the attachment, had a cropping contract, which included part of the land. Plaintiff had other stock on the ranch belonging to her alone. In determining, therefore, whether there was a sufficient delivery and change of possession from Hannon to plaintiff of whatever interest he had in the property attached, due importance should be given to the fact that plaintiff was the owner and in possession (if such was the fact) of the land on which the stock always grazed, and on which some of it was bred and raised. Morgan v. Miller, 62 Cal. 492; Hogan v. Cowell, 73 Cal. 211, 14 Pac. 780. Defendant should be allowed to amend his answer so as to ask therein for a return of the property. The judgment is reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: DE HAVEN, J.; FITZGERALD, J.

YOUNG v. TRIERWEILER. (No. 19,373.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 31, 1894.)

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

Action by Peter Young against Adam Trierweiler. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. Appeal dismissed.

J. Marion Brooks and Moyle G. Norton, for appellant. Hughes & Garrison, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Respondent moves the court to dismiss the appeal, and also to impose damages for delay, etc. The appeal is dismissed, but without damages.

SCHMIDT et al. v. McEWEN et al. (No. 15,131.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 30, 1893.)

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; F. W. Lawler, Judge.

Action by Schmidt and others against McEwen and others to recover damages for infringement of a trade-mark, and to obtain an injunction. From a decree for plaintiffs, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendants appeal. Order affirmed. Decree modified.

James G. Maguire, E. S. Salomon, and Henry Eickhoff, for appellants. John L. Boone and Langhorne & Miller, for respondents.

PATERSON, J. The larger label used by the defendants in this case is very much like the one used by the defendants in the Brieg Case, (Cal.) 35 Pac. 623. It is oval in form, and in that respect more closely resembles the plaintiff's label. The neck label is crescent in form, with letters of unequal length, but bears no marginal lines like those found in the plaintiff's neck label. Taken as a whole, it is at least as close an imitation of the plaintiff's label as the Brieg label is; and, the evidence in other respects being the same, the order should be affirmed. The order denying the defendant's motion for a new trial is affirmed. The cause is remanded, with directions to the court below to modify the decree in accordance with the views expressed in the case of Schmidt v. Brieg, (this day filed.) As so modified, the judgment will stand affirmed.

We concur: McFARLAND, J.; GAROUTTE, J.; HARRISON, J.; FITZGERALD, J.

SCHMIDT et al. v. STEINKE et al. (No. 15,133.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 30, 1893.)

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; F. W. Lawler, Judge.

Action by Schmidt and others against Steinke and others to recover damages for infringement of a trade-mark, and to obtain an injunction, from a decree for plaintiffs, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendants appeal. Order affirmed. Decree modified.

James G. Maguire, E. S. Salomon, and Henry Eickhoff, for appellants. John L. Boone and Langhorne & Miller, for respondents.

PATERSON, J. The labels used by the defendants in this case are precisely the same in shape and size as those used by the plaintiffs. The word "Sarsaparilla" covers the same space in the margin of the upper portion of the label, and in the same type as in the plaintiffs' label. In the margin of the lower portion of the label are the words "and Iron Phosphates," the same space in the plaintiffs' being occupied by the words "and Iron Water." In place of the trademark in the upper portion of the label, defendants inserted in their label a monogram occupying about the same space, with the letter "s" in the center, making the monogram resemble somewhat the trade-mark of the plaintiffs, the chief feature of which is the letter "s." Two parallel lines cross the center of the label, with the words "Steinke Bros." where the plaintiffs' label shows the words "Schmidt & Co." In the lower portion of the large label, and above the inner marginal line, are the words: "San Francisco. A great blood purifier and pleasant tonic. Taken in quantity, it cures all skin diseases." In the same place on the plaintiffs' label are the words "Stockton, Cal. A great blood purifier and pleasant tonic. Taken in quantity, it cures all skin diseases." Beneath the words in each label is a fancy flourish, almost identical in form. The two labels are practically the same, except in color. The order denying the defendants' motion for a new trial is affirmed. The cause is remanded, with directions to the court below to modify the decree in accordance with the views expressed in the case of Schmidt v. Brieg, (No. 15,132, this day filed,) 35 Pac. 623. As so modified, the judgment will stand affirmed.

We concur: GAROUTTE, J.; McFARLAND, J.; HARRISON, J.; FITZGERALD, J.

SCHMIDT et al. v. CRYSTAL SODA-WATER CO. (No. 15,134.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 30, 1893.)

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; F. W. Lawler, Judge.

Action by Schmidt and others against the Crystal Soda-Water Co. to recover damages for infringement of a trade-mark, and to obtain an injunction. From a decree for plaintiffs, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendant appeals. Order affirmed. Decree modified.

James G. Maguire, E. S. Salomon, and Henry Eickhoff, for appellant. John L. Boone and Langhorne & Miller, for respondents.

PATERSON, J. The labels of the defendant are the same in size, form, and design as those used by the plaintiffs. The neck label is somewhat different from those noticed in the other cases. It bears the words "Trade Mark," in letters of unequal length, according to the position they occupy on the crescent-shaped label, with a triangle in the center of the label between the two words, inclosing a scroll and the letters "C. S. W. Co." The plaintiffs' neck label has upon it the word "Universal," in letters of unequal length, according to their position on the paper; and the trade-mark occupies about the same space as the triangle of the defendant in the center of the label, between the letters "e" and "r" in the word "Universal." The case is in all material respects like the Brieg Case, (this day filed,) 35 Pac. 623. In all of these cases the complaint is the same. Appellant contends that the demurrers ought to have been sustained, because it is not alleged that the plaintiffs ever acquired any trade-mark or exclusive right to the use of the wards "Sarsaparilla and Iron," or that defendant ever adopted or used any imitation of plaintiffs' alleged trade-mark. It is claimed, also, that the complaint is ambiguous in certain respects. We deem it sufficient to say, upon this question, that the facts stated in the complaint are substantially those we have set forth in our opinion in the Brieg Case, and, upon the views therein expressed, the demurrer was properly overruled. The order denying the defendant's motion for a new trial is affirmed. The cause is remanded, with directions to the court below to modify the decree in accordance with the views expressed in the case of Schmidt v. Brieg, (No. 15,132; this day filed.) As so modified, the judgment will stand affirmed.

We concur: McFARLAND, J.; GAROUTTE, J.; HARRISON, J.; FITZGERALD, J.

SCHMIDT et al. v. HAAKE et al. (No. 15,135.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 30, 1893.)

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; F. W. Lawler, Judge.

Action by Schmidt and others against Haake and others to recover damages for infringement of a trade-mark, and to obtain an injunction. From a decree for plaintiffs, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendants appeal. Order affirmed. Decree modified.

James G. Maguire, E. S. Salomon, and Henry Eickhoff, for appellants. John L. Boone and Langhorne & Miller, for respondents.

PATERSON, J. This action is in its nature and the facts found similar to the Brieg Case, (No. 15,132, this day filed,) 35 Pac. 623. The defendants' label in this case differs from the label in the Brieg Case, chiefly in the matter of color. Like the plaintiffs' label, the larger label is oval in form, and the smaller or neck label a crescent, with letters of unequal length. There are the same parallel and prominent lines in the border. Instead of a monogram like those in the other cases, there is a small picture, occupying about the same space as the plaintiffs' trade-mark, and upon the inside of the label are written the usual words, "A great blood purifier and pleasant tonic." The findings of the court are supported by the evidence, and the order should be affirmed. The order denying the defendants' motion for a new trial is affirmed. The cause is remanded, with directions to the court below to modify the decree in accordance with the views expressed in Schmidt v. Brieg, (No. 15,132, this day filed.) As so modified, the judgment will stand affirmed.

We concur: McFARLAND, J.; GAROUTTE, J.; HARRISON, J.; FITZGERALD, J.

SCHMIDT et al. v. LIBERTY SODA-WORKS CO. (No. 15,163.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 30, 1893.)

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; F. W. Lawler, Judge.

Action by Schmidt and others against the Liberty Soda-Works Company to recover damages for infringement of a trade-mark, and to obtain an injunction. From a decree for plaintiffs, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendant appeals. Order affirmed. Decree modified.

James G. Maguire, E. S. Salomon, and Henry Eickhoff, for appellant. John L. Boone and Langhorne & Miller, for respondents.

PATERSON, J. The label of the defendant in this case is the same in size, form, and general design as the plaintiffs'. It differs from the plaintiffs' in general appearance, chiefly in color; and that, as we stated in the Brieg Case, 35 Pac. 623, is not controlling. Unlike all the other cases we have considered, the larger label bears in the upper margin thereof the words "Phosphate Iron," and in the lower margin the words "and Sarsaparilla." In all the other labels, including the plaintiffs', the word "Sarsaparilla" is in the upper margin, and the words "and Iron Water," or "and Iron Phosphate," are between the marginal lines of the lower half of the label. Between the upper marginal line of the lower half of the label and the lower line of the center space on which the name of the manufacturer is printed are the words "San Francisco, California," and below them the usual legend, "A great blood purifier and pleasant tonic. Taken in quantity, it cures all skin diseases," ornamented below with the familiar flourish or scroll. We think the decision in the Brieg Case determinative of the questions involved herein.

There is another question which we have not passed upon in either of the other cases. It is claimed that the court erred in admitting plaintiffs' alleged letters patent. The contents of the document are not set out in the statement. Error must be shown. It appears furthermore that the paper was introduced only to show the formula used by the defendant in the manufacture of its beverage, and the court does not seem to have attached much, if any, weight to it. The same may be said with respect to the commissioner's certificate of registration. In all of these cases, except the case against Welch et al., (No. 15,136,) 35 Pac. 626, the findings support the judgment, and the evidence supports the findings.

It is claimed by appellant that it is impossible to sustain the court's decision without the finding that, at the time of the adoption by plaintiffs of the words "Sarsaparilla and Iron," said name was not in use, or known or adopted, as a designation of the same, or of any similar article of manufacture on sale; that the whole decision of the court rests and turns upon that finding. This contention cannot be sustained. The judgment of the court below does not rest upon the appropriation and use by the defendant of the words "Sarsaparilla and Iron," but upon fraud perpetrated by it in intentionally counterfeiting plaintiffs' labels as a whole, and thereby deceiving the public, and pirating upon the business of the plaintiffs. Were the labels, marks, and devices of the defendant calculated, by reason of their close resemblance to those used by the plaintiffs, to deceive purchasers, and lead them, although exercising ordinary care and prudence in purchasing, to believe that the article contained in the defendant's packages was the article manufactured and sold by the plaintiffs? This question being answered in the affirmative upon sufficient evidence, the only other material question in the case relates to the amount of damages. The order denying the defendant's motion for a new trial is affirmed. The cause is remanded, with directions to the court below to modify the decree in accordance with the views expressed in the case of Schmidt v. Brieg, (No. 15,132, this day filed.) As so modified, the judgment will stand affirmed.

We concur: McFARLAND, J.; GAROUTTE, J.; HARRISON, J.; FITZGERALD, J.

101 Cal. 338

MARCEAU v. TRAVELLERS' INS CO. OF HARTFORD. (No. 18,199.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 15, 1894.)

Accident Insurance—Action on Policy—Conditions—"Intentional Injuries" to Insured—Insanity of Insured's Murderer—Evidence—Instructions.

1. On an issue as to the sanity of the person who killed insured, the abstract testimony of an expert witness that a person might know a certain act to be wrong, and yet possess no power to resist an insane impulse to commit such act, is not cause for reversal, though such "insane impulse" is not recognized as a defense to a charge of felony.

2. Where the sanity of the person who killed insured was the issue in an action on an accident insurance policy conditioned to be void if death resulted from "intentional injuries inflicted by any person," it was proper to refuse an instruction which intimated that the plea of insanity has led to abuse in the administration of justice, and which advised the jury that it must be examined with care.

3. A judgment roll which showed the trial and conviction of the person who killed the insured was inadmissible to show his sanity when he committed the homicide, by showing that it was not questioned during the criminal trial.

4. While the right to give an opinion as to a person's sanity is limited by Code Civ. Proc. § 1870, subd. 10, to experts and intimate acquaintances, such limitation does not extend to testimony of witnesses as to his peculiar conduct and language.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county; M. K. Harris, Judge.

Action by Amanda J. Marceau against the Travellers' Insurance Company of Hartford, Conn., on an accident insurance policy. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Edward Lynch, for appellant. Dunne & McPike and W. D. Grady, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. The plaintiff and respondent, Mrs. Marceau, was the wife of John D. Fiske, of Fresno. In July, 1890, Fiske was shot to death by one Stillman, who was subsequently convicted of the crime, and sentenced to imprisonment for life. At the time of Fiske's death he was carrying a life insurance policy for the sum of $10,000 in the Travellers' Insurance Company, and this action is brought to recover from such company the amount of the policy. The policy contained a clause declaring it invalid if death resulted from "intentional injuries inflicted by the insured or any other person;" and, while the death of Fiske is not questioned by the defendant, it is claimed that his death resulted from causes that bring it within the prohibition of the clause of the policy we have just quoted, and that consequently plaintiff is not entitled to recover.

It is contended upon the part of plaintiff that Stillman was insane at the time he committed the homicide, and consequently the injuries resulting in the death of Fiske were not "intentional injuries," within the meaning of the policy. It is conceded by opposing counsel that, if Stillman was insane at the time he fired the fatal shot, the policy remains in full force and effect; and thus it appears the insanity of Stillman at the time of the homicide is the fulcrum upon which the entire case rests. Judgment went for plaintiff, and this appeal is prosecuted from that judgment, and also from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial.

1. An expert witness upon the subject of insanity was placed upon the stand, and the following occurred: "Q. You understand, of course, that insanity is the result of a diseased mind, do you not? A. Yes, sir. Q. That if a person is insane, while they may theoretically know the difference between right and wrong, that they are incapable of judging or resisting an impulse to do wrong? (The defendant objected to the question on the ground that it is incompetent, the witness is incompetent, and the fact is irrelevant and immaterial, as contradicting the rule of insanity established by the supreme court of this state. The court overruled the objection, and the defendant excepted.) A. They have no power to resist the insane impulse they have, although they know it was wrong, and they will hide and conceal the evidences of their crime, very often with more particularity and ingenuity than a sane person would do." In Hoin's Case, 62 Cal. 120, insanity, as recognized in our criminal law, is declared to be such a diseased and deranged condition of the mental faculties as to render the person incapable of distinguishing between right and wrong in relation to the particular act with which he is charged. The foregoing appears to be the true rule, as declared by the courts of England, and certainly is the settled law of this state; and we cannot recognize the so-called plea of "irresistible impulse," of itself, as a legal defense to any charge of felony. Upon an examination of the particular question and answer now under consideration, we see nothing to justify a reversal of this judgment and a retrial of the case. Upon a close analysis of the question we are not prepared to say exactly what it does mean. It certainly is not so clear as to be fully comprehended by the average jury of the present day; yet, whatever construction may be given it, (and it is probably susceptible of more than one,) the harm to appellant, if harm was done him, is found in the answer. However objectionable a question may be, if the answer in no way prejudices appellant's rights, then the error of the court in allowing the answer to be given is harmless error, and affords no ground for complaint. By his answer the witness testified, in the abstract, to a certain phase or kind of insanity. His evidence was not addressed to the mental condition of the man Stillman, but was directed to principles touching a certain branch of insanity in general. In order that the jury might intelligently and fully understand the particular issue of insanity that was to be submitted to them, we see no possible objection to a practice of placing before them general information bearing upon this most metaphysical and abstruse subject; and, although the witness testified that a person might know a certain act to be wrong, and yet possess no power to resist an insane impulse to commit the act, still it was for the court, in its instructions to the jury, to furnish the rule by which Stillman's mental condition was to be measured. The test is inexorable; he is sane or insane, tried by that rule alone, and all the evidence upon the subject of insanity is pertinent, and pertinent only, for the purpose of determining whether or not the party's mental condition satisfies the test prescribed.

2. Appellant complains of the court's refusal to give two certain instructions. The first of these instructions embraced the principle we have quoted from the Hoin Case as to the true rule to be applied upon a plea of insanity in criminal cases, and it was substantially given, in various forms, by the court in its charge to the jury. It was not error to decline to again reaffirm the law bearing upon that question. The other instruction contains an intimation that the plea of insanity has led to abuse in the administration of justice, and advises the jury that it must be examined and considered with care. This instruction, in effect, was given in the criminal case of People v. Pico, 62 Cal. 54; but we see no place for it in a civil action, especially in view of the fact that the party charged with being insane is neither a party to the action, nor even indirectly interested in the final result of the litigation.

3. Previous to the trial of the present action, Stillman had been tried and convicted of the murder of Fiske, and sentenced to imprisonment in the state prison for life. Defendant's counsel offered in evidence what he termed the judgment roll in that case, and, under objection, the evidence was not admitted. As stated by counsel, this evidence was offered for the purpose of showing that, during the pendency of the murder trial, no proceedings were had indicating that Stillman was insane at that time; that no suggestion was made to the court by counsel that he was then insane; that the statute regarding the insanity of defendants at the time of trial was not invoked, and that the record offered indicated no suggestion of insanity; and counsel argues therefrom that the presumptions arise from these facts, first, that the public officials did their duty, and also that the defendant's attorneys in that case did their duty, and that the plea of present insanity not being suggested, either by the public officials or private attorneys, the second presumption follows that Stillman was not insane at the date of his trial; and, further, those presumptions being established, an additional presumption follows therefrom that, if he was not insane upon the day of his trial, he was not insane upon the day of the homicide. We are entirely agreed that the record in the criminal action was properly rejected. The last and material presumption—the one which defendant seeks to invoke to his advantage in this case—arises from no fact, but, on the contrary, is itself based upon a foundation of presumptions; and such a foundation is too unstable to support evidence of the character here sought to be invoked. Again, we think the plaintiff could not be prejudiced by anything done, or omitted to be done, in that case. She was not a party to the action, in no manner interested in the result of the litigation, and her pecuniary interests could in no way be affected by the result of that trial. A striking illustration of this principle is found in Burke v. Wells, Fargo & Co., 34 Cal. 62. One Driscoll was convicted of robbing Wells, Fargo & Co. The parties arresting Driscoll brought an action against that company to recover a reward offered for the arrest and conviction of the thief. It was held by the court that, as against the defendant, Wells, Fargo & Co., that company being a stranger to the action, the record of conviction was no evidence that Driscoll was the thief, and that plaintiff should be required to establish that fact by independent evidence de novo. In the present case, if, in accordance with the statute, the question of Stillman's insanity at the time of the trial had been suggested, and a jury impaneled to pass upon that issue, and after investigation the jury had rendered a verdict declaring him not insane, that verdict would not be evidence in this action against the plaintiff; and, if a verdict upon the direct issue would not be evidence here, it certainly follows that the record offered was properly rejected.

4. It is insisted that the court erred in allowing certain witnesses to give their opinions as to Stillman's insanity, because it is claimed they were not intimate acquaintances, within the provisions of section 1870, subd. 10, Code Civ. Proc. The testimony of some of these witnesses, to the extent of their opinion as to Stillman's insanity, was subsequently stricken out upon motion of counsel offering the evidence, and, inasmuch as the court at the time directed the jury to disregard such testimony of the witnesses, we see no valid objection to the course pursued. It is insisted that the evidence as to the conduct and conversations of Stillman, as testified to by these witnesses, also should have been taken from the consideration of the jury; but we do not understand the law to be that none but intimate acquaintances are allowed to testify to the peculiar conduct and language of a party charged with insanity. The right to give an opinion as to a person's sanity or insanity is limited to the expert and the intimate acquaintance; but the limitation goes no further, and this distinction is recognized in Estate of Carpenter, 94 Cal. 406, 29 Pac. 1101, cited by appellant. Referring to matters, not of opinion, but merely of observation, it is there said: "As to such obvious appearances, I presume it was not intended that the rule should apply." The record is quite voluminous, and appellant has called our attention to but one witness, viz. Graham, who gave an opinion as to Stillman's insanity, based upon an acquaintanceship with him. We have found no other in the record, and, as to Graham, there is no question but that he was an intimate acquaintance, within the provision of the Code, and also within the principles declared in Estate of Carpenter, supra.

5. The following instruction is attacked as stating an unsound proposition of law: "The court instructs you that if you believe, from a preponderance of the evidence, that the said John D. Fiske came to his death by reason of injuries inflicted upon him by one J. L. Stillman on or about July 26, 1890, in this county, and without fault or provocation on the part of said Fiske, and that the said Stillman, at the time of inflicting said injuries, was insane and incapable of discerning between right and wrong in regard to the act he was committing, or that he was then impelled in so doing by an insane impulse which the reason that was left him did not enable him to resist, or to understand its nature, then the injuries were unintentional on the part of said Stillman, and accidental in that respect, within the meaning of said policy." The latter portion of this instruction, beginning with the conjunction "or," does not strictly follow the beaten paths established by this court in declaring what constitutes insanity, and beaten paths are always safer than new and untried ones; and while, owing to the peculiar wording of the instruction, it is not probable that it in any degree enlightened the jury as to the law of the case, yet upon a fair construction we think it comes within the law of insanity as legally applicable to the present case, and vaguely states, in a different form, the same principle found in the former portion of the instruction. If a man commits a homicide under an insane impulse, and at the time does not possess sufficient reason to understand the nature of the act, he certainly is in such a condition of mind that he is incapable of weighing the moral qualities of the act, and determining therefrom whether it is right or wrong; and we think this to be its legitimate construction. The instruction surely bears no relationship to the theory of irresistible impulse, frowned upon and rejected in People v. Hoin, and does not, either in letter or spirit, countenance the doctrine, which is there cast out, as having no place in the law of insanity in this state. In addition to this instruction, the court fully and correctly stated to the jury the law of insanity in numerous other portions of its charge, and we are satisfied that no material injury resulted to defendant from the charge we have just considered.

6. We will not enter into a discussion of the evidence in detail for the purpose of indicating that it is sufficient to support the verdict of the jury. It is enough for us to say that upon a careful examination of it we find it ample and sufficient. For the foregoing reasons, it is ordered that the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: PATERSON, J.; HARRISON, J.

---

101 Cal. 235

ANTHONY v. GRAND. (No. 19,256.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 6, 1894.)

ACTION FOR ASSAULT—EVIDENCE—COSTS.

1. In an action for assault, where it was shown that defendant violently assaulted and injured plaintiff, evidence of defendant's reputation for being peaceable was immaterial.

2. Code Civ. Proc. § 1025, providing that no costs can be allowed in an action for damages, where the plaintiff recovers less than $300, forbids the recovery of costs by either party on a recovery of less than $300.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county.

Action by Adolph Anthony against Fred Grand. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Tuppett, Boone & Neale, for appellant. Utley, Thorpe & Holcomb, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. This is an action to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by the plaintiff. The court below found that on the 4th day of July, 1892, the defendant "did willfully and violently assault the plaintiff, Adolph Anthony, and the said defendant did then and there willfully and violently bite off with his teeth, and sever, from said plaintiff's right hand, a portion of the fourth finger of said hand, to wit, said defendant did so bite off the said finger of plaintiff just below the first joint thereof; that by reason of said assault and biting, as aforesaid, said plaintiff has at all times since said 4th day of July, 1892, been disabled from following his usual occupation of a miner, and has been disabled from attending to his business as such," and has been damaged in the sum of $250, for which he is entitled to judgment. Judgment was accordingly entered against the defendant for the sum named, from which, and from an order denying a new trial, he appeals.

It appears from the bill of exceptions that when the plaintiff rested his case, at the trial, a witness was called for the defendant, and testified that he had known defendant for 18 years, and knew the people where he lived. He was then asked, "Do you know his reputation for being peaceable and quiet?" The question was objected to by the plaintiff on the ground that the evidence sought was irrelevant and immaterial, and the objection was sustained, and an exception reserved. It also appears from the bill of exceptions that, before the findings were filed and the judgment entered, "the defendant presented to the court findings of fact and conclusions of law and judgment for signature by the judge of said court, accompanied by a memorandum of costs and disbursements sworn to by the defendant," copies of which are set out. The copies presented are substantially the same as those filed, except that the conclusions of law are "that plaintiff is entitled to judgment against said defendant for said sum of $250, and that said defendant is entitled to judgment against said plaintiff for his costs in this behalf laid out and expended." And the judgment is substantially the same as that entered, except that there is added to it: "It is further ordered and adjudged by the court that the defendant have and recover of and from the plaintiff his costs in this behalf laid out and expended, taxed at the sum of $254.65." The court refused to adopt the findings and judgment so presented, and the defendant excepted to the ruling. It is claimed in support of the appeal that the court erred in excluding the offered evidence, and in refusing to give the defendant judgment for his costs; and these are the only points presented for decision.

We see no merit in either of the points made. The court found that the defendant willfully and violently assaulted the plaintiff, and bit off his finger. The correctness of this finding is not questioned, nor is any of the evidence in support of it brought up in the record. It must therefore be presumed to have been fully justified by the evidence introduced. But, if the defendant committed the wrong complained of in the manner stated, then his reputation for being peaceable and quiet was wholly immaterial, since, however good it may have been, the judgment must necessarily have gone against him.

As to the second point: The allowance of costs is a matter of statutory regulation. Our statute provides that: "No costs can be allowed in an action for the recovery of money or damages when the plaintiff recovers less than three hundred dollars." Section 1025, Code Civ. Proc. This evidently applies to both parties to the action, and forbids the recovery of costs by either of them. The judgment and order appealed from should be affirmed.

McFARLAND and FITZGERALD, JJ. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

DE HAVEN, J. I concur in the judgment.

---

101 Cal. 233

ESHLEMAN v. MALTER. (No. 18,174.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 6, 1894.)

Deeds—Description—Boundaries.

Where the description of land in a deed calls for a legal subdivision of a section of surveyed land, the quarter section corners being lost, and the section exceeding 640 acres in area, the division lines of the fractions of the section are determined by a division pro rata of the lines of the section as they appear upon the ground.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county; M. K. Harris, Judge.

Action by M. D. Eshleman against G. H. Malter. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

W. D. Tupper, for appellant. Edward Lynch, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. This is an action to quiet title to a small strip of land containing about 2.88 acres. Plaintiff, being the owner of section 17 of a certain township and range, sold to defendant the west one-half of the northwest one-quarter of said section, and the location of defendant's eastern boundary line thereof is the point in dispute. It is insisted that the evidence is insufficient to support the finding of the court as to the ownership of the land being in the plaintiff; but, upon an examination of the record, we think the evidence in this regard sufficient. The four corners of the section are established by the evidence with reasonable certainty, and, these four corners being located, any legal subdivision may be readily ascertained. The evidence disclosed that the section contained about 664.43 acres, and that the north line of the section was 82.21 chains in length. Appellant appears to concede that, if the north line of plaintiff's land exceeds 60 chains in length, then the land in litigation is included in her holding; and that the north line of her land is of greater length than 60 chains is very evident. When the description of land in a deed calls for a legal subdivision of a section of surveyed land, the quarter section corners being lost, and the section exceeding 640 acres in area, the division lines of the fractions of the section are determined by a division pro rata of the lines of the section as they appear upon the ground. This is the doctrine laid down in Miller v. Land Co., (Kan.) 24 Pac. 420, and in the cases there cited. Applying that principle to the present case, the northwest corner of the plaintiff's land would be located at a point upon the north line of the section distant from the northeast corner thereof three-fourths of the length of the north line, and this would give the length of plaintiff's north line to be about 61.65 chains. The fact that defendant claimed by his answer to have made valuable and permanent improvements upon this tract of land while he was in possession thereof is immaterial to the case, and a finding as to such allegation of the answer was not required. Helm v. Wilson, 89 Cal. 593, 26 Pac. 1103. For the foregoing reasons, it is ordered that the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: PATERSON, J.; HARRISON, J.

---

101 Cal. 229

PEOPLE v. LYNCH. (No. 21,037.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 6, 1894.)

Assault—Justification—Instructions.

1. One person cannot assault another in self-defense, since an assault is in itself unlawful, and since any act done in self-defense cannot be an assault.

2. The fact that a person thinks another is going to inflict bodily harm on him does not justify him in attempting to take such other's life; it being necessary that there should be some act by the other, such as would induce an ordinarily prudent man to believe that he was in immediate danger of death or great bodily injury.

3. On a trial for an assault committed in a street, the refusal of an instruction that defendant had a right to be there, and the presumption was that he was there for a lawful purpose, if error, was not prejudicial, as it was but another form of the charge given by the court,—that defendant was presumed to be innocent till found guilty.

4. A refusal to permit defendant to tell what he understood by prosecutor's threat, a few days before the assault, to "fix" defendant, if error, was not prejudicial, where defendant testified that, immediately before that assault, prosecutor threatened to kill him, and made demonstrations as if to draw a weapon.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county; Ansel Smith, Judge.

Defendant was convicted of assault with a deadly weapon, and from the judgment, and an order denying a new trial, appeals. Affirmed.

James H. & J. E. Budd, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Hart, for the People.

GAROUTTE, J. The defendant was convicted of an assault with a deadly weapon, and appeals from the judgment and order denying his motion for a new trial. He claims the shooting to have been done in self-defense, and contends that the court committed error in its instructions to the jury upon the law of the case.

1. An exception was taken to the following instruction: "If, however, you are satisfied from the evidence in the case, and beyond a reasonable doubt, that the defendant did, at the time charged, and as charged, make an assault on one T. O'Connor with a deadly weapon,—that is, one likely to produce, in the manner in which it is used, death or great bodily injury,—with intent to do him great bodily injury, but are not satisfied that the assault was made with malice, or if you have any reasonable doubt whether such assault was with malice aforethought, your verdict will be, 'Guilty of an assault with a deadly weapon.'" Counsel say: "Suppose defendant had assaulted the prosecuting witness with a deadly weapon, with intent to do him great bodily harm. If it had been done in necessary self-defense he was entirely justified. Yet this instruction clearly directs the jury to find him guilty if such assault alone be proven." A complete answer to this supposition is that no such a state of facts could exist. One person cannot assault another in self-defense. An assault, in itself, is unlawful, and any act done in self-defense cannot be an assault.

2. The court gave the following instruction: "The bare fear that the said T. O'Connor, if defendant had had such fear, was going to inflict bodily injury upon the person of the defendant, would not justify defendant in attempting to take the life of the said T. O'Connor, if he did so attempt; but there must have been some act or acts of the said T. O'Connor such as would induce an ordinarily prudent man to believe that he was in great and immediate danger of death or great bodily injury at the hands of the said T. O'Connor; and, unless you so find, you will find the defendant guilty." We think the instruction entirely correct. To be sure, it says nothing about threats, but threats alone never justify a homicide. Words, however grievous, do not even reduce a homicide from murder to manslaughter. While threats are always admissible as evidence, yet some act or acts of the deceased, indicating danger to the defendant, as a reasonable man, at the time of the shooting, must be present, or the plea of self-defense will be made in vain. The instruction in no way intimates that threats of the prosecuting witness towards the defendant are not admissible as evidence tending to throw light upon the circumstances surrounding the moment of the affray.

3. The following instruction was asked by the defendant, and refused: "The court further instructs the jury that Sacramento street is a public highway in the city of Stockton, and that the defendant had a perfect right to be on said highway at the time and place where he was met by the prosecuting witness, and was under no necessity to leave or depart from said street in order to avoid meeting with the prosecuting witness; and, in the absence of evidence showing that defendant was in said street for improper and unlawful purposes, the court instructs you that the presumption of law is that the defendant was in said street, at the time and place where he was met by the prosecuting witness, for a lawful and legitimate purpose." In the abstract, we are not prepared to say that the mere fact of a man walking upon a public street justifies the presumption that he is there for a lawful purpose. But in the present case, where the defendant was charged with a crime committed upon the public street, we see no legal objection to this instruction, and perhaps it would have been the better course to have given it. At the same time, it was but another form of instructing the jurors that the defendant is presumed to be innocent until he is proven guilty, and that matter was fully explained to them in another portion of the charge.

4. Defendant testified that some days prior to the alleged assault the prosecuting witness, among other things, said to him, "I'll fix you." His attorney then asked him, "What did you understand him to mean by those words?" and an objection was sustained to this question. We assume the purpose of the question was to show that defendant construed the language as a threat of physical injury; and, without deciding the merits of the ruling of the court in this regard, it is sufficient to say we think the defendant was not injured to any degree by such ruling, even conceding that his answer to the interrogatory would have been as indicated. A threat of the prosecuting witness at this time could only be material as bearing upon the circumstances immediately surrounding the shooting, and material only for the purpose of indicating that the defendant fired in self-defense. But the defendant further testified that immediately prior to the affray the prosecuting witness, in a violent manner, said to him, "I'll kill you," and made demonstrations as if to draw a weapon. Under these circumstances, it is plain that defendant was not injured before the jury by the ruling of the court, whatever may have been his understanding of the language used by the prosecuting witness.

Defendant complains of other rulings of the court, both as to instructions given and refused, and also as to evidence admitted and rejected; but, after careful consideration, we see no error, and find nothing further demanding extended notice. It is ordered that the judgment and order denying a new trial be affirmed.

We concur: PATERSON, J.; HARRISON, J.

---

101 Cal. 281

PEOPLE v. WALLACE. (No. 21,026.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 7, 1894.)

Criminal Law—Plea — Sufficiency — Juries—Challenge to Panel—Harmless Error.

1. A plea of defense, entered on the minutes, reciting that "defendant thereupon interposes a plea of not guilty as stated in the information," is sufficient, under Pen. Code, § 1017, which provides that such entry shall recite that "the defendant pleads that he is not guilty of the offense charged."

2. Under Pen. Code, § 1064, providing that when the panel is formed from persons not named as jurors a challenge may be taken to the panel on account of bias of the officer summoning them, a challenge to a panel summoned by special venire will not lie on the ground that the panel were nonresidents of the county.

3. The giving of an erroneous instruction is harmless where defendant is acquitted of the offense charged to which the instruction applied.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Bernardino county; George E. Otis, Judge.

John Wallace was convicted of assault with a deadly weapon with intent to murder, and appeals. Affirmed.

R. E. Bledsoe, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Hart, for the People.

VANCLIEF, C. The defendant was tried, in the county of San Bernardino, on an information by the district attorney, for an assault with a deadly weapon with intent to murder, but was convicted of only an assault with a deadly weapon. He appeals from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

1. It is contended that the plea of the defendant, as entered in the minutes of the court, was not in form or substance such as required by section 1017 of the Penal Code, viz.: "Every plea must be oral and entered upon the minutes of the court substantially in the following form: * * * (2) If he plead not guilty: 'The defendant pleads that he is not guilty of the offense charged.'" The minutes of the court show that the defendant was regularly arraigned on March 6, 1893, and, upon being asked whether he was guilty or not guilty, his attorney asked further time to plead, and was given until March 8th. On March 8th the following entry was made in the minutes: "The People of the State of California v. John Wallace. Defendant and his counsel are present and the district attorney is present. Counsel for defendant interposes a demurrer to complaint, the same being overruled by the court. Defendant thereupon interposes a plea of not guilty of the charge as stated in the information." I think the plea entered in the minutes is "substantially" in the form prescribed by section 1017 of the Penal Code. It is claimed that the plea is improperly limited to the charge "as stated in the information," as if the defendant was required to plead to a charge as stated elsewhere than in the information.

2. The jury was not drawn, but was summoned by the sheriff by authority of a special venire facias regularly issued by order of the court. Before any juror was sworn the defendant challenged the panel "on the ground that the panel of the jurors served and returned are nonresidents of the county of San Bernardino." The district attorney said, "Prosecution denies the challenge." Thereupon the court overruled the challenge, for the reason that the only ground of challenge to the panel of a jury summoned by special venire is "bias of the officer who summoned them," as provided in section 1064 of the Penal Code. This ruling seems to be warranted by the case of People v. Welch, 49 Cal. 177; but counsel for appellant contends that, inasmuch as the district attorney denied the challenge, the court was bound to try the issue of fact; that is to say, the court was bound to try an immaterial issue, a decision of which would have been of no consequence on the challenge of the panel, on the sole ground that the jurors summoned were nonresidents of the county. I think the mere statement of this proposition is a sufficient refutation of it.

3. While the jury was being impaneled John Schliesman was called as a juror, and upon examination as to his qualifications answered that he was a resident of that part of the territory which had lately been set off from San Bernardino county into the new county of Riverside. Thereupon the defendant challenged the juror on the ground that he was not a resident of the county of San Bernardino. It is contended by appellant that the court erred in overruling this challenge. No evidence was offered in support of or in opposition to the challenge, except the testimony of the juror above stated. The only question involved in the ruling of the court on this challenge, or discussed by counsel, is whether or not the county of Riverside had been created and existed at the time of the trial of this action; and whether that county had been created and existed at the time of the trial must have been judicially known to the trial court at the time of the trial, and is so known by this court, (Brumagim v. Bradshaw, 39 Cal. 24; Code Civ. Proc. § 1875,) since the fact depended upon the effect of an act of the legislature approved March 11, 1893, entitled "An act to create the county of Riverside," etc., and the official action of the board of commissioners appointed by that act to organize the county of Riverside, which board was required by the act to "keep a full record of their proceedings, transmitting to the secretary of state a certified copy thereof." The commissioners were required to call an election of the qualified voters residing in the territory of which the new county was to be composed, to be held on May 2, 1893, "at which election shall be submitted to the said qualified electors of said county of Riverside, as herein provided, whether there shall be formed and organized the county of Riverside, as herein provided for." The act further provides that if two-thirds of the vote cast shall be in favor of creating the proposed new county, "then the said territory hereinabove described shall be and become the organized county of Riverside, from and after the day upon which the returns of said election shall be ascertained and declared by the said board of commissioners." In the certified copy of the proceedings of the board of commissioners transmitted to the secretary of state and filed in his office, appears the following: "And now at this time, that is to say, May 9, 1893, Commissioner John McLaren offers the following resolution: 'Whereas, the board of county commissioners of Riverside county, in pursuance of the directions contained in section 5 of the act to create Riverside county, approved March 11, 1893, caused the election referred to in said section to be held at the time and in the manner therein appointed; and whereas, the said board has canvassed the votes cast at said election, and by said canvas has ascertained and do hereby declare the returns of said election to be as follows: The new county of Riverside, Yes, 2,277 votes; the new county of Riverside, No, 681 votes,—and it appearing that said votes cast in favor of the new county of Riverside exceed two-thirds of the votes at said election on said question: Resolved, that in pursuance of the power and authority vested in us by said above-named section, we, the said board of commissioners, do therefore declare that from and after this date the territory described in said act shall be, and it hereby is declared to be, the organized county of Riverside. Dated this 9th day of May, 1893.'" Thus it appears that the returns of the election were "declared" on the 9th day of May, 1893, three days after the trial of this action; and, consequently, the county of Riverside did not exist until after the trial.

4. Appellant further contends that the court erred in giving to the jury the following instructions: "Murder is the unlawful killing of a human being with malice aforethought. Such malice may be express or implied. It is express when there is manifested a deliberate intention unlawfully to take the life of a fellow creature. It is implied when no considerable provocation appears, or when the circumstances attending the killing show an abandoned and malignant heart." Conceding that implied malice is not equivalent to the actual intent to murder, essential to the offense charged, and that the instruction was therefore erroneous, it was, nevertheless, harmless, since the defendant was acquitted of the offense charged, to which alone the instruction applied; and the instruction had no bearing upon the lower offense, of which the defendant was convicted. In the case of People v. Mize, 80 Cal. 42, 22 Pac. 80, cited by appellant, the defendant was convicted of an assault with intent to murder, and was presumably injured by the instruction held to be erroneous in that case. I think the order and judgment should be affirmed.

We concur: SEARLS, C.; BELCHER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

(101 Cal. 265)

McCONOUGHEY v. JACKSON et al. (No. 19,281.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 7, 1894.)

PLEADING—CONCLUSIONS OF LAW — INFORMATION AND BELIEF — TRUSTEES OF CITY — ALLOWANCE OF CLAIMS—DUTY OF CLERK.

1. A denial of an "indebtedness," without denying the facts on which it is based, is simply a denial of a conclusion of law.

2. The action of the trustees of a city on the presentation of a claim which they have jurisdiction to hear and determine is a judicial act, and, whether right or wrong, is binding on the clerk.

3. On an alternative writ of mandamus requiring the clerk of a city of the sixth class to countersign and deliver a warrant or show cause, an allegation by defendant, on information and belief, of insufficient funds in the treasury to pay the warrant, is defective, since he should, of his own knowledge, know the exact amount in the treasury.

4. A valid claim, properly presented to the trustees of a city, and allowed, and the action accepted by the claimants, is a binding contract, and can be avoided only for such causes as invalidate other contracts.

5. An allegation by defendant that petitioner was a city officer, and "interested, both directly and indirectly, in the pretended contract upon which is based the pretended claim," without alleging any facts upon which the conclusion is based, does not constitute a defense.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; George Puterbaugh, Judge.

Application by O. H. McConoughey for a writ of mandamus to compel W. H. Jackson and others to issue a city warrant. Judgment for petitioner, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

J. S. Callen, Callen & Neale, and Gibson & Titus, for appellants. A. M. McConoughey, for respondent.

SEARLS, C. The city of Coronado is a city of the sixth class. M. R. Vanderkloot was president of the board of trustees, and W. H. Jackson was clerk of said city. In April, 1892, the petitioner filed a claim in writing with the board of trustees for $500 on account of expenses incurred by him in procuring, at the request of said city, through the board of trustees thereof, counsel and legal services for said city. The bill was approved by the board of trustees, and ordered paid, and a warrant on the city treasurer, payable to petitioner, for the same, was ordered. Vanderkloot and Jackson, the clerk, refused to draw, sign, or countersign the warrant. There was sufficient money in the treasury to pay said warrant. Upon this showing, on petition, the superior court, on the 8th day of February, 1893, issued an alternative writ of mandate to the president and clerk, requiring the president to draw and sign the warrant, and the clerk to countersign and deliver said warrant, or to show cause, etc. The defendants appeared, and demurred to the petition, which demurrer was overruled by the court, whereupon M. R. Vanderkloot, the president of the board, drew and signed the warrant, and made default herein. Defendant Jackson filed an answer, and subsequently an amended answer, to which a demurrer was interposed, and sustained by the court. Defendant thereupon declined to amend, and a peremptory writ of mandate issued, from which he appeals.

The amended answer, for cause why the writ should not issue, (1) denied that the city was indebted to the petitioner; (2) averred upon information and belief that there was not sufficient available money in the treasury that could be legally appropriated to its payment; (3) set up the fact that on the 2d of May, 1892, the board of trustees repealed and rescinded the allowance of the claim and order to draw the warrant; (4) alleged that plaintiff was an officer of the city, and interested in the claim; (5) that the matter is still under consideration by the board of the trustees, and that since the pendency of this action, and on the 30th of January, 1893, the board of trustees determined the warrant had been ordered drawn through mistake, inadvertence, and misapprehension, rescinded the former action, and ordered that the warrant drawn and signed by the president be canceled, annulled, etc. The affidavit, which in proceedings of this character stands as a complaint, is lacking in preciseness of detail and fullness of statement, but was still sufficient as against the general demurrer interposed to its sufficiency. In addition to the merely formal parts of the pleading, it in fact and effect avers an indebtedness of $500 on the part of the city to petitioner for expenses by him incurred in procuring counsel and legal services for the former, at its order and request by its board of trustees; and, being so indebted, the board ordered his bill and written demand therefor paid, and ordered a warrant drawn in his favor for the amount, etc., which the president and clerk refused to draw and countersign; that there was money in the treasury to pay it, etc. These are the essential facts giving to petitioner a right to the writ, and the demurrer to the complaint was properly overruled.

The first defense set out by Jackson, the clerk of the board, denies the indebtedness to petitioner. This, as defense, is wholly insufficient for two reasons: (1) It is the denial of a conclusion of law, and not of the facts, viz. the expenses incurred by petitioner for the city. (2) The law has not constituted the clerk either the guardian of the board of trustees or an appellate court to pass upon the facts once decided by the board. The claim was one which the board of trustees had jurisdiction to hear and determine. Such determination was a judicial act, and involved a determination of the fact of indebtedness, and when so determined, whether right or wrong, its action was binding upon the clerk. A like question was involved in McFarland v. McCowen, 98 Cal. 329, 33 Pac. 113, and reference is made to that case for a more full expression on this subject.

The allegation in the second defense, of a want of funds in the treasury on the 18th of April, 1892, etc., is upon information and belief, and, being a fact peculiarly within the knowledge of defendant, should have been positive in form. As clerk of a municipal corporation of the sixth class one of the duties of defendant was to keep an exact account of all moneys received and disbursed, and a "treasurer's account," which, if correctly kept, showed to a fraction the moneys in the treasury, the warrants drawn thereon, etc. To this extent he discharged one of the functions of an auditor. The treasurer must give duplicate receipts for all moneys received, one of which must be filed with the clerk; and the treasurer can only pay out money on warrants countersigned by the clerk, etc. In short, he is the financial accountant of the city, and practically the only check upon the treasurer. Mun. Corp. Act, §§ 876, 878.

No doubt the legislative department of a municipal corporation, viz. the board of trustees, may at any time before the rights of third persons have vested, if consistent with the law of its creation and its rules of action, rescind previous votes and orders. Dill. Mun. Corp. § 290. Thus it has been held that a resolution to construct a public sewer may be rescinded at a subsequent meeting. People v. City of Rochester, 5 Lans. 11. The right of reconsidering a last measure at the same meeting, or pursuant to its rules at a subsequent one, is a right inherent in all legislative assemblies. Jersey City v. State, 30 N. J. Law, 521. So, in Estey v. Starr, 56 Vt. 690, it was held that a vote of a town meeting rescinding its action at a former meeting in authorizing a subscription in aid of a railroad, was lawful, no rights of third parties having vested, and nothing having been done under the authority to subscribe. Tucker v. Justices, 13 Ired. 434, goes as far as any case we have examined. In that case a public bridge had been constructed, and an order made by the county court upon the proper officer to make payment, which was not done for want of funds. At the next term of court, the bridge having fallen down, the order was annulled, and the action of the court was upheld, and a mandamus denied. A valid claim, however, properly presented to the trustees of a municipal corporation, and allowed and approved by them, and their action accepted by the claimant, becomes a valid and binding contract, and can only be avoided for such cause as invalidates other contracts. Corporations can no more play fast and loose over their contracts than can individuals. In Brown v. Winterport, 79 Me. 305, 9 Atl. 844, it was held that a vote ratifying a contract made by town officers without due authority could not be rescinded so as to affect the validity of the contract. In the present case, when the trustees, upon the presentation of petitioner's demand, allowed it, and ordered a warrant drawn on the treasurer for the amount, it established his right to a recovery; and, being the amount asked for by him, he will be presumed to have accepted the action of the board, or, at any rate, such presumption will arise from his demand of the warrant and thereafter the board was not at liberty, without the consent of petitioner, to rescind its action, except for some cause which would defeat the claim, treated as a contract. Nothing of that kind is shown in the answer. The attempt at a defense by averring upon information and belief that petitioner was a city officer, and "interested both directly and indirectly in the pretended contract, upon which is based the pretended claim referred to in the complaint herein," without the statement of any facts upon which the conclusion is based, or the nature of the contract referred to, cannot be said to rise to the dignity of a defense. There is no contract set out in the petition, except such as is implied from the statement of expenses incurred in procuring counsel and legal services for, etc., at the request of the board of trustees. There being no showing that the order or warrant was irregular on its face, or one which the board was not authorized to draw, it was the duty of the clerk to countersign it, and the judgment appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: VANCLIEF, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

BARCLAY et al. v. SEVERANCE et al. (No. 19,254.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 7, 1894.)

APPEAL—FINDINGS—REVIEW.

The findings of the court will not be disturbed where the evidence is conflicting.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; Walter Van Dyke, Judge.

Action by H. A. Barclay and others against Caroline Severance and others. From a judgment for defendants, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Chapman & Hendrick and R. B. Carpenter, for appellants. Lee & Scott and W. P. Gardiner, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. Action to recover broker's commissions for negotiating a sale of defendants' land. Defendants had judgment, and plaintiffs appeal therefrom, and the order denying their motion for a new trial. It is claimed by appellants that the findings attacked by the specifications are not sustained by the evidence. This claim cannot be maintained, for the reason that an examination of the record shows that the evidence is substantially conflicting. The findings, therefore, under the well-established rule of this court, cannot be disturbed. Judgment and order affirmed.

(101 Cal. 275)

SANFORD v. EAST RIVERSIDE IRRIGATION DISTRICT. (No. 19,290.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 7, 1894.)

CONTRACT—INTERPRETATION—ACTION FOR BREACH—DAMAGES—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE—APPEAL—VERDICT—REVIEW.

1. The finding of a jury will not be disturbed where there is a substantial conflict in the evidence.

2. A contract for sinking wells recited that defendant called for proposals for bids for sinking "one or more" wells, and that plaintiff's assignors filed a bid to sink "said wells," and were awarded the contract for sinking "five wells." It provided that they should furnish material to complete "said five wells," that no payment was to be demanded on "any well" until it was sunk 200 feet, and that 25 per cent. of the price was to be detained until "each well" was completed, etc. Held, that the contract was for the sinking of five wells.

3. In an action by the assignee of the contractors for damages caused by defendant's refusal to allow such assignors to sink more than one well, it appeared that there were a number of other wells on the same ranch where the wells in dispute were to be sunk, which averaged about 400 feet in depth. Plaintiff's damage was established by evidence of the profit on wells of the average depth of 400 feet, and the verdict for plaintiff was for a less sum than the profits would have been as thus shown. Held, that the verdict was supported by the evidence.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Bernardino county; George E. Otis, Judge.

Action by John E. Sanford against the East Riverside Irrigation District, (a corporation.) From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

R. E. Bledsoe, Purington & Adair, J. S. Noyes, and Elmer E. Rowell, for appellant. C. J. Perkins and Paris & Saterwhite, for respondent.

SEARLS, C. Action to recover for work and labor in sinking a well, and damages for violation of a contract. Plaintiff had judgment for $2,300.35 and costs, from which judgment, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendant appeals.

There are two counts in the complaint, in each of which the same contract is set out. One is to recover for services rendered under such contract, the other to recover damages on account of defendant's refusal to comply with the terms of the contract and to permit plaintiff's assignors to prosecute work thereunder. On the 12th day of November, 1891, the corporation defendant, as the party of the first part, entered into the contract in question with J. E. Sanford & Co., as parties of the second part. The contract recites that defendant has published proposals for bids for sinking one or more artesian wells upon its lands, known as the Garner and McKenzie places, on Lytle creek, San Bernardino county, Cal.; that Sanford & Co. have filed bids to sink said wells; and that defendant has, by resolution of its board of directors, awarded to them the contract for sinking five wells, and has authorized its president and secretary to sign a contract therefor. It is thereupon agreed that the party of the second part (Sanford & Co.) shall commence immediately sinking a well on said Garner tract, commencing with a 10-inch casing, and continue as far as such casing can be practicably sunk; then with an 8-inch casing as far as practicable; then with a 6-inch casing as far as practicable; the various depths to be according to the best judgment of the party of the second part; the well to be sunk to the depth of 500 feet, if practicable and possible in the judgment of the second party. Then follows the price to be paid per foot for sinking, which is $4.10 per foot for first 200 feet, $5.75 for third 100 feet, $6.50 for fourth 100 feet, and $7.50 for fifth 100 feet. Party of the second part to furnish all material, labor, and machinery to complete said five wells. It is further agreed that if the engineer of defendant shall direct that said wells shall stop at any point under 275 feet, 25 cents per foot is to be added to price, but if, by reducing the size of pipe, the party of the second part cannot go beyond the depth of 275 feet, nothing is to be added to the price per foot. Payments to be made monthly from time of placing machinery at first well, at the rate of 75 per cent. of contract price for distance sunk, and residue when each well is completed No payment to be made on any well until 200 feet has been sunk. The pipe, workmanship, and other conditions not specified shall be according to the specifications of the engineer, which are attached to and made a part of the agreement. The specifications are lengthy, and their provisions need not be set out except as questions arise under them. To that extent they are as follows: (1) The particular places on the McKenzie and Garner places where the wells are to be sunk are to be designated by the engineer of defendant. (2) All wells are to be sunk to a depth of 500 feet, unless obstacles are encountered which make this impossible; and the contractor shall use his utmost endeavor to attain such depth, but, when impossible to do so, the engineer may receive a well of less depth, after requiring the contractor to perforate the pipe, to admit such streams as are passed in boring; but the engineer must not accept a well of less than 200 feet in depth. The contractor shall perforate the pipe to admit all streams as desired by the engineer. (3) If by accident, without negligence or fault of contractor, any well of 200 feet in depth cannot be reduced and sunk deeper, it may be accepted and paid for on being perforated. But accidents from incompetence or carelessness of contractor or his subordinates must be borne by him.

According to the complaint the contractors commenced to sink the first well about November 12, 1891, and reached a depth of 253 feet, when they met obstacles rendering it impossible and impracticable, according to their best judgment, to go deeper, of which, on May 3, 1892, they notified the defendant in writing, and requested its engineer in charge to notify them if he desired the pipes perforated; but he failed to notify them; that they have been willing and able to do so since. Defendant was requested to designate through its engineer the particular spot or place for starting a second well, or any one of the remaining four wells, all of which were refused. The rights of the contractors, including the right to damages for a breach of the contract, are averred to have been assigned to plaintiff. The answer, according to the contention of appellant, raised three issues: First, that there had never been an assignment of the contract and alleged indebtedness to the plaintiff; second, that said well had not been sunk as deep as possible or practicable; third, that, even if the defendant had failed to carry out the contract, the plaintiff or his assignors had suffered no actual damage thereby. There was an assignment to the plaintiff in evidence, dated February 2, 1892, whereby the money due the firm and the interest of plaintiff's copartner in the contract were transferred to him. In justice to counsel for the appellant, it should be stated that he does not urge this point in his brief.

Under the head of insufficiency of the evidence it is urged that there was no evidence that plaintiff reduced the well to a 6-inch pipe or casing, as required by the contract, or that he attempted to do so; and does show that, if a 6-inch pipe had been used, the well could have been sunk to a greater depth than 253 feet. The testimony involved a substantial conflict. F. C. Finkle, the engineer of defendant, testified, in substance, that he was desirous of having the well sunk deeper than the 253 feet, and that, when he found the bottom of the 8-inch pipe was mashed, he told the plaintiff, if he could not straighten it out, to pull it, and put in a 6-inch pipe, but that plaintiff thought he could straighten it. On the part of plaintiff there was testimony tending to show that they struck granite boulders in the bottom of the well, which crushed the 8-inch pipe, and broke or injured the ring and shoe, which were of steel, and as a result they could not remove or break up the obstacle so as to get a smaller pipe through; that he worked for 20 days with pumps and drills, and 1,500 pounds of iron, trying to break it up and get it out of the way, and failed. There was also testimony tending to show that the 8-inch pipe could not be pulled out of the well. Under these circumstances it was a question of fact for the jury to determine whether or not plaintiff performed on his part all that was requisite under the contract; and, having found in favor of the plaintiff, such finding cannot be disturbed.

It is further objected that the contract did not provide for sinking more than one well, and hence that defendant is not liable for damages beyond those sustained on account of one such well. The contract recites that defendant has called for proposals for bids for the sinking "of one or more artesian wells;" that Sanford & Co. "have filed a written bid to sink said wells," and "was awarded the contract for sinking five wells." Then follows the agreement in which it is provided that plaintiff's assignors agree to furnish all the material, etc., to "complete said five wells." It also provides that the engineer of defendant may direct that said wells may stop at any point under 275 feet. "No payment is to be demanded on any well until it shall have been sunk over 200 feet," and 25 per cent. of the price is to be detained until "each well is completed." The specifications provide where the wells are to be located,—the places "where each well is to be sunk shall be designated by the engineer in charge." There are many other allusions to the different wells, but the foregoing quotations are deemed sufficient to indicate the intention of the parties in the premises to include the sinking of five wells. As a basis for the damages sustained by plaintiff in not being permitted to sink the four other wells provided for in the contract, it was shown that there are a number of wells on the same ranch and in the vicinity of a depth averaging about 400 feet, some of them being as deep as 600 feet, and others not over 200 feet. The damage of plaintiff was established by evidence tending to show the profit upon wells of this average depth of 400 feet, and, as the verdict of the jury was far below the sum which would be reached by the profits shown by the witnesses, it cannot be said the verdict was not supported by the evidence.

It is quite apparent that the problem of profit upon the sinking of artesian wells is not one susceptible of solution with anything like mathematical certainty. The different strata to be pierced, the difficulties to be met with of one kind and another, are factors which are likely to affect the result, but cannot be foretold with certainty. In the present instance the number and character of the wells driven in the vicinity shed light upon the question, and would seem to afford the best means for its solution. The court below seems to have taken this view, and I think correctly. The damages were fairly ascertainable, both in their character and origin, within the purview of section 3301 of the Civil Code. This disposes of the alleged errors urged by appellant. The judgment and order appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: VANCLIEF, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

---

101 Cal. 271

PEOPLE ex rel. HOWLAND v. DREHER.
(No. 19,201.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 7, 1894.)

NUISANCE—OBSTRUCTING PUBLIC STREET—ACTION BY PEOPLE—ESTOPPEL—REVIEW OF FINDING OF FACT.

1. In an action by the people on the relation of an individual to abate an obstruction in a public street, where it appears that the street was never dedicated or accepted, plaintiff cannot invoke an estoppel on the ground that relator, an abutting property owner, acted on an agreement with defendant to open the street, since the action by the people is not to vindicate relator's private rights.

2. A finding on conflicting evidence, that an alleged public street was never dedicated, will not be reviewed.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; W. P. Wade, Judge.

Action by the people, on relation of James L. Howland, against P. J. Dreher, to abate a nuisance caused by obstructing an alleged public street. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Westerman & Broughton and Atty. Gen. Hart, for appellant. W. A. Bell, for respondent.

SEARLS, C. This is an action to abate a nuisance, alleged to have been committed by defendant by obstructing the south half of a public street for a distance of 660 feet, which street is situate in the city of Pomona, county of Los Angeles, Cal. The cause was tried by the court without the intervention of a jury, written findings filed, and judgment rendered thereon in favor of defendant, from which judgment, and from an order refusing a new trial, plaintiff prosecutes this appeal. The court, upon the issues made by the pleadings as to whether the street in question had been dedicated and accepted as a public street, found that in the month of May, 1887, the locus in quo "was laid out and graded by private citizens, who offered to dedicate the same to the public as and for a public street, but the same was never dedicated as a public street, or used or accepted by the public as a public street, or known by the public as Green street, or any street." The court further found, in substance, that in May, 1891, defendant plowed up the south half of the strip of land in question, planted trees thereon, and surrounded the same by a ditch, so as to render such south half of said proposed street impassable for vehicles, etc., but that the land was not a public street, and was never used or accepted as such; also that the relator, James L. Howland, owns land abutting on said proposed street, opposite the portion so plowed up and obstructed; that he has been in the habit of using it as a mode of egress and ingress to the land of him, the said Howland; and, were it a public street, it would be the only street running by or to his land by which he could have egress and ingress thereto. The court further finds that the public does not, and has not been accustomed to, use said strip of land in any manner; is not discommoded or inconvenienced by said obstructions, etc. A common-law dedication is the setting apart of land for the public use, and, to constitute a valid and complete dedication, two things are necessary, to wit, an intention by the owner, clearly indicated by his words or acts, to dedicate the land to public use, and an acceptance by the public of the dedication. Elliott, Roads & S. 85; San Francisco v. Canavan, 42 Cal. 553; San Francisco v. Calderwood, 31 Cal. 585; Harding v. Jasper, 14 Cal. 647; People v. Reed, 81 Cal. 70, 22 Pac. 474. And, before it has been accepted, the owner of the land is not precluded from revoking at any time the offer to dedicate. Holdane v. Trustees, 21 N. Y. 478; San Francisco v. Canavan, supra. Dedication is a question of fact, to be determined by a jury, or by the court sitting as such. Harding v. Jasper, 14 Cal. 648. This being so, and the court below having found the fact of acceptance against the appellant, upon testimony involving a substantial conflict, the result, upon well-established principles, will not be disturbed by this court.

Much of the argument of appellant is directed to the point that the relator, James L. Howland, who, with the defendant, Dreher, agreed to open a public highway upon the line dividing their respective lands, and who was at expense in grading such contemplated highway, and who is claimed to have altered his condition in view of such proposed highway, so that pecuniary injury will ensue to him if the road is not opened, may invoke the doctrine of estoppel as against the defendant. This action is not brought to vindicate the private rights of the relator, or to secure to him any privilege not enjoyed equally by others. It is brought by the people, to conserve the rights which the general public have in the locus in quo as a highway. The predicate of those rights is that it is a highway. Failing in this, the public has no rights to conserve. In Clements v. West Troy, 16 Barb. 251, the proprietors of the village had laid out the same by a plan, upon which an alley was laid down, and house lots conveyed, bounded by the alley. The court said: "As between the original proprietors and those to whom they conveyed, this act of the proprietors secured a right of way. But the alley thus designated, and in respect to which the purchasers had acquired an indefeasible right of way, did not thereby become a public highway. The dedication must be accepted. The highway must be laid out. Until that is done, the alley would remain the property of the original proprietors, subject to the right of way in those who had taken the deeds of lots bounded upon the alley." To much the same effect are Underwood v. Stuyvesant, 19 Johns. 186; Child v. Chappell, 9 N. Y. 257; Oswego v. Oswego Canal Co., 6 N. Y. 257; Trustees v. Otis, 37 Barb. 50. Whether the relator, by reason of the transactions between himself and defendant, has or has not acquired rights peculiar to himself as an individual, which he can enforce, is not a question which, under the pleadings and issues, can be passed upon here. The findings are all supported by evidence, and are conclusive of the case. The judgment and order appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: TEMPLE, C.; BELCHER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

101 Cal. 292

FLETCHER et al. v. DENNISON et al. (No. 19,301.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 8, 1894.)

MORTGAGES—OPTION TO DECLARE PAYABLE—WAIVER.

1. The complaint in an action to foreclose a mortgage, giving the holder the option to compound the interest, or to declare the principal payable, upon any default in interest, alleged that, on the failure of defendant to pay the interest due on a certain day, "plaintiff elected to declare, and did declare, the principal sum due and payable." Held, as against a demurrer, a sufficient allegation of election when the interest became due.

2. The holder of a mortgage note containing a condition giving him the option to compound the interest, or declare the principal due, upon any default in interest, does not waive his right to make an election by a delay of 59 days after a default.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; Lucien Shaw, Judge.

Action by Julia M. Fletcher and others against Lucius Dennison and others to foreclose a mortgage. Judgment for plaintiffs. Defendants appeal. Affirmed.

E. C. Bower, for appellants. A. R. Metcalfe, for respondents.

McFARLAND, J. On October 21, 1891, the defendants gave their negotiable promissory note to plaintiffs for $3,000, due two years after date, with interest at 10 per cent. per annum, payable semiannually, according to coupons attached. The note contained this clause: "If any interest or any installment thereof be not paid when due, it may be compounded semiannually and added to said principal, and thereafter bear interest at the rate of ten per cent. per annum; or, at the option of the holder of this note, if said interest or any installment thereof be not paid when due, the whole of said principal sum shall immediately become due and payable, without notice to us." At the same time, defendants executed to plaintiffs a certain mortgage to secure said note. Interest not having been paid when due, plaintiffs commenced this action to foreclose the mortgage, for a deficiency judgment, etc. Those of the defendants who did not suffer default demurred to the complaint, upon the general ground of want of statement of sufficient facts, and upon the special ground of ambiguity and uncertainty. The demurrer was overruled; and, defendants declining to answer, judgment was rendered for plaintiffs. Defendants appeal from the judgment upon the judgment roll alone, relying upon the alleged insufficiency of the complaint.

Appellants' counsel argues that respondents' election to consider the principal due was not declared until 59 days after such election might have been declared, and that, by thus waiting, they waived their right to elect at all. This contention is based upon the fact that this suit was not brought until 59 days after the election might have been made, and upon the theory that there was no election until it was declared by the institution of the suit. The record before us shows that the time was only about 39 instead of 59 days. But, in the first place, assuming the time to be as stated by counsel, and that there was no election until the suit was brought, still we could not hold that, as a matter of law, 59 days was an unreasonable time within which to make the election. Hewitt v. Dean, 91 Cal. 5, 27 Pac. 423. In the second place, it is averred in the complaint "that on the failure of the defendants to pay the installment of interest which, by the terms of said promissory note and the said coupons, became and was due on the 21st day of October, 1892, the plaintiffs elected to declare, and did declare, the said principal sum and the interest thereon due and payable." This, as against a demurrer, was a sufficient averment of election at the time the interest became due. There is an averment in the complaint that the principal sum, together with interest "to be compounded semiannually from October 21, 1891, is now due and payable." This averment was evidently made upon the notion entertained by respondents, or their counsel, that, after having elected to consider the principal due, they could nevertheless, according to the terms of the note, recover compound interest. But, assuming this notion to be wrong, still the averment did not make the complaint vulnerable to the assault of either the general or the special demurrer; and, as a fact, judgment was not rendered for compound interest. To reverse the judgment in this case for any of the reasons urged by appellants would be to establish a precedent that would tend to make mortgage securities exceedingly insecure. The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: DE HAVEN, J.; FITZGERALD, J.

(101 Cal. 303)

SPEARS v. MODOC COUNTY et al. (No. 18,204.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 9, 1894.)

CONVICTION UNDER ORDINANCE—REPEAL PENDING APPEAL—EFFECT.

A judgment of conviction under an ordinance cannot be enforced if, pending an appeal therefrom, the ordinance is repealed.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court. Modoc county; C. L. Claflin, Judge.

Action by one Spears against the county of Modoc and others to restrain the enforcement of an execution. From a judgment entered upon an order sustaining a demurrer to the complaint, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Goodwin & Goodwin, for appellant. D. W. Jenks, E. E. Copeland, and Spencer & Raker, for respondents.

HARRISON, J. The plaintiff was convicted in a justice's court, January 27, 1890, of violating an ordinance of the county of Modoc forbidding the keeping of a saloon where spirituous liquors were sold, and on the same day judgment was entered against him, by which he was sentenced to "pay a fine of five hundred dollars, and, in default of payment thereof, be imprisoned in the county jail of said county of Modoc for the period of one day for each dollar of said fine, or until such fine be satisfied." From this judgment he appealed to the superior court. On the 19th of February, 1891, that court affirmed the judgment of the justice's court. Before the hearing of the appeal the ordinance under which the conviction was had was repealed, the repeal taking effect January 24, 1891. June 3, 1891, an execution upon this judgment was issued out of the justice's court, under which the sheriff levied upon certain property of the plaintiff herein, and was proceeding to sell the same when this action was brought to restrain the enforcement of the execution. A demurrer to the complaint was sustained by the court, and from the judgment entered thereon the plaintiff has appealed.

By the appeal to the superior court the enforcement of the judgment appealed from was stayed until after the determination of the appeal. Pen. Code, § 1470. As no undertaking on appeal was required, the appeal itself operated as a supersedeas. McGarrahan v. Maxwell, 28 Cal. 91. The effect of the appeal was, therefore, to preserve the rights of the parties in the same condition as they were prior to the entry of the judgment, (Dulin v. Coal Co., 98 Cal. 304, 33 Pac. 123;) and, until the determination of the appeal, the proceeding was a pending action, in which the rights of neither party had been conclusively determined. In People v. Frisbie, 26 Cal. 135, an appeal had been taken from a judgment for delinquent taxes, rendered in favor of the plaintiff, and the judgment of the district court was affirmed. Pending the appeal, and before decision thereon, the legislature passed an act authorizing an additional defense to be interposed by the defendant in pending suits, and it was held that the appeal had suspended the operation of the judgment, so that the action was still pending, and that the rights of the plaintiff were limited to its cause of action, and that it did not have a vested right to the judgment. See, also, People v. Treadwell, 66 Cal. 400, 5 Pac. 686. In Kay v. Goodwin, 6 Bing. 576, 4 Moore & P. 341, it was said by Tindal, C. J., that the effect of repealing a statute is "to obliterate it as completely from the records of the parliament as if it had never passed; and it must be considered as a law that never existed, except for the purpose of those actions which were commenced, prosecuted, and concluded whilst it was an existing law." This principle has been applied more frequently to penal statutes, and it may be regarded as an established rule that the repeal of a penal statute, without any saving clause, has the effect to deprive the court in which any prosecution under the statute is pending of all power to proceed further in the matter. "The repeal of a statute puts an end to all prosecutions under the statute repealed, and to all proceedings growing out of it pending at the time of the repeal." Sedgw. St. & Const. Law, 130. See, also, End. Interp. St. § 479. The proceeding is arrested at the very point where it is at the date of the repeal; if before indictment, no indictment can be found; if after indictment, and before trial, no conviction can be had; if after conviction, and before judgment, no judgment can be rendered. If the judgment is appealed from, and its enforcement is suspended until the determination of the appeal, the power to enforce the judgment falls with the repeal of the statute, and the appellate court will direct a dismissal of the proceedings. "If a penal statute is repealed pending an appeal, and before the final action of the appellate court, it will prevent an affirmance of a conviction, and the prosecution must be dismissed, or judgment reversed." Suth. St. Const. § 166. Until the determination of the appeal, the proceeding is pending in court, and the judgment does not become final until affirmed by the appellate court. If, during the interim, the legislature repeals the statute under which the prosecution is had, it operates as a discharge of the defendant. "The repeal of the law imposing the penalty is of itself a remission." Per Taney, C. J., State v. Baltimore & O. Railroad Co., 3 How. 552. In Speckert v. City of Louisville, 78 Ky. 287, an appeal had been taken from a judgment against the defendants for violating a city ordinance. Pending the appeal, the ordinance under which the penalty was imposed was repealed, and, upon that fact being brought to the knowledge of the court, the judgment was for that reason reversed, with directions to dismiss the proceeding, the court saying: "The effect of the appeal was to suspend the judgment, and while the judgment below is regarded as final for the purposes of an appeal, its execution cannot be enforced until the appeal is disposed of. It is well settled that no judgment can be rendered in an action to enforce a penalty when the statute under which the proceeding is had has been repealed. When such a statute is repealed, it ends all the litigation under it, and if the judgment is not final,—that is, if the action seeking to recover the penalty is not finally disposed of, the right to the penalty depending upon the affirmance or reversal of the judgment,—and the repeal is brought to the knowledge of the court, it must necessarily result in a dismissal of the action." The same doctrine is maintained in Tuton v. State, 4 Tex. App. 472; Monroe v. State, 8 Tex. App. 343.

The judgment rendered in the justice's court was the infliction of a penalty for the violation of a law, and not the determination of any rights of the parties arising out of contract or obligation; and the attempt to take the property of the plaintiff, under an execution issued on that judgment, is only the enforcement of the penalty which the county, by its repeal of the ordinance, has remitted. The county has no greater right to enforce the penalty in this manner than it would have to arrest and confine the appellant under a warrant issued upon the same judgment. Section 329 of the Political Code is limited in its application to the repeal of a "law," and does not extend to the repeal of a municipal ordinance. See People v. Tisdale, 57 Cal. 104. The judgment is reversed.

We concur: PATERSON, J.; GAROUTTE, J.

101 Cal. 326

WEBSTER v. SAN PEDRO LUMBER CO.

(No. 19,273.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 9, 1894.)

EVIDENCE—ACCOUNT BOOKS—PRELIMINARY PROOF.

1. The determination of the trial court as to the insufficiency of the preliminary proof necessary for the introduction of any documentary evidence will not be disturbed if there has been no abuse of discretion.

2. The mere fact that defendant's bookkeeper manipulated its books in order to defraud it does not, of itself, necessitate a reversal of the lower court's ruling that they were sufficiently correct to be used in evidence against plaintiff.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; J. W. McKinley, Judge.

Action by E. W. Webster against the San Pedro Lumber Company. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Graff & Latham, for appellant. Stephen M. White and R. H. T. Variel, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. This is, in form, an action to recover certain moneys alleged to have been deposited by plaintiff with defendant at various times from January 1, 1887, to November 1, 1889, to be held by defendant in trust for plaintiff. The answer denies that any moneys were deposited with defendant in trust, and avers, substantially, that, during the times mentioned in the complaint, defendant was engaged solely in the business of buying, selling, and dealing in lumber; that it was not engaged in banking business, and was not in any respect a trust company; that from August 31, 1887, to October 31, 1889, plaintiff was an employe of the defendant in the lumber business; that between August 31, 1887, and April 29, 1889, plaintiff did make certain deposits of money with defendant, but that they were made at the request of plaintiff, and for his accommodation and convenience, and not for the accommodation of defendant; that, during said times, plaintiff made purchases of lumber from defendant; that defendant has fully paid plaintiff for his services, and for all money deposited; that defendant kept a full and accurate account of all transactions between it and plaintiff, and that upon a settlement of the accounts between them on October 31, 1889, there was due and owing from plaintiff to defendant the sum of $81.24. The answer also set up the statute of limitations as to all items prior to April 29, 1889. The court found, substantially, that all the averments of the answer were true, except, perhaps, as to the statute of limitations, and gave judgment for defendant for the $81.24. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment and from an order denying a motion for a new trial.

The main contention of appellant is that the evidence does not support the findings, but this contention cannot be maintained. Appellant does not pretend to have kept, himself, any general account of the various transactions between him and the respondent. He relied upon the books of account kept by respondent of its general and current business, and made no objection to the state of his accounts with respondent, as reported from its books, until long after he had gone out of its employment. The only evidence of importance offered by him was his own testimony, based mainly upon written memoranda which he said he had made from memory of a certain book in which he had made some entries, and which had been destroyed. His recollection of the things to which he testified was so uncertain, and his testimony in chief was so modified in his cross-examination, that, if there had been no other evidence in the case, we would not be justified in disturbing the findings of the court.

Appellant contends that the court erred in admitting in evidence the account books of respondent. The objection to the introduction of the books was not upon the general ground that the books of respondent were not competent evidence, but upon the ground that the preliminary proof of their correctness, etc., was not sufficient. The general rule is that, where certain preliminary proof is necessary to the introduction of any kind of documentary evidence, the sufficiency of such proof is to be determined in the first instance by the trial judge, and that his determination of the matter will not be disturbed unless there has been an abuse of discretion. Bryce v. Joynt, 63 Cal. 378; Butler v. Beech, 55 Cal. 28; Verzan v. McGregor, 23 Cal. 342. In the case at bar there was clearly sufficient evidence of the correctness, etc., of the books to warrant the court in admitting them in evidence. Afterwards, one of the chief bookkeepers of respondent absconded, and it appeared that he had made certain manipulations of some of the books, particularly the cash book, for the purpose of defrauding the respondent and embezzling some of its funds; but there was clearly sufficient evidence as to the correctness of the books, so far as the accounts and rights of those dealing with the respondent were concerned. The evidence as to the acts of the absconding bookkeeper is not sufficient to upset the ruling of the court as to the sufficiency of the preliminary proof to warrant the introduction of the books. There is nothing in the objections to questions asked witnesses about the correctness of the books, and there is no other point in the case which needs notice. Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: FITZGERALD, J.; DE HAVEN, J.

101 Cal. 312

HOLLENBACH v. SCHNABEL. (No. 19,-248.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 9, 1894.)

REPLEVIN—EVIDENCE—JUDICIAL NOTICE.

1. The affidavit, bond, and sheriff's return, being filed by the sheriff, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 520, each describing the property as in the complaint, and the latter reciting its taking and delivery to plaintiff, need not be formally introduced as evidence, but the court may take judicial notice of them as showing the fact of plaintiff's possession.

2. A finding that plaintiff did not rescind certain sales to defendant is one of fact, and not a conclusion of law.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; Walter Van Dyke, Judge.

Claim and delivery by Phil Hollenbach, trading as Phil Hollenbach & Co., against E. C. Schnabel. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Henry Bleeker, for appellant. Graff & Latham and M. E. C. Munday, for respondent.

SEARLS, C. This is an action of claim and delivery, to recover possession of certain liquors sold and delivered by plaintiff to defendant Schnabel, and which it is claimed were procured by fraudulent representations of defendant. The cause was tried by the court, written findings filed, and judgment ordered in favor of defendant (1) for the return of the property; (2) for the sum of $721.75, the value thereof, in case a return cannot be had. Plaintiff moved for a new trial, and, his motion being overruled, appeals from the order denying such new trial. The court found, among other things, that on the 28th day of December, 1889, the sheriff of Los Angeles county, under and by virtue of an affidavit, undertaking, etc., filed by direction of the plaintiff, took possession of the property, and thereafter and on the 3d day of January, 1890, delivered the same to the plaintiff, and that the value thereof was and is $721.75. Appellant contends that there was no evidence in support of these findings. There was on file, among the papers in the case, the affidavit and undertaking on behalf of plaintiff for a return of the property, describing it as in the complaint; the return of the sheriff duly certified, showing the taking of the property from defendant, and describing it precisely as in the complaint and affidavit; and the statement that he delivered it to the plaintiff, as found by the court. These papers were not formally offered in evidence at the trial, but, being on file as papers in the case, were used by the court in making its findings. Treated as evidence, they showed conclusively the delivery of the property to plaintiff, and the question arises, should a new trial be granted for this cause?

The Code of Civil Procedure (section 520) requires the sheriff to file the affidavit, notice, and undertaking, with his proceedings thereon, with the clerk of the court in which the action is pending. The answer demanded a return of the property, or a recovery of its value and damages. I am of opinion the court was at liberty to take judicial notice of the previous proceedings had in the cause, the evidence of which, under the official signature of its sheriff, was, as provided by the Code, on file in the case. Courts will take judicial notice of their records and officers. The case of Blum v. Stein, 68 Tex. 608, 5 S. W. 454, involved a like principle. The plaintiffs had brought an action, and wrongfully sued out a writ of attachment, under which property of the defendant had been levied upon, sold, and the proceeds paid into court. Defendant had answered, averring the wrongful issue of the attachment, and asking damages on account thereof, which he recovered. The court entered judgment, without reference to the fund arising from the sale of the attached property. On appeal, the supreme court held this to be error, and said: "The court knew judicially that the money was in court;" and, after specifying what should have been done with it, added: "To have authorized the court to do this, it was not necessary that the evidence rejected should have been introduced." In State v. Bowen, 16 Kan. 475, it was held that the court will take judicial notice of all prior proceedings in a case, and hence that, on a plea in bar of "once in jeopardy," it was unnecessary to introduce evidence of a former trial and the verdict rendered on such trial. In every case where a demurrer is interposed to a complaint upon the ground that the cause of action is barred by the statute of limitations, the court must and does, for the purpose of passing upon the question thus presented, take judicial notice of the date at which the action is commenced. And we think it may be said generally that, when necessary for the administration of justice in a given case, the court will take such notice of all previous and undisputed proceedings therein as appear of record, certified or authenticated as required by law, and required by law to be on file or of record in the cause.

The findings of the court show that defendant is the owner of and entitled to the possession of the property in dispute. Plaintiff introduced in evidence the proceedings in insolvency of defendant, which showed his claim of right to the property, and that it was taken from him by the sheriff, and was held by the latter for the plaintiff. Its value was averred in the complaint, and not denied by the answer; hence the only question was as to the possession by plaintiff. To prove this, the return of the sheriff was proper evidence, and, that return being of record, the court might well avail itself of it in determining the fact, or, if the fact had not been found, in determining the right of defendant as a question of law to a judgment for its return. Waldman v. Broder, 10 Cal. 379. The findings of fact cover all the material issues made in the case. The finding "that plaintiff did not rescind said sales, or either of them," was one of fact, and not a conclusion of law, as contended by appellant. It was the ultimate fact, of which the other facts mentioned in the complaint were but evidentiary. See Levins v. Rovegno, 71 Cal. 273, 12 Pac. 161, where the distinction between conclusions of law and deductions of fact is discussed at some length. This fact being found, manifestly all the others become unimportant, for the reason that, if plaintiff failed to rescind the contract, he was not in a position to recover the property sold in an action for claim and delivery, even had the court found the defendant guilty of fraud. The order appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; BELCHER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the order appealed from is affirmed.

(101 Cal. 105)

EGENER v. JUCH et al. (No. 19,155.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 10, 1894.)

In bank.

On rehearing. For original opinion, see 35 Pac. 432.

PER CURIAM. Rehearing denied.

BEATTY, C. J. I dissent from the order denying a rehearing of this cause. The affidavits upon which the attachment was dissolved present no real or substantial conflict as to the facts. The attorney for the respondents made an affidavit stating in general terms that at the time the attachment issued they were actually residing in Los Angeles. But this was merely his conclusion or opinion. The affidavits filed by the plaintiffs, on the other hand, are full and specific as to the facts from which the question of residence is to be determined, and they are not contradicted. They show clearly and beyond any question or room for doubt that the defendants had been, and for many years were, residents of New York; that they were in California at the time of the attachment as members of a theatrical troupe, traveling from place to place, giving performances according to a definite programme, and intending to leave the state within a few days. The case is in no substantial particular like Hanson v. Graham, 23 Pac. 56, or any of the cases upon the authority of which it was decided; and the order of the superior court cannot be upheld upon any theory except that the mere presence of a defendant in the state at the time an action is commenced, under circumstances which enable the plaintiff to secure a personal service of the summons, will make him a resident within the meaning of the attachment law. I do not assent to this proposition, and the court, I am sure, would hesitate to affirm it.

(101 Cal. 260)

EAMES v. CROSIER et al. (No. 19,288.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 7, 1894.)

ACTION ON NOTE — SUFFICIENCY OF COMPLAINT—ISSUES RAISED BY PLEADINGS — CONFORMITY OF FINDING—BURDEN OF PROOF.

1. A complaint alleging that plaintiff is the owner and holder of the note in suit, and that the payee, for value and before maturity, assigned it by indorsement in blank, sufficiently shows plaintiff's title.

2. The complaint alleged that the note was indorsed in blank, and delivered by the payee to plaintiff, which the answer denied, averring that the payee indorsed and delivered the note to one R., who "is still the owner of the note." The evidence showed that the note was indorsed in blank by the payee, and delivered to R., who assigned it, before maturity, to T., and that T. transferred and delivered it to plaintiff. Held, that a finding that T. purchased and received the note in good faith, and without notice of any of the facts stated in the answer, was not outside of the issues raised by the pleadings.

3. Where fraud in the inception of a note is shown, the burden of proof is on the indorsee to show that he is an innocent holder; but the burden is discharged, and a prima facie case made in his favor, where he shows that he purchased for value in the usual course of business.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; Lucien Shaw, Judge.

Action by Eames against Crosier and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal.

Thomas J. Carran, for appellants. Chas. Lantz, for respondent.

PATERSON, J. The plaintiff recovered judgment in the court below for the sum of $681.52 and costs of suit on two promissory notes for $250 each, dated May 9, 1889, payable in 6 and 12 months, respectively, after date. It is claimed by the appellants that the second count does not state a cause of action. The point made is that it is insufficient to allege that the "plaintiff is now the holder and owner of said promissory note." The point would be well taken if this were the only allegation showing ownership in the plaintiff. It is alleged, however, that at the time the note was made it was delivered to Bandholt, the payee named therein, and "that thereafter J. F. Bandholt, for value and before maturity, assigned said note by indorsing same in blank on the back thereof." This, taken in connection with the allegation of possession, was sufficient to show the plaintiff's title; the effect of an indorsement in blank being to make the paper payable to the plaintiff, not as an indorsee, but as bearer. Poorman v. Mills, 35 Cal. 120; Curtis v. Sprague, 51 Cal. 241.

It is alleged in the first count that the note was indorsed in blank, and delivered by Bandholt to the plaintiff; but the findings and evidence show that the note was indorsed in blank by Bandholt, the payee, and delivered to one Runels, who, before the maturity thereof assigned and delivered the same to M. M. Talmage, and that the latter afterwards sold and transferred the note to the plaintiff. It is claimed by appellants that, inasmuch as the plaintiff acquired the note after maturity, he can recover only upon showing title in a prior bona fide holder, and that this cannot be done because of the allegation of a direct assignment of the note from Bandholt to himself. The court found that Talmage "purchased and received and paid for said notes in good faith, without notice of any of the facts stated in the answer." This finding, it is claimed, is outside of the issues raised by the pleadings; and this would be the fact if there were nothing more in the pleadings on the subject than the allegation of the complaint that the note was indorsed and delivered by Bandholt to the plaintiff. In the answer, however, it is denied that Bandholt ever assigned or delivered said note to the plaintiff, and it is alleged that the note was indorsed and delivered by Bandholt to Runels, and that the latter "is still the owner of said note." The finding, therefore, is not outside of the issues raised by the pleadings.

The court found, in accordance with the allegation of the answer, that the defendants were induced to make and deliver the notes by false representations as to the value and character of certain lands, but that Talmage "purchased and received and paid for said notes in good faith, without notice." Appellants contend that this finding that Talmage "purchased and received and paid for said notes in good faith, without notice," is not supported by the evidence. It is admitted that the notes were acquired by both Talmage and the plaintiff for value; but it is claimed that proof, on the part of the defendants, that the notes were procured from the defendants through fraud, cast upon the plaintiff the burden of showing that the plaintiff or Talmage purchased without notice of the equities set up in the answer. Authorities are cited which support this contention, but later decisions qualify the rule as to the burden of proof. Upon proof by the defendant of fraud or illegality in the inception of the note, the burden is cast upon the indorsee to show that he is an innocent holder. This the latter may do by showing that he purchased the note before maturity, or from an innocent indorsee for value, in the usual course of business. When this is done, unless the evidence shows that the note was taken by the plaintiff under circumstances creating the presumption that he knew the facts impeaching its validity, the burden is cast upon the defendant to show, if he would defeat the plaintiff in his action, that the latter took the instrument with notice of the defendant's equities. This view is entirely consistent with what was said by the court in Jordan v. Grover (Cal.) 33 Pac. 889. The statement of the learned justice who wrote the opinion therein, that the plaintiffs, in order to sustain the burden cast upon them, must show that they purchased the note before maturity, in good faith, for value, in the usual course of business, and "under circumstances which create no presumption that they knew the facts which impeach its validity," is merely appositional to the rule which had already been stated, that, "where fraud or illegality in the inception of the note is shown by the maker, the burden of proof is then cast upon the indorsee to show that he is an innocent holder." As before stated, this burden is discharged, and a prima facie case is made in his favor, when he shows that he purchased for value in the usual course of business. In Davis v. Bartlett, 12 Ohio St. 541, the court, referring to Munroe v. Cooper, 5 Pick. 412, cited by appellants herein, said: "And the judge refers to the case of Munroe v. Cooper, 5 Pick. 412, as particularly in point to sustain this view. If to show that he purchased the negotiable paper in the usual course of trade, before due, and for a valuable consideration, in such a case, be understood by the judge as a fair prima facie showing that he acted honestly and without a knowledge of the fraud, the correctness of the remark must be admitted, but, if the remark is to be understood as meaning more, it must be regarded, I think, at variance both with authority and correct reasoning;" and, in summing up, the court used the following language: "But it is certain that it cannot be maintained, either upon authority of the cases, English or American, that, from the fact of the defendants proving a fraudulent diversion or transfer of the paper, it then becomes incumbent upon the plaintiff to prove, not only payment of value and a purchase in the usual course of trade, but also his own ignorance of the fraudulent diversion or transfer." In 1 Daniel, Neg. Inst. (4th Ed.) § 819, the author says, speaking of the holder: "He makes out a prima facie case by proving that the instrument was indorsed to him for value before maturity. Nothing else appearing, a presumption arises that he purchased the note in good faith, without notice of the fraud, because it is not likely that he would give full value for a note which he believed to be fraudulent, taking the hazard upon himself, and because it would be difficult to prove good faith in any better way. These, at least, are the conclusions of well-considered decisions, which rest, as we think, on sound reasoning; but in others the courts have indicated a more stringent rule, and a disposition not to relieve the plaintiff of the burden of proof by mere proof that he gave value. Unless there were circumstances which seemed to bring home to him notice of the fraud or illegality imputed, the requirement of further proof than the giving of fair value seems unreasonably harsh and exacting." This, we think, states the true rule. No circumstances were shown in this case which would impute to the plaintiff or to Talmage any notice of fraud, and it is in evidence that Talmage paid $450, and that plaintiff paid $500, for the notes. We have referred to Talmage particularly, because, to recover on the first note, plaintiff, who took the note when overdue, must show that a prior holder took the note for value before maturity. It is a settled principle that if the party who transferred the instrument to the holder took the note for value, and before maturity, unaffected by any infirmity in it, the holder acquired as good a title, although he took the note when overdue. The findings support the judgment, and we find no error in the record. The judgment and order are therefore affirmed.

We concur: GAROUTTE, J.; HARRISON, J.

(101 Cal. 330)

LEONIS v. BISCAILUZ. (No. 19013.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 12, 1894.)

APPEAL—INTERVENTION BY CREDITOR.

Since Code Civ. Proc. § 387, permits any one interested to intervene before trial, and a judgment confessed to defraud a creditor does not bind the latter, a stranger to the record cannot oppose a motion to reverse and remand, to which the parties of record assent, on the ground that, since rendition of the judgment appealed from, intervener has recovered a money judgment against respondent, and levied on the land in controversy; that she believes that on technical merits the judgment should be affirmed, but that the parties are colluding, as against intervener, for a judgment to divest respondent of title; and that respondent is insolvent and has no other property to satisfy intervener's judgment.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; William P. Wade, Judge.

In the matter of the appeal of Jean Leonis against M. V. Biscailuz. Motion for reversal and remand for new trial, opposed by Victoria J. de Yorba. Motion granted.

Reymert & Orfila and Smith, Winder & Smith, for appellant. R. Dunnigan, J. R. Dupuy, and E. H. Bentley, for respondent.

DE HAVEN, J. The parties to this action have filed a stipulation herein to the effect "that the errors assigned by the appellant in the record in this case are well taken," and that the judgment and order appealed from shall be reversed, and the cause remanded to the superior court for a new trial, and have moved for a judgment in accordance with this stipulation. The motion is opposed by one Victoria J. de Yorba, who has filed an affidavit to the effect that, since the rendition of the judgment appealed from, she has recovered a money judgment against the respondent here, and has caused an execution thereon to be levied upon the land in controversy in this action; "that she is informed and believes that, upon the technical merits of this appeal, the respondent, Biscailuz, will be entitled to have his said judgment against Leonis confirmed, but the affiant avers that she is informed and verily believes that, since her said levy on the said interest of Biscailuz in said Leonis' lands, an arrangement has been arrived at between the appellant, Leonis, and respondent, Biscailuz, that by some form of consent judgment, or by some device, the particulars of which cannot be ascertained by affiant, a judgment of this court shall be suffered by said Biscailuz to be taken against him, as respondent, in favor of the appellant, Leonis, the effect of which arrangement will be to divest the said Biscailuz of title to the lands and property levied on by affiant, and thereby prevent the affiant from the collection of her said judgment from the said Biscailuz." It is also stated in the affidavit that the respondent, Biscailuz, is insolvent, and has no other property than that in controversy here out of which to satisfy the judgment of the affiant, and she asks to be allowed to intervene in the action in this court, and to file briefs on the technical merits, and that the court dispose of the cause on its merits, and without reference to the stipulation of the parties to the record.

The application is certainly a novel one. Under section 387 of the Code of Civil Procedure, one who has an interest in the matter in litigation may be permitted to intervene before the trial of an action, but there is no authority for such intervention after judgment, and while the cause is pending in this court on appeal; nor has a stranger to the record any right to call upon this court to investigate and pass upon the merits of an appeal, when the parties to the record have consented to an affirmance or reversal of the judgment without such investigation and decision. Nor is it at all necessary that the judgment creditor in this case should be permitted to obtrude herself into the case at this time in order to protect her rights. The cause is to be reversed, and when it is remanded to the superior court she will have the right, at any time before judgment in the action, to present her petition for intervention in accordance with section 387 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and have the same determined in accordance with what may then appear to be her rights in the premises; but, if it were otherwise, and final judgment was to be rendered in this court or in the superior court against the respondent herein, upon his confession or stipulation, such judgment, if fraudulently confessed by the alleged judgment debtor for the purpose of preventing the application of the property in controversy to the satisfaction of the claim of the judgment creditor, and the appellant herein participating in such fraudulent purpose, would not conclude the rights of such creditor, although her rights were acquired by the levy upon such property during the pendency of this litigation. It is to "fair and bona fide judgments, and not to fraudulent ones, that the right of their enforcement against purchasers pendente lite is given. For no obligation, either legal or moral, withholds one from setting up his vendor's title as against him who has fraudulently contrived with his vendor to weaken or destroy it after he has conveyed the property to him. No principle of policy or convenience requires that such judgment should conclude his rights." Haywood v. Sledge, 3 Dev. 338.

It follows from what has been said that the motion for leave to intervene, and to file a brief herein, must be denied, and the judgment and order appealed from will be reversed in accordance with the stipulation. Judgment and order reversed.

We concur: McFARLAND, J.; FITZGERALD, J.

---

101 Cal. 286

ST. LOUIS NAT. BANK v. GAY. (No. 19,202.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 8, 1894.)

SET-OFF—WHEN ALLOWABLE — ASSIGNED CLAIMS.

1. Civ. Code, § 1459, provides that the assignee of a nonnegotiable written contract for money takes it subject to all defenses existing in favor of the maker at the time of the indorsement. Code Civ. Proc. § 368, provides that in the case of an assignment of a thing in action, the action by the assignee is without prejudice to any set-off existing at the time of or before notice of the assignment. Held, that the one section is merely an enlargement of the other, and that a defendant may avail himself of a set-off acquired before notice of assignment.

2. "Set-off," as used in section 368, applies to demands independent in their nature and origin, and not arising out of the note or contract sued on.

3. To constitute a "set-off existing at the time of or before notice of the assignment" of the chose in action, within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 368, the set-off need not be actually due at the time of such notice.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; George Puterbaugh, Judge.

Action by the St. Louis National Bank against John H. Gay, Jr., to recover on notes. Defendant pleaded as a counterclaim another note, and the court deducted the amount thereof from plaintiff's judgment. Plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Burnett & Gibbon, for appellant. Conklin & Hughes, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. On February 4, 1891, defendant Gay made and delivered to D. D. Dare two nonnegotiable notes, each for $2,500 and interest, and each payable one year after date. On February 24, 1891, Dare assigned these notes to the plaintiff. On February 12, 1891, Dare made and delivered to J. M. Collins his negotiable promissory note for $5,000 and interest, payable one year after date; and on October 21, 1891, said note to Collins was purchased by and regularly assigned to defendant. At the time of this purchase defendant had no notice that his note to Dare had been assigned to plaintiff, but several months afterwards, on February 1, 1892, he was notified of such assignment, and at the time of such notice the note from Dare to Collins was not quite due; the date of its maturity being February 12, 1892. The two notes sued on matured February 4, 1892. The present action was commenced August 1, 1892, several months after all the notes had matured. The defendant pleaded as a counterclaim the said note from Dare to Collins, and the court allowed it, and deducted its amount from the judgment in favor of plaintiff. The plaintiff appeals from the judgment upon the judgment roll, and contends that the court erred in recognizing said Collins' note as a legal set-off.

The first contention of appellant is that the set-off was not available, because it was not acquired until after the said assignment from Dare to appellant, notwithstanding the fact that it was acquired before notice of such assignment. This contention is based on section 1459 of the Civil Code, which provides that the assignee of a nonnegotiable written contract for money or personal property takes it "subject to all the equities and defenses existing in favor of the maker at the time of the endorsement." But section 368 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides as follows: "In the case of an assignment of a thing in action, the action by the assignee is without prejudice to any set-off or other defense existing at the time of or before notice of the assignment; but this section does not apply to a negotiable promissory note or bill of exchange transferred in good faith and upon good consideration before maturity." These two sections must be construed as though they "had been passed at the same moment of time, and were parts of the same statute." Pol. Code, § 4480. Section 1459 is not restrictive; and the maxim, expressio unius, etc., does not apply to it when considered in connection with said section 368, which became law at the same moment. The two sections are not contradictory, and therefore the rules of construction which aid in cases of contradictory provisions need not be invoked. The one section is merely an enlargement of or addition to the other, and the law as declared by the two sections is that a defendant may avail himself of a set-off acquired before notice of assignment, provided the set-off be in other respects good. It was so held in McCabe v. Grey, 20 Cal. 510, and has been assumed to be the law ever since. Appellant refers to the fact that in Pomeroy on Remedies and Remedial Rights, (section 166,) McCabe v. Grey is hostilely criticized; but, in this instance at least, the opinion of the text writer has not overruled the decision of the court. We see nothing in the contention that one of the sections should be construed as referring to choses in action different from those embraced in the other. Section 368 embraces every kind of things in action except negotiable paper, which paper alone is excepted from its operation. Appellant seems to contend that there can be a value set-off to a nonnegotiable note only when the matter of set-off arises out of the note itself, as want of consideration, etc., and that it cannot arise out of another distinct, independent contract; but this is not the meaning of "set-off," as used in section 368, although such meaning might be not inaptly given to what was once commonly called "recoupment." The meaning of set-off is correctly stated in Abbott's Law Dictionary, with authorities cited, as follows: "Set-off differs from recoupment in that it is more properly applicable to demands independent in their nature and origin while recoupment implies a cutting down of a demand by deductions arising out of the same transaction." "Counterclaim," as used in our Code, includes both recoupment and set-off, and is, strictly speaking, a pleading by which matters arising out of recoupment or set-off are averred. It may be used by defendant to plead, as against the plaintiff: "(1) A cause of action arising out of the transaction set forth in the complaint as the foundation of the plaintiff's claim, or connected with the cause of action; (2) in an action arising upon contract, any other cause of action arising also upon contract, and existing at the commencement of the action." Code Civ. Proc. § 438.

The only point of any difficulty in the case at bar is raised by appellant's contention that respondent cannot use the note from Dare to Collins as an offset, because it was not due at the time he received notice of the assignment from Dare to appellant, although full title to it had been acquired before such notice. His position is that a set-off is not available against an assignee unless it be due, payable, and suable at the time of notice of assignment. There are New York authorities to this effect, but the statute law of New York upon the subject is essentially different from that of California. The New York cases go upon the theory that the statute there provided that the counterclaim must be such as might have been set off while the contract belonged to the assignor. Myers v. Davis, 22 N. Y. 491; Martin v. Kunzmuller, 37 N. Y. 396; Fuller v. Steiglitz, 27 Ohio St. 355. But there is no such statute in this state. By section 438 of the Code of Civil Procedure, in an action on contract the defendant may set up any cause of action arising upon contract and "existing at the commencement of the action." If Dare had kept his note and sued on it in August, 1892, respondent could unquestionably have set off the Collins note; and it seems a clear proposition of law, under the sections of our Code above stated, that, in an action by the assignee of a chose in action not negotiable, the defendant may successfully plead any set-off which he could have so pleaded against the assignor, if he had retained and brought suit on it, provided he acquired it before notice of assignment, and provided, further, that it was "existing at the commencement of the action." It is contended that at the time of the notice of assignment the Collins note was not an "existing" set-off because it was not then quite due, and therefore not presently suable. But the thing itself—the note, the chose in action—was then existing, and it was pleadable by counterclaim when this action was commenced. The point under review has not been definitely determined in this state; and it may be considered res integra. There has been a diversity of decisions on the subject in other states, and, as was said by the supreme court of Ohio, in Fuller v. Steiglitz, supra, "the phraseology of different statutes gives rise to this diversity in the cases." Under our statutory provisions we think that the correct rule is that stated in Bank v. Balliet, 8 Watts & S. 311. In that case suit was brought upon a bond given by defendant to the bank, and assigned to one Swader, and defendant set up certain obligations of the bank which he had acquired before notice of the assignment—some of such obligations, it seems, not being due at the time of such notice. The court say: "The court was right in admitting the evidence, because, although the liability of the bank was not complete when the defendant had notice of the assignment, yet the transaction out of which the defense arises commenced before he was informed of the transfer of the bond." And, again, the court say: "The time the contract begins between the assignee and the obligor is when the latter has notice of the assignment. It is the duty of the obligee or assignee to inform the obligor that he has parted with the bond, and if this is omitted they are in default, and not the obligor, who, until he is informed otherwise, has a right to suppose that the bond is still the property of the obligee, and to act and contract with the obligee, or others, under that reasonable supposition." This rule seems to us to be just and right. A debtor may fortify himself against the coming suit of his creditor by the purchase of any cross demands which may be counterclaimed when that suit shall come, and between them an assignee has no standing until he shall have given notice of the assignment. When a stranger voluntarily interferes with relations between third parties, and takes an assignment of an obligation from one of the latter to the other, he is in no position to beg for equitable consideration, and has only such right in the premises as the statute gives him, and under the statute he stands in the shoes of his assignor until he gives notice of the assignment; but such notice in no way destroys or impairs any right which the debtor had acquired against the creditor prior to such notice. The relative times at which the notes in the case at bar matured is of no consequence, since they were due at the commencement of the action; for, under the rule invoked by appellant, a debtor could not use a note falling due before his own obligation, if before its maturity he received notice of assignment. Moreover, under such rule, if A. should give B. his nonnegotiable note for a certain sum of money, due in six months, and B. should afterwards employ A. to render certain services, to be paid for at the maturity of said note, the latter could not safely rely upon the value of the services as a set-off to the note; because, after the services had been rendered, the set-off could be defeated by an assignment of the note and notice of the assignment before compensation for the services was in praesenti due and payable. The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: FITZGERALD, J.; DE HAVEN, J.

101 Cal. 322

REDONDO BEACH CO. v. BREWER et al.
(No. 19,243.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 9, 1894.)

GARNISHMENT—WHEN LIES—EQUITABLE CLAIM.

Where the vendee of land makes a part payment on the purchase, and fails to make the deferred payments as agreed, he has no claim against his vendor for the amount of his part payment, or for the value of improvements placed by him on the land, which can be the subject of a garnishment in favor of his judgment creditor.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; William P. Wade, Judge.

Action by the Redondo Beach Company against R. G. Brewer, the California Loan & Trust Company, and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant loan and trust company appeals. Affirmed.

Walter Bordwell, for appellant. Sheldon Borden, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. This is an action to quiet title to a certain parcel of land. R. G. Brewer, Ernest A. Miller, and certain other persons were made defendants, and suffered default. The California Loan & Trust Company was also made a defendant, and filed an answer and cross complaint, to each of which plaintiff interposed a general demurrer. The demurrers were sustained, and judgment was rendered for plaintiff. The said loan and trust company appeals from the judgment. The answer and cross complaint set up substantially these facts: On October 1, 1889, plaintiff and the defendant Brewer made a written contract for the sale by the former to the latter of the land described in the complaint. By this contract Brewer was to pay, and did pay, at its date $120, and was to pay $325 on April 1, 1890, and $325 on October 1, 1890, when plaintiff was to give him a conveyance of the land. No part of either of the said deferred payments was ever made. On May 27, 1890, Brewer assigned all his interest in the contract to the defendant Miller, who, prior to October 1, 1890, erected a building on the land worth $400. No part of the $150 or $400 has been repaid to Miller or any other person. Subsequent to October 1, 1890, plaintiff, it is averred, elected to declare the contract forfeited and at an end. Subsequent to said alleged election, the defendant and appellant, the said loan and trust company, recovered a money judgment against said defendant Miller for $950, upon which he caused an execution to be issued, and the sheriff "by virtue of said writ of execution duly attached the debt then due from the plaintiff, the Redondo Beach Company, to the said defendant E. A. Miller." And it is averred that, by virtue of the said levy under execution, said loan and trust company is entitled to recover from the plaintiff the said $120 paid on said contract, and the said $400, value of said building erected by Miller, with interest, and that it has a lien on said land for said two amounts of money.

We think that the demurrers were properly sustained. The briefs of counsel contain quite an elaborate discussion about the respective rights of parties to contracts for the sale and purchase of land, when the vendee, having made the first payment, fails to make any of the deferred payments. But we do not think it necessary to deal with this discussion, for we think that counsel for respondent is right in his contention that, under any view of the subject, appellant did not acquire anything by the garnishment under his execution, which he can use as a defense or cross claim in the present action. We may assume that Miller, although he had utterly failed to comply with the contract with respondent, had still some sort of a claim against the latter with respect to the $150 paid by Brewer. (We find no authority for any claim for improvements in such a case.) We may assume, also, that if respondent had been "indebted" to Miller, or had owed him a "debt" within the meaning of sections 717 and 720, Code Civ. Proc., the appellant could have set up such debt directly in the answer and cross complaint, without resorting to proceedings supplementary to execution, or to a creditor's bill, which proposition is doubtful. See Herrlich v. Kaufmann, (Cal.) 33 Pac. 857. Still, whatever right Miller had in the premises was nothing more than an equitable claim upon $150, paid by Brewer, subject to respondent's right to recoup damages for breach of contract. It was, at best, a mere equity, and not a cause of action upon which he could have maintained a common-law action of debt, or indebitatus assumpsit, and, therefore, was not the subject of garnishment under the execution. "It is well settled that the word 'debt' as used in the law of garnishment includes only legal debts—causes of action upon which the defendant in the attachment, under the common-law practice, can maintain an action of debt, or indebitatus assumpsit—and not mere equity claims." Hassie v. Congregation, 35 Cal. 385, 386. There is an averment in the complaint that appellant, prior to the judgment against Miller, had caused a writ of attachment to be issued, and had, under said writ, attached the interest of Miller in the land; but nothing further seems to have been done under said attachment, and no right under it is insisted on in the briefs of appellant. He rests his case on the garnishment under the execution. Judgment affirmed.

We concur: DE HAVEN, J.; FITZGERALD, J.

(101 Cal. 317)

FRANDZEN v. SAN DIEGO COUNTY. (No. 19,289.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 9, 1894.)

COUNTY CLERK—POWERS — CONTRACT FOR PRINTING.

Pol. Code, § 1115, providing that the clerk shall have printed a sufficient number of copies of the lists of voters, taken in connection with Laws 1891, p. 309, (County Government Act, § 34,) providing that the board of supervisors must provide printed copies of the "great register" and of other books and papers there mentioned, does not empower the clerk to make a contract for the printing of the "great register" which shall be binding on the county.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; W. L. Pierce, Judge.

Action by Eugene Frandzen against the county of San Diego. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

M. L. Ward, Dist. Atty., for appellant. Shaw & Holland, for respondent.

HAYNES, C. This is an appeal from the judgment upon the judgment roll, and the only question presented by the record is whether the county clerk had authority, as the law stood in 1892, to bind the county by his contract with the plaintiff to print the great register for that county. In July, 1892, the board of supervisors fixed the price for printing the great register for that year at 15 cents per name for the first 500 copies, and 75 cents for each additional copy. On August 26, 1892, W. M. Gassaway, then county clerk, contracted with the plaintiff to print the register at the prices fixed by the board. On September 26th, and before any of the copy had been furnished the plaintiff, Gassaway was superseded as such clerk by C. W. Thompson, who refused to permit the plaintiff to print the register, and employed other parties to do the work; and this action is to recover damages from the county for the breach of said contract. The cause was tried by the court, and resulted in findings and judgment for the plaintiff. The question to be decided is raised by demurrer to the complaint, and upon the findings.

The opinion of the learned judge who tried the cause is printed in respondent's brief, (and which constitutes the principal part of it,) and the conclusion reached is based upon his construction of section 1115 of the Political Code, and of subdivision 23 of section 25 of the county government act, (Laws 1891, p. 305,) and section 34 of the same act, (page 309.) By section 236 of the act of 1891, (page 422,) all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with it are repealed. By section 1115 of the Political Code it is provided that "within fifteen days after making such lists, [of voters,] the clerk must have printed a sufficient number of copies thereof," etc.; and section 1116 directs the clerk to distribute them. These sections are in that part of the Political Code which provides for the government of the state and the registration of electors. Section 1115, as well as other sections of the chapter, show that the board of supervisors have a general control over the matter, and may order new registrations, or, if a sufficient number of former registers are on hand, may direct the clerk "to cancel all names thereon required to be canceled," and to prepare a supplement of additional names; that assistants may be employed by the clerk, for such times and at such compensation as shall be fixed by the board, which shall be paid out of the county treasury; but no other expense is provided for by this chapter of the Code. The county clerk is the clerk of the board, and by the Code is specially charged with the duty of preparing the great register, and, having performed that duty, is very appropriately charged by the statute with the printing of it; but this does not necessarily imply that he has the power to contract, on behalf of the county, for the expense of printing. All these statutes should be construed in the light of the general scheme of county government created by the act; not that a positive provision clearly expressed should be nullified because it is not, in our opinion, in consonance with the general frame of the act, but, where a provision is not clear, it should be read in the light of the whole act and of its purposes, and the whole brought into harmony and consistency, if that can be done without violence to its provisions. It is much easier for a legislator to conceive a harmonious scheme of county government than it is to frame a bill for that purpose that shall be clearly consistent in all its provisions. The board of supervisors are the chief legislative and executive authority of the county. They have not only the powers expressly given, but such powers, also, as are necessary to the discharge of duties imposed by law. Unless, therefore, the county clerk is clearly authorized to make a contract on behalf of the county, so as to charge it, not only with the duty of performing it, but with damages for its breach, this judgment cannot be sustained.

Section 34 of the county government act (Laws 1891, p. 309) is as follows: "The board must provide printed copies of the great register, poll lists, poll books, blank returns and certificates, proclamations of elections, and other appropriate and necessary appliances for holding all elections in the county, and allow reasonable charges therefor, and for the transmission and return of the same to the proper officers." This is the only section in the act which in terms refers to the great register. Whether such work as the great register can be properly classed as "job printing," as used in subdivision 23 of section 25 of the same act, is not material. It is clear that it is not necessary to "fix the price" of printing the great register "annually," as our elections are biennial, and the statute does not require the great register to be printed at every election, though at least a supplement may be necessary at each election. This subdivision does not, in express terms, require bids for job printing and advertising, though after requiring the board to annually fix the price at which the county shall be supplied with job printing, blank books, and advertising; and after stating that "each county officer shall procure such blank books, job printing, and advertising at a price no greater than is so fixed, and certify the bills therefor to the board of supervisors," it is immediately added: "And in all cases bidders shall estimate by ems or squares for each character or class of work to be done; and no greater price shall be charged for similar work when done by authority of law, whether said work is done for the city, city and county, or for private individuals." It is not necessary to hazard a guess at the meaning of the above provisions. There is nothing in them which clearly or necessarily includes the printing of the great register, while it could not come within the direction to bidders to "estimate by ems or squares." There are, however, many things to which it can apply, aside from the great register; and hence there is no conflict between that subdivision and section 34 above quoted. The learned judge whose opinion we have referred to thought it necessary, in order to harmonize these provisions, to interpolate the word "for" between the words "provide" and "printed" in section 34; but that suggestion concedes that, as section 34 appears in the statutes, the board is required to procure the great register to be printed; and, if that is the true construction of the section, (and we think it is,) the controversy is ended.

Counsel for respondent cites Publishing Co. v. Whitney, 97 Cal. 283, 32 Pac. 237; but there is no conflict between our conclusion here and that case. That case involved the printing of the delinquent tax list, which was there held to be county advertising, and so within the provisions of subdivision 23. Maxwell v. Board, (Cal.) 32 Pac. 443, (not reported in the California Reports,) was mandamus to compel the board to advertise for bids for county advertising. The writ was refused on the authority of Publishing Co. v. Whitney, supra. As suggested by counsel for appellant, if the legislature intended the printing of the great register to be included and provided for in subdivision 23 of section 25, there was no occasion for again alluding to it, or providing for it in section 34. Besides, "where there are, in an act, specific provisions relating to a particular subject, they must govern, in respect to that subject, as against general provisions in other parts of the statute, although the latter, standing alone, would be broad enough to include the subject to which the more particular provisions relate." End. Interp. St. p. 288. We think the county clerk had no power to make the contract in question, and that the judgment should be reversed.

We concur: SEARLS, C.; VANCLIEF, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment appealed from is reversed.

---

101 Cal. 307

FIRST NAT. BANK OF SAN LUIS OBISPO v. HENDERSON et al. (No. 19,253.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 9, 1894.)

PENAL STATUTE — REPEAL PENDING APPEAL—EFFECT.

Since the provision of Act April 1, 1876, that a corporation engaged in the banking business should not maintain any action in the courts of the state unless it had filed or published certain statements as required by the act, was in the nature of a penalty, and intended merely to secure compliance with the statute, the repeal thereof pending the appeal in an action brought by such corporation deprived the appellate court of the power of rendering a judgment enforcing the provision.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Luis Obispo county; V. A. Gregg, Judge.

Action by the First National Bank of San Luis Obispo against M. F. Henderson and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant Greenberg appeals. Affirmed.

Graves & Graves, for appellant. Wilcoxon & Bouldin and J. M. Wilcoxon, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. The plaintiff is a banking corporation, and brought this action upon an account stated between it and the defendants for the amount of certain payments made upon their checks. Judgment was rendered in its favor, and the defendant Greenberg has appealed therefrom. One of the defenses set forth in his answer is the failure of the plaintiff to comply with the provision of the act of April 1, 1876, (St. 1876, p. 729,) in that it had failed to file with the county recorder or to publish the statements therein required. It sufficiently appears from the findings and evidence that this defense was established at the trial; but it is contended by the respondent that, inasmuch as the legislature has repealed the statute since the appeal was taken herein, the error has been thereby released, and the judgment should be affirmed. The judgment herein was entered January 12, 1893, and the appeal therefrom was taken January 21, 1893, and the statute referred to was repealed March 9, 1893, without any saving clause.

Ordinarily, it is the province of an appellate court to review the judgment of the inferior court as of the time when it was rendered, as ordinarily the judgment of a trial court is a determination of the rights of the parties as they existed at the commencement of the action. This rule is not, however, inflexible. Matters may arise, subsequent to the commencement of an action, which will affect the rights of the parties thereto and the judgment to be rendered therein, and supplemental pleadings are authorized in order that these matters may be properly brought before the court. So, too, matters may arise subsequent to an appeal affecting the judgment appealed from; and, although additional pleadings are not permitted in the appellate court, yet upon proper suggestion and proof of such matters they will be considered by it. See Dakota Co. v. Glidden, 113 U. S. 222, 5 Sup. Ct. 428. An appeal from a judgment will be dismissed upon it being properly shown that the trial court had granted a new trial subsequent to the appeal, and had thereby vacated the judgment appealed from. When the jurisdiction of the appellate court depends upon a statute, the repeal of the statute takes away its jurisdiction. In actions of a penal character, depending upon a statute, the repeal of the statute pending the appeal will deprive the appellate court of any power to render a judgment by which this penalty may be enforced. Cooley, in his treatise on Constitutional Limitations, says, (page 469:) "If a case is appealed, and, pending the appeal, the law is changed, the appellate court must dispose of the case under the law in force when its decision is rendered." In U. S. v. The Peggy, 1 Cranch, 103, a decree of condemnation had been made, from which an appeal was taken, and pending the appeal the United States entered into a treaty with France, by which the two nations mutually agreed to restore all property that had not been definitely condemned. To the argument that the court could only inquire whether the judgment of condemnation was erroneous when delivered, and that, if it was then correct, it could not be made otherwise by anything subsequent to its rendition, Chief Justice Marshall said: "It is, in general, true that the province of an appellate court is only to inquire whether a judgment, when rendered, was erroneous or not; but if, subsequent to the judgment, and before the decision of the appellate court, a law intervenes, and positively changes the rule which governs, the law must be obeyed or its obligation denied. In such a case the court must decide according to existing laws, and, if it be necessary to set aside a judgment, rightful when rendered, but which cannot be affirmed but in violation of law, the judgment must be set aside." This principle was again affirmed by the same court in Yeaton v. U. S., 5 Cranch, 281, where the law under which the condemnation was rendered had expired pending the appeal; and again in The Rachel v. U. S., 6 Cranch, 329, although the vessel had been sold, and the proceeds paid over to the United States. See, also, U. S. v. Preston, 3 Pet. 57; Price v. Nesbitt, 29 Md. 263; Lewis v. Foster, 1 N. H. 61; Speckert v. City of Louisville, 78 Ky. 287; Musgrove v. Railroad Co., 50 Miss. 677. In the latter case the court say, (page 682:) "If there has been a change or alteration or repeal of the law applicable to the rights of the parties, after rendition of the original judgment, and pending the appeal, the case must be heard and decided in the appellate court according to the then existing law. If, therefore, the judgment of the court of original jurisdiction was wrong on the law as it then stood, although there may have been error, if the law has been repealed, the court will not reverse and remand, because the inferior court must recognize the repeal, and conform, on the second trial, to the law as it then was, and not to the law as it may have been at the time of the first trial." In Atwell v. Grant, 11 Md. 101, a promissory note had been received in evidence without the revenue stamp which was required by a statute in force at the time of the trial, and upon appeal this was assigned as error. This statute was repealed after the entry of the judgment, and before the hearing of the appeal; but the court refused to reverse the judgment, for the reason that upon a subsequent trial no stamp would be necessary to render the note a valid instrument of evidence. In State v. Norwood, 12 Md. 195, a bond offered in evidence had been excluded for want of a stamp, and the court, upon appeal, reversed the judgment, for the reason that the exclusion of this evidence was in the nature of a penalty for a failure to comply with the statute, and that the repeal of the statute made the contract as valid, in law, as if the stamp act had never been passed. The statute in question in the present case was intended to secure a compliance with the requirements that the legislature had prescribed for persons or corporations engaged in a banking business, and the provision prohibiting them from maintaining any action in the courts of this state without such previous compliance was in the nature of a penalty, which it was competent for the legislature to remit at any time. The privilege which the defendant had, under this statute, to avoid the enforcement of his contract, was not given with the view of giving him any advantage, but was conferred upon him by the state for its own purposes. Only the state, and not the defendant, had any interest in the enforcement or remission of this penalty; and, after the state has remitted it, the appellant is no longer able to avail himself of the privilege which it conferred. See Ewell v. Daggs, 108 U. S. 143, 2 Sup. Ct. 408. It would be an unjust hardship upon the parties, and would be sacrificing substance to form, to reverse the judgment of the court below, and send the case back for a new trial, when the only result would be that the court would render the same judgment that it has already given. Code Civ. Proc. § 475.

Upon the facts constituting the plaintiff's cause of action, the appellant is not in a position to question the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the findings. There is no plea on his part of the statute of limitations, and by his answer he admits the allegations of the complaint that, at the time when the account was stated, and also at the commencement of the action, the defendants were partners. At the trial he himself testified that the account was correct, and that the partnership owed the plaintiff the amount sued for. The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: PATERSON, J.; GAROUTTE, J.

---

101 Cal. 381

In re OGIER'S ESTATE. (No. 19,332.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 24, 1894.)

Wills—Selection of Attorney—Executors.

1. A provision in a will, whereby testator selects a certain person as the attorney of his estate, and directs that his executrix consult and employ him in all matters pertaining, does not constitute a selection binding on his executrix, but is merely advisory.

2. Such provision gives no power to the attorney to act as executor.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; W. H. Clark, Judge.

Petitions of J. De Barth Shorb and John W. Mitchell that the will of Anna Ogier be admitted to probate, etc. From an order denying the petition of Mitchell, he appeals. Affirmed.

John W. Mitchell, in pro. per., (Wellborn & Hutton, of counsel,) for appellant. Chapman & Hendrick and Graves, O'Melveny & Shankland, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. Anna Ogier died on the 16th day of March, 1893, in the county of Los Angeles, leaving an estate therein, consisting of real and personal property, of the value of more than $60,000, and also leaving a duly-executed last will and testament, which contained, among others, the following provisions: "Twenty-seventh. I appoint the said Mrs. J. De Barth Shorb the executrix of this my last will, and direct that she may be exempt from giving bonds as such, but charge her faithfully to see that my estate is distributed as herein directed. If she should die, or be unable to act, then I appoint John M. Elliott my executor, with the same conditions. Twenty-eighth. I hereby select as the attorney of my estate John W. Mitchell, and direct my executrix to consult and employ him in all matters pertaining to the distribution of my estate, and the requirements of this, my last will. Twenty-ninth. If my said executrix and my said attorney deem it advantageous to my estate, and those interested therein as legatees and devisees, not to sell my real property, other than sufficient to pay my just debts, immediately after my demise, then I desire the sale of my property, for the purpose of paying legacies, delayed to such time, not exceeding two years after my demise, as my executrix and my said attorney may mutually agree. And my said executrix is hereby authorized to sell any and all of my said real property at public or private sale, and at such price and upon such terms as she and my said attorney may deem advantageous and to the best interest of my estate. And, if my said executrix and my said attorney deem it advisable, my executrix may sell my real property for part cash and part deferred payments, secured by mortgage on the property so sold. And in that event there shall be distributed pro rata to the devisees named herein the cash so received, and at the time it be received: provided, however, that such sales shall be made so that my estate can be finally closed and distributed within three years after my demise, if it be possible to do so without detriment to any interest involved." On March 24th the said will was filed in the superior court of Los Angeles county, accompanied by a petition of Mrs. Shorb, who was named as executrix, asking that the will be admitted to probate, and that she be appointed executrix thereof. The petition was signed by the petitioner, and by Graves, O'Melveny & Shankland, as her attorneys. On April 5th, John W. Mitchell filed a petition alleging that he was interested in the said estate, being named in the will as attorney in the administration thereof, and, according to its tenor, coexecutor thereunder, and praying that said will be admitted to probate, and that joint letters testamentary be issued to Mrs. Shorb and himself, and that he (the petitioner) be declared to be, and be entered as, the attorney of record for said estate, in the matter of the administration thereof, in lieu of, and in place and stead of, said Graves, O'Melveny & Shankland. To this petition, Mrs. Shorb filed an answer denying that Mitchell was interested in the said estate, or was named in the will, according to its tenor, as coexecutor thereof; admitting that she had employed Messrs. Graves, O'Melveny & Shankland as her attorneys to present the said will for probate, but denying that this was done in disregard of the terms or directions of the will, or in disregard of the rights of Mitchell, and praying that the petition of Mitchell be denied. The two petitions were heard together, and on May 12th the court filed its findings of fact and conclusions of law, and entered its order admitting the will to probate, and appointing Mrs. Shorb executrix thereof, and denying the petition of Mitchell. From this order denying his petition, Mitchell appeals.

The first question presented is, Was appellant entitled to be entered and recognized as the attorney of record for said estate, in the place of the attorneys employed by Mrs. Shorb? No cases are cited in support of appellant's contention in this regard, and it is admitted that none can be found; but it is said that, "since it was the declared will of the testatrix that appellant should act as the attorney of her estate, it is both reasonable and just that the will should be observed in this as well as in other respects." There is no such office or position known to the law as "attorney of an estate." When an attorney is employed to render services in procuring the admission of a will to probate, or in settling the estate, he acts as the attorney of the executor, and not of the estate, and for his services the executor is personally responsible. Every executor and administrator is chargeable in his account with the whole of the estate of the decedent which may come into his possession, (section 1613 Code Civ. Proc.;) and while, in the settlement of his account, he will be allowed all necessary expenses in the care, management, and settlement of the estate, including reasonable fees paid to attorneys for conducting the necessary proceedings or suits in courts, (section 1616, Id.,) still, such allowance can be made only to him, and not to the attorney, (Henry v. Superior Court, 93 Cal. 569, 29 Pac. 230.) And if the attorney employed should be derelict in his duty, and should receive and misappropriate funds of the estate, the executor would be liable therefor to the legatees under the will. This being so, it would seem to be neither reasonable nor right to hold that the executor of a will must necessarily accept the services of an attorney selected by the testator. Our conclusion, therefore, is that the language employed by Mrs. Ogier, "I hereby select, as the attorney of my estate, John W. Mitchell, and direct my executrix to consult and employ him in all matters pertaining to the distribution of my estate, and the requirements of this, my last will," did not constitute a selection which was binding on the executrix, but was simply an advisory provision, which she could disregard, if she chose to do so. In Young v. Alexander, 16 Lea, 108, the will under review contained the following clause: "I hereby nominate and appoint my nephew, M. B. Young, of Jackson county, Tennessee, as advisory and counsel of my said executors, who will assist them in winding up my unfinished and unsettled business." The executor refused to recognize or employ Young as counsel in the administration of the estate, whereupon he instituted the suit to compel such recognition and employment. The supreme court said that, "however persuasive such a provision may or might be, it can only be effective as an advisory provision;" and it was held that the provision was not binding upon the executor, and that he might ignore it, and appoint other counsel, at his discretion. In Foster v. Elsley, 19 Ch. Div. 518, the will under review contained the following clause: "And I declare that my solicitor, William Edward Foster, shall be the solicitor to my estate, and to my said trustees in the management and carrying out the provisions of this my will." It was claimed that this clause imposed on the trustees the duty of employing Foster as their solicitor, but it was held that it imposed no such trust or duty.

The second and only other question presented is, did the court err in refusing to direct letters testamentary to be issued to appellant as coexecutor with Mrs. Shorb? The contention that appellant was entitled to have letters so issued is based upon section 1371 of the Civil Code, which provides: "Where it appears by the terms of a will that it was the intention of the testator to commit the execution thereof and the administration of his estate to any person as executor, such person, although not named executor, is entitled to letters testamentary in like manner as if he had been named executor." Does the will show that it was the intention of Mrs. Ogier to commit to appellant the execution of her will and the administration of her estate? To this question there can be, in our opinion, but one answer, and that must be in the negative. The only paragraphs of the will relating to the matter are those above quoted. The twenty-seventh paragraph appoints Mrs. Shorb executrix, and charges her "faithfully to see that my estate is distributed as herein directed." The twenty-eighth paragraph selects appellant as the attorney for the estate, and directs the executrix to consult and employ him in all matters pertaining thereto. And the twenty-ninth paragraph speaks of "my said executrix" and "my said attorney," and directs what "my said executrix" may do, if she and "my said attorney" deem it advantageous and advisable. By these paragraphs, no power to act as executor is given to appellant; and it seems evident that the intention of the testatrix was simply to make him the attorney and counselor of the executrix, and not to commit to him the administration of the estate. The order appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: SEARLS, C.; VANCLIEF, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the order appealed from is affirmed.

---

4 Cal. Unrep. 472

ROBINSON v. DUGAN. (No. 19,241.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 24, 1894.)

CLAIMS AGAINST DECEDENT'S ESTATE — EVIDENCE —COMPETENCY OF WITNESS.

1. In an action against the estate of decedent, a brother of plaintiff, there was in evidence a paper in the handwriting of decedent, headed "S. R. [plaintiff] in Acct. with W. R., [decedent,] Cr.," reciting by cash a certain amount, and by certain articles certain other amounts. A witness testified that he saw decedent hand plaintiff a paper like that in evidence; plaintiff having just before asked decedent what plaintiff had to show that decedent owed him. A witness testified that, on several occasions before and after decedent's death, plaintiff said that decedent did not owe anything. Held, that a finding that decedent was not, at the time of his death, indebted to plaintiff was justified by the evidence.

2. There was no error in refusing to allow plaintiff to state that the paper introduced by him was in his possession at decedent's death, he having already been permitted to testify that the paper had been in his possession ever since decedent's death, which was, in effect, the same thing.

3. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1880, subd. 3, forbidding a party to an action on a claim against a decedent's estate to testify to facts occurring before decedent's death, plaintiff cannot testify that a paper showing a debt from decedent to him was unpaid at decedent's death.

4. A witness who had stated that plaintiff on several occasions said that decedent owed no debts was properly allowed to state that in those conversations plaintiff made no exception in favor of himself.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Santa Barbara county; W. B. Cope, Judge.

Action by S. G. Robinson against John R. Dugan, administrator of William Robinson, deceased. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Eugene W. Squier, for appellant. E. B. Hall and J. W. Taggart, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. The plaintiff brought this action to recover the sum of $814.50 upon an account alleged to have been stated between himself and William Robinson, in October, 1891. William Robinson died intestate in March, 1892, leaving a small estate, and thereafter the defendant was duly appointed and qualified as administrator thereof. The usual notice to creditors was published, and within the time prescribed the plaintiff presented his claim to defendant as such administrator for allowance, and the same was allowed and approved for $4.50, and disallowed as to the balance. The answer of defendant denied that at the time named, or at any other time, an account was stated, or settled, or agreed to, by or between the plaintiff and said intestate, or that the said estate was indebted to the plaintiff in any sum, other than the $4.50, which was allowed; and averred that all and every indebtedness or liability on the part of said intestate to the plaintiff, except the said $4.50, had been fully paid and discharged before the death of said intestate.

The case was tried by the court without a jury, and among other things it found: "(5) That there was no account stated as between the plaintiff and said deceased, and that said William Robinson, deceased, was not indebted to said plaintiff, and his estate is not liable to plaintiff in any sum or amount other than said $4.50, approved and allowed by defendant as administrator, as aforesaid, and that none of the allegations contained in paragraph 1 of plaintiff's complaint are true."

And as conclusions of law from the facts the court found: "(1) That plaintiff is entitled to be paid, in due course of administration, the sum of $4.50, approved and allowed by said defendant before the commencement of plaintiff's action herein. (2) That defendant's intestate, William Robinson, deceased, was not at the time of his decease indebted to said plaintiff in any sum or amount other than said $4.50. (3) That defendant is entitled to judgment," etc.

Judgment was accordingly entered that the plaintiff be paid, in due course of administration, the $4.50 allowed him, and that his action be dismissed, and defendant recover his costs. From this judgment, and an order denying his motion for a new trial, the plaintiff appeals.

It is contended that the judgment should be reversed, because the finding above quoted was not justified by the evidence, and portions of it were inconsistent with other portions thereof, and because the court erred in making certain rulings on the admission of evidence. To show that an account was stated between himself and the decedent, plaintiff introduced in evidence a paper (marked "Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 1") which was proved to be in the handwriting of decedent, and was as follows:

S. G. Robinson in Acct. with Wm. Robinson.

Cr.

By cash on settlement..............	$560 00
By cash from McAllester............	250 00
Fruit cans	75
Pasturage	1 75
Pasturage	2 00
	$814 50

The plaintiff then called as a witness one McLaughlin, who testified that he knew the plaintiff and decedent in his lifetime; that decedent was sick in Santa Barbara, and went to San Francisco for medical treatment about the month of October, 1891. That, four or five days before he went, witness heard a conversation between him and the plaintiff in which he stated that if he did not get better he would never return to Santa Barbara. That plaintiff then said: "What have I to show that you owe me money?" That decedent then went to his house, and in about 15 minutes returned and handed to plaintiff a paper which looked exactly like his Exhibit No. 1, and that plaintiff said nothing, looked at the paper, and folded it up. "It was about as large as that, [Exhibit No. 1.] It was about as wide as that. I can't say how long it was." "He didn't let me see the writing." "I was about as far from them as from here to the stove, [across the courtroom.] I couldn't swear whether it was just as long as that or not." "It might have been twice as long as this. I couldn't tell." The plaintiff was then called as a witness, and was asked by his counsel: "Mr. Robinson, will you look at this paper, [showing witness paper marked "Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 1,"] purporting to be an account stated, and state whether or not this paper was in your possession and unpaid at the time of your brother's death?" The question was objected to, and the objection sustained, and thereupon the witness testified: "This paper [Exhibit No. 1] has been in my possession ever since the death of William Robinson. The amount, $814.50, has not been paid. None of it has been paid since the death of my brother." It was further proved that decedent stopped in San Francisco about three months, and then returned to Santa Barbara, and remained there until he died. One Palmanteer was then called as witness for defendant, and, after stating that he was acquainted with the decedent in his lifetime and with the plaintiff, said: "I have had conversations with S. G. Robinson both before and since his brother's death. * * * The conversations were about William Robinson's affairs. I had a conversation with S. G. Robinson,—I think it was the day before his brother's death,—and, among other things, he told me that his brother had money in the bank and owed no debts. I also had some talk with S. G. Robinson a week or so after his brother's death in regard to his brother's affairs. * * * He stated that there were no debts. He said he had some money in bank. I think six or eight or ten hundred dollars." On cross-examination the witness testified: "I think I had eight or ten conversations with S. G. Robinson,—some before and after his brother's death,—in relation to settling up the estate. * * * He told me twice that his brother owed no debts when we were talking about the administration, and once when we were talking about a filly that his brother had given him. * * * He said that William Robinson was not a man that owed debts; he was not that kind of a man; he did not owe anything; something of that kind." And on redirect examination the witness was asked by counsel for defendant: "Did he (S. G. Robinson) ever, in any of those conversations, make any claim that William Robinson owed him anything?" The question was objected to by counsel for plaintiff, and the objection overruled, and the witness then answered: "I never heard him." In rebuttal, the plaintiff testified: "I may have said to Mr. Palmanteer that William Robinson did not owe any debts, but I did not mean to include myself in it when I was speaking to him."

In view of this evidence,—and there was more in the same line,—it is not necessary to determine whether the paper introduced by the plaintiff constituted an account stated; for, conceding that it did, still the account may have been paid and discharged before the decedent's death. The only question, therefore, that need be decided is, was the finding that "William Robinson, deceased, was not indebted to said plaintiff, and his estate is not liable to plaintiff, in any sum or amount other than said $4.50," justified by the evidence? The question whether all indebtedness from decedent to the plaintiff, other than the $4.50 allowed, had been paid, and whether there was any existing indebtedness on the part of the estate to plaintiff, was one of fact, to be passed upon by the trial court; and on this question the evidence introduced by the defendant raised, in our opinion, at least a substantial conflict. This being so, the finding cannot, under the well-settled rule of this court, be disturbed on appeal. The objection that portions of the finding quoted are inconsistent with other portions thereof is based upon the fact that, by his complaint, the plaintiff sought to recover only on an account stated; and it is said that the finding that no account was stated is wholly inconsistent with the further finding, in effect, that the estate was liable to plaintiff for the sum of $4.50. But there was no issue as to the $4.50. The complaint alleged that that sum was allowed to the plaintiff on presentation of his claim, and the answer admitted and alleged the same facts. We see no merit, therefore, in this objection.

The errors in law relied upon for a reversal of the judgment are: (1) the refusal of the court to permit the plaintiff to answer the question propounded to him as to whether or not the paper (Exhibit No. 1) was in his possession and unpaid at the time of his brother's death; and (2) the overruling plaintiff's objection to the question asked of the witness Palmanteer, as to whether the plaintiff in any of the conversations related made any claim that William Robinson owed him anything. We see no error in either of the rulings complained of. When the plaintiff testified, as he did without objection, that the paper had been in his possession ever since the death of his brother, he in effect stated that it was in his possession at the time of his brother's death. The balance of the question, as to whether the account was then unpaid or not, was intended to elicit evidence which was clearly inadmissible under section 1880, subd. 3, of the Code of Civil Procedure. The witness Palmanteer had stated that, in the conversations which he had had with the plaintiff, the latter had more than once said that his brother owed no debts,—that he did not owe anything,—and it was therefore entirely proper to ask him if, in any of those conversations, the plaintiff made any exceptions in favor of himself. The judgment and order appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: TEMPLE, C.; SEARLS, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

101 Cal. 508

WILCOXON v. CITY OF SAN LUIS OBISPO. (No. 19,178.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 1, 1894.)

WIDENING STREET—ASSESSMENT—COST OF GRADING.

Under Act March 6, 1889, authorizing a city council to widen a street and acquire land therefor, the expense of the work or improvement to be assessed on the district benefited, the assessment cannot include the cost of grading and graveling.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Luis Obispo county; V. A. Gregg, Judge.

Action by Wilcoxon against the city of San Luis Obispo, in the nature of a suit to quiet title. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. Affirmed.

William Shipsey, for appellant. Wilcoxon & Bouldin, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. In December, 1890, the city of San Luis Obispo instituted proceedings under the act of March 6, 1889, (St. 1889, p. 70,) for the widening of about 300 feet of Chorro street, and designated the exterior boundaries of the district of lands to be affected or benefited thereby. In its resolution of intention, it declared that "the public interest and convenience require that Chorro street, of said city, between Monterey street and Higuera street, be widened as hereinafter specified," and, after describing the land to be taken therefor, continued: "And the work to be done and the improvements to be made shall consist of removing from said land the buildings and other structures and obstructions now thereon, and filling in with earth so as to bring the land taken (not including the creek) to the present grade of Chorro street, and gravel the same." After proper publication of its resolution, commissioners were appointed to assess the benefits and damages to be produced by the improvement, and in due time made a written report thereof to the city council, in which they estimated that the aggregate amount of the value of the land to be taken, and damage to improvements and property affected, and the cost of work and improvements, and the expenses, would be $11,082.52, and assessed that amount upon the lands within the aforesaid district. One item of this aggregate amount is designated in their report to be: "Cost of contemplated work and improvement specified in resolution of intention, $1,722.52." Subsequent to the confirmation of this report, a certified copy thereof was placed in the hands of the street superintendent, who by virtue thereof sold a lot belonging to the plaintiff herein to satisfy the assessment thereon. This action, in the nature of a suit to quiet title, was brought by the plaintiff for the purpose of having it adjudged that by the aforesaid proceedings no lien was created upon his land, and that the sale of the superintendent was void. Judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff, and the defendant has appealed.

Section 1 of the act of March 6, 1889, gives authority to the city council of any municipality "to order the opening, extending, widening, straightening up in whole or in part of any street, square, lane, alley, court or place within the bounds of such city and to condemn and acquire any and all land and property necessary or convenient for that purpose." The only "work to be done or improvement to be made," under the provisions of this act, is that for which power is conferred by this section; and, before the municipality can acquire jurisdiction to exercise this power, it is required to pass a resolution of its intention to do so, "describing the work or improvement." Hence, the only work or improvement which the municipality has any jurisdiction to order is limited, in the first place, to that which is designated in section 1 of the act, and next to that which it has described in its resolution of intention. The resolution of intention, in the present case, is for the "widening" of a portion of Chorro street. The "widening" of a street, which is authorized by this act, does not include the additional work of making the street suitable for travel and general use. The expense of such work is to be undertaken after the street has been widened, and, by section 869 of the municipal government act, (St. 1883, p. 272,) is to be borne by the adjacent property. To widen a street is merely to enlarge its width, and the term "widen" cannot, under any construction of language, be extended to include grading and graveling. "To grade a street" is to reduce it, either by filling or excavation, to a fit or established degree of ascent or descent; and "to gravel a street" is to cover the surface of a street already existing with some durable substance. Neither of these kinds of improvement or work is embraced in section 1 of the act aforesaid, and consequently the power to make an assessment for the expense incurred thereby has not been conferred upon the city council. A consideration of the entire act shows that the assessment which is authorized to be made upon the district defined in the resolution of intention is to be limited to the cost of the lands and improvements to be taken or damaged, and the expenses that the commissioners are by the act authorized to incur in effecting the widening of the street. In Reed v. City of Toledo, 18 Ohio, 161, the court held that, under the authority conferred upon a city council for opening a street and assessing the damages caused thereby upon a district, it was not authorized to include the expense of improving the street, saying: "By the term 'opening,' we do not understand the improvement of a street or highway by grading, culverting, etc. The term is generally—we think always—clearly distinguishable from such kind of improvement. The term 'opening' refers to the throwing open to the public what before was appropriated to individual use, and the removing of such obstructions as exist on the surface of the earth, rather than any artificial improvement of the surface." See, also, Dill. Mun. Corp. § 608. The widening of a street is only an additional opening of it, throwing a larger space open to public use than previously existed. We are of the opinion, therefore, that it was not within the power of the municipal authorities to include in the assessment the cost of grading and graveling the lands taken for the widening of the street, and that for that reason the assessment was illegal, and created no lien upon the land of the plaintiff. The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: FITZGERALD, J.; McFARLAND, J.; DE HAVEN, J.; GAROUTTE, J.; PATERSON, J.

BEATTY, C. J. I concur in the judgment, not only upon the ground stated, but because I am of the opinion that the act of 1889 is unconstitutional.

4 Cal. Unrep. 471

BURR v. NAVARRO MILL CO. (No. 15,576.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 13, 1894.)

APPEAL—DELAY IN FILING DISMISSAL.

An appeal not filed within the time prescribed by court rules will be dismissed, no good cause for the delay being shown, though no notice of the motion to dismiss was served on appellant's assignee in insolvency, he having, however, knowledge of the notice served on appellant's attorneys.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; A. A. Sanderson, Judge.

Action by Maggie E. Burr against the Navarro Mill Company. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. Appeal dismissed.

Young & Powers, for appellant. A. Morgenthal, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Respondent moved to dismiss the appeal upon the ground that it was not filed within the time prescribed by the rules of the court. It is apparent from the certificate of the clerk of the lower court that such is the fact, and the appeal must be dismissed, unless good cause for the delay appears.

The action is one for personal injuries, and a judgment was entered upon the verdict of the jury for the sum of $1,000 in favor of plaintiff. Subsequently defendant appealed the case to this court, and gave a bond with two sureties, staying execution upon the judgment. After the appeal was perfected and the stay bond given, the defendant was adjudged an insolvent debtor, an assignee was appointed, and an order made by the court staying all proceedings against the insolvent. Thereafter, upon application of respondent, the order was modified to the extent of allowing the present action to be prosecuted to final judgment, for the purpose of fixing the liability of the sureties upon the aforesaid bond. The attorneys representing the defendant in the trial of the case and on the appeal thereof were regularly served with notice of the motion to dismiss now under consideration, but counsel for the assignee was not served with the notice, and now comes before the court asking for a continuance of the hearing, and also, in effect, objecting to the consideration of the matter because of a failure to serve notice upon him. The continuance was denied at the time, and his presence in court at the hearing was indicative of the fact that he had actual notice of the proceeding, and neither he nor the defendant's attorneys of record in the case make any showing upon the merits of the motion. It is ordered that the appeal be dismissed.

101 Cal. 429

CONNER v. SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA MOTOR ROAD CO. (No. 19,269.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 28, 1894.)

REVIEW ON APPEAL — CASE ON MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL—TIME OF SETTLEMENT.

If the proposed statement of the case on motion for new trial, together with the amendments proposed by the adverse party, are not, within ten days after the service of the amendments, presented to the judge or clerk for settlement, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 659, subd. 3, the statement must be disregarded on appeal from an order denying the new trial, the time for settlement not having been extended, and there being no explanation of the delay.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Bernardino county; J. C. Campbell, Judge.

Action by H. Conner against the Southern California Motor Road Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Rolfe & Freeman and Chas. N. Fox, for appellant. Harris & Gregg, for respondent.

HAYNES, C. Appeal from judgment, and an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial. It is conceded by appellant that the appeal from the judgment cannot be considered, because taken too late; and respondent contends that the appeal from the order denying a new trial cannot be considered upon its merits, because the statement was not settled within the time required by subdivision 3, § 659, Code Civ. Proc. Appellant's counsel did not notice the question in their opening brief, and, as no reply has been filed, we are without the benefit of any suggestions from them.

The statement contains the following: "It is agreed that the statement on motion for a new trial herein was served August 17, 1891, and that the proposed amendments thereto were served in April, 1892; and that neither the proposed statement nor amendments thereto were ever presented to the judge prior to this date, and that they have never been filed with the clerk of this court. Plaintiff objects to a settlement of the proposed statement on the grounds that the moving party in this case has not complied with subdivision 3, § 659, of the Code of Civil Procedure, in that he did not, within ten days after the service of the amendments, present the same to the judge who tried the case for settlement, nor to the clerk of the court for the judge, and failed and refused to adopt said amendments, or to present said proposed statement to the clerk of the court for the judge prior to this day, [November 28, 1892.]" The objection to the settlement of the statement was overruled, and plaintiff excepted, and the statement was thereupon settled.

The delay of seven months in presenting the statement and amendments to the judge for settlement is wholly unexplained. The settlement having been objected to on the ground that it was too late, "it became the duty of appellant to incorporate in the bill [statement] the matter, if any, going to excuse his apparent delay; otherwise, the exceptions, though settled, cannot be considered here." Higgins v. Mahoney, 50 Cal. 444. In Tregambo v. Mining Co., 57 Cal. 503, it was said: "If a statute actually fixes the time within which an act must be done, it is peremptory. The act cannot be done at any other time, unless during the existence of the prescribed time it has been extended by an order made for that purpose under authority of law." This language was used in relation to the time within which a bill of exceptions might be taken under the statute, and is therefore applicable here. To hold that the statement may be settled when no steps were taken until after the expiration of the ten days, the time for doing so not having been extended, and respondent objecting thereto, would be a judicial abrogation of the statute. See, also, Wills v. Rhen Kong, 70 Cal. 548, 11 Pac. 780. The statement must therefore be disregarded. The judgment and order appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: VANCLIEF, C.; BELCHER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

McINTYRE v. SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA MOTOR ROAD CO. (No. 19,267.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 28, 1894.)

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Bernardino county; J. C. Campbell, Judge. Action by Allan McIntyre against the Southern California Motor Road Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Rolfe & Freeman and Chas. N. Fox, for appellant. Harris & Gregg, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. In this case the appeal from the judgment was taken too late, and the same objection is made by respondent to a consideration of the appeal from the order denying a new trial as was made in Conner v. Motor Road Co., (No. 19,269, this day decided,) 35 Pac. 990. All the facts touching the settlement of the statements on motion for a new trial are the same in each case, and, upon the authority of that case, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

---

101 Cal. 349

In re THOMPSON'S ESTATE. (No. 19,295.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 15, 1894.)

PLEADING — WAIVER OF FORM — APPEARANCE — TRUSTEES — ACCOUNTING — INTEREST — ALLOWANCE—COMPENSATION.

1. A petition entitled "In the Matter of the Estate of T., Deceased," asking for an accounting by the trustees under the will of deceased, filed after the probate jurisdiction of the court is exhausted by final distribution, and discharge of the executors, will be treated as a bill in equity; the court having equity as well as probate jurisdiction, and no objection having been made to the form of the petition.

2. The fact that a court has not jurisdiction of a party is waived by appearance without objection.

3. Where a trustee mingles the trust funds with his own, and uses them in his business, which pays a net profit of 11 per cent. per annum, there is no error in charging him 10 per cent. compound interest.

4. An item of $250 for retainer fee is properly disallowed a trustee on accounting, he not having shown it a proper disbursement.

5. Though a will provides for compensation for trustees, it is properly disallowed, where they have been negligent in the discharge of their duties.

6. A decree on accounting by a trustee should not provide that he be charged with 10 per cent. compound interest so long as he remains a trustee, as it is to be presumed that in the future he will faithfully discharge his duties.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Luis Obispo county; V. A. Gregg, Judge. Petition, entitled "In the Matter of the Estate of Jonathan Thompson, Deceased," for accounting by the trustees under the will of deceased. From the decree, Isaac Goldtree, one of the trustees, appeals. Modified.

Wilcoxon & Bouldin and J. M. Wilcoxon, for appellant. Myrick & Deering and L. Lamy, for respondent.

PATERSON, J. This is an appeal by Isaac Goldtree, one of the trustees of the estate of Jonathan Thompson, deceased, under the will, from a decree settling an account. Thompson died in the county of San Luis Obispo on December 5, 1875, leaving a will, in which, after making certain specific bequests, he directed the residue of his estate to be distributed to three trustees, to hold and invest the same, and deliver the income thereof to four sets of beneficiaries during their lifetimes, and thereafter to deliver the estate to the children of the first-named beneficiaries. The will was duly admitted to probate, and on March 16, 1877, the estate was distributed to the trustees, and the executors were discharged. On December 22, 1884, one of the trustees named in the will was removed from his office as trustee, and the appellant, Goldtree, was appointed a trustee to fill the vacancy. Ever since said last-named date, Goldtree and John Thompson have been sole trustees of the estate; Grierson, one of the trustees named in the will, having resigned on the 22d day of December, 1884.

The estate consisted of a large amount of real estate lying in different counties, $11,453.84 in money, and $11,015.22 in promissory notes, cattle, horses, wagons, machinery, etc. It was arranged between Thompson and Goldtree that the latter should hold all the money collected or belonging to the trust, and manage the lots in the towns of San Luis Obispo and San Jose, and that Thompson should take charge of all other portions of the trust estate. On the day of his appointment, Goldtree received the $11,453.84 cash belonging to the estate, and deposited the same to the credit of the general account of Goldtree Bros., a partnership of which he was a member, and thereafter said money was mingled with the funds of the partnership. In the years 1885 to 1886, inclusive, he received, on notes belonging to the estate, the sum of $2,639.60, which the court found, "together with the $11,453.84, making a total of $14,093.44, constituted a part of the corpus of the trust estate." This amount was reduced by payments made pursuant to orders of the court aggregating $1,742.90, leaving, the court finds, "corpus, for which Isaac Goldtree was chargeable on October 2, 1892, the sum of $12,350.74." All of the moneys received by Goldtree were deposited in the name of his firm, and mingled with the funds thereof. No separate account was ever kept of the moneys received by him as trustee. The general account was drawn upon and used for the purposes of the business of their partnership, as well as for the trust estate, by checks signed "Goldtree Bros." The profits of the general business of Goldtree Bros. netted them, on the average, for the years 1885 to 1892, inclusive, about 11 per cent. per annum. The firm was engaged in various enterprises, including speculation in land, buying grain, the lending of money, and the carrying on of a banking business. In 1890, Goldtree left the state, with his family, for Europe, and at all times since said date has remained out of the state. During this time he has left the management of the trust to the bookkeeper of his firm, and to his attorney. During the years 1884 to 1892, inclusive, various portions of the estate had been in litigation, and the appellant has paid out, as necessary and proper disbursements, including attorney's fees, something over $13,000, and, including payments to beneficiaries, something over $14,000. The beneficiaries, becoming dissatisfied with the action of the trustees, filed a petition asking that the latter be required to account, and that they be removed from office. Thereupon, appellant filed an account showing receipts by him of trust funds, to certain items of which an objection was made; and after a hearing the court disallowed items aggregating $1,070.73, charged appellant with the corpus of the estate received by him, together with interest thereon, at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum, compounded annually, and credited him with the allowed disbursements. Compensation was denied to the trustees, and appellant was directed to pay 10 per cent. per annum on the trust money belonging to the trust, and in his possession, as long as he remained trustee; the court, in its findings, however, saying "that said Isaac Goldtree be given the privilege of resigning said trust." The petition asking for the account and removal of the trustees is entitled "In the Matter of the Estate of Jonathan Thompson, Deceased;" and, in accordance with its prayer, there was issued from the probate division of the superior court a citation to the trustees, requiring them, at a certain time to appear and render an account.

It is contended by the appellant that the superior court, sitting in probate in the estate of Thompson, deceased, had no jurisdiction of the matter of the settlement of the account of the trustees, and, technically speaking, this is true. The will of Thompson had been probated, and the estate distributed and delivered up to the distributees. The executors had been discharged in the probate court 15 years before this petition was filed. Goldtree's powers came through an order of the superior court in equity, but while it is true that the probate and equity jurisdictions of the superior court are separate and distinct, that the former furnishes a method of administering the affairs of a decedent, and when final distribution has been had its jurisdiction is exhausted, and it is peculiarly for a court of equity to appoint and control trustees in the management of trust estates, yet under our system the same tribunal exercises equity and probate jurisdiction. The appellant made no objection to the form of the petition. The court had jurisdiction of the subject-matter, and the objection is raised for the first time in this court that the court did not have jurisdiction of the person, which, of course, was waived by the appearance of the defendant without objection. The petition under these circumstances, may be regarded as a bill in equity addressed to the equitable powers of the superior court, and the form of its title is immaterial. It is not true that there were no issues, or that a burden was placed upon the appellant which would not have been upon him in a court of equity. The petitioners alleged mismanagement and failure to account or report. Pursuant to the order contained in the citation, appellant did appear and file an account of his dealings with the trust estate, and thereafter specific objections were made to certain items. The same matters were in issue that would have been in issue if the complaint had been filed in equity, and the burden of proof was no greater in the one case than it would have been in the other.

The court did not err in its statement of the account, or in charging Goldtree with interest at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum. The funds with which the moneys of the estate were mingled earned about 11 per cent.

per annum, net, and there was gross negligence in the management of the estate. "In regard to interest upon trust funds, the general rule is that if a trustee has made interest upon those funds, or ought to have invested them so as to yield interest, he shall, in each case, be chargeable with the payment of interest. In some cases courts of equity will even direct annual or other rests to be made, the effect of which will be to give to the cestui que trust the benefit of compound interest. But such an interposition requires extraordinary circumstances to justify it. Thus, for example, if a trustee, in manifest violation of his trust, has applied the trust funds to his own benefit and profit in trade, * * * courts of equity will apply the rule of annual or semiannual rests, if it will be most for the benefit of the cestui que trust. The true rule in equity, in such cases, is to take care that all the gain shall go to the cestui que trust." 2 Story, Eq. Jur. (13th Ed.) § 1277; 1 Perry, Trusts, (4th Ed.) § 471.

We are unable to see that the court erred in disallowing the item of $250 retainer. The court evidently thought it was an unnecessary expenditure. The burden of proof was upon the appellant to show that it was a proper disbursement, and the same may be said of the other items mentioned in finding 21.

Neither did the court err in refusing to allow the trustees commissions. Compensation is allowed, in cases of this kind, only to faithful stewards, for their care, trouble, and responsibility in the management of an estate; and it matters not that the will itself provided for compensation, which is conditioned upon a faithful performance of the trust. There are many reported cases in which the courts have refused to allow commissions where the negligence exercised by the trustees was not so great as that shown in the case at bar. Dufford's Ex'r v. Smith, 46 N. J. Eq. 216, 18 Atl. 1052; Norris' Appeal, 71 Pa. St. 126.

We think it clear, however, that the court erred in charging the appellant with interest at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum, compounded annually, so long as he may remain a trustee. The court had the right to deprive him of commissions, and to impose upon him interest compounded annually up to the time of the settlement of the accounts, but did not have the right to impose a penalty for his future conduct of the affairs of the estate. It must be presumed that in the future the appellant will faithfully discharge the duties of his office. The cause is remanded to the court below with directions to eliminate conclusion of law No. 10 from its decision, and to modify its decree by striking from the ninth paragraph the words, "so long as he shall remain in office;" and, as so modified, the decree will stand affirmed.

We concur: GAROUTTE, J.; HARRISON, J.

101 Cal. 333

CITY OF SAN PEDRO v. SOUTHERN PAC. R. CO. et al. (No. 19,230.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 14, 1894.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — RIGHT TO CONSTRUCT WHARF — RAILROAD RIGHT OF WAY OVER PUBLIC LANDS — PERMIT — FORFEITURE — RIGHT OF STATE.

1. Under the municipal government act, (section 862,) which authorizes a city to construct and operate wharves on any land bordering on any navigable bay within its corporate limits, or contiguous thereto, a city has no absolute right to construct a wharf at any point on its water front which it may select, irrespective of the rights of others.

2. Under Civ. Code, § 478, which requires the surveyor general, on the selection of a railroad right of way over public lands, to "issue to the corporation a permit to use the same unless on petition presented to the court a review is had and such use prohibited," the permit continues until such use is prohibited.

3. Where a railroad company has selected a right of way over public lands, and the surveyor general has issued a permit to use them, a delay in the construction of the railroad will not, of itself, work a forfeiture of the permit.

4. Where the surveyor general issues a permit to use a part of a city water front for a railroad right of way, the city cannot enjoin the construction of a wharf thereon by the railroad company without proof that a municipal right has been invaded, and cannot allege a trespass to public lands by the railroad, or a forfeiture of a corporate privilege by delay, since the state, only, can complain of such trespass, or enforce such forfeiture.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; J. W. McKinley, Judge.

Bill by the city of San Pedro to enjoin the Southern Pacific Railroad Company and others from constructing a wharf in Wilmington bay. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Reversed.

John D. Bicknell and Bicknell & Trask, for appellants. Cheney & Cronin, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. In March, 1887, the Southern Pacific Railroad Company made selection of a right of way over certain public lands of the state for the location and construction thereon of tracks and other works necessary in the extension of its Wilmington branch, and on the 7th of April, 1887, the surveyor general, under the provisions of section 478, Civ. Code, issued to it a permit to use the same. The lands over which the right of way was so selected are located in Wilmington bay, within the corporate limits of the plaintiff, and a portion thereof are tide lands,—that is, lands between the lines of high and low water,—while another portion is continually covered by the waters of the bay. In December, 1891, by virtue of the permit thus granted by the surveyor general, the defendants commenced to drive piles from the extremity of the wharf theretofore constructed by the railroad company, and had driven them for the length of about 660 feet, when the plaintiff brought the present action to enjoin and restrain them from further prosecuting their work. The grounds upon which the plaintiff bases its right to the relief sought are that the lands upon which the defendants were driving the piles are within its corporate limits, and form a portion of its water front; that it has certain statutory and riparian rights over said land and water front, and that, in the exercise of these rights, it was about to construct a wharf and landing place at the point where the defendants were driving the piles; that the driving of the piles and building a wharf at that point by the defendants will prevent it from erecting a wharf or landing place there; and that the acts of the defendants are without any right or authority. The court made findings in support of the averments in the complaint, and rendered judgment in favor of the plaintiff. From this judgment, and an order denying a new trial, the defendants have appealed.

The court finds "that the defendants were proceeding to drive said piles in a continuous row, close to the line of mean low-water mark, and almost parallel to the channel of Wilmington bay; that for a distance of about 200 feet the said piles were driven below mean low-water mark; and that said piles were driven below low tide at that portion of the premises described in plaintiff's complaint as adjoining the southerly end of the wharf of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company." It does not appear that the state has ever parted with its title to these lands, either those between the lines of high and low tide, or those which are at all times covered with water; and, unless the plaintiff has some right in the lands which the acts of the defendants will tend to impair, it is not entitled to the relief sought. The plaintiff cannot enjoin the defendants from prosecuting their work of driving piles within the terms of the surveyor general's permit, unless such work is an invasion of some right of the plaintiff, and the burden of establishing that fact rests upon it. If it should be assumed that the acts of the defendants are a trespass upon the rights of the state, the state alone has the right to complain; and, in the absence of any complaint on its part, the defendants are not to be questioned about the nature of these acts of trespass. People v. Davidson, 30 Cal. 379. Hence, it is unnecessary to determine whether the legislature could by special act disincorporate the town of Wilmington. St. 1887, pp. 108, 109.

The plaintiff is a municipal corporation of the sixth class, and was organized as such February 27, 1888, subsequent to the date of the permit given to the defendants by the surveyor general. As such municipal corporation, it is only one of the agencies of the state to aid it in the discharge of its political duties; and, although the lands upon which the defendants were driving the piles are within the corporate limits of the plaintiff, the plaintiff has not, for that reason, any proprietary interest in these lands, nor is it the owner of the soil, or clothed with any riparian rights. Its right to construct a wharf rests upon the provision of section 862, subd. 11, of the municipal government act, (St. 1891, p. 234,) by which it has authority "to construct, maintain and operate on any lands bordering on any navigable bay within the corporate limits of such city, or contiguous thereto, wharves, piers," etc. The authority given in this section does not, however, clothe the plaintiff with an absolute right to construct a wharf at any point on its water front which it may select, irrespective of the rights of others; but it is intended to confer upon it the same authority to do the acts therein enumerated which a natural person would possess, and to give to its acts a sanction which they would not otherwise have. A municipal corporation can exercise only such powers as are conferred upon it by the legislature, and in the absence of the authority above conferred the plaintiff would not be authorized, under any circumstances, to erect or maintain a wharf; but the authority thus given does not authorize it to prevent the erection of a wharf by another person, who has a right therefor, or who does not infringe upon any of the plaintiff's rights.

The court also found that there had been an abandonment and nonuser of the portion of the lands within the limits of the permit beyond the existing wharf, and that by reason thereof these lands were excluded from the permit. The record does not contain any evidence showing an "abandonment" of the rights conferred by the permit, and we have been cited to no statute or rule of law by which a failure on the part of the railroad corporation to construct its wharf immediately upon receiving the permit would work a forfeiture of its rights. Section 478, Civ. Code, under which the permit is granted, does not limit the time within which the work shall be commenced; and the clause therein by which the surveyor general is directed to "issue to the corporation a permit to use the same, unless, on petition properly presented to the court a review is had, and such use prohibited," implies the continuance of the permit until such use is prohibited in the manner therein prescribed. As the permit is only a license for a right of way over the public lands of the state, and does not confer any proprietorship in the lands themselves, the state would have the right to revoke the license at any time, and would be justified in doing so if it should appear that there was unnecessary delay on the part of the corporation in availing itself of the privilege; but, unless the state makes the objection, the privilege cannot be declared forfeited at the instance of any other person. Upon the organization of a railroad corporation, it makes a selection of the route over which it intends to construct its road; and, in making such selection, ordinary prudence would dictate that it should include the entire route over which its road would ultimately be constructed. Necessarily, some time must elapse before the road can be completed, and circumstances may arise during the process of its construction which will render a delay or suspension of work not only prudent, but even necessary. Such delay or suspension will not of itself work a forfeiture of any privilege which the state may have granted, unless the statute under which it was granted expressly so provides, as has been done in the case of street railroads, (Civ. Code, § 502,) and it is a well-recognized rule that, when only the right to the forfeiture of a corporate privilege or of a franchise exists, it can be invoked only at the instance of the state. See Western R. Co.'s Appeal, 104 Pa. St. 399. The judgment and order denying a new trial are reversed.

We concur: PATERSON, J.; GAROUTTE, J.

---

101 Cal. 295

BROWN v. KLING. (No. 19,279.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 9, 1894.)

CONTRACTS — VALIDITY — RESTRAINT OF TRADE—TIME OF LIMITATION—INJUNCTION.

1. Civ. Code, § 1673, provides that a contract in restraint of trade, otherwise than provided in the next two sections, "is to that extent void;" and section 1674 provides that the seller of "the good will of a business may agree with the buyer to refrain from carrying on a similar business within a specified territory, so long as the buyer or any person deriving title to the good will from him carries on the business." Held, that a provision, on sale of a good will, that the seller shall not engage in the business for three years in a certain city, is not void, but the contract will be limited to such time, not exceeding three years, as the buyer or his assignee carries on the business.

2. The breach of a valid contract in restraint of trade may be enjoined, though nominal damages, only, can be proved.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Orange county; J. W. Towner, Judge.

Action by A. P. Brown to enjoin Theo. Kling from breach of contract, and for damages. From a judgment for defendant on demurrer, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Victor Montgomery, for appellant. E. E. Keech, for respondent.

TEMPLE, C. In this case a demurrer was interposed to the complaint on the ground of insufficient statement of facts. It was sustained, and plaintiff declined to amend. Judgment was thereupon entered, and plaintiff appeals.

The complaint, in substance, states that theretofore defendant and one Challis carried on a retail butcher business in Santa Ana and the city of Orange, which cities are about 3½ miles apart. They had shops in these cities, and ran wagons distributing and selling meat in the vicinity. April 18, 1892, plaintiff purchased their shops, implements, wagons, fixtures, and stock for $4,650 paid to them, and at the same time bought the good will of the business, for which he paid the further consideration of $600, and defendant and Challis at the same time, in consideration of such purchase, each for himself agreed with the plaintiff that he would not at any time thereafter, and within the period of three years from said 18th day of April, 1892, engage, directly or indirectly, or concern himself in carrying on or conducting a butcher business in said city of Santa Ana, or within a radius of five miles from said city. Plaintiff has ever since continued to conduct said business at the towns of Santa Ana and Orange. On the 19th day of September, 1892, defendant set up a retail butcher business in the city of Santa Ana, which he has since continued to conduct at that place, to the damage of plaintiff in the sum of $500, for which sum he asks for judgment, and that defendant be enjoined.

The principal point made on the demurrer is that the agreement sued on is void because in restraint of trade, and not in accordance with section 1674, Civ. Code, which only authorizes one selling the good will of his business to agree to refrain from doing business "so long as the buyer or any person deriving title to the good will from him carries on a like business therein." Here the purchaser is, as a matter of fact, still carrying on the business purchased, but it is not so limited in the contract. In form, defendant agreed not to carry on the business for three years; non constat that plaintiff or his assignee may do business there for three years; therefore, defendant bound himself for a period which may extend beyond the period for which he was authorized to bind himself to refrain; therefore, the contract is wholly illegal and void. Section 1673, Civ. Code, reads as follows: "Every contract by which any one is restrained from exercising a lawful profession, trade, or business of any kind, otherwise than is provided by the next two sections, is to that extent void." Section 1674 is as follows: "One who sells the good will of a business may agree with the buyer to refrain from carrying on a similar business within a specified county, city, or a part thereof, so long as the buyer, or any person deriving title to the good will from him, carries on a like business therein." The contracts which are here declared void are not declared unlawful. Certain contracts not made in a certain mode are declared void by the statute of frauds, but they are not therefore illegal. This contract is not against public policy. At common law, such a contract would have been valid. A contract restraining one from following a lawful trade or calling at all is invalid because it discourages trade and commerce, and prevents the party from earning a living; but the right to agree to refrain from his calling, within reasonable limits as to space, may have the contrary effect. It encourages trade, for it gives value to a custom or business built up by making it vendible. One would have an inducement, therefore, to serve the public honestly and efficiently, for he is not only profiting by the business, but the custom attracted by so doing is valuable, even after he is ready to retire from business; and, besides, the rule enables him to find a purchaser who will also have an interest in so serving the public. The period of the restraint is not unreasonable. While it has been said that a restraint of this character, independently of any statute upon the subject, is binding even if the party in whose interests the restraint was imposed has retired from business and has no assignee, still in such case only nominal damages could be recovered. The statute does not provide that such contracts, though not in accordance with the Code, shall be wholly void. It says they shall be "to that extent void." It may be said (and perhaps that is the correct construction) that the restraint which is other than that prescribed shall be void. But it is a familiar rule of law that, where there is a statute upon a certain subject, it enters into, and becomes a part of, such contract upon such subject, if the contract can be so construed. The contracting parties are presumed to have had the law in view. Sometimes the terms of the contract will rebut this presumption, but in the present case they do not. One rule at common law applicable to this matter was that the restraint shall be no greater than is necessary to protect the purchaser. This rule would limit the restraint to the time during which the purchaser or his assignee is in business, for beyond that time there is nothing to protect. As, at common law, the restraint as to time was not objectionable, this question did not arise. The question as to space was a very different affair. The court could not hold such a contract valid for a reasonable extent of country, and void as to the excess. To what part of the specified country would the court confine the business? If the described space were the state of California, to what city or town within the state should the operation of the contract be confined? To confine it to any part would be to make a new contract. The courts have generally done this, however, when the circumstances permitted. Upon this point, Baines v. Geary, 35 Ch. Div. 154, is very instructive. The plaintiff was engaged in the business of selling milk, and the defendant engaged as an employe as milk carrier, and agreed that "he will not during such service, or after being discharged or quitting such service, serve, or cause to be served, with milk or any other dairy produce, for his own benefit or that of any other person or persons, * * * any customers served or belonging at any time to the said Clement Baines, his successors or assigns." Action for injunction. Judge North said: "It is quite clear that a covenant in restraint of trade is good if it does not go further than is necessary to give reasonable protection to the person who imposes it. There is nothing illegal in such a covenant, but it is considered unreasonable if it imposes a larger restraint than is necessary for the protection of the covenantee. The courts have, however, seen their way to treat such a covenant as divisible, and to enforce it to the extent to which it is reasonable, while declining to enforce such part of it as is unreasonable. There are many reported cases in which covenants in restraint of trade have been held to be divisible as regards space. * * * No case, however, was cited to me in which a covenant of this kind had been held to be divisible in regard to time, and I postponed my judgment that I might see if any such case had been reported, and I have found the case of Nicholls v. Stretton, 10 Q. B. 346. In that case, the defendant, on being articled for five years to the plaintiff, who was a solicitor, covenanted that he would not, during the five years, 'nor at any time after the expiration of the term,' etc., do business 'for any person who had already been, or who should, from time to time thereafter, become or be, the client,' etc. * * * Mr. Cowling then contended that the contract was at least good so far as it concerned the clients who carried on business with the plaintiff at the time of making the indenture, or during the continuance of the articles, and the breaches are confined to these. 'It is true,' he said, 'that when any contract, whether under seal or not, is in part illegal, the whole contract fails. But that is different from the present case, where the contract is not to to do anything illegal, but only to abstain from certain acts, some of which a party cannot bind himself not to do, but may still legally abstain from doing. In such case, the law will enforce such restrictions as the party can bind himself to.' Mr. Bramwell replied, and the court took time to consider their judgment. Lord Denman, C. J., delivered the judgment of the court, thus: 'This case must be decided in favor of plaintiff,' etc. * * * I must therefore grant an injunction, but limited to restraining the defendant from serving or interfering with any persons who were customers of plaintiff, Baines, at any time during defendant's employment by him." The contract was enforced to the extent to which it was deemed reasonable, and was held void as to excess. In Moore, etc., Hardware Co. v. Towers Hardware Co., 87 Ala. 206, 6 South. 41, defendants sold their business to plaintiffs, and agreed not to handle any more plow stocks or plow blades. There was no restriction as to time or place. It was objected to as unreasonable because unlimited. The court said, however, in substance, that a contract was to be construed with reference to the circumstances of the parties and the object sought to be attained by the contract; that, in fact, the firm was dealing only within a limited territory, and the evident purpose was to protect the plaintiff in his business.

The contract was, therefore, to be construed as limited to the territory covered by plaintiff's business.

I think this case an advance upon former precedents upon the subject. But, whatever difficulty there may be in limiting such a contract as to space, there is none whatever in doing so as to time. In fact, it is practically so limited in the nature of things. The obligation when the purchaser is not engaged in the business within the limited territory is mostly ideal, as only nominal damages could be recovered for a breach, and equity, under such circumstances, would not intervene to prevent a breach. The sole purpose here was to protect the plaintiff in the enjoyment of what he had purchased, and the contract was presumably made in view of the law. All the parties sought to attain was within the limits of the law. We neither add to nor take from the contract by supposing that the parties contemplated that it should be so limited. This principle seems to be recognized in Langan v. Langan, 91 Cal. 654, 27 Pac. 1092. I think, therefore, the contract was valid. I think the complaint sufficiently states a breach of the contract. Even if only nominal damages could be proven, plaintiff would be entitled to his injunction, partly, perhaps, upon the very ground of the difficulty in proving damage. I advise that the judgment be reversed, and the court directed to overrule the demurrer.

We concur: SEARLS, C; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment appealed from is reversed, and the court below directed to overrule the demurrer.

---

101 Cal. 358

WILHELM et al. v. SILVESTER. (No. 18,085.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 20, 1894.)

MINES—LOCATIONS—INTERSECTING VEINS.

Rev. St. U. S. § 2322, giving locators of quartz claims exclusive possession of all the surface within their location lines, and the entire depth of all veins whose apex is within the surface lines extended vertically, is not repealed by § 2336, providing that, where two or more veins cross each other, the prior location shall have all ore within the space of intersection, but the latter shall have right of way for working through said space, since the latter section may well apply to ledge locations made before May 10, 1872, and to possible intersections on the dip; and the former still stand to preserve to the prior locator, under federal laws, the ownership of a vein crossing his on the strike, whose apex is within his surface lines. De Haven, J., dissenting.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Nevada county; John Caldwell, Judge.

Action by T. H. Wilhelm and others against Henry Silvester on agreed facts. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Kitts & Bowman, for appellants. A. Burrows, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. This case was submitted to the court below upon an agreed statement which shows the following facts: Defendant's grantor, in December, 1879, discovered a gold-bearing quartz vein, which he called the "New Idea Lode," and made a valid location thereof, including surface ground 1,500 feet long and 600 feet wide. The New Idea lode runs nearly north and south through the center of said surface ground; and the land on which the location was made was at the time public, unclaimed, and unoccupied public land of the United States. It is admitted that said location was a valid one, and that since then defendant and his grantor have complied with all the laws and customs necessary to continue the validity of said location. About a year afterwards, to wit, on December 4, 1880, the plaintiffs discovered a gold-bearing lode which commenced east and outside of the said New Idea claim, and thence ran westerly across said New Idea claim at nearly right angles, and intersected said New Idea lode; and they attempted to locate a claim 1,500 feet long and 600 feet wide across the said prior location of the defendant, and did the formal acts which are required by mining laws and customs in making valid locations, and have since done the necessary work, etc., to maintain said location. The said asserted location of plaintiffs is called the "South Scotia Lode and Claim;" and they contend that by said subsequent attempted location they have acquired the title to, and right of possession of, the said South Scotia lode, where it lies within the surface ground of said defendant's New Idea claim. Defendant claims that the plaintiffs, by said attempted subsequent location, acquired no right whatever to any portion of the said South Scotia lode, which lies within the boundaries of defendant's location. The plaintiffs brought this action to enforce their right to the South Scotia lode within the limits of the said prior location of defendant. The court found in favor of defendant, and the plaintiffs appeal from the judgment.

We think that the decision of the superior court was right, and that the judgment should be affirmed. Section 2322 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which is a re-enactment, in this respect, of the act of May 10, 1872, provides that the locators of quartz claims, where no adverse claim existed on the 10th of May, 1872, so long as they comply with the laws of the United States and local customs, "shall have the exclusive right of possession and enjoyment of all the surface included within the lines of their locations, and of all veins, lodes and ledges throughout their entire depth, the top or apex of which lies inside of such surface lines, extended downward vertically." This language is clear and explicit, and, in designating the property rights of locators, is in no wise ambiguous or uncertain. It expressly, and in language which needs no construction, grants to such locators every ledge or lode, the top or apex of which lies within the surface lines of the location; that is, such part of the ledge as lies within such lines. And there is no limitation or exception of any such ledge on account of the direction in which it may run. It may be parallel with the originally discovered ledge, or may approach it at right angles, or at an obtuse angle, or at an acute angle, it may intersect it or not, and still it will be clearly within the language of the said section.

It is contended, however, by appellants, that this positive language of said section 2322 is overcome or repealed, or in some way rendered nugatory, by the provisions of section 2336 of said Revised Statutes. That section is as follows: "Where two or more veins intersect or cross each other, priority of title shall govern, and such prior location shall be entitled to all ore or mineral contained within the space of intersection; but the subsequent location shall have the right-of-way through the space of intersection for the purposes of the convenient working of the mine. And where two or more veins unite, the oldest or prior location shall take the vein below the point of union, including all the space of intersection." It will be observed, however, that this latter section does not undertake to give to any person the right to make a valid location of a quartz ledge across either the surface ground or the lode of a prior locator. It merely assumes that there may be instances where there may be certain kinds of intersections of lodes where both the prior and the latter locators may have some rights; and if there can be a reasonable and apparent construction of section 2336, by which it will not be in conflict at all with section 2322, then such construction should govern. Now, there are cases where the owners of ledges which intersect may each have rights entirely distinct from, and which do not conflict at all with, the clear and positive language of section 2322. Passing the consideration of the possibility of a subsequent locator acquiring rights, as against the prior locator, by adverse user, it must be remembered that the Revised Statutes were not intended to impair the rights of quartz miners, in cases where the locations were made before May 10, 1872. Rev. St. § 2344. Prior to the time when congress undertook to legislate upon the subject of the location of quartz mines, such location was regulated entirely by local rules and customs; and, while those rules and customs had a general similarity throughout mining regions, there were still some districts in which they differed quite materially from the general customs. For instance, in some localities quartz claims were held by square location,—the owner not being allowed to go beyond his side lines to follow his lead under ground,—and in other localities there were what are known as "ledge locations;" that is, where the ledge alone was located, without any surface ground. Now, then, the provisions of section 2336 can readily be construed as intending to protect the rights of such old ledge locations. But, in the second place, there are two kinds of intersections of quartz ledges. They sometimes intersect, and sometimes unite, in their horizontal extension, or, as the miners call it, their "strike." But they may also intersect or unite on their dip; that is, they may intersect laterally in their downward course. Now, when they intersect laterally, as last above stated, the owner of each ledge has rights at the point of intersection entirely consistent with all of the provisions of section 2322. In such a case the owner of a claim on land adjoining that of a prior locator would have a right to follow his ledge as it dipped laterally underneath the surface ground of his neighbor, and, if his ledge intersected the ledge of the prior locator, he would have the right of way through it under the statute, the older locator merely having the quartz at the exact point of intersection; but his right to thus follow his vein underground would be an entirely different thing from the right asserted in the case at bar by appellants,—to enter upon the surface of defendant's prior location, and locate a claim, the top or apex of which was within the surface location of defendant's ground. And to such an intersection the provision of section 2336 can be readily applied, in perfect consistency with the provisions of section 2322. Moreover, there is strong reason for thinking that such an intersection was the very one in the mind of congress when it passed section 2336; for in that section, and speaking of the same subject, it says that: "Where two or more veins unite, the oldest or prior location shall take the vein below the point of union." And, if the other kind of intersection was in the minds of the legislators at that time, they would not have used the word "below;" for "below" would not apply at all to a union on the strike of two veins, such as the appellants' rights depend on in the case at bar. These views make the two sections under review entirely harmonious, and the fundamental rule of construction is to reconcile apparently contradictory provisions of the statute, where it can be reasonably done. And, if we look at the apparent intention of congress, there would seem to be no possible reason for giving to the first locator all the veins within his surface lines, except those that happen to run in a particular way. Under appellants' contention, if the course of a vein was such that it intersected with the original vein of the prior locator a few feet before it reached the end line, it would not belong to such original locator; but, if the point of intersection was a few feet beyond his end line, then he would own it. There would be no good reason for supposing that congress intended such a result, when not using any language to express such intention. Moreover, how was it possible for appellants to locate any part of a quartz ledge on the surface of respondent's claim? It is the universal rule that a valid mining location can be made only upon unappropriated public land; that is, at least, as against the prior appropriator. It was even held by the supreme court of the United States in Gwillim v. Donnellan, 115 U. S. 45, 5 Sup. Ct. 1110, that a mining location made partly upon a former valid location was void throughout its entire length, as against a third party. That is no doubt a somewhat extreme doctrine, but it is certainly clear that such a location is invalid as against the prior appropriator himself; and as, in the case at bar, the appellants' whole claim rests upon a location made within and on top of the former valid location of the respondent, it is impossible to see how there is any basis at all for their asserted rights. And it must be remembered that section 2336 refers to a case where "priority of title" governs, and of course it can have no application to a party who has no title.

We are aware that the supreme court of Colorado, in Branagan v Dulaney, 8 Colo. 408, 8 Pac. 669, reached a different conclusion on this question; but, while we have the highest respect for the decisions of that court, we are not able to concur with its conclusion on the point under discussion. The opinion in that case went upon the theory that the two sections of the Revised Statutes above referred to are utterly inconsistent, and the court say: "We see no way out of the dilemma, except by the application of the arbitrary rule of construction suggested by the court in the case of Hall v. Smelting Co., [Morr. Min. Rights, (3d Ed.) 282, Fed. Cas. No. 5931,]—that, as between conflicting statutes, the latest in date will prevail, and, as between conflicting sections of the same statute, the last in order of arrangement will control." But that rule of construction is to be invoked only as a last resort, and where the conflict is so sharp and complete as to leave no possible room for giving both effect; and, as appears from the views above expressed, in our opinion, there is no such conflict between the two sections named. Both, in our opinion, can easily stand together, and we see no difficulty in reconciling them. The construction contended for by appellants would leave the rights of prior locators in the greatest confusion. Their property interests in their claims would be undefined, and the result would be ruinous litigation, and perhaps personal conflicts. But to give section 2322 its clear and undoubted meaning is to accurately fix the rights of prior locators as we think congress clearly intended them to be fixed.

After the foregoing opinion had been written, our attention was called to the case of Mining Co. v. Leach, (decided by the supreme court of Arizona,) 33 Pac. 418, in which that court reached the same conclusion as that heretofore stated. In the opinion of the court, delivered by Kibbey, J., there is an elaborate discussion of the subject, leading to the result that section 2336 does not conflict with, nor does it in any way repeal, any part of section 2322; that the former section had reference to mining rights existing prior to its passage; and that "congress had in mind, at the time of the enactment of the law of 1872, that, as mining rights then stood, A.'s lode might legally cross B.'s lode on the strike."

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: HARRISON, J.; FITZGERALD, J.; GAROUTTE, J.; PATERSON, J.

I dissent: DE HAVEN, J.

BEATTY, C. J. I concur in the judgment, and in the conclusion of the court as to the proper construction of sections 2322 and 2336 of the Revised Statutes. I think, however, that too much is conceded, both in the opinion of the court and in the argument of counsel for respondent in assuming that the provisions of section 2336 cannot be applied to locations made since the passage of the mining law of 1872, on veins which intersect upon their strike, without bringing it in conflict with the plain terms of section 2322. This wholly unwarranted assumption has been the source of all the trouble and difficulty which the land office and some of the state courts have encountered in their attempts to construe provisions of a statute which are in perfect harmony, but which have been erroneously supposed to be inconsistent. The sum of the argument in favor of the construction thus imposed upon the statute—which is, in effect, a nullification of the express terms of section 2322, and a relegation of mining rights to the same condition of uncertainty and confusion in which they were before the act of congress was passed—has been that section 2336 must be allowed some operation and effect; that its only possible application is to veins which cross on their strike, because parallel veins never do intersect on their dip; and that, if it is to be applied to veins which cross on their strike, the necessary inference is that congress intended that the discoverer of a cross vein should have the right to lay his surface location across the surface location of the intersected vein. But in truth this conclusion is a perfect non sequitur. There is no proposition in geometry plainer or more easily demonstrable than this: that surface locations on cross veins may be so made as not to conflict, while at the same time the portions of the veins included in or covered by the respective locations will intersect in depth,—in some cases within the surface lines of one or the other location extended downward vertically, and in other cases altogether without the surface lines of both locations. This results from the fact that veins generally, if not universally, descend into the earth, not vertically, but at a greater or less inclination or dip. This being so, and the law allowing the locator to follow his vein on its dip outside of his side lines projected downward vertically, and within the vertical lines of an adjoining or neighboring claim, it may easily happen that the parts of two intersecting veins included within entirely distinct surface locations will intersect in depth either outside of both claims, or within one or the other, according to the angle of the dip and the relation of the surface claims to the point where the apices or croppings of the veins intersect. Suppose, by way of illustration, a north and south vein, dipping to the west, intersected by an east and west vein dipping to the north at the same angle. Assuming these veins to be perfectly regular in strike and dip, their intersection will be along a diagonal line descending into the earth from the point of intersection at the croppings, (which, for brevity, I will call "Point A,") and extending in its horizontal projection to the northwest. Now, suppose a location on the north and south vein, commencing three hundred feet or more north of point A, and extending to the north along the vein. It is evident that a full surface claim, 1,500 feet in length, and extending 300 feet on each side of the croppings, may be located on the east and west vein without at all conflicting with the supposed location on the north and south vein; and it is equally evident that such location may be made to include point A, or altogether east of it or west of it. If made wholly to the east, it will not include any part of the intersection at the surface or below the surface. If made to extend but a short distance west of point A, it will include some of the intersection, but the diagonal of the line of intersection will carry it beyond the vertical plane of the west end line before the dip of the vein carries it beyond the south line of the other location. If made somewhat further to the west, the intersection will fall more or less within the surface lines of the north and south location, and will make a case for the application of section 2336. If made still further to the west, the line of intersection of the portions of the respective veins covered by the two locations will be wholly outside of the surface lines of either location, and still another case for the application of section 2336 will arise. Here, then, are two cases for the application of section 2336, without bringing it in conflict with section 2322; and the mere possibility that such cases might sometime arise under distinct locations, each entitled to all the rights conferred by the plain terms of section 2322, was a sufficient reason for incorporating in the law the provisions of section 2336. Of course, the hypothesis of two perfectly regular veins dipping at the same angle, and crossing at right angles, is one which will never be realized. But the very fact that veins, instead of being regular and uniform in strike and dip, are in every way irregular and eccentric, increases the possibility of intersections of cross veins under ground, outside of the lines of surface locations, and, so far from diminishing the force of the illustration used, only proves how infinitely it might be varied. If these views are correct, it follows that the only reason ever suggested for construing section 2322 against the plain import of its terms is based upon a geometrical absurdity; and the practice of miners in making, and of the land office in permitting, cross locations on the surface, is without any justification in the mining law.

(101 Cal. 367)

TALMADGE v. ARROWHEAD RESERVOIR CO. (No. 19,303.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 20, 1894.)

POWERS—SUBSTITUTION—SUBMISSION TO ARBITRATION.

A reservoir company's power of attorney to bargain, contract, agree for, purchase lands, etc., in the donee's judgment required for the company's business, "with full power of substitution or revocation," will not sustain his agreement to arbitrate the price of a tract he desires to buy for the company so as to bind the company by an award of a majority of the arbitrators, not concurred in by those whom he appointed.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Bernardino county; George E. Otis, Judge.

Action by F. L. Talmadge against the Arrowhead Reservoir Company on an award of arbitrators. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

H. C. Rolfe and F. B. Daley, for appellant. Willis, Cole & Craig, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. It is alleged in the complaint in this case that in April, 1892, the plaintiff and defendant entered into a written agreement, which is set out in full, and the material parts of which are as follows: "Whereas, the Arrowhead Reservoir Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the state of Kentucky, and doing business in the county of San Bernardino, state of California, is desirous of purchasing from F. L. Talmadge" the east half of a certain sixteenth section of land in San Bernardino county; and "whereas, said parties cannot agree among themselves as to the exact amount to be paid and received for said premises: Now, therefore, we, the undersigned, * * * do hereby submit said controversy to the arbitrament of" five men, two chosen by each of the parties named, and one to be chosen by the said four, "and we do mutually covenant, promise, and agree to and with each other that the award to be made by said arbitrators, or a majority of them, shall in all things by us, and each of us, be well and faithfully kept and observed, and that said arbitrators shall fix the amount or value of said premises, * * * which said amount said Arrowhead Reservoir Company promises and agrees to pay to said F. L. Talmadge within thirty days after said arbitrators have delivered to said company their decision therein; and the said Frank L. Talmadge promises and agrees, upon receiving the amount so fixed by said arbitrators of said property, that he will then and there give to said Arrowhead Reservoir Company a duly-executed grant deed, conveying to said company the legal title to the property hereinbefore described. And that the value fixed upon said property by said arbitrators shall be final between the parties hereto, and that neither party hereto shall appeal to or resort to any court from the decision of said arbitrators. And that said award be made in writing under the hands of said arbitrators, or a majority of them, and ready to be delivered to said parties in difference, or such of them as shall desire the same, on or before the 1st day of June, 1892. * * * And it is hereby stipulated and agreed that this submission to arbitration shall be entered as an order of the superior court in and for the county of San Bernardino, state of California." The agreement is signed: "The Arrowhead Reservoir Co., by Adolph Wood, Vice President and General Manager. F. L. Talmadge."

It is further alleged that the four so-called arbitrators, chosen by the parties, chose a fifth, and that on May 12, 1892, all of said five men met to consider the matter submitted to them, and both plaintiff and defendant appeared before them, and produced and submitted evidence as to the value of the premises, and were fully heard; that thereafter, on May 13, 1892, a majority of them fixed the value of the said premises at $18,000, and made their decision in writing, a copy of which is set out; that the decision was on the day of its date delivered to the plaintiff and defendant, and thereafter, on June 8, 1892, the plaintiff offered and tendered to the defendant a duly-executed grant deed, conveying to defendant the legal title to said property upon payment to him of the sum of $18,000, and again, a week later, made the same offer and tender, and demanded of defendant the said sum, but defendant then refused, and still refuses, to receive the said deed, or any deed of the said premises, or to pay to plaintiff the said sum; and that plaintiff is still ready and willing to deliver said deed, and to transfer and convey the legal title to said property to the defendant upon payment to him of the said sum of $18,000. Wherefore, he demands judgment against the defendant for the sum of $18,000, with interest and costs.

The answer denies most of the averments of the complaint, and, among other things, that defendant ever entered into any agreement with the plaintiff in reference to the purchase of the described land, or any other land, or ever entered into the agreement set forth in the complaint, or ever agreed or stipulated in writing to purchase said property, or any part of it, or ever agreed to submit the price of it to arbitration or otherwise.

At the trial the plaintiff offered in evidence a state patent to himself for the land described in the complaint, and a power of attorney to Adolph Wood, executed May 27, 1891, by the president and secretary of the defendant company, in pursuance of a resolution of its board of directors, and also the two other papers above referred to as set out in the complaint. By the power of attorney the company made, constituted, and appointed Wood "its true and lawful attorney for it, and in its name, place, and stead, and for its use and benefit, in said state of California, to bargain, contract, agree for, purchase lands, tenements, hereditaments, which in his judgment may be required or necessary for the company's business, and to receive and take such property, and all deeds and assurances therefor; and in case land is purchased by said company, and the entire purchase money is not paid therefor in cash, to mortgage such lands for the balance of purchase money upon such terms and conditions, and under such covenants, as he shall think fit, and to deliver and execute such instruments in writing as may be necessary or proper in the premises, * * * giving and granting unto its said attorney full power and authority to do and perform all and every act and thing whatsoever requisite and necessary to be done in and about the premises, as fully, to all intents, as said corporation might or could do if personally present by its board of directors and corporate officers, with full power of substitution and revocation, hereby ratifying and confirming all that said attorney or his substitutes shall lawfully do or cause to be done by virtue of these presents." The defendant objected to all the offered evidence upon the ground that it was irrelevant and immaterial, and to the power of attorney upon the ground that it did not confer any power to make the submission, and also to the power of attorney and the agreement and award set out upon the further ground that the complaint did not state a cause of action, for the reason that it did not show any case for submission to arbitration, or any compliance with the statute in regard to arbitrations, or that any contract had ever been made between plaintiff and defendant for the purchase of any land, or upon which any civil action could have been brought or maintained by either party. The court sustained the objection that the complaint did not state a cause of action, and rendered judgment for the defendant, from which the plaintiff appeals.

It is not, in our opinion, necessary to consider the question as to whether the complaint stated a cause of action or not, or as to whether the agreement, if authorized, constituted a statutory or common-law submission to arbitration, (Church v. Seitz, 74 Cal. 287, 15 Pac. 839;) for if, as claimed by respondent, the power of attorney did not authorize Wood to submit to third parties the matter of fixing the price to be paid for the land, then there was no completed contract which was binding upon or enforceable against either party. It is well settled that no action will lie to enforce the performance of a contract, or to recover damages for its breach, unless it be complete and certain; and the rule applies as well to price as to subject-matter and parties. Association v. Phillips, 56 Cal. 539; Breckinridge v. Crocker, 78 Cal. 529, 21 Pac. 179. It is also a general rule of law that an agent cannot delegate his authority to another, unless he is specially authorized so to do. Mechem, Ag. §§ 184-186; Ang. & A. Corp. § 277. Wood did not sign the agreement as the attorney in fact of the corporation, but as vice president and general manager, and it does not appear that he held either of those positions, nor, if he did, what were his powers as such. Waiving that objection, however, and still it only appears that he was authorized "to bargain, contract, agree for, purchase lands, tenements, hereditaments, which, in his judgment, may be required or necessary for the company's business," "with full power of substitution and revocation."

It is contended for appellant that the power of substitution conferred authority to submit to the so-called arbitrators the matter of appraising the land and conclusively fixing its price, and that, when the appraisement was made and delivered to the parties, the contract was complete. This contention cannot, in our opinion, be sustained. Wood was authorized only to substitute another to take his place and perform his duties as attorney or agent for the principal, not to substitute the judgment of another for his judgment while he was still acting as agent, and himself performing the duties pertaining to his position; but, even if he had the right to substitute another to make the appraisement and fix the price, still he certainly had no right to agree that his principal should be bound by an appraisement not made by his substitute, but by other persons. Here it appears that the appraisement was made and concurred in by only three of the so-called arbitrators, namely, the two chosen by appellant, and the fifth chosen by the other four. Under these circumstances, it is clear that no price for the land was ever agreed upon by the contracting parties, and no enforceable contract was ever made. It follows that the judgment should be affirmed.

We concur: SEARLS, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

101 Cal. 373

CITY OF LOS ANGELES v. COHN et al.
(No. 19,210.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 21, 1894.)

ESTOPPEL OF CITY—OCCUPATION OF STREET.

Where one erects a valuable building projecting into a street, after the agent of the city instructed by it, with the concurrence of the lot owner, to investigate and report to the council the city's rights in the land, reports that it has no rights, and such report is received and filed among the records of the city, it is estopped to claim the land.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; Walter Van Dyke, Judge.

Action by the city of Los Angeles against Kaspare Cohn and others. Judgment for defendants. Plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

C. McFarland, for appellant. Houghton, Silent & Campbell and Stephen M. White, for respondents.

GAROUTTE, J. Plaintiff bring this action to recover the possession of a small tract of land which lies at the intersection of Spring and Main streets, in the city of Los Angeles, and which is covered by a portion of the building known as "Temple Block." It is claimed by the city that this land is a part of a public street. At the conclusion of the trial the court made its findings of fact, to the effect that defendants were the owners of the land at the time the action was commenced, and that they and their grantors and predecessors had been in the active and exclusive occupation and possession of the property for more than 40 years. Upon these findings, judgment went for the defendants, and this appeal is prosecuted from that judgment, and from the order denying a motion for a new trial.

Owing to the views we entertain upon another branch of the case, we do not find it necessary to discuss in detail the sufficiency of the evidence to support the finding of the trial court as to the character of the possession, and the period of time of the possession, of these defendants, and their grantors and predecessors, over this tract of land. Upon examination of the evidence, we think it established to a certainty that this possession had been continuous and exclusive for almost 50 years. This is something unusual in litigation of the present character, and is a feature of the case to which we would attach considerable importance, if the consideration of the element of possession were necessary to support the title of defendants to the land. An uninterrupted possession of 40 or 50 years is full of meaning, even against a municipal corporation, and in some states such conduct upon the part of the city would conclusively indicate an abandonment by it of all right to the land as a public highway. In 1871, Temple began the erection of a block of buildings upon a certain parcel of land, which included, upon the north end thereof, the strip in dispute. The contemplated structure was to be three stories in height, of great value, and extended over this tract of land. The foundations being laid, it was reported to the city council by the street commissioner that Temple, the owner, was encroaching upon the public street with his building, and, upon an order of the council, the matter was referred to the city attorney for investigation. Subsequently, as shown by the minutes of the proceedings of the council, the city attorney made a lengthy report to that body, wherein, in detail, he reviewed the merits of the claims of both parties, and in conclusion held that Temple was the owner of the land, and was justified in erecting the building as he had begun it. This report was ordered received and placed on file, and a full synopsis thereof was entered upon the minutes of the board. Thereupon the building was at once erected to completion, and nothing further was ever done by the city in the premises until the present action was brought, 20 years later. Stephen C. Foster, who had been a former alcalde of the pueblo, and later a mayor of the city, and a witness in whom, it appears, all parties reposed confidence, testified that, at the time the city attorney was investigating the rights of the city to this land, he heard Temple, the owner of the building, tell the attorney that he wanted to do what was right; "he wanted the matter fixed at once;" and the witness also stated that his impression was that Temple said he would leave it to Howard, (city attorney,) and act upon his opinion as to where the north line should be placed.

Various questions pertaining to title and dedication arise in the case, and those questions have been fully argued by counsel. We shall not discuss them, but rest our decision upon the history of this piece of realty, as disclosed by the facts we have quoted from the record. If it be conceded that the legal title to this land has always been in the city, that fact alone avails the plaintiff nothing, for an assertion of its claims upon that ground has been barred by the statute of limitations for many years. A dedication of the property as a public highway, resulting from the filing of a certain map among the public records of the county in the year 1849, forms the basis of plaintiff's cause of action; and, conceding the filing of this map to have had all the force and effect claimed for it, and that dedication ipso facto resulted therefrom, yet we think plaintiff's conduct has been such that, whatever merit its claim may have possessed years ago, there is no merit in it now. While municipal corporations do not own their public streets, and while the laches of municipal officers cannot defeat the rights of the public in those streets, yet individuals have some rights which, in the exercise of common justice, the municipality must respect. Its conduct towards a citizen, pertaining to the boundary line of one of its highways, may be such that it would be a violation of every principle of right and morals to allow it to recede from the stand taken or the agreement made. The foregoing principle is well illustrated, and strongly put, by Dillon in his work upon Municipal Corporations, (section 675,) wherein it is said: "It will, perhaps, be found that necessities sometimes arise, of such a character that justice requires that an equitable estoppel shall be asserted, even against the public; but, if so, such cases will form a law unto themselves, and do not fall within the legal operation of limitation enactments. The author cannot assent to the doctrine that, as respects public rights, municipal corporations are impliedly within ordinary limitation statutes. It is unsafe to recognize such a principle; but there is no danger in recognizing the principle of an estoppel in pais, as applicable to exceptional cases, since this leaves the courts to decide the question, not by the mere process of time, but upon all the circumstances of the case, to hold the public estopped or not, as right and justice may require." The author cites many cases to support the text, and upon examination of these citations we find the principal recognized and approved, especially by the decisions of the Illinois court. In the later case of Simplot v. Railway Co., 16 Fed. 360, the text from Dillon is quoted with approval, and Judge Shiras says: "In the latter cases [referring to cases like the present one] the courts may apply the doctrine or principle of an estoppel, and by means thereof, where justice and right demand it, prevent wrong and injury from being done to private rights." This doctrine is also directly declared in the recent case of Crocker v. Collins, 37 S. C. 327, 15 S. E. 951; and while it is not for us to say whether or not the facts of that case were sufficient to justify an application of the principle of estoppel in pais as against the public, yet the law is there well declared, as follows: "We think, therefore, that mere adverse possession, for the statutory period, of a street or alley in a town which is a public highway, cannot confer a title; but, where such possession is accompanied with other circumstances which would render it inequitable that the public should assert its rights to regain possession, then, upon the principle of estoppel, a party may be protected against the assertion of right by the public, in order to prevent manifest wrong and injustice. For example, when a party, under an honest conviction of right, has taken possession of a portion of one of the streets or alleys of the town, and expended his money in erecting buildings thereon, without interference on the part of the public, these, or perhaps other, circumstances connected with adverse possession for the statutory period, may afford good ground for estoppel."

To our knowledge, there is nothing to be found in the decision of the court opposed to the doctrine laid down in the text we have quoted from Dillon's work on Municipal Corporations, while in the case of Fresno v. Fresno, etc., Irrigation Co., 98 Cal. 182, 32 Pac. 943, the principle was stated, and incidently approved. The question being a new one in this state, and a most important one, we will content ourselves with an application of it to the facts of the present case, and not attempt to promulgate any general rule by which every case invoking this doctrine may be weighed and measured. If we concede the existence of the principle of estoppel in pais against the public in certain exceptional cases, then this case is rightly decided, for this is an exceptional case. If this character of estoppel may be pleaded where justice and right require it, then it may be successfully pleaded in this case, for justice to these defendants demands it. There are limits beyond which even a city, in representing the rights of the public, may not go, and we think the city, in the present action, has gone beyond those limits. If the city had expressly agreed by its officers, with defendants' grantors, even in parol, that a certain line should constitute the boundary line between the street and the grantor's property, and upon the faith of such agreement the grantors had erected a block of buildings flush with the line of the street, as agreed upon by all parties, it would be a hard law that would allow the city to repudiate that agreement, and destroy the grantor's property. No court should countenance such a thing, and an estoppel in pais will rise up in the pathway of a city, to bar it and its principal, the people, from the commission of such a grievous wrong; and, to give the acts of this city a very limited meaning, we think its conduct in the present case at least equivalent to an oral agreement as to the location of the true boundary line of the street.

It is unnecessary to again detail the facts. Before the building was erected, with a knowledge and concurrence of the owner, the city instructed its agent to investigate and report to the council its rights in the land. The agent did investigate, and reported that the city had no claim or title. This report was received, placed on file, and entered, in substance, upon the minutes of the proceedings of the council. Nothing more was ever done by the city until this action was brought,—a period of 20 years later. Upon the reception of the report, and its filing among the records of the city, defendants' grantors at once proceeded to the erection of a large and valuable building, and there it stands at the present day. A judgment for plaintiff would result in a destruction of this property. These facts are potent in themselves, and in our researches we have found no case which may so well be termed an "exceptional case." We have found no case which, with better reason, should form a "law unto itself." It is a case where an estoppel in pais is properly pleaded. For the foregoing reasons, it is ordered that the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: HARRISON, J.; PATERSON, J.

(101 Cal. 387)

SOLARI v. SNOW. (No. 19,225.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 24, 1894.)

IMPEACHMENT OF WITNESS—COMPLAINT IN ANOTHER CASE—DEED—NOTICE.

1. A complaint not verified or signed by plaintiff, and whose contents are not shown to have been known by him, is not admissible against him, in another action, to contradict his testimony.

2. Where defendant took a deed signed by G., not only individually, but as attorney in fact of plaintiff, he was charged with notice of plaintiff's interest.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Santa Barbara county; W. B. Cope, Judge.

Action by Giobatti Solari against S. P Snow. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. Affirmed.

E. B. Hall and B. F. Thomas, for appellant. Richards & Carrier, for respondent.

FITZGERALD, J. Action to quiet plaintiff's title to the land described in the complaint, against the claims of defendant, and for the recovery of the possession thereof, also to cancel a tax deed issued to defendant therefor, as a cloud on plaintiff's title, and for rents and profits, and damages for withholding. Plaintiff had judgment, and defendant appeals from the judgment and the order denying his motion for a new trial. The evidence shows that plaintiff was the owner of the property described in the complaint, at the date of its purchase by the defendant. This being so, it is only necessary to consider but two of the questions discussed by counsel in their briefs, as their decision necessarily disposes of the others raised by the record on this appeal. These questions are: (1) Did Domingo Grondoma, who joined—individually and as attorney in fact of plaintiff—with his wife and son in the execution of the deed to defendant of the premises in controversy, sustain, or claim to sustain, at and prior to the execution thereof, the relation of attorney in fact to plaintiff? (2) If so, did defendant purchase said property with notice, either actual or constructive, of such relation, and of plaintiff's ownership thereof? On these questions, the court, in its decision, found adversely to appellant; and as the findings thereon, as well as the other findings attacked by the specifications, are fully justified by the evidence, they will not, under the well-established rule of this court, be disturbed, unless the rulings of the court complained of, in relation to the admission and rejection of evidence bearing upon these questions, were erroneous.

There are 30 assignments of error claimed to have been committed by the court during the trial of the cause, but the only one necessary to be noticed—the others being immaterial or unimportant—is the one relating to the admission, against defendant's objection, of an unverified complaint signed by the attorney alone, the contents of which were not shown to have been known to the plaintiff therein, filed September 1, 1887, in a certain action brought in the superior court of Santa Barbara county, notice of which was thereafter duly recorded and filed, wherein the said Domingo Grondoma was plaintiff, and his son, Jose H., and Encarnacion, the wife of the said Domingo, were defendants. That action, which was dismissed on the day after the execution of the deed to defendant herein, was brought to set aside and vacate, on the ground of fraud, two deeds to the property in question,—one a deed of gift executed by Domingo to his son Jose H., conveying to him the whole of said property; the other, also a deed of gift, from Jose H. to his mother, Encarnacion, conveying to her a part thereof. The complaint in that action contained the allegation, among others, that said Domingo Grondoma was "at all the times hereinafter mentioned the duly appointed, qualified, and acting administrator and trustee of the estate of Giobatti Solari, who is civilly dead, and the real property hereinafter described belongs to said estate." The property referred to and hereinafter described is the property involved in this action. This complaint was offered and admitted in evidence, against defendant's objection, for two purposes: First, as an admission by Domingo Grondoma of the relation which he claimed to sustain to plaintiff, thereby contradicting his testimony at the trial on that point; and, secondly, to charge the defendant with notice of the contents thereof. The complaint was clearly inadmissible as evidence for either purpose, for the reason that it was unverified, and not signed by the plaintiff therein, and not shown that he had any knowledge of its contents. But it affirmatively appears from the record that defendant could not have been injured by its admission, as the evidence, independent of the complaint, was overwhelming in support of the finding that defendant purchased the property with full knowledge of plaintiff's ownership, and of Domingo Grondoma's assumed relation, as his attorney in fact, in connection therewith. The deed to defendant of the property in question was signed by the said Domingo as the attorney in fact of plaintiff. This was, of itself, sufficient to charge the defendant with notice of the character and extent of plaintiff's interest in the property, and of Grondoma's real or pretended relation to him, at and prior to the purchase of the property by the defendant, and he took it subject to such interest. Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: DE HAVEN, J.; McFARLAND, J.

(101 Cal. 390)

AMES et ux. v. CITY OF SAN DIEGO. (No. 19,291.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 24, 1894.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — ADVERSE POSSESSION AGAINST—EFFECT OF FINDINGS.

1. Land obtained from the United States by a city, as successor of a former pueblo, may, if not dedicated for some public use, be lost by the adverse possession of another.

2. A finding that the land in controversy was conveyed to defendant city, as successor of a pueblo, "in trust for municipal purposes," taken in connection with a previous finding that plaintiffs have been in adverse possession since 1846, occupying it as a place of residence during that period, is not to be construed as declaring that the land was dedicated to public use as a street or park, or for a public building, or that it was conveyed to defendant for such a purpose, so as to show a conflict between the findings.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; W. L. Pierce, Judge.

Action by Catalina S. Ames and husband against the city of San Diego. From a judgment for plaintiffs, and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

William H. Fuller, for appellants. William Darby, for respondent.

DE HAVEN, J. The plaintiffs are husband and wife, and this action was brought for the purpose of determining an adverse claim made by the defendant to certain land which the complaint alleges is owned by the plaintiff Catalina S. Ames. The answer alleges that the defendant is the owner of the land in controversy, and this was the only issue made by the pleadings. The action was tried by the court without a jury, and judgment was rendered in favor of plaintiffs. The defendant appeals from the judgment and from an order denying its motion for a new trial. It is claimed by the defendant that the findings do not support the judgment, and also that the finding in respect to the plaintiffs' adverse possession is not justified by the evidence. The court did not find in direct terms that the plaintiff Catalina S. Ames is the owner of the land in dispute, but it found the following among other facts: "(2) That, ever since the year 1846, the said plaintiffs and their grantors have been continuously in possession of the lands and premises hereinafter described, claiming the same adversely to defendant, and that the same have been during the whole of said time inclosed with a substantial fence; and that there has been erected, and is now standing on said lands, a two-story adobe dwelling house and a frame dwelling house, and that said adobe dwelling house has been occupied by said plaintiffs and their grantors as a dwelling continuously from the said year 1846." "(4) That on the 10th day of April, 1874, the title of said defendant as successor to the Mexican pueblo of San Diego was confirmed, and that on said day a patent was issued to defendant by the United States of America for the land and premises hereinafter described, with other lands, as the pueblo lands of said defendant, and in trust for municipal purposes."

The foregoing finding numbered 2, although somewhat informal, was evidently intended as a finding to the effect that the plaintiffs had, before the commencement of this action, acquired title to the premises in controversy by adverse possession, and that such is its proper construction is not denied by counsel for defendant; but it is urged that the latter finding, numbered 4, is in conflict with the former, and shows that plaintiffs did not and could not have acquired such title as against defendant. The finding last above quoted, and upon which the defendant relies, shows clearly that the defendant city obtained from the United States title to the land in controversy as the successor of the former pueblo of San Diego; and it is well settled in this state that land thus acquired cannot be sold under an execution issued upon a money judgment against the city succeeding to the rights of the pueblo. Hart v. Burnett, 15 Cal. 530; San Francisco v. Canavan, 42 Cal. 541; Townsend v. Greeley, 5 Wall. 326. The reason for this rule is that such lands are not held as the absolute property of the city, but in trust for its inhabitants. The nature of the title of a pueblo to the lands within its limits, and the trust upon which it was held by the pueblo, are very clearly stated by Baldwin, J., in delivering the opinion of the court in Hart v. Burnett, 15 Cal., at page 568. He said: "We have carefully examined their references to laws and text-books, and it seems to us that, taken together, they show that under the old Spanish system the lands assigned to towns, whether by general law or special act, were in the sense of endowments to be held in trust for the purposes and objects specified in the laws or in the particular grant; or, as expressed by Perez, en clase en de dote o privilegio de poblacion, (in class of endowment or town privilege,) but not in absolute ownership, with full right of disposition. The lands so assigned were for the general object of building up and sustaining the town and its population, and were to be applied to that object in the manner which might be directed by the laws or by royal orders. The government, or its authorized agents, were therefore to designate the portions of such lands which were to be used for particular purposes, as those which were to be given to individuals in solares and suertes, those which were to remain common for the use of all alike,—as the pastures, woods, public squares, watering places, etc.,—and those from which the municipal officers were to derive revenues for their support and the expenses of the municipal government. The lands so assigned to these special objects could not all be used or disposed of in the same manner. Thus, the building lots were to be given to the settlers for their individual and exclusive benefits, but the commons were for the common use of all, and could not, in general, be reduced to individual ownership, except by common consent or the exercise of the right of eminent domain."

The defendant city, as successor of the former pueblo, took its lands upon the same trust upon which they were held by the pueblo, and succeeded to the same right of alienation; and, while the land held upon such a trust is not subject to sale upon an execution issued upon a judgment against the trustee, it does not by any means follow that title to such portion of the pueblo lands as has not been dedicated to some specific public use cannot be acquired by adverse possession. Of course, it is well settled that land held by a city in trust for the general public upon a dedication to the public for use as a street, park, or for a public building, cannot be alienated by the city, and the title of the public thereto cannot be lost by a possession adverse to the city. Hoadley v. San Francisco, 50 Cal. 265; People v. Pope, 53 Cal. 437; County of Yolo v. Barney, 79 Cal. 375, 21 Pac. 833; Board v. Martin, 92 Cal. 209, 28 Pac. 799. But in case of lands the legal title to which is vested in the city, and which may be alienated by it, the rule just stated in relation to land dedicated to the public use does not apply. As to land which is the subject of alienation, we are clearly of the opinion that the title of the city thereto may be lost by the adverse possession of another for the requisite period of time; and in regard to pueblo lands of this latter character, such as house lots, we see no reason why the statute of limitations should not apply in favor of an adverse possessor, precisely the same as if such land had been acquired by the city by purchase, and for purposes of sale, or for any other use not strictly municipal.

The remaining question upon this point is whether the finding upon which the defendant relies shows that the land in controversy is held by the city for some specific public use as a park, street, common, or as a site for public buildings. The language of the finding is that the land was conveyed to the defendant, as successor of the pueblo, "in trust for municipal purposes." We do not think, in view of the specific finding to the effect that the plaintiffs have been in adverse possession of the land since 1846, occupying the same as a place of residence during all that period, that the court intended by the language above quoted to say that this land was ever dedicated to public use as a street, park, or for public building, or that the same was conveyed to the defendant in trust for either of such purposes. Findings are to be liberally construed in support of a judgment, and, if possible, are to be reconciled so as to prevent any conflict upon material points; and, unless the conflict is clear, and the findings are incapable of being harmoniously construed, a judgment will not be reversed upon the ground of a conflict in the findings. We thing the court below only meant to say, in the findings now under consideration, that the defendant acquired the title of the former pueblo of San Diego to the land in controversy and other pueblo lands, impressed with the same general trust upon which they were held by its predecessor, but did not mean that the land in controversy was held by the defendant in trust for a specific public use.

What we have said in regard to the construction of the findings disposes of the further contention of defendant that the finding in relation to the adverse possession of plaintiff is not sustained by the evidence. The stipulation relied upon by defendant to overthrow this finding of the court is as general as the finding we have just considered, and in view of the other evidence in the transcript, in which we find no intimation that the lot in controversy was ever dedicated to a public use, or that any claim of such dedication was ever made upon the part of the defendant, we would not be justified in holding it to be a stipulation by the plaintiffs that such land was so dedicated to public use and is not a house lot such as the former pueblo might have alienated, and which the defendant, as the successor to the pueblo title, was authorized to convey in private ownership. Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: McFARLAND, J.; FITZGERALD, J.

---

4 Cal. Unrep. 477

TIBBETS v. BAKEWELL et al. (No. 19,162.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 24, 1894.)

EJECTMENT—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

In ejectment, in which the answer denied ouster and the possession and withholding by defendants, it appeared that the land in dispute is a strip six feet wide, on which a water ditch is located. The evidence showed that defendants frequently put a pressure board in the ditch, which cut off plaintiff's water, and diverted it into a flume made by them. Held, that the evidence established a trespass, merely, and did not justify a judgment for plaintiff.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Bernardino county; John C. Campbell, Judge.

Action in ejectment by Luther C. Tibbets against Thomas Bakewell and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

L. C. Tibbets and A. B. Paris, for appellant. Frank O. Oster, for respondents.

HAYNES, C. Ejectment to recover a strip of land six feet in width. The complaint was in the usual form. The answer denied the seisin of plaintiff, and the ouster and the possession and withholding by the defendants. It appears from the evidence that a water ditch is located upon this strip of land, and that at some point of the land in question the water was diverted by the defendants to other land belonging to them. Plaintiff, after giving evidence tending to prove title, etc., testified: "I had ordered my water in said ditch, and had been using it. When I found I had been getting no water, I went up to the box to see what the trouble was; and I found a board put in, and the water running into a flume that Thomas Bakewell and the Riverside Water Company had made. There was a pressure board put in, so that all of my water was shut off." He further testified that this occurred about every time he had "gone to irrigate" since then. He also testified that he "had been damaged in the loss of the use of that strip of land, and by the prevention by the defendants of his running water on said land, in the sum of two hundred dollars." Plaintiff having rested, defendant moved for judgment of nonsuit, which was granted; and this appeal is from that judgment, and from an order denying a new trial.

It may be that the defendants have been guilty of a trespass, and have damaged the plaintiff by a diversion of water, or that they did something they ought not to have done, but the evidence is clearly insufficient to justify a judgment for plaintiff in an action of ejectment. The judgment and order appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C; SEARLS, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

---

101 Cal. 379

PEOPLE ex rel. BURNETT v. MORSTADT, Justice of Peace. (No. 15,245.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 24, 1894.)

BAIL TO APPEAR BEFORE EXAMINING MAGISTRATE—WHEN FORFEITED.

Where the argument of a demurrer to a complaint before a justice of the peace, charging defendant with a felony, is commenced an hour before the time set for defendant's examination, and is not concluded within the hour, the justice properly refused to have defendant called during the progress of such argument, after the time set for the examination had passed, and enter on his docket the failure of defendant to appear, and declare his bond forfeited.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Sonoma county; S. K. Dougherty, Judge.

Petition by the people of the state of California, on relation of Albert G. Burnett, for a writ of mandate to J. Morstadt, justice of the peace, to compel him to enter in his docket the failure of one Berta to appear at the time fixed for his examination on a charge of felony, and to declare his bond forfeited. From an order granting the writ, respondent appeals. Reversed.

J. P. Rodgers, (Rutledge & Pressley, of counsel,) for appellant. A. G. Burnett, Emmet Seawell, Dist. Atty., and J. R. Leppo, Asst. Dist. Atty., for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. This is an appeal from an order of the superior court directing the issuance of a writ of mandate to the appellant, a justice of the peace of Sonoma county, requiring him to enter in his docket the failure of one Berta to appear for examination on November 10, 1891, at 11 a. m., and also commanding said justice to declare a certain undertaking of bail, given by defendant prior to that time, forfeited. Berta was charged with the offense of embezzlement, and upon his arrest gave a bond in the sum of $1,000, wth two sureties, conditional that he would appear and answer the charge when ordered by the court. By consent of attorneys, the examination was set for November 10th, at 11 a. m. In the mean time a demurrer was filed to the complaint, upon the ground that it stated no cause of action, and the argument of this demurrer was taken up on the 10th of November, at 10 a. m. This argument continued until 11:25 a. m., when the following occurred, as appears by the evidence of the justice of the peace: "Now when it was 11:25 a. m., Mr. Leppo, [deputy district attorney,] in the midst of his argument of the demurrer, pulled out his watch and says: 'I ask now the court to send the constable in front of the courthouse, and call H. Berta three times, and, if he shall not answer, to declare his bond forfeited.' I told him I could not do anything of the kind, because, if I sustained the demurrer, we don't want him. The very question of the demurrer is whether it shall be we want Berta or not." It thus appears that the justice declined to grant the request of the district attorney, and the subsequent history of the litigation, as evidenced by the record, discloses that his argument bearing upon the legal question raised by the demurrer was not convincing, for the demurrer was sustained, and, no amended complaint being filed, Berta was not "wanted," and the proceeding terminated.

We think the judgment should be reversed and the proceeding dismissed. As to whether the filing of a demurrer to a complaint charging a defendant with felony is an authorized practice, we are not called upon at the present time to decide. Neither are we justified in reviewing the legal soundness of the court's views, as indicated by its order in sustaining the demurrer to the complaint. The condition of the defendant's bail bond was, substantially, that he would hold himself amenable to the orders of the court; and when the court took up the consideration of the demurrer to the complaint, at 10 a. m., and the argument thereon was still in progress, at and after 11 a. m., the hour set for the examination, we think the further hearing of that matter by the magistrate was, in effect, a continuance of the examination until the argument of the demurrer was concluded. There is no doubt but that the magistrate had the power to continue the examination even in the absence of the defendant. Notwithstanding the examination was set for the 10th of November, if the magistrate had sustained a demurrer to the complaint on the 9th, and thereupon dismissed the proceedings, it is unquestioned that the defendant would not have been in default if he had failed to present himself before the court upon the 10th. If at 10 o'clock upon the 10th, when the demurrer was taken up for consideration, the court had, in terms, continued the examination until the disposition of the demurrer, the presence of the defendant would not have been required, nor could he have been declared in default until the demurrer was disposed of, or a further order of the court made. We think the conduct of the case, as to the hearing of the demurrer, was, in effect, a continuance of the examination until that hearing was concluded. For these reasons, it is ordered that the judgment be reversed, and the cause remanded, with direction to dismiss the proceeding.

We concur: PATERSON, J.; HARRISON, J.

101 Cal. 396

BALDWIN v. TEMPLE. (No. 19,278.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 24, 1894.)

ADVERSE POSSESSION—PAYMENT OF TAXES—EVIDENCE.

1. Where an assessment for a certain year covered the whole of a certain ranch, describing it by boundaries, one claiming a part thereof by adverse possession, who did not pay taxes for such year, has the burden of showing that the part claimed by him was not within the assessment.

2. The fact that the number of acres which the assessment named as being within the ranch, together with the acres in the part so claimed by adverse possession, was less than the number of acres stated in the patent, did not show that such part was not covered by the assessment.

3. The fact that one in possession without title accepts a lease from the owner of the paper title is strong evidence that he did not claim adversely to the latter.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; W. H. Clark, Judge.

Action by E. J. Baldwin against John H. Temple. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Wells, Monroe & Lee, for appellant. Brousseau & Hatch, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. The plaintiff brought ejectment. The defendant answered, and also filed a cross complaint to quiet title to the demanded premises, and plaintiff answered the cross complaint. The cause was tried by the court without a jury. The findings were in favor of defendant, and judgment was entered thereon. Plaintiff moved for a new trial, which was denied, and this appeal is from the judgment, and from the order denying a new trial.

No question is made but that the plaintiff has the legal title, unless the defendant has acquired title by adverse possession; nor is there any question but that the defendant was in the exclusive possession of the demanded premises a sufficient length of time to give him title. The question controverted, touching the adverse possession of defendant, is as to whether taxes were levied and assessed upon the demanded premises for the year 1878. Upon this point, the finding of the court is as follows: "That said property was not assessed for taxes for the year 1878." A general statement of the facts of the case is necessary to a clear understanding of the question above indicated. In 1874, F. P. F. Temple was the owner of the undivided one-half of the Rancho La Merced and the Rancho Potrero De Felipe Lugo, which adjoin each other, the Merced lying on the westerly side of the last-named ranch. The defendant is the son of F. P. F. Temple. The father, it is found, made a survey of a tract of land containing about 75 acres, lying partly in each of the said ranchos, which 75-acre tract embraces the lands in controversy in this action. January, 1874, F. P. F Temple made a parol gift of the 75-acre tract to the defendant. That part of the tract which is in controversy here is a small parcel, the quantity of which does not clearly appear, but containing probably from three to five acres, belonging to the Merced grant, and lying on the westerly side of the line separating the two grants.

It is contended by appellant that the finding above quoted is not justified by the evidence, but that, on the contrary, the evidence shows that it was included in the levy and assessment of taxes upon the Rancho Merced for the year 1878 and each subsequent year. The finding, of course, concedes that the defendant did not pay the taxes upon the lands in controversy for that year, none being assessed; so that the question is as to whether they were in fact assessed. The defendant offered no evidence tending to show whether or not taxes were assessed upon the demanded premises for that year. The plaintiff, however, gave evidence tending to prove that these premises were assessed as a part of the Rancho La Merced for each year from 1876 down to and including the year 1887. The only ground upon which respondent controverts this statement is based upon the various statements as to the number of acres contained in said rancho. This ranch was patented by the United States to F. P. F. Temple and Juan M. Sanchez in 1872, and is there stated to contain 2,363.75 acres. On December 2, 1875, Temple, Sanchez, and Workman mortgaged this rancho, with other property, to the plaintiff, the mortgage describing it as containing the same number of acres mentioned in the patent. This mortgage was afterwards foreclosed, and in all the proceedings for foreclosure and sale the same number of acres is stated. Defendant was not a party to the foreclosure proceedings. In 1876, F. P. F. Temple failed and made an assignment to Freeman and Spence, and that year an undivided one-half of the ranch was assessed to Sanchez, and the other half to Freeman and Spence, the number of acres in the ranch being put down as 2,324. In 1877 the same number of acres appears in the assessment. In 1878 it was assessed as follows: "Geo. E. Long, assignee of F. P. F. Temple, an undivided one-half interest in 2,324 acres of the Rancho La Merced, situate in the county of Los Angeles, and bounded north by Rancho Potrero Grande, east by Potrero De Felipe Lugo, south by San Gabriel river, west by Rancho San Antonio, being 1,162 acres." "Paid." And for the same year to "Juan M. Sanchez, 1,152 acres of land, being an undivided one-fourth interest of the Rancho La Merced, county of Los Angeles, bounded north by Rancho Potrero Grande, east by Potrero De Felipe Lugo and San Gabriel river, west by Repetto." "Paid." The ranch was similarly described in the assessment for each year up to 1880. In 1880 it was described by sections and fractional sections in the different townships, the number of acres being set down to each description, and the whole stated to be 2,385 acres; and was assessed to Richard Garvey, receiver. In 1881 it was assessed to E. J. Baldwin, the plaintiff, as follows: "Also, 2,335 acres of land in Rancho La Merced, being the whole of said rancho, (except 50 acres sold by Wm. Alvord to Mrs. A. M. W. De Temple, as per deed recorded,)" etc.; following with a particular description by sections and fractional sections, with the quantity in each description. All the subsequent assessments follow the description given in the assessment of 1881. The tract, containing about 75 acres, claimed by defendant, is designated in the record as the "John Temple Homestead." No description of the homestead, as assessed for taxation, appears in the record, nor is there any evidence that the homestead was assessed by any description in 1878, while the finding is that the part in dispute was not assessed. The discrepancy in the number of acres appearing in different assessments and that stated in the patent is not material, in view of the description given of the ranch by its boundaries, no part of it being excepted until after the conveyance of the 50 acres to Mrs. Temple. Besides, there was evidence tending to prove that no part of the Merced ranch had ever been assessed to the defendant except 12¼ acres assessed, in 1884, to John H. Temple, "as guardian of Maggie B."

In Reynolds v. Williard, 80 Cal. 605, 22 Pac. 262, it was held that, when the plaintiff in an action of ejectment proves a paper title, his case is made out; and, if the defendant relies upon adverse possession under the statute of limitations, he must prove either that no taxes were levied and assessed upon the land, or that he paid all taxes which were levied and assessed thereon. See, also, concurring opinion in McGrath v. Wallace, 85 Cal. 629, 24 Pac. 793. If that decision is followed, the burden was upon defendant of proving that the land was not assessed. He offered no evidence tending to prove that fact, nor is there any evidence in the record which in any manner conflicts with that offered by plaintiff from the records, showing the assessment of the Merced ranch for each year, and the payment of the tax assessed thereon. It is contended by respondent that the discrepancy between the quantity of land contained in the Merced ranch, as shown by the patent, and the quantity as stated in the assessment of 1878, tends to show that it was not assessed. The evidence, however, shows that the parcel of land in controversy here is the only part of the Merced ranch claimed to be owned by defendant; and this part contains but a small quantity of land, variously stated at from two to five acres, which would not at all account for the difference between the quantity stated in the patent and that stated in the assessment to the assignees of Temple. Besides, the description in the assessment to the assignee of Temple purporting to include the whole ranch, it rested upon defendant to show that that assessment did not include the four or five acres in controversy. The assessment did not refer to the fence which cut a few acres off from the remainder of the ranch, but referred to the line between the two ranches. The case is, therefore, within McDonald v. Drew, 97 Cal. 266, 32 Pac. 173. The land assessed, being bounded on the east by the Potrero De Felipe Lugo grant, necessarily included the land in controversy. Even if it be conceded that the whole of the Merced ranch was not assessed, there is nothing to indicate that this particular part was omitted. But the whole ranch was assessed. The quantity of land expressed in acres is mere description, and does not control the more certain description by boundaries, but must yield to boundaries where they do not agree. Stanley v. Green, 12 Cal. 164, 165; De Arguello v. Greer, 26 Cal. 632; Tappendorff v. Downing, 76 Cal. 170, 18 Pac. 247. There is no claim that defendant paid the taxes since 1878, or at all, upon any part of the Merced ranch by that description, but, on the contrary, it is shown that the land was assessed, and the taxes paid by others, every year down to the commencement of this action. As counsel for respondent suggests, the payment of the taxes by the plaintiff added nothing to his title, but it excludes any presumption that it was assessed to or paid by defendant. The finding in question is not justified by the evidence.

Other questions are presented by the record which will probably be presented upon a new trial, and which will, therefore, be briefly noticed. On the 8th of February, 1881, the plaintiff called the attention of the defendant to the fact that a portion of the land he had inclosed belonged to the Merced grant. The defendant replied that he did not wish to have any trouble about it, and thereupon the plaintiff executed to the defendant a lease of the premises in question for the period of one year for the annual rental of one dollar, which lease the defendant accepted. At the expiration of this lease, the defendant refused to accept another lease, saying that he did not desire to lease his own property. It is quite true that, where the owner of land accepts a lease from another, it does not destroy his title to the land. Where, however, the lessee is in possession without title, it is a pregnant admission of the fact, and may be used as evidence tending to show that he did not claim to hold the land adversely to the party from whom he accepted the lease. Respondent, however, is right in his contention that, being in possession at the time the lease was made, his right to maintain an action without first surrendering the possession is not affected by the lease; his prior possession not having been obtained from the lessor. Whether defendant paid the rent is immaterial.

Any question arising upon the fact that defendant's possession was based upon a parol gift is not important to be considered, inasmuch as the gift, though invalid as against the mortgagee, was nevertheless a sufficient basis for the acquisition of a right by adverse possession, so that defendant's right is unaffected by the making of the mortgage and plaintiff's title under it, if the defendant had acquired title by adverse possession. We advise that the judgment and order appealed from be reversed, and a new trial granted.

We concur: VANCLIEF, C; BELCHER, C.

DE HAVEN and FITZGERALD, JJ. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, it is ordered that the judgment and order appealed from be reversed, and a new trial granted.

McFARLAND, J. I concur in the judgment. The question does not arise here whether one relying on adverse possession must prove, negatively, that no taxes were levied on the land in contest. It was held that he must do so in Reynolds v. Williard, 80 Cal. 605, 22 Pac. 262, by a divided court; but I do not consider that one case as establishing the doctrine. If we are to stand by the decisions, why, they are the other way. In the opinion of the majority of the court in Reynolds v. Williard, the case of Ross v. Evans, 65 Cal. 439, is referred to, and treated as not necessarily determining the point, but the two later cases of Heilbron v. Ditch Co., 75 Cal. 123, 17 Pac. 65, and Oneto v. Restano, 78 Cal. 374, 20 Pac. 743, are not in any way referred to or mentioned; yet in these two last-named cases, both in bank, the point was squarely decided the other way. In Ross v. Evans, while the point was, perhaps, not clearly involved, still the opinion of the department, delivered by Mr. Justice Thornton, states views inconsistent with those afterwards expressed in Reynolds v. Williard. However, in Heilbron v. Ditch Co. the point was necessarily involved, and the court held that the point of nonpayment of taxes was "sufficiently answered by the fact that it does not appear that any taxes were ever levied or assessed upon" the property there involved; and there was no dissent in the court in bank upon the point, although Mr. Justice Paterson dissented upon another point. But in Oneto v. Restano, supra, the court in bank, without any dissent, took occasion to express its views fully on the subject, and said: "It is argued for the plaintiff that, in order to recover upon this ground, the defendant must show that he paid all the taxes which have been assessed. It has been held, however, that, if no taxes are found to have been assessed, it need not be found that the party claiming by adverse possession has paid taxes. Heilbron v. Ditch Co., 75 Cal. 117, 17 Pac. 65. In other words, the requirement as to the payment of taxes does not apply when none have been assessed to anybody. And the inference is that the burden of showing that none have been assessed is not upon the claimant by possession. That is a negative which he is not required to prove. If there has been an assessment, it is for the other party to show the fact. This is the rule which convenience requires, for it is an easy matter to show that an assessment has been levied, but a difficult one to show that none have been levied for a series of years." This case was not in any way called to the attention of the four justices who rendered the decision in the subsequent case of Reynolds v. Williard; and under these circumstances I adhere to the decisions, and not to the one isolated case last above mentioned.

---

4 Cal. Unrep. 479

DOOLEY v. SEVENTEEN THOUSAND AND FIVE HUNDRED HEAD OF SHEEP. (No. 19,298.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 28, 1894.)

ANIMALS—TRESPASS—LIABILITY—DAMAGES — EVIDENCE.

1. Where a trespass is committed by the animals of several persons, those of one person cannot be sold to pay the damages caused by animals of others, he not having any control over them, and not having contributed to the cause of their trespassing, and no authority for such sale being given by Act March 7, 1878, concerning trespassing of animals.

2. A finding that 7,000 sheep, marked with certain brands, trod down and depastured all of plaintiff's lands, being 9,460 acres, comprising 10 whole and 20 fractional sections, is not supported by evidence only that they were seen on five different days and on three sections of the land; there being evidence that other sheep were seen on the lands, and it not being shown that 7,000 other sheep did not trespass on the lands as alleged in the complaint.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Luis Obispo county; V. A. Gregg, Judge.

Action by Hiram A. Dooley against 17,500 head of sheep. Judgment for plaintiff. Gracian Solaberry appeals. Reversed.

Alvin Fay and Wilcoxon & Bouldin, for appellant. Ruffin & Ruffin, Graves & Graves, and L. Lamy, for respondent.

VANCLIEF, C. This action in rem was brought to recover $7,500 damages, alleged to have been suffered by plaintiff in consequence of trespasses of the defendant sheep upon 9,460 acres of uninclosed lands of the plaintiff, situate in the county of San Luis Obispo; and is based upon an "Act concerning trespassing of animals upon private land in certain counties," approved March 7, 1878, (St. 1878, p. 176.) It is alleged in the complaint that the defendant sheep are marked or branded as follows: 3,500 of them, J H; 3,500, J O; 3,500, A A; 3,500 P; and 3,500, △,—and that the owners of the defendant sheep are unknown to plaintiff. The trespasses are alleged to have been committed at divers times between December 1, 1892, and March 6, 1893.

The action was commenced March 13, 1893, and on the same day a writ of attachment was issued to the sheriff of Kern county, (which is not one of the counties to which the act applies) commanding that sheriff to attach all the sheep above described, "or so much thereof as may be sufficient to satisfy the plaintiff's demand as above mentioned," unless the owners give security, etc. A summons directed to the defendant animals was also issued, and served by posting a copy thereof on the courthouse door from March 13th until March 24th. On March 24th the sheriff of Kern county attached 3,000 of the defendant sheep, 1,500 of which were marked J O, and 1,500 marked △, by seizing them and placing them in the hands of a keeper. On March 29, 1893, the owner of the sheep attached appeared by attorney, and demurred to the complaint; and, the demurrer being overruled, the defendant answered, denying all the material averments of the complaint. The court found the alleged trespasses to have been committed by the following sheep: "About 2,500 sheep branded A A, and about 2,000 head of sheep branded J O, and about 2,500 sheep branded △, (triangle,) by treading down and depasturing all of said lands, and the grass and herbage thereon growing. That the value of said grass and herbage so destroyed was and is 20 cents per acre for each and every acre of said land, and the plaintiff was thereby damaged by the said destruction of said grass and herbage in said sum of $1,892." And also found that Gracian Solaberry was the owner of about 2,000 of the sheep branded J O, and about 2,500 of those branded △, (triangle,) including the 3,000 attached by the sheriff of Kern county. At the close of the evidence, upon motion of plaintiff, the action was dismissed as against the 3,500 sheep branded P, and the 3,500 branded J H. It was thereupon "ordered and adjudged that there is due the plaintiff, as found by the court, the sum of $1,892 damages, and costs of suit," and "further ordered and adjudged that the defendant sheep levied on and held in attachment in this case, to wit, about 1,500 head branded J O, and about 1,500 head branded △, (triangle,) be sold according to law, in the usual course of sales of property under execution; that the proceeds of sale be applied to the payment of the expenses of sale and the amount due the plaintiff, with his costs and accruing interest; and, if any surplus remains after said payments, the same to be paid to Gracian Solaberry, the owner of said brands of sheep. If said sales do not produce enough to satisfy the amount due plaintiff, that then those certain sheep defendants, about 2,500 head, (owner unknown,) branded A A, be sold to pay the balance due plaintiff, and expenses of sale. If any surplus arises upon said last sale, the same shall be paid into court for the unknown owner of said sheep branded A A." From this judgment, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial, Gracian Solaberry appeals.

1. On the appeal from the judgment, it is contended by appellant that the findings of fact do not warrant the conclusions of law, nor support the judgment. It is found as a fact that the trespasses, for which damages in the sum of $1,892 are found to have been suffered by plaintiff, were committed by 4,500 sheep, the property of appellant, Solaberry, and 2,500 sheep marked A A, of which Solaberry was not the owner, and whose owner was unknown, and of which the court had acquired no jurisdiction by attachment or distraint; yet the judgment is that the 3,000 of Solaberry's sheep which were attached be sold, and that the proceeds of such sale be applied to the payment of all the damages and costs, if sufficient to pay all. I think this was not warranted by the facts found. The act of the legislature under which this action is prosecuted, however unique in some respects, does not expressly, nor by necessary implication, authorize the taking or sale of one man's animals to pay the damages caused by trespasses of animals owned by others, over which animals he had no control. It does not appear that Solaberry had any control of the sheep marked A A, nor that in any way or degree he contributed to the cause of their trespassing upon plaintiff's land. Therefore Solaberry was only severally liable for the damages caused by his sheep, and such damages should have been distinctly found.

2. Appellant contends that the evidence is insufficient to justify the finding that the damage caused by the trespasses of 2,500 sheep branded A A, 2,000 branded J O, and 2,500 branded △, "was 20 cents per acre for each and every acre" of the land described in the complaint, (9,460 acres,) or the finding that plaintiff was thereby damaged in the sum of $1,892 by the trespasses of the sheep last above mentioned. I think this point well taken. None of these sheep were seen on any part of plaintiff's lands, except on five different days, and only on three different sections of it; and no two of the bands differently branded were ever seen together on said land. Plaintiff testified that he first saw about 2,500 of the sheep branded A A on section 18, Feb. 16, 1893, and on the same day saw about 2,500 branded J O on section 12. About five days thereafter he saw about 2,500 of the triangle band on section 12; and that these were all the times he saw the sheep on his land. Swain testified that on January 22d or 23d he saw about 2,000 sheep, branded J O, on section 18, and on March 3d saw about 2,500, branded △, on section 34. Abbott testified that on March 3d or 4th he saw the triangle sheep on plaintiff's land, but did not know what section they were on; about the same time he saw two or three other bands of 2,000 to 2,500 each, but did not see the brands of these. The sheep he saw at different times were three miles apart. On March 3d, Morris saw about 2,000 triangle brand on the land near the line of Kern county, in care of a herder, who drove them across the line into Kern county. The evidence as to damage consisted of the testimony of the witnesses above named, who testified as experts as to the damage done to the pasturage on the whole of plaintiff's land, without regard to the animals by which the damage had been caused, except as above stated. They rode over and examined all the land, between the 1st and 10th days of March, 1893, and testified that all the grass and herbage had been eaten, and the land trodden, apparently by sheep, in consequence of which they estimated the damage at 20 cents per acre of all the land; but there was no evidence, except that above stated, that the damage was caused by appellant's sheep, or by the sheep branded A A. On the contrary, other bands of sheep had been seen on the lands by some of the same witnesses. Plaintiff's land (9,460 acres) is composed of 10 whole sections and about 20 subdivisions of other sections, all situate in townships 31 and 32, and amounts to nearly 15 sections, which, if located in a square form, would be nearly 4 miles square; but they are not so located, and the descriptions given in the complaint show that in some directions they must extend at least 6 miles.

It is alleged in the complaint that the damage was done by five different bands of sheep, two of which were branded, respectively, J H and P; and there is nothing in the evidence tending to prove that these two bands of 3,500 each did not trespass upon plaintiff's lands at the times and in the manner alleged. The evidence that appellant's sheep and the A A sheep were seen on small portions of the land, on four or five different days, is perfectly consistent with this allegation of the complaint, and is obviously insufficient to justify the finding that appellant's sheep and the sheep branded A A damaged "each and every acre" of plaintiff's lands to the extent of 20 cents, even though each and every acre had been so damaged by sheep. I think the order and judgment should be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; BELCHER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, it is ordered that the judgment and order appealed from be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

---

101 Cal. 442

RIEHL v. CITY OF SAN JOSE et al. (No. 15,257.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 28, 1894.)

CITIES—CONTRACTS—LOWEST BID.

In the absence of fraud, or any statute requiring lighting contracts to be let to the lowest responsible bidder, a taxpayer and competing bidder cannot sue to vacate the contract made on a bid higher than his own, where such bid offered services not included in his.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Jose county; E. F. Fitzpatrick, Judge.

Action by Adam Riehl against the city of San Jose and the San Jose Improvement Company to vacate a contract. Judgment for defendants. Plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

H. V. Morehouse and Hiram D. Tuttle, for appellant. W. B. Hardy and John E. Richards, for respondents.

GAROUTTE, J. This is an action brought by the plaintiff, a citizen and taxpayer of San Jose, and also the president of the San Jose Light & Power Company, against the city of San Jose, its mayor and common council, and the Electric Improvement Company, of San Jose, to set aside a contract entered into between the city, through its said mayor and common council, and the said Electric Improvement Company, of San Jose, for the lighting of the streets with arc electric lights for a period of five years from and after October 1, 1890. Judgment went for the respondents, and this appeal is from the order denying a motion for a new trial.

After notice given, competing bidders came before the council of the city of San Jose to secure the contract of lighting the streets of the city, and such contract was subsequently awarded to the respondent the Electric Improvement Company, of San Jose. The charter of the city does not contain any provision requiring contracts of the present character to be let to the lowest bidder; but appellant insists that, even in the absence of such a provision of the law, the city has no authority, in justice to its taxpaying citizens, to arbitrarily let a contract to a party for a sum largely in excess of the amount for which an equally responsible competing bidder offers to do the same work and furnish the same character of material. It is claimed that the foregoing conditions are present in this case, and that, by the contract of which complaint is here made, the city has bound itself to pay $11,800 more money during the five years which compose the life of the contract than the service could have been rendered for by other parties. The facts of the case do not bear out appellant's claims in this regard, for the findings, supported by evidence, disclose a wide variance between the terms of the contract entered into by the city with the San Jose Electric Improvement Company and the proposition submitted to the city by the competing company. This substantial difference is set forth in the following finding of the court: "This last bid of said light and power company did not contain or refer to the changes suggested by the majority report of the finance committee as to the rearrangement of the lights without expense to the city, nor as to the lighting of the city upon dark and stormy nights, outside of the 'moonlight schedule,' without charge, but the said bid expressly provided that the said light and power company should receive extra compensation for all lighting done outside of the 'moonlight schedule.'" The services to be rendered and the material furnished by the opposing bidders not covering the same ground, a great portion of appellant's argument necessarily falls, for it is based upon the assumption of the existence of a contrary state of facts.

It is also insisted that the contract is tainted with fraud, and that it is not the result of a fair and honest exercise of the discretion and judgment of the city council. If such be the fact, it is the duty of a court of equity to set it aside, but appellant's contention has no support in the findings, and but little in the evidence. If it has no support in the findings, we will not disturb the judgment, unless those findings are clearly opposed to the evidence. Among other matters, the court found, as a fact, that said contract was a fair and reasonable one; that there was no fraud or collusion practiced; and that the members of the common council, in all of the proceedings connected with the awarding of the contract, acted as honest men, and exercised their honest discretion for the best interests of the city of San Jose. In these findings of fact there is ample support for the judgment, and we find nothing in the evidence to justify a successful attack on the findings of the court as to the honesty and fair dealing exercised by the council in the letting of this contract. There is nothing disclosed by the record demanding a new trial. The order appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: HARRISON, J.; PATERSON, J.

RIEHL v. CITY OF SAN JOSE et al. (No. 15,258.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 28, 1894.)

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Jose county; E. F. Fitzpatrick, Judge.

Action by Adam Riehl against the city of San Jose and the San Jose Improvement Company to vacate a contract. Judgment for defendants. Plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

H. V. Morehouse and Hiram D. Tuttle, for appellant. W. B. Hardy and John E. Richards, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. In many respects, this case is similar to Riehl v. City of San Jose, (No. 15,257, decision filed this day,) 35 Pac. 1013. Appellant's counsel admits that the findings substantially state the facts of the case, but complains of the conclusions of law drawn therefrom. We think such complaint not well founded. The material findings upon which the judgment rests are similar to those made in the aforesaid case, numbered 15,257, and in that case we held the findings sufficient to support the judgment. Upon the authority of the decision there rendered, the order here appealed from is affirmed.

---

4 Cal. Unrep. 483

BOEHM v. GIBSON. (No. 19,285.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 28, 1894.)

Trial—Absence of Party's Attorney—Appeal Taken for Delay—Damages.

1. The court waited several hours for plaintiff's attorney to conclude the trial of another case, in another department of the same court, with the understanding that the trial of the case against defendant would then proceed. At the conclusion of such trial, such attorney did not appear, but engaged in the trial of habeas corpus proceedings, which he commenced two days before, and treated a notice by defendant that the trial of his case would proceed with profane contempt. Held, that a trial of such case in the absence of such attorney was proper, plaintiff being present, and offered an opportunity to introduce his evidence.

2. Where, in an action to recover personal property, it appears that an appeal by plaintiff is without merit, and was taken for delay, and that defendant has been deprived of the use of such property for more than a year, the latter will be awarded $200 damages, in addition to his costs.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; William P. Wade, Judge.

Action by William Boehm against E. D. Gibson to recover possession of certain personal property. From a judgment for defendant, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

H. H. Appel and G. D. Blake, for appellant. James Burdett and W. E. Arthur, for respondent.

VANCLIEF, C. Action to recover the possession of specific articles of personal property, or the value thereof, alleged to have been wrongfully taken and withheld from the plaintiff by the defendant. The defendant is sheriff of Los Angeles county, and justifies the taking under a writ of attachment against one William Shoulderer. The judgment of the court was in favor of the defendant, from which, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial, the plaintiff has appealed. Appellant makes no point on the appeal from the judgment; and the only grounds upon which a new trial is asked are (1) irregularity in the proceedings of the court; and (2) accident and surprise which ordinary prudence could not have guarded against. The affidavits upon which the motion was made and opposed occupy 34 pages of the printed transcript, and, without much conflict, are to the following effect: The case was first set for trial on December 9, 1892, when defendant, with his counsel and witnesses, was in attendance and ready for trial; but, on account of other business having precedence, the trial was postponed from day to day until December 15th, when it was called for trial, defendant, with his witnesses and counsel, then being present in court and ready for trial, but neither plaintiff nor his counsel was present. After waiting about an hour, it was ascertained that plaintiff's attorney was engaged in the trial of another case in another department of the court; whereupon defendant's attorney reluctantly consented that the trial should be postponed, and, by agreement of counsel, the case was reset for trial on January 13, 1893, at 10 o'clock a. m., at which hour the defendant, with his witnesses and counsel, again appeared and was ready for trial, when the attorney for plaintiff stated to the court that he was then engaged in the trial of another case in another department (No. 5) of the same court, which trial had been commenced on January 12th, but that such trial would probably be closed by 12 o'clock m. Thereupon the court, with consent of defendant's counsel, appointed 2 o'clock p. m. as the time for the commencement of the trial, at which time the defendant was again present and ready for trial; but, plaintiff's counsel failing to appear, the court, after waiting about half an hour, dispatched a messenger to department No. 5 (in the same building) to ascertain whether plaintiff's attorney was still engaged in that department. Shortly afterwards plaintiff's attorney appeared, and said he was still engaged in department No. 5, but would probably be through by 3 o'clock p. m., when he would immediately proceed with the trial of this case. Shortly thereafter defendant's attorney, (Mr. Burdett,) as stated in his affidavit, went to department No. 5, and there awaited the termination of the trial in which plaintiff's attorney (Mr. Appel) was engaged; and when it terminated, about 3 o'clock p. m., and department No. 5 had adjourned, Mr. Burdett requested Mr. Appel to commence the trial of this case, and was then, for the first time, told by Mr. Appel that he was about to enter upon the argument of a habeas corpus case in department No. 2, for the purpose of obtaining the discharge of one of his clients from imprisonment for contempt of court, and that he did not know how long he would be thus engaged. Thereupon Mr. Burdett returned to department No. 3, in which this case was pending, and reported to the court that the trial of the case in department No 5, in which Mr. Appel had been engaged, had been closed, and what Mr. Appel had said about engaging in the habeas corpus proceeding, and asked the court (No. 3) to proceed with the trial of this case; but the court refused to proceed immediately, saying it would wait a few minutes longer. Mr. Burdett then went to department No. 2, where he found Mr. Appel's partner (Mr. Kinley) arguing the habeas corpus case, and Mr. Appel in his seat listening to the argument. Mr. Burdett then again requested Mr. Appel to go to department No. 3, and proceed with the trial of this case, and notified him that, unless he did so, Mr. Burdett would insist that the court proceed with the trial, to which Mr. Appel answered that "he did not care what was done; that he would not leave that case," (the habeas corpus case.) While Mr. Appel, in his affidavit, does not deny having said "he did not care what was done," he states that he "never consented to the judgment being entered, or said anything indicating that said Burdett should go on with the trial," but admits that he said to Mr. Burdett: "Don't bother me. You be d——d,"—which language is not stated in Mr. Burdett's affidavit. Immediately after this conversation in department No. 2, Mr. Burdett returned to department No. 3, and informed the judge thereof of what Mr. Appel said, and what he was doing in the habeas corpus case, and insisted that the court proceed with the trial of this case; and thereupon the court ordered the parties to proceed with the trial of this case, the plaintiff then being present in court. No doubt Mr. Appel was immediately informed of this order, as he was then in the same building, and not more than 150 feet distant from the court room in which the order was made; yet neither he nor any one for him appeared therein, or objected to the trial in his absence. Nor does it appear that plaintiff objected, though present. The court then informed plaintiff that it would hear any evidence he desired to offer, and that he was at liberty to testify in his own behalf, but he declined to testify or to offer any evidence whatever. The evidence on the part of defendant was then introduced, but no evidence was offered by plaintiff in rebuttal. Thereupon judgment was rendered for defendant.

Counsel for appellant contends that the trial of this case was commenced in his absence, contrary to an agreement and understanding between him and counsel for defendant, assented to by the court, to the effect that the trial was not to be commenced until the close of the trial in which he was engaged in department No. 5, and further contends that the trial of the habeas corpus case in department No. 2 was a continuation of the trial in which he had been engaged in department No. 5. But the affidavits do not support either of these contentions. He had said nothing about the habeas corpus proceeding to defendant's attorney, or to the court, (department 3,) until after the close of the trial of the civil action, when he first spoke of it to Mr. Burdett, as above stated. Indeed, he had petitioned for the writ of habeas corpus after the agreement to proceed with the trial of this case as soon as the trial of the civil case should be closed, though his client had been imprisoned the day before, while his partner was trying the civil case in his absence. Surely the habeas corpus proceeding which he commenced in the afternoon of that day (January 13th) was no part of the civil case on account of which the delay of the trial of this case had been consented to at his request. Considering all the circumstances, I think the conduct of plaintiff's attorney not only manifested a want of proper respect for the court, but plainly indicated his intention to subordinate the business of the court and the rights of suitors therein to his own business and convenience. If, upon the close of the trial of his civil case, he deemed it of great importance to himself or client to enter upon the trial of the habeas corpus case, a proper respect for the court, that had been waiting for him several hours at his request, and solely for his accommodation, should have induced him to go to that court, and render his excuse, and ask for such further delay as he desired, or for a continuance; but he did nothing of the kind. Nor did he even ask opposing counsel for further time, but, according to his own affidavit, did ask him to "be d——d." There is no evidence of accident or surprise nor of irregularity in the proceedings of the court to the prejudice of appellant. Barnes v. Barnes, 95 Cal. 171, 30 Pac. 298; Baumberger v. Arff, 96 Cal. 261, 31 Pac. 53. I think the judgment and order should be affirmed.

We concur: SEARLS, C.; BELCHER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed; and as the appeal was evidently taken for delay, and is without merit, and by reason thereof the respondent has been deprived of the use of the property sued for for more than a year, the sum of $200 damages is awarded to the respondent, in addition to his costs upon appeal.

101 Cal. 438

WOODWARD v. McADAM et al. (No. 19,257.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 28, 1894.)

MORTGAGE TO PARTNERSHIP—VALIDITY.

A mortgage of real estate to "S., B. & Co.," a partnership, is not void, as given to a fictitious person, since the names of two of the partners appear in the firm name, and it will be regarded as a mortgage to the individual members named.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Luis Obispo county; V. A. Gregg, Judge.

Action by Woodward against McAdam and others to foreclose a real-estate mortgage. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant Jackson appeals. Affirmed.

Wilcoxon & Bouldin, for appellant. Cormac & Donohue and F. A. Dorn, for respondent.

PATERSON, J. This is an action on a negotiable promissory note secured by a mortgage, given by the defendant McAdam to Shoobert, Beale & Co., and by the latter assigned to this plaintiff. The court below granted a decree of foreclosure, as prayed for, and from such decree the defendant Jackson, who is a grantee for value, by deed from McAdam given subsequent to the mortgage, has appealed.

The point made is that the mortgagee is a fictitious person; that the mortgage, having been made to a partnership doing business under a fictitious name, creates, at most, only an equity, and, as against a subsequent grantee, for value, of the mortgagor, establishes no lien. There is no doubt that a partnership is not a person, either natural or artificial, and it cannot, at law, be the grantee in a deed, or hold real estate. Legal title must vest in some person, but, if the title be made to all the partners by name, they hold the legal title as tenants in common. In equity, however, a different rule prevails. There the real purpose for which the property was acquired is considered, and, under the principles of trusts, the court will regard real estate held for partnership purposes as personal property, so far as such holding may be necessary to settle the equities between a firm and creditors, or between the partners themselves. None of the latter principles is involved in this action, however. If the name of the grantee were purely fictitious, that is, if no person were named, it may be that the mortgage would be void, although there is respectable authority for holding that a mortgage may be enforced in the firm name. Foster v. Johnson, 39 Minn. 380, 40 N. W. 255. In the case at bar the names of two of the partners appear in the firm name. There is an important distinction to be drawn between a description which is inherently uncertain and indeterminate, and one which is merely imperfect, and capable of different applications. "To correct the one is, in effect, to add new terms to the instrument, while to complete the other is only to ascertain and fix the application of terms already contained in it. Indeed, the most usual and perfect description of the grantee—that which gives his Christian and sur names, and the town in which he lives—may prove to be imperfect, as others bearing both those names may be living in the same town. And, if the Christian name or place of residence be omitted, the description is only rendered the more imperfect. It is less certain than it might be, and usually is, made. But a grantee is still designated, though imperfectly; and, for aught that the deed discloses, the party accepting the conveyance may be the only person answering the description given. In all these cases a resort to extraneous facts and circumstances may become necessary, in order to ascertain the individual to whom the description was intended to apply; but it is not perceived that the greater or less probability of this should, in either case, affect the validity of the deed." Morse v. Carpenter, 19 Vt. 616. In Moreau v. Saffarans, 3 Sneed, 599, it was held that real estate purchased by partners is to be regarded, in respect to the legal title, as an estate held by them as tenants in common, but subject to a trust for the benefit of the partnership until the partnership accounts are settled, and that a conveyance to "J. L. Saffarans & Co." would operate to invest John L. Saffarans, individually, with the entire legal title, but that in equity he would be treated as holding the legal title in trust for the benefit of the partnership. In Menage v. Burke, 43 Minn. 212, 45 N. W. 155, the court sustained a mortgage of real estate to "Farnham & Lovejoy" as legally sufficient as a mortgage to Sumner W. Farnham and James A. Lovejoy, it appearing that said persons constituted the firm of Farnham & Lovejoy. In Foster v. Johnson, supra, the court explained Tidd v. Rines, 26 Minn. 201, 2 N. W. 497, cited by appellant, and held that, in an action to foreclose a mortgage, it was no objection that the mortgage ran to a partnership, in its firm name. In Holmes v. Jarrett, 7 Heisk. 506, the court held that where the deed was made to Jarrett, Moon & Co., and it did not appear whether the firm was composed of Jarrett, Moon, and others, or Jarrett Moon and others, the title would vest in Jarrett and Moon, or in Jarrett Moon, in trust for the partnership, and that the uncertainty arising from the omission of the Christian names of the grantees could be removed by parol proof. See, also, Brunson v. Morgan, 76 Ala. 594. In Winter v. Stock, 29 Cal. 407, it was held that a conveyance of land to L. B. & Co. vests the legal title of the same in L. B. alone, and that his deed would give to his grantee a good and valid title. The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: GAROUTTE, J.; HARRISON, J.

4 Cal. Unrep. 488

DECKER v. PERRY. (No. 19,266.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 28, 1894.)

IRRIGATION—INCORPORATED DISTRICTS—ASSESSMENTS—DURESS.

1. A complaint against an irrigation district officer alleged that such proceedings had been had before the board of supervisors that said board declared the district duly organized. Held, no averment that the district was incorporated, as provided by Act March 7, 1887, since it did not show the jurisdiction of the board, or an election held, or that its declaration "was duly given or made," or that a copy of the order had been filed for record.

2. A complaint to recover money paid on a public assessment must show the nature of the proceedings to collect it, the threat of which constituted the compulsion.

3. Where 33 days must have elapsed, after plaintiff paid the assessment, before the three weeks' advertisement of sale of his land therefor could have begun, (St. 1891, p. 245,) and he does not allege that any sale had been already advertised or otherwise threatened when he paid, he fails to show any intention to sell it such as would make his payment involuntary.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; George Puterbaugh, Judge.

Action by Uri Decker against Wesley Perry for money had and received. Demurrer to complaint overruled, and judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. Reversed.

C. H. Rippey, for appellant. D. L. Murdock, for respondent.

VANCLIEF, C. The defendant demurred to the complaint on the ground that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The demurrer was overruled, and, upon failure of defendant to answer, judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff. This appeal is from the judgment on the judgment-roll, and presents the question whether or not the demurrer was properly overruled.

The object of the action is to recover from the defendant $5.02, alleged to have been unlawfully assessed to plaintiff on his land by the "Otay Irrigation District," and paid by plaintiff to defendant under protest, to prevent plaintiff's land from being sold by the defendant as collector of said district. It is averred in the complaint "that, on December 7, 1891, such proceedings were had before the board of supervisors of San Diego county, state of California, that the said board of supervisors declared the Otay Irrigation District duly organized under the name and style of 'Otay Irrigation District,' and declared" five persons—Funk, Modie, Jordan, Spence, and Merriam—elected as directors of said district, and since that time said persons have been acting as such directors; and that Charles Sanborn is acting as secretary of said board, and the defendant, Wesley Perry, is acting as collector of said Otay Irrigation District. That said board of directors have voted to themselves salaries and fees amounting to about $2,600, and claim to have contracted indebtedness against said district for other purposes, amounting to nearly $3,500. That on October 4, 1892, said board passed a resolution declaring that it was necessary, for the purpose of defraying the expenses of the organization of the district, including salaries of officers and employes, to raise the sum of $9,179.62; and, by a further resolution, ordered an assessment levied on the assessable property of said district of $9,179.62; and, by a further resolution, fixed the rate of assessment at 90 cents upon $100 valuation of the assessable property of said district. That said board never submitted to the electors of said district, at any election, the question as to whether or not an assessment of $9,179.62 should be levied, nor did said electors ever vote for any bonds, or to incur any indebtedness upon said district. That, after the levying of said assessment, the defendant, as collector of said district, received from the secretary of the board the assessment books of said district, in which were entered said assessment against the property within said district, among which was five acres of land, the property of plaintiff, on which was assessed the sum of $4.78; and thereafter the defendant caused to be published in a newspaper published in said district a notice stating "that said assessment was due and payable, and would become delinquent at six o'clock, p. m., on the last Monday of December, 1892, and that, unless paid prior thereto, five per cent. would be added." That, on December 29th, (after the last Monday in December,) "the plaintiff, to prevent his above-described property from being sold by the defendant as collector of said district, paid to the defendant said assessment of $4.78, together with 25 cents penalty, which sum was paid under protest made in writing and delivered to defendant at the time of such payment." A copy of the protest, with the defendant's acknowledgment of the receipt thereof, dated December 29, 1892, is attached to the complaint as an exhibit. The only ground of the protest is that no election had been called or had at which the question whether the assessment should be levied was, or could have been, submitted to the electors of the district.

It is contended for appellant that the payment of the assessment by the plaintiff was voluntary, and not induced by duress or coercion, and, therefore, that he is not entitled to recover it back; and the record seems to support this view. "The illegality of the demand paid constitutes of itself no ground for relief. There must be in addition some compulsion or coercion attending its assertion, which controls the conduct of the party making the payment." Brumagim v. Tillinghast, 18 Cal. 266; Garrison v. Tillinghast, Id. 407. The complaint shows that the assessment was paid to defendant while acting as the agent or officer (collector) of an undefined association under the name and style of "Otay Irrigation District," operating through five directors, a secretary, and collector, but the kind or nature of whose business is not stated. Respondent's counsel claims in his brief, however, that the Otay Irrigation District is a corporation organized under the act of the legislature entitled, "An act to provide for the organization and government of irrigation districts," etc., approved March 7, 1887, known as the "Wright Act" (St. 1887, p. 29,) and amendments thereof; but this fact is not averred in the complaint. The bare averment that "said board of supervisors declared the Otay Irrigation District duly organized" is not an averment of the facts or acts required by said act of the legislature to confer jurisdiction on the board of supervisors, or to constitute an organization of an irrigation district under that act. Nor is it an averment that an order, resolution, or "declaration" of the board to that effect had been "duly given or made," as required by section 456 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Judah v. Fredericks, 57 Cal. 391. The averment that the board declared the district "duly organized" is substantially and essentially different from an averment that the board duly declared the district organized. But, even if the averment had been that the board duly declared the district organized, it would not have shown a completed organization. The law requires, as a prerequisite to a complete organization, that an election be held at which two-thirds of the votes cast shall be in favor of organizing the district; and section 3 of the act provides: "The said board of supervisors shall meet on the second Monday succeeding such election and proceed to canvass the votes cast thereat; and if upon such canvass it appear that at least two-thirds of all the votes cast are 'Irrigation District—Yes,' the said board shall, by order entered on their minutes, declare such territory duly organized as an irrigation district under the name and style theretofore designated, and shall declare the persons receiving respectively the highest number of votes for such several offices to be duly elected to such offices. Said board shall cause a copy of such order, duly certified, to be immediately filed for record in the office of the county recorder, * * * and from and after the date of such filing the organization of such district shall be complete, and the officers thereof shall be entitled to enter immediately upon the duties of their respective offices." There being no averment that the board, duly or otherwise, caused a copy of its order declaring the district organized to be filed for record, the complaint fails to show that the organization of the district as a corporation was ever completed. Then, again, the complaint fails to show that the defendant threatened or intended to sell plaintiff's land, or any land within the alleged district. All that is alleged is that defendant published a notice "that said assessment was due and payable, and would become delinquent at six o'clock p. m. on the last Monday (26th) of Dec., 1892, and that, unless paid prior thereto, five per cent. would be added." No demand for payment, other than such as may be implied in that notice, appears to have been made. The compulsion or coercion which is sufficient to render a payment involuntary "must come from the party to whom or by whose direction the payment is made, and arise from the exercise or threatened exercise of some power possessed, or supposed to be possessed, by him over the person or property of the party making the payment." Garrison v. Tillinghast, 18 Cal. 407. The complaint fails to show that the defendant to whom the assessment was paid possessed any power over the person or property of the plaintiff, or any reason for supposing he possessed such power; nor is it pretended that defendant had, or was supposed to have, any power over the person of the plaintiff, it being claimed only that defendant, as collector of the Otay Irrigation District, whatever that may be, had, or was supposed to have, power to sell plaintiff's land to pay assessments levied thereon by the directors of said irrigation district. But, since the complaint fails to show that the Otay Irrigation District was ever organized as a corporation according to any law, it fails to show any reason for the alleged supposition that the officers or agents of that district had power either to levy assessments on, or to sell, plaintiff's land. It is suggested, however, by counsel for appellant that the Otay Irrigation District is shown at least to be a de facto corporation, but this suggestion finds no support in the complaint; there being no averment that it or its officers ever claimed to be a corporation, or acted as such, or that plaintiff ever dealt with or recognized it as a corporation. All of the alleged acts of its officers or agents may have been lawfully done by an unincorporated association having no power to enforce payment of assessments by the sale of property of its members. But conceding, for the sake of argument, that the Otay Irrigation District was duly organized according to the Wright act, yet it does not appear that such pressure for payment was put upon plaintiff as would constitute duress or coercion in the legal sense. No sale of his land had been advertised or otherwise threatened before he paid the assessment; and 33 days must have elapsed, after he paid, before a notice of sale of his land could have been published, and no sale could have been made until after three weeks' publication of such notice. See sections 24 and 25, the act as amended, St. 1891, p. 245. For aught that appears in the complaint, there may have been no intention to sell his land.

Counsel have cited no case in this state, and I have found none, in which the money paid on an alleged tax or assessment has been recovered back when no seizure of property of the plaintiff had been made, and no sale thereof advertised or otherwise threatened. In addition to the cases above cited the following are more or less in point: De Baker v. Carillo, 52 Cal. 473; Bank v. Chalfant, Id. 170; Bank v. Webber, Id. 73; Bank v. Chalfant, 51 Cal. 369; De Fremery v. Austin, 53 Cal. 381; Meek v. McClure, 49 Cal. 623; Guy v. Washburn, 23 Cal. 111; Dear v. Varnum, 80 Cal. 87, 22 Pac. 76.

For all purposes of this appeal, it is assumed, without deciding, that the assessment may have been illegal because not authorized by vote of the electors of the district, as held in Tregea v. Owens, 94 Cal. 317, 29 Pac. 643, which case authoritatively construes the act of March 7, 1887, as originally passed, in relation to the power of the directors to levy assessments of the nature of that in question here, and is applicable to this case, unless that act has been changed, in respect to such powers of the directors, by the amendments thereof in 1891. I think the judgment should be reversed, and the court below directed to sustain the demurrer.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; BELCHER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is reversed, and the court below directed to sustain the demurrer.

(101 Cal. 405)

BLAISDELL v. LEACH et ux. (No. 18,181.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 27, 1894.)

ESTOPPEL — ACKNOWLEDGMENT BY WIFE OF FORGED SIGNATURE—NEGLIGENCE.

In foreclosure of a mortgage executed by a married man to secure a loan on land which the record showed had been conveyed to him by his wife, it appeared that her signature to the deed to her husband was forged; that she signed a lease of the land, and gave it to her husband; that he substituted for it the forged deed; and that, when the deed was presented to her by a notary for acknowledgment, she negligently admitted that the signature to it was hers. Held, that the wife was estopped from disputing her signature, as against plaintiff, a purchaser in good faith.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county; M. K. Harris, Judge.

Action by one Blaisdell against Bailey K. Leach and Mattie A. Leach, his wife, to foreclose a mortgage. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant Mattie A. Leach appeals. Affirmed.

J. B. Campbell and C. C. Merriam, for appellant. J. P. Strother and Mr. Webb, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. The defendant Bailey K. Leach borrowed $1,000 from the plaintiff July 18, 1891, and, to secure the payment thereof, executed to him a mortgage upon certain lands which appeared by the record to have been conveyed to him by his wife, Mattie A. Leach. This action was brought to foreclose the mortgage, against husband and wife; the plaintiff alleging in his complaint that the wife claims some interest in the mortgaged lands, but that her claim was subject to the lien of his mortgage. Mattie A. Leach filed a separate answer, alleging that she was the sole owner of the lands, and that her husband had never had any interest therein. Upon the trial of these issues, the court found that the wife's signature to the deed under which the husband claimed title was a forgery, but that she had acknowledged its execution to the notary public, and that the conveyance had been placed on record, with the notary's certificate of her acknowledgment indorsed thereon. No question was made of the good faith of the plaintiff in loaning the money, and the court held that he was entitled to rely upon the record evidence of title, and rendered judgment for the foreclosure of the mortgage. From this judgment the defendant Mattie A. Leach has appealed.

The record discloses the following facts connected with the appellant's acknowledgment of the conveyance: It appears that on the morning of the 16th of July the appellant had signed a lease of certain property, and given it to her husband, and that in the afternoon of that day her husband handed the deed in question to the notary, with his wife's name already signed thereto, and requested him to go with him to his house and take her acknowledgment. The notary testified that, when he and the husband reached the house, he explained to Mrs. Leach the object of his visit, and "got up from my chair, and walked over to her with the deed in my hand, passed it to her, and took my seat again; and, as I suppose, she read it. I don't know. She peered over it. I don't know whether she read it or not. I got up then, and asked her if it was her signature, and she acknowledged the execution of that instrument. She said she did, and I placed my seal to it, and handed it to Mr. Leach." Mrs. Leach contradicts the notary in some details, but the findings of the court must be accepted as determinative of the facts that her signature had been placed to the instrument without her knowledge or consent, and that the facts stated in the notary's certificate are correct. Mrs. Leach does not, in her testimony, say that she then questioned the genuineness of her signature, but that the instrument did not appear to her to be the same one as that upon which she had placed it. Taking the most favorable view for the appellant, it will appear that after she had signed the lease, and given it to her husband, he substituted for it the deed to himself, with her name affixed thereto, and that she paid but slight attention to the instrument when it was presented to her for her acknowledgment, and admitted to the notary that it was her signature.

The Civil Code, § 1091, requires that a grant of real property shall be subscribed by the grantor, in order that the title may be transferred thereby, but it is not necessary that the signature of the grantor be affixed by himself. It may be so affixed by another, if done in his presence and by his own direction. Gardner v. Gardner, 5 Cush. 483. And he may also adopt and ratify a signature made by another without any previous authority. Bartlett v. Drake, 100 Mass. 174. And the adoption of a forgery has been held to be binding upon the maker of a promissory note. Forsyth v. Day, 46 Me. 176; Bank v. Crafts, 4 Allen, 447. The owner of property cannot be divested thereof by a forged instrument, but his conduct in reference to the instrument may estop him from denying its validity. As between himself and the person who committed the forgery, such estoppel may not arise; but if, with knowledge of the forgery, he should declare to an innocent person that the signature was his own, and that he had executed the instrument, and thereby induce him to purchase the property, he could not afterwards claim the property upon the ground that the instrument was a forgery. When the instrument in question was presented to Mrs. Leach for her acknowledgment, it was competent for her to adopt the signature of her name, that had been placed there without her knowledge or authority, and by such adoption give it the same validity as if placed there by herself. She must be presumed to know her own handwriting, and her statement to the notary that she had executed the instrument to which it was affixed prevents her from questioning the correctness of that statement, as against one who, in reliance thereon, has parted with his property. The statute has designated a notary public as one of the officers to whom a grantor may make a formal acknowledgment of his execution of an instrument, for the purpose of establishing the fact of such execution and having a public record made thereof; and, when such acknowledgment is made by the grantor and certified by the notary, it is a public declaration of that fact to all persons who may in good faith act thereon, which the grantor is estopped from denying. If the notary is himself deceived, as, for instance, if another person should personate the grantor and acknowledge the signature, the title of the true owner would not be affected; but when the person named in the instrument appears in person before the officer, and makes such acknowledgment, he is estopped from afterwards denying his declaration, as well as the fact of his signature, against any one who, without any other notice or knowledge than is conveyed by the instrument, parts with his property upon the strength thereof.

Although the court does not find that Mrs. Leach, in terms, adopted the signature to the deed, yet its finding that she was so negligent in acknowledging its execution as to estop her from disputing the plaintiff's claim is fully sustained by the evidence. By her own testimony, she did not, at the time of her acknowledgment, deny the genuineness of her signature, and, although she says that she then thought the instrument was not the one she had signed in the morning, she failed to give it such an examination as to convince her of that fact; and the testimony of the notary that he handed the instrument to her for her examination, and that she appeared to examine it, shows that she had every opportunity for determining whether or not it was her deed. Having this opportunity for repudiating or adopting the signature, her acknowledgment of its validity estops her from questioning that fact, as against the plaintiff, who in good faith has parted with his money to the one in whose favor she made the acknowledgment. If afterwards she ascertained that she had been deceived, and had acknowledged the validity of a deed which was in fact a forgery, the loss would be her own, as against an innocent party who had relied upon such acknowledgment. If she neglected to give the instrument such an examination as would inform her, either that another instrument had been substituted for the one which she had signed, or that the signature thereto was not her own, the consequences of such neglect should fall upon herself, rather than upon one who, by her own positive declaration of its genuineness, had been induced to part with his property. "When a man knows that he is conveying or doing something with his estate, but does not ask what is the precise effect of the deed, because he is told it is a mere form, and has such confidence in his solicitor as to execute the deed in ignorance, the deed so executed, although it may be voidable upon the ground of fraud, is not a void deed." Hunter v. Walters, 7 Ch. App. 88. See, also, Goodell v. Bates, 14 R. I. 65; State v. Matthews, 44 Kan. 596, 25 Pac. 36; Tunison v. Chamblin, 88 Ill. 378; Shirts v. Overjohn, 60 Mo. 305; Chapman v. Rose, 56 N. Y. 137. "Where one of two innocent persons must suffer by the act of a third, he by whose negligence it happened must be the sufferer." Civ. Code, § 3543. The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: GAROUTTE, J.; PATERSON, J.

101 Cal. 425

GROOME et al. v. ALMSTEAD. (No. 19,185.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 27, 1894.)

REPLEVIN—WHEN MAINTAINED—TENANT AT WILL—WHAT CONSTITUTES — APPEAL — JUDGMENT—REVERSAL.

1. The owner of land, after recovery thereof from one in possession under a claim of an interest therein, cannot replevin the crops grown and harvested by defendant while in such adverse possession. Page v. Fowler, 37 Cal. 100, 39 Cal. 412, followed.

2. G., a member of a firm, obtained a patent to land under a void contract with the firm, whereby he agreed to procure it for its benefit. After G.'s death, A., one of the surviving partners, entered as the representative of the firm, and raised and harvested crops on the land, against the protest of G.'s heirs and administratrix, who recovered the land by legal proceedings. Held, that A., as the representative of such firm, was not a tenant at will while in possession and raising such crops.

3. Where a judgment is correct, it will not be reversed because the court gave a wrong reason for its rendition.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Luis Obispo county; V. A. Gregg, Judge.

Action by Julia Groome and Nellie E. Groome against L. T. Almstead to recover possession of certain personal property. From a judgment for defendant, and from an order denying their motion for a new trial, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

William Shipsey and F. A. Dorn, for appellants. Wilcoxon & Bouldin, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Action for the recovery of certain personal property, consisting of wheat and hay, of the alleged value of $1,496, or for the value thereof in case delivery cannot be had, and for $200 damages for detention thereof. Judgment for defendant, from which, and from an order denying their motion for a new trial, plaintiffs have appealed.

The plaintiff Julia Groome is the widow of Thomas B. Groome, who died intestate May 30, 1890, seised of 160 acres of land situate in the county of San Luis Obispo, on which he resided at the time of his death. Nellie E. Groome is the daughter of Thomas B. and Julia Groome, and was 16 years of age when her father died, and the plaintiffs are the only heirs of Thomas B. Groome. Thomas B. Groome obtained a patent for said land in December, 1890, under the circumstances stated in the case entitled "In re Groome," (94 Cal. 69, 29 Pac. 487,) wherein it was decided that by virtue of the patent he acquired and held the absolute title to the land, free from any trust in favor of the defendant herein (Almstead) and one Minturn, who claimed to be the equitable owners of an undivided eleven-sixteenths part thereof. On August 16, 1890, letters of administration on the estate of Thomas B. Groome were issued to plaintiff Julia. In the winter of 1890–91 the defendant entered upon the land, and commenced to plow the same for the purpose of planting a crop of wheat and hay, to be harvested in 1891. Thereupon the plaintiff Julia verbally notified him not to plow the land nor plant any crop, and that the land was the property of the estate of Thomas B. Groome; but he disregarded her notice and protest, and proceeded to plow the land and plant the crop. Again, in May, 1891, when the crop was ripened, she forbade him to harvest the same. This he also disregarded, and harvested and removed the crop. Again, in the winter of 1891–92, defendant plowed and planted the land, and in May and June, 1892, harvested the crops, against like protests of plaintiff Julia. In the mean time, on May 29, 1891, the plaintiff Julia had petitioned the superior court to set apart the whole of the land to the plaintiffs as a homestead. This petition was opposed by the defendant herein, and denied by the court. On appeal to this court the order was reversed, and the cause remanded. In re Groome, 94 Cal. 69, 29 Pac. 487. After reception of the remittitur, on May 24, 1892, the superior court set apart the whole tract of land as a homestead for the plaintiffs. The greater portion of the crops of 1892 was harvested after the setting apart of the homestead. This action was commenced June 7, 1892, to recover the crops of both 1891 and 1892 or their value.

It is conceded in this action that the patent invested Thomas B. Groome with absolute title to the land, and that the plaintiffs are his only heirs; but as a defense to this action it is claimed that, at the times the defendant planted the crops in question he was a tenant at will of the plaintiffs, and that he became such tenant by having been in possession at the time Thomas B. Groome died, under a contract by which the latter had agreed to procure the patent for the use and benefit of a copartnership composed of defendant, Groome, and Minturn, which contract is conceded to have been illegal and utterly void, as was held in Re Groome, supra. It was found by the court that such a copartnership existed, and had the use of the land under said void contract from July, 1886, until Groome died; and that defendant, as surviving partner, represented the concern at the times when he planted and harvested the crops in question. The court also found as a fact that, "about eight months after the death of said Thomas B. Groome, a dispute arose between defendant and said Julia Groome as to the ownership of said 160 acres of land, defendant claiming the same for said partnership, and plaintiff Julia Groome denying said claim. Said dispute has continued to the time of this trial." From the foregoing facts, the court deduced, as conclusions of law, that the defendant, as representative of the dissolved copartnership, was a tenant at will at the time he planted the crops; that his tenancy could not have been terminated otherwise than by 30 days' written notice in accordance with section 789 of the Civil Code; that he was entitled to harvest and remove the crop, as emblements, by authority of section 819 of the Civil Code; and that plaintiffs never had any right of possession except by force of the order of May 24, 1892, setting apart the homestead,—and thereupon rendered judgment to the effect that plaintiffs take nothing by the action.

While we think the court below was clearly in error in holding that, upon the foregoing facts, the defendant was a tenant at will, and entitled to a notice terminating such tenancy, and that plaintiffs had no title to, or right to the possession of, the land upon which the crops in dispute were grown, other than by virtue of the order setting apart the homestead, still we think the facts of the case, as above stated, bring the case within the reason of the rule declared in Page v. Fowler, 37 Cal. 100, 39 Cal. 412, and the judgment should not be reversed by reason of the fact that the superior court gave a wrong reason for its rendition. The facts here are not exactly parallel with those in the cases just cited, still we think the principle declared in those cases govern this, and plaintiffs are only entitled to recover damages for the withholding of the land, measured by the rental value, or the value of the use and occupation, of the land during the period it was occupied by defendant. The plaintiffs have misconceived their remedy. Judgment and order affirmed.

---

4 Cal. Unrep. 493

PEOPLE v. CLEMENT. (No. 21.031.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 28, 1894.)

INFORMATION—DUPLICITY—AMENDMENT—MOTION IN ARREST OF JUDGMENT—WAIVER.

1. An information which charges two offenses is demurrable, and cannot be amended after the taking of defendant's plea, without a new arraignment and plea to the amended information.

2. A defendant who has demurred to an information as charging two offenses does not waive his right to move in arrest of judgment by moving for a new trial.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; J. W. McKinley, Judge.

C. H. Clement was convicted of an attempt to commit grand larceny. From an order in arrest of judgment, the people appeal. Affirmed.

H. C. Dillon, Dist. Atty., and Atty. Gen. Hart, for the People. W. T. Williams, for respondent.

HAYNES, C. The people appeal from an order in arrest of judgment. The information contained two counts,—the first, for the larceny of a horse, buggy, and harness, and the second count charging an embezzlement of the same property. The defendant demurred to the information upon the ground that it charged more than one offense. The demurrer was overruled, and a plea of not guilty entered. After all the evidence had been introduced, and during the argument of the case to the jury, the district attorney, with the consent of the court, and without objection from the defendant, withdrew the count charging embezzlement, and the jury found defendant "guilty of attempt to commit grand larceny." The defendant moved for a new trial, and his motion was denied. He then moved in arrest of judgment, upon the ground stated in his demurrer, and, this motion being sustained, the people appeal.

That two distinct offenses are charged in the information has been decided by this court in at least two cases where the facts were the same as here. See People v. De Coursey, 61 Cal. 134, and People v. Quvise, 56 Cal. 396. But appellant contends that the duplicity was cured by withdrawing the count charging embezzlement, and we are cited to authorities to show that the duplicity may be cured (1) by verdict of guilty on one count and not guilty on the other; (2) by a nolle prosequi as to one count; (3) by taking a verdict on one count only; and (4) by election by the prosecuting officer as to which count he will proceed upon. These authorities, however, are under the old procedure, which permitted several counts, and where, upon the face of the indictment, each count charged a distinct offense. But under that procedure the defendant was required to plead to each count, and thus a distinct issue was made upon each, and the jury were required to find on each count as to which there was a plea of not guilty; and, while the district attorney might enter a nolle as to one or more counts, if this were done after the jury was sworn, unless the defendant consented, it was a bar to a further or new prosecution for the offense charged in such count. This, however, did not affect the issues upon other counts; but here the information was framed upon the theory that but one offense was charged, and it was upon that theory that the demurrer was overruled and a single plea of not guilty taken. As the defendant could not be required to plead to two offenses charged in the same information, it cannot be said that issue was joined as to either offense, and withdrawing one of the counts, after the plea, could not cure the defect; for, even if it be conceded that there was a plea to one offense, it could not be said that it applied to one of the offenses rather than the other. If the demurrer had been sustained, as it should have been, and the district attorney had then taken leave to amend by striking out the second count, and the plea had been taken as to the first, the defect would have been cured. The information being bad, under the statute, it could not be amended after the defendant's plea was taken, without a new arraignment and plea to the amended information.

It is further contended by appellant that, by moving for a new trial, the defendant waived his right to move in arrest of judgment. This contention cannot be sustained. At common law, it was matter of right, and might be made at any time after conviction and before sentence. 1 Bish. Cr. Proc. §§ 1283, 1284. Our Penal Code makes but one restriction. If the defendant failed to demur to the information he waived his right to move in arrest upon any of the grounds mentioned in section 1004. See Pen. Code, § 1185. Like a complaint in a civil case, which states no cause of action, a fatal defect in an indictment may be taken advantage of at any stage of the proceeding, unless the right to do so is restricted by the Penal Code. The Code, as well as the common law, permits this motion after a plea of guilty, and even authorizes the court to arrest the judgment on its own view of any of the defects specified in the Code without motion. Id. § 1186. We know of no case which sustains appellant's contention. 12 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 147i, cited by appellant, expressly states that "the motion may be made after the decision of a motion for a new trial," though the two cases cited by the author to this proposition were civil cases. The motion in arrest of judgment was properly sustained, and the order appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: VANCLIEF, C.; TEMPLE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the order appealed from is affirmed.

---

101 Cal. 455

SHEA et al. v. ROBINSON et al. (No. 18,232.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 28, 1894.)

ATTACHMENT LIEN—PRIORITY—FALSE STATEMENT IN AFFIDAVIT—PLEADING.

In a suit to have a subsequent attachment decreed a prior lien on attached personalty, because the affidavit of the prior attachment falsely stated that the claim sued on was not secured by a lien on the personalty, the complaint averred that the prior attachment was for rent, that the tenant owned the attached personalty, and had it on the leased premises, and that the prior attaching creditor did "retain a lien" thereon for the payment of the rent. Held, that the complaint was insufficient, since it failed to aver facts from which the court could see that some particular kind of lien existed.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county; M. K. Harris, Judge.

Action by James Shea and others against R. B. Robinson and others to have an attachment on personalty, though subsequent in time, decreed to be a prior lien to another attachment on the same personalty. Defendants demurred. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

L. L. Cory, for appellants. E. W. Risley, for respondents.

McFARLAND, J. A demurrer to the complaint was sustained, and, plaintiffs electing not to amend, judgment was entered for defendants. Plaintiffs appeal from the judgment.

It is averred in the complaint that defendant Johnson brought an action against defendant Zetz to recover money alleged to be due from the latter to the former, and in said action caused certain described personal property of Zetz to be attached; and that afterwards plaintiffs brought an action against said Zetz, and caused the same property to be attached. The purpose of the present action is to have it decreed that the attachment of plaintiffs, though subsequent in time, is a prior lien to the attachment of Johnson. There is no averment that the money sued for by Johnson was not justly due and owing to him from Zetz, or that the alleged cause of action in Johnson v. Zetz was in any way false or fraudulent; nor is there any averment that the attachment proceedings in that action were on their face in any way invalid. It is averred, however, that the statement in the affidavit of attachment that "the claim sued upon had not been secured by any mortgage or lien upon real or personal property, or any pledge of personal property," was false; that Johnson has leased certain real property to Zetz; that his suit against Zetz was for rent due upon the lease; and that Johnson did "retain a lien" upon said personal property mentioned in the complaint, for the payment of said rent. (It seems that the personal property was owned by, and in the possession of, Zetz, and was on the leased premises.) There is no other attack in the complaint on the validity of the said attachment proceedings.

We think that the demurrer was properly sustained. In the first place, as plaintiffs do not attack the justness and validity, either in whole or in part, of Johnson's cause of action against Zetz, it is doubtful if they could avail themselves of the falsity of the affidavit as to the nonexistence of the lien, even if that falsity were sufficiently averred. We have been referred to no case in which a junior attachment has been given precedence over a prior one, where the good faith of the debt for which the first attachment issued was admitted. The general rule is that where the claim of the prior attaching creditor is for a bona fide debt, without tinge of fraud, such an objection to the attachment proceeding as that insisted on in the case at bar can be successfully made only by the defendant in the attachment suit. Fridenberg v. Pierson, 18 Cal. 152; Patrick v. Montader, 13 Cal. 435; Harvey v. Foster, 64 Cal. 296, 30 Pac. 849; Scrivener v. Dietz, 68 Cal. 1, 8 Pac. 609; Drake, Attachm. § 771. But if it be admitted that the falsity referred to rendered the Johnson attachment wholly void, so that a stranger could successfully assail it, still there is no sufficient averment of such falsity. The only averment on the subject is that Johnson did "retain a lien" on the said personal property. If there could be any circumstances under which a mere general averment that a person retained a lien, without any intimation of its nature or character, could be considered as a statement of a fact, within the meaning of the law of pleading, such circumstances do not appear on the face of the complaint in the case at bar. Indeed, it is hard to imagine what kind of a lien a man could "retain" on personal property out of his possession. He might, perhaps, acquire some sort of a lien on such property; but where the purpose of a pleader is to aver the falsity of a statement that there was no lien, and to thereby overthrow an attachment, he certainly should aver some facts from which the court could see that some particular kind of lien did exist.

There are some additional averments in the complaint that said Zetz, before plaintiffs' attachment issued, confessed judgment to Johnson, upon which an execution was issued and levied upon the property in question, and also gave a bill of sale of said personal property to Johnson, without change of possession; and these averments are somewhat insisted on in the briefs. We cannot see, however, how plaintiffs were injured by the things thus averred. The amount of the judgment confessed is not stated, and there is no averment that it was for more than was justly and legally due. The bill of sale seems to have been of little consequence, and it does not appear that the value of the property was greater than the just claim of Johnson. The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: DE HAVEN, J.; FITZGERALD, J.

101 Cal. 411

DOMICO v. CASSASSA. (No. 15,422.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 27, 1894.)

REVIEW ON APPEAL—GRANT OF NEW TRIAL—CONFLICTING EVIDENCE.

Where the evidence bearing on oppression, fraud, or malice justifying a verdict for exemplary damages is conflicting, the court's action, in granting a new trial to defendant unless plaintiff remit all of the verdict in excess of that allowed as actual damages, is an exercise of discretion, and not reviewable.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Sonoma county; R. F. Crawford, Judge.

Action by one Domico against one Cassassa. From an order granting a new trial to defendant, on certain conditions, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

A. B. Ware and Rutledge & Pressley, for appellant. Barham & Bolton, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. Action to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by the plaintiff at the hands of the defendant. The jury rendered a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for $750. Upon a motion for a new trial by the defendant, on the ground, among others, of insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict, the court made an order granting the motion, unless the plaintiff should, within 20 days, remit all of the verdict above $300 and costs, and, if such remission be made, that a new trial be denied. The plaintiff declined to remit, and has appealed from the order.

The evidence in the record fails to show that the actual damage sustained by the plaintiff was as great as the amount of the verdict, and the jury were not authorized to give exemplary damages, unless there was some evidence of oppression, fraud, or malice. Civ. Code, § 3294. The granting or denying a new trial on the ground that the evidence is insufficient to justify the verdict, where there is a substantial conflict in the evidence, rests so fully in the discretion of the trial court that its action is conclusive upon this court, unless it appears that there has been an abuse of such discretion; and it is immaterial whether the evidence is insufficient to sustain all, or only a portion of, the issues on which the judgment must depend. Whether the acts of the defendant were accompanied by oppression, fraud, or malice, so as to authorize the giving of exemplary damages, was a fact to be determined by the jury from the evidence before it, and upon this point there was a substantial conflict of evidence. The order of the judge granting a new trial shows that in his opinion the evidence was insufficient to show that there had been any fraud, oppression, or malice on the part of the defendant. The cases cited by the appellant, in which this court has refused to interfere with the verdict of a jury, were cases in which the trial court had itself refused to grant a new trial, or to reduce the verdict. The same principle which precludes an interference by this court in such cases applies when the trial court has granted a new trial, either absolutely or conditionally. If there is no evidence upon an issue which is essential to the judgment, a verdict or finding upon such issue is an error of law, which may be reviewed by this court. Mason v. Lord, 40 N. Y. 484; Conely v. McDonald, 40 Mich. 150. But, if the verdict or finding is made upon a conflict of evidence, the sufficiency of the evidence therefor is a question of fact, which the trial court is authorized to review; and if, in its opinion, the verdict is against the weight of the evidence, it is its duty to set it aside. Dickey v. Davis, 39 Cal. 569; Sherman v. Mitchell, 46 Cal. 577; Irving v. Cunningham, 58 Cal. 306; Curtiss v. Starr, 85 Cal. 376, 24 Pac. 806; Bjorman v. Ft. Bragg Redwood Co., 92 Cal. 500, 28 Pac. 591. Its action in so doing is the exercise of a legal discretion, but is not an error of law which can be reviewed by this court. Breckenridge v. Crocker, 68 Cal. 403, 9 Pac. 426; Nally v. McDonald, 77 Cal. 284, 19 Pac. 418; Townsend v. Briggs, 88 Cal. 230, 26 Pac. 108; Crooks v. Miller, 89 Cal. 35, 26 Pac. 615. The order is affirmed.

We concur: GAROUTTE, J.; PATERSON, J.

(101 Cal. 415)

LONDON, PARIS & AMERICAN BANK, Limited, et al. v. SMITH et al. (No. 15,363.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 27, 1894.)

PARTNERSHIP — MORTGAGE BY ONE PARTNER TO SECURE FIRM DEBT—EFFECT—LIABILITY OF SURVIVING PARTNER—ACTION TO FORECLOSE MORTGAGE—PARTIES.

1. A mortgage to secure a firm debt by a partner, in the absence of a personal covenant to pay the firm debt, creates in him no personal obligation, (Civ. Code, § 2928,) but renders him liable as surety.

2. On the death of a partner who became surety for a firm indebtedness by mortgaging his land, the mortgagee may enforce the mortgage without first exhausting his remedies against the surviving partner.

3. There being no partnership assets within the state, and the surviving partner being a nonresident, he is not a necessary party to such proceeding.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Mateo county; George H. Buck, Judge.

Action by the London, Paris & American Bank, Limited, and others, against Mary C. Smith, executrix of the will of Andrew Smith, deceased, and others, to foreclose a mortgage. From a judgment for plaintiffs, and an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

W. G. Witter and Edw. F. Fitzpatrick, for appellants. Stanly & Hayes, for respondents.

HAYNES, C. The complaint alleges, in substance, that on the 24th day of August, 1885, Andrew Smith applied to the London, Paris & American Bank, Limited, to extend a credit accommodation to the firm of Harrington & Smith, a copartnership which then, and until the death of Andrew Smith in January, 1892, existed and carried on business at Seattle, in the present state of Washington, and, to secure the same, executed to the plaintiff David Cahn a deed conveying to him certain lands situate in the county of San Mateo, in this state; and at the same time, and as part of said transaction, the said grantor and grantee entered into an agreement, reciting among other things, "that said conveyance is intended to secure the payment to the London, Paris and American Bank, Limited, of all sums of money which are now, or may hereafter become, due from the party of the first part, or the firm of Harrington and Smith, of Seattle, Washington Territory, with interest, and all costs and charges incurred by said party of the second part, together with interest on all said indebtedness at the rate of eight per cent. per annum. And it is agreed that so long as the said party of the first part, or the said firm of Harrington and Smith, shall be, or continue to be, indebted to the said London, Paris and American Bank, Limited, from any cause or on any account, that the said party of the second part shall hold the title to said property as security therefor; and that in the event of the failure or refusal of the said Andrew Smith, or of the said firm of Harrington and Smith, at any time, to pay to the London, Paris and American Bank, Limited, any sum or sums of money which may be due or payable to it, an action may be brought by the said David Cahn to enforce the payment thereof by a sale of the said premises, and the application of the proceeds to the payment of such indebtedness, together with interest at the rate of eight per cent. (8%) per annum, and all costs and charges incurred in respect to such property, growing out of the preservation thereof and the enforcement of said lien, with interest, including a reasonable counsel fee." The complaint sets out several promissory notes alleged to have been made by Harrington & Smith to said bank, the earliest of which bears the date July 5, 1889, and admits certain payments thereon; and also alleges that, at various times during the year 1891, said bank loaned to Harrington & Smith various other sums, amounting in the aggregate to $937.23; that after the appointment and qualification of the defendant Mary C. Smith as executrix, the said claims of the bank, amounting to $70,937.23, and interest thereon, were duly presented for allowance, and were rejected, and this action was brought to subject the land to the payment of said claims under the lien created by said deed and contract, and to secure a judgment against the executrix for any deficiency, to be paid in due course of administration. Mary C. Smith is the widow, and the minor defendants the children, of Andrew Smith, deceased. To this complaint the defendants demurred, upon the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against them, and also for defect of parties defendant, in that W. A. Harrington, the surviving partner of Harrington & Smith, was a necessary party defendant, and upon the further ground that plaintiffs had not exhausted their remedies against the copartnership, nor presented their claim to the surviving partner. Other technical grounds of demurrer were afterwards cured by amendments to the complaint, and are not urged here. The demurrer was overruled, and the defendants answered, and among other defenses alleged that the claims mentioned in the complaint had not been established as an indebtedness of the firm of Harrington & Smith in any action brought against the partnership or the surviving partner; that plaintiff should first have recourse against the partnership property, before proceeding upon the mortgage deed given by Andrew Smith, and that it was not alleged that the copartnership was insolvent. Findings were filed, and a decree entered as prayed for in the complaint, except as to a deficiency judgment, which was waived, and defendants appeal from the judgment and an order denying their motion for a new trial. Several exceptions were taken to the admission of evidence, raising substantially the same questions which were presented by the demurrer. The only findings necessary to be noticed are to the effect that the business of the firm was conducted at Seattle, in the state of Washington, where Harrington resides; that neither Harrington nor the firm had any assets in the state of California; "and that there is due, owing, and unpaid from the late firm of Harrington & Smith to the plaintiff, the London, Paris & American Bank, Limited, the full sum of $55,021.98, for which said mortgaged premises are bound." Appellants' argument is directed to two propositions: (1) That plaintiff is required first to exhaust the liability of the surviving partner; and (2) that the surviving partner is a necessary party to this action, even if it can be maintained without first proceeding against the surviving partner.

The first proposition presents no serious difficulty. The deed and contract constitute a mortgage, and we will so call it. This mortgage contained no personal covenant for the payment of the liabilities of the firm. The mortgagor was liable therefor as a partner, but he assumed no new personal obligation. "A mortgage does not bind the mortgagor personally to perform the act for the performance of which it is a security, unless there is an express covenant therein to that effect." Civ. Code, § 2928. By executing the mortgage, he hypothecated or pledged the land as security for the indebtedness of the firm. If he had given his personal obligation for the payment of the debts of the firm, it would be readily understood that he occupied the position of a surety for the firm. "A surety is one who at the request of another, and for the purpose of securing to him a benefit, becomes responsible for the performance by the latter of some act in favor of a third person, or hypothecates property as security therefor." Civ. Code, § 2831; Hassey v. Wilke, 55 Cal. 528. Here the obligation of the surety is several. The mortgage created no new obligation against the firm or the surviving partner. The firm was bound by its promissory notes; the suretyship was created by a separate instrument. "Persons severally liable upon the same obligation or instrument, including parties to bills of exchange and promissory notes, and sureties on the same or separate instruments, may all or any of them be included in the same action, at the option of the plaintiff." Code Civ. Proc. § 383. "It is well settled in this state, as elsewhere, that mere delay of the creditor to proceed against the principal will not discharge the surety." Bull v. Coe, 77 Cal. 60, 18 Pac. 808, and cases cited. It is therefore clear that the surety may not only be sued separately, but that it is not required that the creditor shall first proceed against, or exhaust his remedies against, the principal debtor, unless some special circumstance requires a departure from the general rule as to necessary parties.

The circumstances relied upon to sustain the proposition that the surviving partner is a necessary party are that the mortgage was not given to secure a promissory note or other obligation of the firm set out or described in the mortgage, or a specified sum then admitted by the mortgagor to be due, nor for a specified sum then or thereafter to be advanced or loaned by the mortgagee, but "of all sums of money which are now, or may hereafter become, due from the party of the first part, or the firm of Harrington and Smith, of Seattle, Washington Territory, with interest, and all costs and charges," etc. No part of the indebtedness described in the complaint was incurred for nearly four years after the mortgage was given, and no part of it was the individual indebtedness of Andrew Smith. If the decree herein is paid by appellants in exoneration of the land, or the land is sold under the decree, they will have the right to proceed against Harrington, the surviving partner, for reimbursement or contribution; but in an action for that purpose the surviving partner would not be bound by this decree, and it could not be used in evidence against him, to establish the amount of his indebtedness to the bank. The result, therefore, would be, not only that appellants in such action would be obliged to establish the amount of the partnership liability to the bank, but, if the amount so established should be less than they had paid to the bank, they would lose the difference; nor could they have recourse against the bank, as they are bound by the decree, while the fact might be that the true amount due the bank was less than the decree, but more than their judgment against the surviving partner. These considerations show, at least, that the surviving partner would be a proper party to the action, and this much is not disputed by respondents. But the question is whether he is a necessary or indispensable party. In Shields v. Barrow, 17 How. 130, the court pointed out three classes of parties to a bill in equity, viz.: "(1) Formal parties. (2) Persons having an interest in the controversy, and who ought to be made parties, in order that the court may act on the rule which requires it to decide on and finally determine the entire controversy, and do complete justice, by adjusting all the rights involved in it. These persons are commonly termed necessary parties; but if their interests are separable from those before the court, so that the court can proceed to a decree, and do complete and final justice, without affecting other persons not before the court, the latter are not indispensable parties. (3) Persons who not only have an interest in the controversy, but an interest of such a nature that a final decree cannot be made without either affecting that interest or leaving the controversy in such condition that its final termination may be wholly inconsistent with equity and good conscience." See, also, Cassidy v. Shimmin, 122 Mass. 411.

It is clear that the surviving partner is not a necessary party in the sense that he is or would be prejudiced by the decree, since it cannot be enforced against him, and he would not be concluded by it in an action brought by appellants for contribution or reimbursement; but he comes within a class of necessary parties, not because of his interest, nor that of the plaintiffs, but where his presence as a party is necessary to the full protection of the defendants before the court. In speaking of the subject of necessary parties, Story, in his work on Equity Pleading, (at section 138,) says: "In the next place, an interest of the absent parties in the subject matter, ex directo, which may be injuriously affected, is not indispensable to the operation of this rule; for, if the defendants actually before the court may be subjected to undue inconvenience, or to danger of loss, or to future litigation, or to a liability under the decree, more extensive and direct than if the absent parties were before the court, that of itself will, in many cases, as we shall presently see, furnish a sufficient ground to enforce the rule of making the absent persons parties." So Chancellor Wallworth, in Bailey v. Inglee, 2 Paige, 279, said: "Persons are necessary parties, * * * where the defendants already before the court have such an interest in having them made parties as to authorize those defendants to object to proceeding without such parties." The complaint, however, alleges the nonresidence of the surviving partner, and that there are no assets of the partnership within this state, and respondents rely upon these averments, which are not denied, as an excuse for not making him a party. I think this brings the case within well-recognized exceptions to the general rule. "The first exception to the rule, which we shall notice, is the utter impracticability of making the new or necessary parties. This occurs, of course, when such new parties are without the jurisdiction of the court, and when, consequently, they cannot be reached by the process of the court. In such a case, to require such persons to be made parties would be equivalent to a dismissal of the suit, and amount to a denial of justice. Hence, it is a common rule of the court that, when a person who ought to be a party is out of the jurisdiction of the court, if the fact is stated in the bill and admitted by the answer, or proved (if denied) at the hearing, that of itself constitutes a sufficient ground for dispensing with his being made a party, and the court will proceed to a decree without him." Story, Eq. Pl. § 78. The author in the same section applies it to a bill against a partnership, but adds the qualification "that it can be done without manifest injustice to the absent partner." See, also, Cockburn v. Thompson, 16 Ves. 326; Towle v. Pierce, 12 Metc. (Mass.) 329; Milligan v. Milledge, 3 Cranch, 220; West v. Randall, 2 Mason, 181-190, Fed. Cas. No. 17,424. But this case is more clearly within the exception than most of the cases above cited, for the reason that this action is not upon an engagement of the partnership, but to foreclose a mortgage made by Andrew Smith, one of the partners, upon real estate situated here, and which could only be foreclosed in an action brought in the county where the land is situated, and in which the surviving partner has no interest. The mortgage might have contained a condition that the indebtedness should first be ascertained by an action against the firm, or an admission of the amount by the firm, or that a liability under the mortgage should only be for such amount as should remain unpaid after exhausting the partnership liability. In the absence of some restriction of the character indicated, it would be unreasonable to require that plaintiffs should go to another state, and exhaust their remedies against the surviving partner, or even ascertain by judgment the amount of the debt due to it, before proceeding against the surety, who had imposed no such condition.

It is not necessary to review the numerous cases cited by counsel for appellants. They apply to actions upon the partnership obligation alone against the estate of a deceased partner, and not, as here, to a several obligation created against the individual property of the deceased partner, whereby he became a surety for the firm. If plaintiffs had insisted upon a deficiency judgment against the estate of Andrew Smith, to be paid in due course of administration, these authorities would apply, for, as the mortgagor did not covenant that he would pay the debt of the firm, no personal liability was created by the mortgage, and, as to any deficiency after exhausting the mortgaged property, the liability could only rest upon the legal liability of the deceased as a partner, and not as a surety. It is said in appellants' reply brief that jurisdiction of Harrington's person could have been obtained, but it is not shown how. The record discloses no fact justifying the statement. The judgment and order appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C.; SEARLS, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

---

101 Cal. 511

DIXON v. PLUNS. (No. 14,429.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 2, 1894.)

NEW TRIAL—MISCONDUCT OF JURY—CHANCE VERDICT—EVIDENCE.

Where the fact that one or more jurors were induced to assent to a verdict "by a resort to the determination of chance" may be proved by affidavits of jurors, (Code Civ. Proc. § 657, subd. 2,) and there is a finding of the trial court, supported by the evidence on a motion for a new trial because of such misconduct, that the verdict was not arrived at by a resort to chance, an order refusing to grant a new trial will not be disturbed, though one of the jurors made affidavit that it was so arrived at, and that he was induced thereby to assent to it.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; Eugene Garber, Judge.

Action by Kate E. Dixon against J. F. W. Pluns for personal injuries. Plaintiff had judgment, and, from an order denying his motion for a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

H. C. Firebaugh, for appellant. Nagle & Nagle, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. This case has previously been before the court. See 98 Cal. 384, 33 Pac. 268. At that time the appeal from the judgment was not passed upon, but the appeal from the order denying a new trial was sustained, and the cause remanded, with directions to the trial court to hear evidence upon the manner in which the jury arrived at their verdict, and thereupon to pass upon the motion for a new trial. This course was followed by the lower court, and thereafter the motion was denied, and this appeal taken from the order denying the same. The application for a new trial was based solely upon the ground that the jury had been guilty of misconduct, in this: that the verdict was arrived at by a resort to chance; and evidence, both oral and by affidavit, was presented to the trial court for its enlightenment upon that question. The court found that the verdict was not arrived at by a resort to the determination of chance, that the jury was not guilty of misconduct, and denied the motion for a new trial.

Section 657, subd. 2, Code Civ. Proc., provides, substantially, that whenever any one or more of the jurors have been induced to assent to any general or special verdict, or to a finding on any question submitted to them by the court, by a resort to the determination of chance, such fact may be proven by the affidavits of jurors. In the present case, one Koster made affidavit that the verdict was arrived at by resorting to the determination of chance, and that he was induced to assent thereto in that manner. It is now insisted that his affidavit must be taken as true, as far as his own conduct is concerned, and that, he being so induced to assent, the verdict must be set aside. Koster's affidavit appears to consist of two portions—First, the verdict was a chance verdict; second, he was induced to consent to it by reason of that fact. But the rock upon which his contention is shattered is located in the finding of the court that the verdict was not a chance verdict. If it was not a chance verdict, he could not have been induced to assent to it for the reason that it was such a verdict; and the second portion of his affidavit, ex necessitate, falls with the first. As is said in Dixon v. Pluns, supra, "Courts are not inclined to set aside verdicts for the reasons here urged;" and the evidence in this case greatly preponderates in favor of the finding of the court. Appellant's counsel rely upon the late case of Gordon v. Trevarthan, 34 Pac. 185, from the supreme court of the state of Montana. Upon the facts of that case, we think the trial court should not have set aside the verdict, but its action appears to have been sustained by the appellate court by invoking the well-recognized rule that the decision of the trial court upon a matter involving a substantial conflict in the evidence will not be disturbed. By affirming the action of the trial court in the present case upon a matter of conflicting evidence, we are only doing as was done by the court in Gordon v. Trevarthan. If that case be construed as taking broader grounds upon this question, it trespasses upon the views we entertain. For the foregoing reasons, it is ordered that the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: DE HAVEN, J.; PATERSON, J.; HARRISON, J.; McFARLAND, J.; FITZGERALD, J.

---

103 Cal. 264

In re McDOWELL'S ESTATE. (No. 18,227.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 2, 1894.)

HOMESTEAD.

A building used primarily as an hotel cannot be regarded as a homestead, though the owner and his wife reside there for the purpose of carrying on the business.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Siskiyou county; J. S. Beard, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of J. E. McDowell, an insolvent debtor. From an order refusing to set apart to him an hotel as homestead, he appeals. Affirmed.

Warren & Taylor, (T. M. Osmont, of counsel,) for appellant. L. F. Coburn, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. This is an appeal by J. E. McDowell, an insolvent debtor, from an order refusing to set apart to him certain real property as a homestead. The appellant was adjudged to be an insolvent debtor on the 21st day of January, 1893, by the superior court of Siskiyou county. At that time he was the owner of the property in question, which consisted of certain land and the building thereon in the town of Sisson. Ten days later he filed a petition asking to have the property set apart to him as a homestead. The application was opposed by some of his creditors, and, after a hearing, was denied by the court. The findings of the court were, in substance, as follows: During the year 1886, appellant was engaged in conducting an hotel and boarding house at McCloud, and in the spring of 1887, at the request of friends, he erected the said building at Sisson for the special purpose of boarding and lodging railroad men and the public generally. As first constructed, the building consisted of a barroom, office, dining room, and eight sleeping rooms, but during the year it was enlarged somewhat. A large sign was placed upon it, designating it as the El Monte Hotel, and by that name it was advertised in the newspapers and by cards. From the time of its completion, in the spring of 1887, until June 12, 1890, appellant used the said building primarily as an hotel. For the purpose of conducting the same as an hotel, he employed chambermaids, cooks, and waiters, and his wife superintended the chamber work and dining room, and he had a general supervision and conducted a bar in the house. His wife died in August, 1889, at the city of Los Angeles, leaving a female child, who was subsequently taken to Sisson, and kept in the El Monte for about two months, and then returned to Los Angeles. On November 20, 1889, appellant made and filed for record a declaration of homestead upon the said premises, and the same was duly recorded in the office of the county recorder. On June 12, 1890, appellant leased the whole of the said premises as an hotel for the term of one year, and did not, in the lease, reserve any portion thereof for his own use. The court further found "that said hotel, ever since its construction in 1887, has been used primarily as an hotel, and not as a home of the said James E. McDowell; that the residence of said James E. McDowell therein has been for the purpose of managing and conducting the business of an hotel, and for no other purpose;" and, as conclusions of law, "that the said James E. McDowell, at the time he filed for record his aforesaid declaration of homestead, was not entitled, under the law, to file said declaration upon said real estate," and "that he is not now entitled to have the said property set apart to him as a homestead."

The only specifications found in the bill of exceptions, and the only grounds urged for a reversal of the order, are that the last two findings which we have quoted were not justified by the evidence, and that the conclusions of law were not supported by the facts found. It is objected for respondents that the findings not assailed are sufficient to uphold the order appealed from; but, waiving that point, the order cannot, in our opinion, be disturbed upon either of the grounds urged for its reversal. The evidence clearly tended to show that the building was constructed to be used, and that from the time of its construction it was used, primarily and principally as an hotel for the accommodation of the public, and it was being so used by appellant at the time he filed his declaration of homestead. This being so, the case is plainly within the rule declared in Laughlin v. Wright, 63 Cal. 113. In that case it was said: "The use of the property is an important element to be considered;" and it was held that, when the property is primarily and chiefly used as an hotel for the accommodation of the public, it would be doing violence to the statute to regard it as a homestead, although the owner may reside there with his family for the purpose of carrying on the business. What was said in that case upon this subject was not obiter dictum, and the decision has never been overruled. In Heathman v. Holmes, 94 Cal. 296, 29 Pac. 404, the case is referred to and distinguished from the one then under consideration, but the correctness of the decision is not questioned when limited to the facts involved in it. Upon the authority of Laughlin v. Wright, supra, the order appealed from here should be affirmed.

We concur: TEMPLE, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the order appealed from is affirmed.

---

101 Cal. 432

CLEMENS v. LUCE et al. (No. 19,234.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 28, 1894.)

Mortgages—Foreclosure—Deferred Payments of Interest—Security for Attorney's Fees—Demand.

1. The interest on a note was payable quarterly, and, if not so paid, was to become a part of the principal, and bear interest at a like rate till paid; and the note was secured by a mortgage which recited that principal and interest should be due, and the mortgagee might foreclose, on default of an interest payment. Held, that the mortgagee could foreclose on default of an interest payment, as the mortgagor had no option to allow an interest installment to become a part of the principal.

2. Demand for payment was not necessary before suit to foreclose, where the mortgagor made default of an interest payment.

3. Where the mortgage secured the payment of principal and interest only, attorney's fees, for which the note provided, could not be made a lien on foreclosure.

4. On foreclosure for default of an interest payment on the note, judgment could not include the attorney's fees without proof that the mortgagee gave notice of his option to claim the whole amount due on the note, and demanded payment.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; W. L. Pierce, Judge.

Action by Jere Clemens against M. A. Luce and Henry W. Magee to foreclose mortgages. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Modified.

Luce & McDonald, for appellants. J. B. Mannix, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. This is an action of foreclosure of two certain mortgages, the note and mortgages being executed by appellant Luce in favor of respondent Clemens. The note was payable two years after date, interest payable quarterly, and, if not so paid, then to become a part of the principal, and to bear a like rate of interest till paid. The note also contained the following provision: "And I further agree that, in the event of suit being brought against me, then there shall be added to any judgment against me rendered in said suit, as counsel fees, an additional sum of five per centum in like gold coin upon the amount of the principal and interest hereof, accrued at the time of the entry of such judgment; or, if paid before judgment, and after action commenced, then on the amount at the date of payment." The mortgages recited that if default be made in the payment of the interest, or any part thereof, according to the tenor of said note, then the whole sum of principal and interest shall become immediately due, and the mortgagee may proceed with suit of foreclosure, and sell the mortgaged premises in the manner provided by law. The mortgages also contained the following recitals: That they are given "as security for the payment to said mortgagee of the sum of $16,000, in gold coin of the United States of America, with interest thereon according to the terms of a certain promissory note, of date September 22, 1891, in words and figures," etc.

It is insisted that a general demurrer to the complaint should have been sustained, upon the ground that nothing was due upon the note at the time the action was brought. Two of the quarterly installments of interest had not been paid when the complaint was filed, but it is charged that such payments were not due, inasmuch as the maker of the note had the privilege of allowing the installments of interest to become a part of the principal. There is no strength in appellants' position. The mortgages are attached to and made a part of the complaint, and there is not the slightest conflict between the terms of the note and the terms of the mortgage, when we consider them together. This identical question was before the court in Brickell v. Batchelder, 62 Cal. 623, and it was there said: "The right to dispose of the interest due and unpaid in the mode prescribed in the note was given to the plaintiff mortgagee, not to the mortgagors. A failure to so dispose might arise from the concession of the plaintiff, and not from any default of the mortgagors, except by default in paying the interest monthly. The language of the note and mortgage gave to the mortgagee the right on default to proceed to foreclosure. He might delay it or waive it, but a delay in exercising this right could not be construed as depriving him of it." The same principle is also recognized and approved in Maddox v. Wyman, 92 Cal. 674, 28 Pac. 838.

The judgment upon the pleadings was properly ordered. The answer created no issue. The denial that the plaintiff was the owner and holder of the note and mortgages amounts to nothing. Monroe v. Fohl, 72 Cal. 568, 14 Pac. 514; Poorman v. Mills, 35 Cal. 118; Bank v. Boyd, (Cal.) 34 Pac. 337. Neither is there a conflict between the provisions of the note and the terms of the mortgage as to when the note is to become due; and, consequently, the fact that certain provisions of one were printed and certain provisions of the other written becomes entirely immaterial. Again, no demand for payment was necessary prior to the commencement of the action, for the mortgagor was guilty of a breach of contract when he defaulted in payment of interest, and the cause of action immediately accrued. Prescott v. Grady, 91 Cal. 518, 27 Pac. 755, is not in point. The mortgages in this case were given as security for the payment of $16,000 in gold coin, with interest thereon as specified in a certain note. This was the contract of the parties. It nowhere appears in either of said mortgages that they were given to secure the payment of any attorney's fee whatever. Indeed, the matter of attorney's fee is not mentioned in either instrument. As to what these mortgages were given to secure was a matter of pure contract between the parties. They could have been given to secure the principal of the note alone, or the interest alone, or both principal and interest, as was actually done, or they could have been given to secure future advances and attorney's fees in case of foreclosure. It follows that security for an attorney's fee is not provided for in either mortgage, and consequently such fee cannot be made a lien upon the land, and the judgment of the court in that regard is erroneous. We are authorized to go a step further, and hold that plaintiff, as to the foreclosure of the securities, was not entitled to any attorney's fee whatever, for there was no stipulation to that effect in the mortgage. This has always been the law in this state. Monroe v. Fohl, 72 Cal. 568, 14 Pac. 514.

As the obligation for the payment of attorney's fees, although not secured by the mortgage, was included in the instrument by which the secured debt was evidenced, and provided that judgment might be entered for counsel fees in such suit, it was properly included in the same action; but the right to a judgment for such fees was the same as it would have been in an action upon a promissory note with such a clause, of which no part was secured by mortgage. In such a case it is held that, when the note is payable on demand, it is necessary to allege and prove an actual demand before there can be such a breach of the contract as will authorize a recovery of this special demand for attorney's fees. Prescott v. Grady, 91 Cal. 518, 27 Pac. 755. Although by the terms of this agreement the maker renders himself liable to an action by his mere default prior to the maturity of his obligation, (Hewitt v. Dean, 91 Cal. 5, 27 Pac. 423,) yet if his liability for additional damage is not so established, but is merely consequent upon another liability, which depends upon the option of the holder of the instrument, and cannot exist until after that option shall have been exercised, it is only just that the holder of the obligation should inform him of this option, in order that he may avoid the additional damage by making payment of the note. The right to bring an action after his default, without any demand of payment, is limited to the purposes for which the action is to be brought, viz. the foreclosure of the mortgage, and it does not include the attorney's fees. As the note in the present case does not give to the holder the right to bring an action before its maturity, that right being created by the mortgage alone, and limited to a foreclosure of the mortgage, if the holder would claim the attorney's fees provided for in the note, he should be required to give notice of his option to claim the whole amount to be due, as much as though the action was upon the note alone. For this reason the judgment for the amount of attorney's fees was erroneous.

It is ordered that the cause be remanded, with direction to the trial court to modify the judgment by striking therefrom the amount of the attorney's fee allowed; and in all other respects it is ordered that the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: HARRISON, J.; PATERSON, J.

---

4 Cal. Unrep. 496

SAINSEVAIN v. LUCE et al. (No. 19,274.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 28, 1894.)

ACTION ON NOTE TO "GUARDIAN"—PLEADING—DESCRIPTIO PERSONAE—CONSTRUCTION OF MORTGAGE—ATTORNEY'S FEES.

1. Though the Code provides that a guardian must sue in the name of his ward, a payee of a note who is described as "guardian" may sue in his own name, in the absence of evidence of a ward or trust estate.

2. Where a mortgage secures in terms only the principal and interest of a note, a lien cannot be had for attorney's fees, though the note provides for them.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; W. L. Pierce, Judge.

Action by Paul Sainsevain against M. A. Luce, C. S. Luce, and Olive B. Montania to foreclose a mortgage. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Modified.

Luce & McDonald, for appellants. Sweet, Sloane & Kirby, for respondent.

TEMPLE, C. This appeal is upon the judgment roll. The suit is to foreclose a mortgage, which is fully set out in the complaint. It recites that the mortgage is given to secure the payment of $2,000, with interest, according to the terms of a promissory note, "in the words and figures following." The note is then set out, and is as follows: "2,000. San Diego, Cal., Aug. 19, 1890. Two years after date, without grace, for value received, I promise to pay to the order of Paul Sainsevain, guardian, the sum of two thousand dollars, with interest thereon from this date until payment, at the rate of eleven per cent. per annum, payable quarterly; and, if not so paid, then to become part of the principal of this note, and to bear like rate of interest till paid; both principal and interest to be paid in United States gold coin. And I further agree that, in the event of suit being brought against me, then there shall be added to any judgment against me rendered in said suit, as counsel fees, an additional sum of ten per centum, in like gold coin, upon the amount of the principal and interest thereof accrued at the time of the entry of such judgment; or, if paid before judgment and after action commenced, then on the amount at date of payment. [Signed] M. A. Luce." The mortgage then contains a covenant that, in case of default in payment of interest, the whole sum of principal and interest shall become due. This, with a description of the property mortgaged, constitutes the entire mortgage.

Appellant first contends that the plaintiff cannot maintain this action because the note is payable to him as guardian, and, under our Code, a guardian cannot maintain an action in his own name, but suit must be in the name of the ward. But the description of the payee as guardian, in the absence of any showing that there was a ward or a trust estate, does not show that the money did not belong to plaintiff. There is nothing in the mortgage or complaint which would justify a finding that the plaintiff is not the proper party to bring suit. If the defendant had answered averring that the note belonged to a ward of plaintiff, the description would have materially contributed to strengthen any proofs he may have had, but, standing alone, it is of no consequence.

It is next objected that the mortgage was not given to secure an attorney's fee, and that it was error to give plaintiff a lien for that. In this respect I think the decree is erroneous, and must be modified. A mortgage is but a contract for a lien, and is whatever the parties make it. This mortgage in terms only secures the payment of $2,000, and interest, and cannot, by implication or otherwise, be construed to give a lien for the attorney's fee. Clemens v. Luce, (No. 19,234; filed Feb. 28, 1894,) 35 Pac. 1032.

Respondent does not claim that he is at least entitled to a personal judgment in case he is denied a lien for the attorney's fee. It is therefore not necessary to determine whether such relief might be obtained in this suit. I think the decree should be modified by deducting therefrom the amount of the attorney's fee allowed.

We concur: VANCLIEF, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, it is ordered that the decree be modified by deducting therefrom the sum of $200, the amount of the attorney's fee therein allowed, and, as so modified, the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

---

4 Cal. Unrep. 498

LEE v. McCARTHY et al. (No. 19,302.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 28, 1894.)

Mortgages — Foreclosure — Security for Attorney's Fees—Pleading—Direct Averments.

1. A lien for attorney's fees cannot be obtained in a suit to foreclose a mortgage which contains a provision that, should suit be commenced, or an attorney employed, the mortgagors agree to pay an additional sum of 10 per cent. on principal and accrued interest as attorney's fees, since the mortgage does not purport to secure such fees.

2. Attorney's fees cannot be recovered where the agreement to pay them is not directly averred in the complaint, but is merely inferable from an exhibit annexed thereto.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; W. L. Pierce, Judge.

Action by Lee against McCarthy and another to foreclose a mortgage. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Modified.

Luce & McDonald, for appellants. A. E. Nutt, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This case is not distinguishable in principle from Clemens v. Luce, (No. 19,234; this day decided,) 35 Pac. 1032. The agreement providing for attorney's fees in case of suit is contained in the mortgage instead of the bond, and is as follows: "Should suit be commenced, or an attorney employed, to collect the said promissory bond, or any of said interest coupons, the mortgagors agree to pay an additional sum of ten per cent. on principal and accrued interest as attorney's fees." The mortgage does not purport to be given to secure these attorney's fees, and the agreement can have no greater force than if it were contained in the bond, or in a separate instrument. It may be added that this agreement to pay attorney's fees is not directly averred in the complaint, but is merely inferred from being contained in an exhibit annexed thereto; and it is a well-established rule in pleading that "whatever is an essential element to a cause of action must be presented by a distinct averment, and cannot be left to an inference to be drawn from the construction of a document attached to the complaint." Burkett v. Griffith, 90 Cal. 542, 27 Pac. 527.

The cause is remanded, with directions to the court below to modify the judgment by striking therefrom the amount of the attorney's fees allowed; in all other respects the judgment and order appealed from to be affirmed.

CHASE v. HIGH et al. (No. 19,249.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 28, 1894.)

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; E. S. Torrance, Judge.

Action by Levi Chase against W. E. High and another to foreclose a mortgage. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Modified.

Luce & McDonald, for appellants. James E. Wadham, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. On the authority of Clemens v. Luce, (No. 19,234; this day decided,) 35 Pac. 1032, it is ordered that the judgment appealed from in this case be modified by deducting therefrom the amount of the attorney's fee allowed.

4 Cal. Unrep. 500

CASTRO et al. v. CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO et al. (No. 15,029.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 2, 1894.)

DISMISSAL OF SUIT—DELAY IN PROSECUTION.

It is within the sound discretion of the lower court to dismiss an action for inexcusable delay in failing, for two years after the commencement of the action, to serve defendant with process.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; William T. Wallace, Judge.

Action by one Castro and others against the city and county of San Francisco, one Barkley, and others. From an order dismissing the action on motion of defendant Barkley, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

D. L. Smoot, for appellants. John Lord Love, for respondent.

PATERSON, J. This is an action against the city and county of San Francisco and a large number of individuals to declare that the city and county of San Francisco, and those claiming under it, are trustees of the plaintiffs as to the property described in the complaint, and for an accounting of the rents, issues, and profits of the same. The appeal is from an order of the superior court dismissing the action. The ground of the motion for a dismissal was want of ordinary diligence in prosecuting the action. The affidavit of the defendant Barkley showed that the action was commenced on the 19th day of June, 1889, but that he was never served with process until the 17th day of November, 1891; that no diligence had been exercised to serve him prior to said 17th day of November; that he had for several years prior thereto continuously resided on the premises described in the schedule, and had for two years been employed as a bookkeeper for the Pacific Bridge Company, at No. 4 California street, in the city and county of San Francisco, where he could have been found at any time during business hours. The affidavit further stated that plaintiffs' claim was a "shadowy cloud in the minds of some persons when property within the boundaries of the premises embraced in said complaint are sold or mortgaged;" and that it was not the intention of the plaintiffs to bring the cause on for trial "so long as they can get one dollar a front foot from persons who happen to want to sell or mortgage, and desire the cloud removed." The plaintiffs filed a counter affidavit, denying the statement that they did not intend to bring the cause on for trial, or that they had failed to prosecute their action with reasonable diligence; and alleging that the pendency of the action had been widely advertised in the public print, and that the delay had been caused by reason of the great number of defendants and expense of serving them with process; that a large number of defendants had been promptly served with the summons, but a motion to quash the same for clerical misprision had been granted, which caused delay; that the defense set up by the city and county and other defendants would test the merits of plaintiffs' case, and, if the former should prove successful, the benefit would fall to all of the defendants, whether served with process or not.

It is claimed by appellant that the court had no power to dismiss as to respondent Barkley, because he was served with process within three years after the complaint was filed, and section 581, subd. 7, Code Civ. Proc., as amended by the act of March 19, 1889, is cited in support of the contention; but in Kreiss v. Hotaling, 33 Pac. 1125, we said, speaking of that amendment: "The discretion of the court to determine whether there has been an inexcusable delay within the term of three years still remains, and each case must be determined upon its own peculiar circumstances." See, also, Murray v. Gleeson, 35 Pac. 88. Upon the showing made in this case, we cannot say that the court below abused its discretion in granting the motion to dismiss. The order is affirmed.

We concur: HARRISON, J.; GAROUTTE, J.

101 Cal. 445

HABER v. BROWN et al. (No. 19,233.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 28, 1894.)

NONNEGOTIABLE NOTE—TRANSFER AS SECURITY—ACTION AGAINST INDORSER—NECESSITY OF DEMAND.

1. A demand on the maker of a nonnegotiable note, indorsed in blank by the payee, is necessary to entitle the immediate indorsee to recover against the payee if the words written over the blank indorsement show that such indorsee treated the indorsement as if it were an indorsement of a negotiable note.

2. In an action against the indorser of a note not payable at any particular place, a complaint which shows on its face that no demand was made on the maker, and which offers, as the only excuse for failure so to do, that he could not be found in the city in which the note was executed, is insufficient.

3. The payee of a nonnegotiable note, secured by mortgage, who transfers the note and mortgage as collateral security for a debt, is not liable to the transferee for any deficiency arising on foreclosure of the mortgaged premises.

4. One who transfers a note and mortgage on condition, inter alia, that the transferee pay him the interest then accrued, "when the same should be collected on said note and mortgage," is entitled, on foreclosure, to have the proceeds thereof first applied to such interest.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; E. S. Torrance, Judge.

Action by Joseph Haber against Martha L. Brown and Caroline G. Carter. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant Carter appeals. Modified.

David L. Withington and E. E. Carter, for appellant. Hunsaker, Britt & Goodrich, for respondent.

VANCLIEF, C. Action to foreclose a mortgage executed by defendant Brown upon certain lots of land situate in the city of San Diego, to secure her promissory note for $4,000, dated, "San Diego, Cal., Sept. 10, 1887," and payable one year after date, to the order of Caroline G. Carter, the appellant. The note contained a provision for the payment of counsel fees of 5 per cent. on the amount recovered in case of suit. The complaint contains two counts. The first alleges the indorsement of the note before maturity by Caroline G. Carter to the order of Dinkelspiel & Co., a firm consisting of Dinkelspiel, Josephi, and plaintiff, and a subsequent assignment by Dinkelspiel and Josephi of all their interest in the note to the plaintiff; and avers "that, at the maturity of said note, due search and inquiry were made for the maker thereof, the said Martha L. Brown, at the city of San Diego, in order that the same might be presented to her for payment, but she could not be found, and the said note was not paid;" that thereupon the said note was duly protested for nonpayment, and notice of protest and nonpayment was given to said Caroline G. Carter. The second count omits the allegations of indorsement, protest, and notice of nonpayment, and alleges, "that after the execution of said promissory note and mortgage, and before the maturity of said note, the said Caroline G. Carter assigned said note and mortgage to S. B. Dinkelspiel & Co., and in and by such assignment guarantied the payment of said note to the said Dinkelspiel & Co." The defendant Caroline G. Carter demurred to each count of the complaint generally, and specially demurred to the second count. Both demurrers were overruled. In her answer she denied the allegations of the complaint as to the efforts to present the note to Martha L. Brown for payment, and the allegation that she guarantied the payment of the note; and alleged that the note was indorsed by her in blank, and delivered to Dinkelspiel & Co., as security for an antecedent indebtedness of her husband, John H. Carter, to Dinkelspiel & Co., and without other consideration; and that in December, 1888, after maturity of the note, she assigned the mortgage, and released all her interest in the note, to Dinkelspiel & Co., in consideration of which they agreed to pay her $260 arrearage of interest due upon the note to December 10, 1888, out of the first moneys to be collected upon the mortgage. The court found that the note was indorsed by the defendant, simply by the writing of her name, "Caroline G. Carter," and, so indorsed, was delivered to Dinkelspiel & Co., as security for said antecedent indebtedness of John H. Carter, her husband, to Dinkelspiel & Co., and in consideration of an extension of time for payment of that indebtedness, and of the advancement of the sum of $1,000 to John H. Carter. The evidence shows that this advance of $1,000 was made prior to the delivery of the note to Dinkelspiel & Co., for the purpose of enabling John H. Carter to obtain the note from the California National Bank, where it had been deposited as security for a note made by the firm of Carter & Baker to that bank, for the sum of $1,000. The court found that Caroline G. Carter did not guaranty the payment of the note otherwise than by her blank indorsement thereof. It further found, in the language of the complaint, the alleged search and inquiry at San Diego for Martha L. Brown, that she could not be found, the protest for nonpayment, and notice of protest and nonpayment to Mrs. Carter. It further found that in December, 1888, Mrs. Carter absolutely assigned and transferred the note and mortgage to Dinkelspiel & Co., in consideration of a credit of $4,000 to John H. Carter upon his indebtedness to them, and of their agreement to pay to her, when collected, the interest which had then accrued on the note, (the first year's interest,) but found that there was no agreement to pay such interest from the first moneys collected. The court also found that it was understood between the parties at the time of the absolute assignment that Mrs. Carter was responsible upon her indorsement of the note, and liable to pay the same, less the interest thereon to December 10, 1888. The judgment was in favor of plaintiff, ordering a sale of the mortgaged property, and application of the proceeds (1) to payment of costs of suit and expenses of sale; (2) to the payment to plaintiff of the principal and interest, less the first year's interest, found due on the note; and (3) to payment to Mrs. Carter of the first year's interest and the compound interest thereon; and further ordering that, in case the proceeds of the sale should be insufficient to make the first two of the above mentioned payments, a judgment for the deficiency be entered against Mrs. Carter. Mrs. Carter appeals from the judgment on the judgment roll and a settled statement used on her motion for new trial, the appeal having been taken within six months after the rendition of the judgment. Appellant contends that the court erred in ordering a personal judgment against her, and in postponing the payment to her of the first year's interest to that of the full amount due plaintiff.

1. The note is nonnegotiable, on account of the contingent provision for attorney's fees therein contained. Adams v. Seaman, 82 Cal. 636, 23 Pac. 53. In the case of Bank v. Falkenhan, 94 Cal. 141, 29 Pac. 866, it was held that, "in respect to the immediate indorsee of the payee of a nonnegotiable promissory note, the indorsement will ordinarily create the same liabilities and obligations as the indorsement of a negotiable note." If this rule, as stated, be strictly applied, the obligations of the payee, as an indorser, to the immediate indorsee, must depend upon demand upon the maker at maturity or sufficient excuse for its absence, and notice of nonpayment to the indorser, both of which are essential. In a number of cases which enforce the rule as stated, such conditional liability of the indorser is recognized, (Jones v. Fales, 4 Mass. 245, 254; White v. Low, 7 Barb. 204; Aldis v. Johnson, 1 Vt. 136; Parker v. Riddle, 11 Ohio, 102,) though in other cases it is held that the payee who indorses a nonnegotiable note in blank may be held liable to his immediate indorsee as an absolute guarantor, and that his indorsee may write a guaranty, or absolute promise to pay the note, over the indorsement, and that the indorser cannot require demand and notice of nonpayment, (Ford v. Mitchell, 15 Wis. 334; Billingham v. Bryan, 10 Iowa, 317; Seymour v. Van Slyck, 8 Wend. 404; Cromwell v. Hewitt, 40 N. Y. 491.) In the present case it appears that Dinkelspiel & Co. wrote no guaranty over the blank indorsement, but, instead thereof, wrote the words, "Pay to the order of S. B. Dinkelspiel & Co.," and themselves indorsed the note to the order of the London, Paris & American Bank, Limited, which in turn indorsed it to the order of the Consolidated National Bank for collection, which latter bank caused the note to be protested for nonpayment, and notice thereof to be given to each and all of the prior indorsers. The court has expressly found that there was no other guaranty of the note than by the indorsement thereof in blank. Dinkelspiel & Co., as immediate indorsees, having elected to treat the indorsement to them as if it was an indorsement of negotiable paper, and not a guaranty, ought not to be allowed to alter the terms of the writing which they themselves placed above the blank indorsement. It is unnecessary to decide in this case whether demand and notice of nonpayment of a nonnegotiable note indorsed in blank by the payee is required to be given in every case of a transfer of such note, in order to entitle the immediate indorsee of the payee to recover thereon against the payee; but such demand and notice ought to be required where the words written over the blank indorsement show that the signature was considered and treated by the indorsee as if it were an indorsement of negotiable paper. Applying this rule to the present case, the complaint is insufficient to charge the appellant as an indorser. It expressly shows upon its face that the note was not in fact presented at maturity to the maker, but presentment is sought to be excused merely upon the ground that the maker could not be found in San Diego, the place at which the note was dated. But the note was not by its terms payable in San Diego, though dated there; and, under the law merchant, a note not payable at any particular place is payable, and should be presented for payment, at the residence or place of business of the maker, or wherever he may be found, at the option of the presentor; and it is only where the maker has no place of business or residence within the state, or where his place of business or residence cannot be ascertained with reasonable diligence, that presentment for payment is excused. The complaint is insufficient, because it states no facts respecting the knowledge or ignorance of Dinkelspiel & Co. and their indorsees or agent as to the actual place of residence or business of the maker of the note, and does not allege what was her last known place of residence or business, or that any inquiry or presentment was made thereat. Merely looking for the payor at the place where the instrument is dated is not of itself due diligence, but presentment must be shown to have been made at the promisor's last known place of residence or business; and if his removal from the place of date, and the acquisition of a new domicile in the same state, were previously known to the indorsee, demand must be made at his new place of residence. Wheeler v. Field, 6 Metc. (Mass.) 290; Anderson v. Drake, 14 Johns. 114; Bank v. Green, 11 Iowa, 476. The allegation "that thereupon the note was duly protested for nonpayment," being directly coupled with the previous allegations, showing nonpresentment of the note to the maker, cannot be presumed to imply a presentment of it in fact, or to imply any other excuse for not presenting it to the maker than that previously alleged, which is insufficient for the reasons stated. No waiver of protest is alleged in the complaint, or found to exist; and the finding that, at the time of the assignment and release of the pledged note and mortgage, it was understood between the parties that the plaintiff was responsible upon her indorsement, is not only outside of the issues made by pleadings, but is not sustained by the evidence. The evidence discloses an understanding between Dinkelspiel & Co. and John H. Carter and Caroline G. Carter that any extension of time granted to the vendees of the mortgaged property should "in no way affect any obligation" of either of them to said S. B. Dinkelspiel & Co., and further discloses that Dinkelspiel & Co.. at the time of the assignment, requested them to sign an absolute guaranty of "full and exact payment" of the note and mortgage, and to indemnify Dinkelspiel & Co. for all loss sustained by reason of its nonpayment, which Caroline G. Carter expressly refused to execute, and no extension of time was in fact granted.

2. The case has been discussed thus far upon the theory of the complaint, that the original transfer of the note in suit to Dinkelspiel & Co. was an absolute transfer thereof by indorsement, in the ordinary course of business; but the answer, proofs, and findings show that the transfer was by way of pledge, or collateral security, to secure the indebtedness of John H. Carter and of the firm of Carter & Barker to Dinkelspiel & Co. The Civil Code expressly provides that, "notwithstanding an agreement to the contrary, a lien, or a contract for a lien, transfers no title to the property subject to the lien." Civ. Code, § 2888. It is settled in this state that, as between the pledgor and pledgee, the general property in a pledge remains in the pledgor, notwithstanding an apparent transfer of legal title to the pledgee. Cross v. Canal Co., 73 Cal. 306, 14 Pac. 885, and cases cited. The pledgee is but a trustee for the pledgor, (Wheeler v. Neubould, 16 N. Y. 398; Hawks v. Hinchcliff, 17 Barb. 492,) and is accountable to the pledgor for any surplus realized above the amount of indebtedness existing at the date of the enforcement of the pledge, (Civ. Code, § 3008.) The transfer of a pledged note and mortgage to the pledgee does not transfer the title any further than to enable the pledgee to collect the note and mortgage from the maker thereof. Ponce v. McElvoy, 47 Cal. 159. In no event, even under the law merchant, could an indorsement of negotiable paper by way of collateral security authorize any recovery against the pledgor beyond the amount remaining due upon the principal debt. Williams v. Smith, 2 Hill, 301. It is unnecessary to decide whether, under the Code rule respecting the retention of title in the creator of any lien, regardless of the form of the transaction, the indorser of negotiable paper by way of pledge is liable to the pledgee as an indorser under the law merchant; but it seems clear, in view of the Code provision, that a mere indorsement of nonnegotiable paper by way of pledge should be restricted in effect to an authority from the pledgor to the pledgee to enforce the obligation in his own name, as trustee and agent for the pledgor, and to apply the proceeds in payment of the debt secured, accounting to the pledgor for any surplus collected. It could not operate as an assignment of the general title so long as the pledge subsists, and could only operate as such in case of an agreement that the pledge should be extinguished, and the amount of the collateral security applied as a payment upon the debt secured, or in case of a transfer of the collateral security by the pledgee to third parties. The Civil Code declares that "the lien of a pledge is dependent on possession,"(Civ. Code, § 2988;) and it is a rule applicable to collateral securities generally that if the pledgee transfers pledged paper to third persons, without authority of the pledgor, he will be deemed, at the election of the pledgor, to have taken it at its face value, in satisfaction of the debt for which it was pledged to him, and may be regarded as having pledged to his assignee his own personal responsibility, and not that of his pledgor, and no subsequent reassignment of such paper to himself will restore him to his original rights, (Hawks v. Hinchcliff, 17 Barb. 502;) and surely this must be true where the paper pledged is not negotiable. It follows, I think, from the foregoing considerations, that plaintiff is not entitled to judgment against Mrs. Carter for any deficiency.

3. I think the proceeds of the sale of the mortgaged property, after payment of costs and expenses of sale, should have been applied next to the payment of the first year's interest and the compound interest thereon to Mrs. Carter, in preference to any payment to the plaintiff. The question of preference is to be resolved solely by the contract between Mrs. Carter and Dinkelspiel & Co. The finding of the court that Dinkelspiel & Co. did not agree to pay that interest "out of the first money collected upon the said mortgage" was merely the court's construction of the contract, and therefore not the finding of a fact, but merely a conclusion of law. While it is true that the contract does not expressly say it shall be paid out of the first money collected, neither does the contract say it shall be paid out of the residue after payment in full to Dinkelspiel & Co. The language of the contract, as found, is that Dinkelspiel & Co. agreed to pay said sum to Caroline G. Carter, "when the same should be collected on said note and mortgage," without any other qualification than such as may be inferred from the circumstances and the consideration for the promise, all of which tend to show the intention of the parties to have been in accord with the ordinary meaning of the language used; namely, that the sum should be paid "when [as soon as] the same [that sum, not the whole amount due on the note] should be collected." The whole transaction was this: Mrs. Carter made an absolute assignment of a note and mortgage for $4,000, drawing interest at the rate of 13 per cent. per annum, compounded quarterly, on which one year's unpaid interest had accrued to Dinkelspiel & Co., in consideration of which Dinkelspiel & Co. credited to her husband's debt to them $4,000, and agreed to pay her the amount of the then accrued interest when they should collect it. Had the maker of the note voluntarily paid $4,000 on the note without suit, the law would have applied it, first, to the payment of interest, in the absence of any agreement for a different application; and the same rule applies where the payment is enforced by sale of property on foreclosure of a mortgage, and should have been adhered to in this case, even conceding that the contract is silent as to the order in which the payment to Mrs. Carter should be made. A new trial, however, is not necessary, since the only finding of fact not justified by the evidence is outside of the issues. I think the cause should be remanded, with instructions to the lower court to modify the judgment in conformity with this opinion.

We concur: TEMPLE, C.; BELCHER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, it is ordered that the cause be remanded, with instructions to the lower court to modify the judgment in conformity with this opinion.

101 Cal. 495

KENNEDY v. CALIFORNIA SAV. BANK et al. (No. 19,226.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 1, 1894.)

ESTOPPEL — NATIONAL BANK AS STOCKHOLDER IN SAVINGS BANK—LIABILITY—DEFENSE OF ULTRA VIRES

Where a national bank holds stock in a savings bank, and receives dividends thereon, it is estopped, in an action against it to enforce its liability as such stockholder to a depositor in the savings bank, from claiming that it is ultra vires for it to hold such stock, in the absence of a statute expressly prohibiting it.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; W. L. Pierce, Judge.

Action by one Kennedy against the California Savings Bank, the California National Bank, and others, to recover money deposited by plaintiff in such savings bank, of which the other defendants are stockholders. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant California National Bank appeals. Affirmed.

James E. Wadham, for appellant. Works & Works and W. H. Fuller, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. During the year 1891 the plaintiff deposited with the California Savings Bank, one of the defendants herein, different sums of money, for which the said defendant issued to him its several certificates of deposit, amounting, in the aggregate, to $45,000. On the 12th of November, 1891, the plaintiff demanded of the savings bank payment of the amount of said certificates, and, upon its refusal, brought this action, making the other defendants parties to the action, for the purpose of recovering from them their proportion of said indebtedness—as stockholders in the California Savings Bank. Judgment was recovered against the savings bank for the full amount of the claim, and against the other defendants for their respective proportions thereof, as such stockholders. The California National Bank, one of the defendants, has appealed upon the ground that, by virtue of the statutes under which it is organized, it had no power to become a stockholder in another corporation, and that its act in becoming such stockholder is so far ultra vires that it cannot be made liable for any portion of the indebtedness of the corporation. The California Savings Bank was organized January 13, 1890. September 10, 1890, 990 shares of its capital stock were issued to J. W. Collins, cashier of the California National Bank, and on January 2, 1891, the certificates representing these shares were canceled, and one certificate therefor was issued to the California National Bank, and was thereafter held by it until after the commencement of this action. During this period, two dividends upon this stock were paid by the savings bank to the appellant. The defense of ultra vires is looked upon by courts with disfavor whenever it is presented for the purpose of avoiding an obligation which a corporation has assumed, merely in excess of the powers conferred upon it, and not in violation of some express prohibition of the statute. Courts are inclined to treat the corporation as estopped from setting up this defense in all cases where it has received and retains the benefit of the transaction, and seeks by this plea to avoid its correlative obligation. In Evans v. Bailey, 66 Cal. 112, 4 Pac. 1089, an action was brought against the stockholders of the California Fruit & Meat Shipping Company to recover from them their respective proportions of certain indebtedness to the plaintiff of that corporation. One of these defendants was the People's Ice Company, another corporation, which held a thousand shares of the capital stock of the corporation debtor; and, to its objection that it was ultra vires for it to hold stock in another corporation, it was held that, as it did not appear that it was not within the scope of its power to hold stock in the defendant corporation under any circumstances, or for any purpose, and as the circumstances under which it had acquired the stock were not shown, the defense could not be maintained. There is no provision in the statute by which a national bank is expressly prohibited from becoming a stockholder in another corporation; and, while it may be conceded that its subscription to the shares of another corporation would be so far in excess of the powers conferred by the statute under which it is organized that its executory contract therefor would not be enforced, it by no means follows that, if such contract is executed, and it has been registered as such stockholder, it is not entitled to a voice in its corporate management, or to its share of the corporate earnings, while the corporation is in existence, or of its assets upon a dissolution thereof. It may take shares in another corporation as collateral security for a loan made by it, and, if the loan is not paid, it may become the owner of those shares, and have them registered in its name upon the books of that corporation; and in such a case it is subject to the same liabilities as any other stockholder. In Bank v. Case, 99 U. S. 628, the bank had become a stockholder in another corporation under such circumstances, and it was held to be liable for its proportion of the debts of the corporation in which it had been a stockholder, although it had transferred the stock to one of its clerks for the purpose of avoiding such liability. As the appellant herein could have taken the stock of the savings bank in satisfaction of a loan for which it had been pledged to it as security, it was within the scope of its power to become a stockholder therein, so that it cannot be said that it was prohibited by statute from becoming such stockholder. Having caused itself to be registered upon the books of the corporation as a stockholder, any person dealing with the corporation would be justified in assuming that it had become such stockholder by virtue of a transaction within its power, rather than in violation of the laws of its creation, and, so long as it held itself out as such, it ought not to be permitted to defend against its liability as such stockholder by showing that it had become such in violation of law. "Strangers are presumed to know the law of the land, and they are bound, when dealing with corporations, to know the powers conferred by their charter. These are open to their inspection, and it is easy to determine whether the act is within the scope of the general powers conferred for that purpose; but they have no access to the private papers of the corporation, or to the motives which govern directors and stockholders, and no means of knowing the purposes for which an act that may be lawful for some purposes is done. The very fact that the appointed officers of the corporation assume to do an act in the apparent performance of their duty, which they are authorized to perform for the lawful purposes of the corporation, is a representation to those dealing with them that the act performed is for a proper purpose, and such is the presumption of the law; and, upon this presumption, strangers, having no notice in fact of the unlawful purpose, are entitled to rely." Ditch Co. v. Zellerbach, 37 Cal. 587. The appellant has not repudiated the agreement under which it received the stock, but still retains it, and, so far as is shown by the record, claims to be owner of it, and to share in all the earnings and assets of the corporation. During the period that it has claimed to be such owner, it has received dividends out of the assets of the savings bank, and to that extent diminished the corporate property which otherwise might have been appropriated in satisfaction of the plaintiff's claim. See Mitchell v. Beckman, 64 Cal. 117, 28 Pac. 110. Having had the benefit of the transaction, and still enjoying its fruits, it is estopped from denying a liability which is correlative to such benefit and fruits, and dependent thereon. See Morse, Banks, § 735. The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: GAROUTTE, J.; PATERSON, J.

101 Cal. 462

QUIGLEY et al. v. GILLETT et al. (No. 18,209.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 1, 1894.)

MINES AND MINING — RELOCATION — BURDEN OF PROOF.

1. In an action to try the right of possession to a mining claim, the sufficiency of plaintiff's protest against defendant's relocation filed in the land office is immaterial, and its admission in evidence cannot harm defendant.

2. The validity of a prior location being admitted, the burden is on the relocator to show that defendant failed to do his assessment work.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Plumas county; G. G. Clough, Judge.

Action by Louis T. Quigley and others against Charles E. Gillett and others to try right of possession to a mining claim. Judgment for plaintiffs. Defendants appeal. Reversed.

Goodwin & Goodwin and C. N. Harris, for appellants. P. O. Hundley and C. E. McLaughlin, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. This action was brought to determine the adverse claims of the parties to the right of possession of certain placer mining land in the county of Plumas. The complaint alleged, in substance, that on the 21st day of March, 1891, the land in controversy "was, ever since has been, and now is, gold-bearing, public mineral land of the United States," and that, on the day named, four of the plaintiffs and three other persons, the grantors of one of the plaintiffs, all of whom were then citizens of the United States, entered upon, took possession of, and located the same as a placer mining claim, which they designated and called the "Fortuna Placer Mining Claim," and that they and their successors in interest have ever since remained, and are entitled to remain, in the possession thereof; that on the 4th day of November, 1891, the defendants filed, in the proper United States land office, their application for a patent for the Diana placer mine, and included within their application the whole of the land and premises located as aforesaid by the plaintiffs and their grantors, and that defendants claim the whole of the said land adversely to the plaintiffs, and to be entitled to the exclusive possession thereof; that the register of the land office duly posted and published a notice of the said application, and that on January 2, 1892, within the time allowed by law and the said notice, plaintiffs filed with the said register their adverse claims for the said lands, and their protest against the issuance of a patent to the defendants, or either of them, for the same; that the claim of defendants is without right, and that they are not, nor is either of them, entitled to the possession of the said land, or any part thereof, adversely to the plaintiffs. The answer denied, among other things, that on the 21st of March, 1891, the lands described in the complaint, or any part thereof, were, or ever since have been, or now are, gold-bearing, public mineral lands of the United States, and alleged that, long prior to the time stated, the assignors of the defendant Charles E. Gillett entered upon the said lands, which were at that time free and open to exploration and purchase by citizens of the United States and those who had declared their intention to become such, and under regulations prescribed by law, and according to the local customs of miners, proceeded to and did locate the same as a mining claim, and at the time of such location were citizens of the United States; that afterwards they entered into the possession and occupation of the said lands and every part thereof, and remained in such possession and occupation, in accordance with the laws of the United States governing the holding of mining claims, until they conveyed the same to this defendant, since which time he has occupied and held the same in conformity with such laws; denied that on the 2d day of January, 1892, or at any other time, plaintiffs filed with the register of the land office any sufficient adverse claim for the premises in controversy, or protest against the issuance of a patent therefor to the defendant; and alleged that neither the plaintiffs, nor either or any of them, have, or ever had, any right, title, interest, or estate in and to the said premises. The case was tried by the court without a jury, and the findings were that on the 21st day of March, 1891, the lands described in the complaint were gold-bearing, public mineral lands of the United States, and were located by the plaintiffs and their grantors in every respect as required by law and the local customs, rules, and regulations of miners, as a placer mining claim, under the name of the "Fortuna Placer Claim," and that, on the day named, the locators were citizens of the United States, and ever since have been, and now are, the owners of, in the possession of, and entitled to the possession of, the said lands, and every part thereof; that on the 7th day of August, 1889, the grantors of the defendant Charles E. Gillett entered upon and located, in all respects as required by law and the local customs, rules, and regulations of miners, the lands and premises described in the complaint, under the name of the "Diana Placer Mining Claim," and each of them was then a citizen of the United States; that, during the year 1890, neither the defendants nor their predecessors in interest did or performed, or caused to be performed, any work or labor upon said Diana placer claim, in the development thereof, or otherwise, or at all. Judgment was accordingly entered that the plaintiffs were the owners, and in the possession, and entitled to the possession, of all the lands and premises described as the Fortuna placer mining claim, and that the defendants were not entitled to the exclusive or any possession of said lands adversely to plaintiffs. From this judgment the defendants have appealed, and the case is brought here for review on a bill of exceptions, which contains specifications to the effect that each of the findings above referred to, except that as to the location made August 7, 1889, was not justified by the evidence.

1. The protest filed by plaintiffs in the land office was headed: "In the matter of the application of Thomas B. Ludlum, as the attorney in fact of Chas. E. Gillett, for a United States patent for the Diana placer mine or mining claim, and the land and premises appertaining to said mine, situated in an unorganized mining district in Plumas county, state of California;" and it is claimed by appellants that the paper did not constitute a sufficient protest, and therefore the court erred in admitting it in evidence over their objection. We see no prejudicial error in the ruling complained of. The action was brought "to determine the question of the right of possession" of certain mining land, and that was the only question involved. The court had nothing to do with the proceedings in the land office, and no power to determine as to their regularity or irregularity, sufficiency or insufficiency.

2. The defendants offered to prove that the lands in controversy were located as a reservoir site in May, 1881, by a corporation, but did not offer to show that any of the parties to this action, or their grantors, were connected with, or interested in, the said reservoir site or the said corporation. The offered evidence was objected to by the plaintiffs as irrelevant and immaterial, and was properly excluded by the court. The reservoir claimants, if any there were, were not before the court, and it had no power to determine as to their rights.

3. The statute provides that "on each claim located after the tenth day of May, eighteen hundred and seventy-two, and until a patent has been issued therefor, not less than one hundred dollars' worth of labor shall be performed or improvements made during each year; * * * and upon a failure to comply with these conditions, the claim or mine upon which such failure occurred shall be open to re-location in the same manner as if no location of the same had ever been made, provided that the original locators, their heirs, assigns or legal representatives, have not resumed work upon the claim after failure, and before such location;" and "provided that the period within which the work required to be done annually on all unpatented mineral claims shall commence on the first day of January succeeding the date of location of such claim." Rev. St. U. S. § 2324, as amended January 22, 1880. The bill of exceptions states that "no competent evidence was offered by the defendants showing, or tending to show, that any assessment work required by the act of congress or the local laws of the mining district, or that any work of any character for developing the Diana placer mining claim, had been done or performed on the said claim by the defendants, or any one else for them, between the 7th day of August, 1889, the time of its location, and the 8th day of September, 1891, or at any time prior to the location of the Fortuna placer mining claim, or that the defendants had resumed work prior to the 8th day of September, 1891." The record is silent as to whether any evidence was offered by the plaintiffs showing that no work was done on the claim between the dates above named, and, in view of the specifications, it must be presumed that none was offered; the presumption on appeal being that the statement or bill of exceptions contains all pertinent evidence upon points specified, although the record does not show affirmatively that such is the case. It must be assumed, therefore, that the findings of the court that no work was done by the defendants or their predecessors in interest during the year 1890, and that the said lands were public mineral lands of the United States in March, 1891, were based upon the theory that the burden was on defendants to show that sufficient work was done to meet the requirements of the statute, and that, in the absence of such showing, the findings must be against them. The question then arises, was this theory correct, and were the findings referred to justified? The evidence shows, and the court found, that the location of August 7, 1889, was a valid location, made in all respects as required by law. This being so, the ground located became the property of the locators, and could not be relocated until they lost, abandoned, or forfeited their rights to it. As said in Belk v. Meagher, 104 U. S. 284, 285: "A mining claim perfected under the law is 'property' in the highest sense of that term, which may be bought, sold, and conveyed, and will pass by descent. * * * The language of the act is that the locators 'shall have the exclusive right of possession and enjoyment of all the surface included within the lines of their locations,' which is to continue until there shall be a failure to do the requisite amount of work within the prescribed time. * * * The right of location upon the mineral lands of the United States is a privilege granted by congress, but it can only be exercised within the limits prescribed by the grant. Any attempt to go beyond that will be of no avail. Hence, a relocation on lands actually covered at the time by another valid and subsisting location is void; and this, not only against the prior locator, but all the world, because the law allows no such thing to be done."

The question as to which side has the burden of proof in a case like this, where it is claimed that a prior valid location has been lost or forfeited by a failure to do the necessary work, arose directly, and was passed upon, in Hammer v. Mining & Milling Co., 130 U. S. 292, 9 Sup. Ct. 548. That was a suit to quiet the plaintiff's title to a lode mining claim in Montana. The complaint alleged that the plaintiff was a corporation duly organized, etc., that it was the owner of a certain quartz lode, known as the Garfield lode or mining claim, and that it and its predecessors in interest had been in the possession of, and entitled to, the lode ever since its discovery and location; that, notwithstanding its right to the possession, the defendant Hammer, on or about the 1st of January, 1883, assumed to enter upon the premises and relocate the same, and that he pretended to claim an interest or estate therein adversely to the plaintiff, and had made application to the local United States land office for a patent therefor, and that the plaintiff had duly filed in that office its adverse claim to the premises. The answer of Hammer denied that the plaintiff was the owner of the lode described, or of any part thereof, or that it was then, or had been for a long time, in possession thereof; and it set up that on the 1st day of January, 1893, one Wolf entered upon the premises described, the same being then vacant mineral land of the United States, and discovered thereon a vein or lode of quartz-bearing silver and other precious metals, which he located in accordance with the requirements of the law; that afterwards the defendant became the purchaser of the premises from Wolf, and had ever since been the owner and entitled to the possession thereof; and that whatever claim the plaintiff ever had to them became forfeited before the 1st of January, 1883, since which time it had not had any estate, title, or interest therein or possession thereof. The court, Mr. Justice Field delivering the opinion, said: "The answer does not distinctly put in issue the validity of the original location; it confines its traverse to the existing right and ownership of the plaintiff in the whole of the mining claim, to its long possession of the premises, and to the possession of the plaintiff and its predecessors since the discovery and location of the mining claim, and then sets up the alleged forfeiture of the claim by the plaintiff and the defendant's relocation of it. * * * As to the alleged forfeiture set up by defendant, it is sufficient to say that the burden of proving it rested upon him; that the only pretense of a forfeiture was that sufficient work, as required by law each year, was not done on the claim in 1882. * * * A forfeiture cannot be established except upon clear and convincing proof of the failure of the former owner to have work performed, or improvements made, to the amount required by law." That decision is decisive of the question in hand, and must be followed, since the court rendering it has jurisdiction to review all cases like this when the amount in controversy is sufficient. Chambers v. Harrington, 111 U. S. 350, 4 Sup. Ct. 428. It follows that the theory on which the court below acted was not correct, and the findings complained of were not justified by the evidence. The judgment must therefore be reversed, and the cause remanded. So ordered.

101 Cal. 471

PEOPLE v. CHRISTIAN. (No. 21,061.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 1, 1894.)

ASSAULT—INFORMATION—VARIANCE—NAME.

One complained against for an assault with a deadly weapon on the person of one George Magin cannot be informed against and tried for such an assault on one George Massino.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Humboldt county; G. W. Hunter, Judge.

Harry Christian, convicted of assault with a deadly weapon, appeals. Reversed.

E. W. Wilson, for appellant. W. H. H. Hart, Atty. Gen., and T. H. Selvage, Dist. Atty., for the People.

GAROUTTE, J. The defendant, Christian, was convicted of the crime of assault with a deadly weapon upon the person of one George Massino, and now appeals from the judgment and order denying his motion for a new trial. Upon being called to plead to the information, he moved to set it aside upon the ground that he had never been legally committed by a magistrate; and we think the proper disposition of that motion demands a reversal of the judgment. The inception of the present prosecution is founded in a complaint laid before a magistrate upon the oath of one Nick. Savage. In that complaint John Doe, alias, is charged with an assault with a deadly weapon upon the person of one George Magin. At the conclusion of the preliminary examination the magistrate entered his order of commitment upon the back of the complaint, reciting that, "it appearing to me that the offense of an assault with a deadly weapon, to wit, a pistol, has been committed, and that there is sufficient cause to believe that the within-named Harry Christian, arrested under the name of John Doe, guilty thereof, I order that he be held to answer to the same," etc. The district attorney thereupon filed an information against the defendant, Christian, charging him with the crime of assault with a deadly weapon upon the person of one George Massino, and upon that information he has been tried and convicted. The defendant was not charged by the complaint before the magistrate with assaulting one George Massino; neither does the commitment indicate that he was held to answer before the superior court upon that character of charge. There is a wide difference between the offense of an assault with a deadly weapon upon John Doe and that of assault with a deadly weapon upon Richard Roe. The name of the party assaulted is a material element of the offense, and common justice to the defendant demands that he be notified of the particular offense for which he stands committed. In the present case he had no such notice. If the record gave him any information upon the subject, it would be an inference, at least, that he was to be tried for the assaulting of one Magin, the party named in the complaint; but it was only when he was called upon to plead that he for the first time became aware of the nature of the offense for which he was to be put to trial. Again, this party was arrested and brought before a magistrate to defend himself against a charge of assaulting one Magin. Under those circumstances, and under a complaint charging that offense, he could not be called upon to defend himself for assaulting one Massino, for there was no complaint on file upon which to base an examination of that character. The commitment furnishes the material matters upon which the district attorney should frame his information. If the defendant is committed for trial for the offense charged in the complaint, it is sufficient to so declare in the commitment; but, if he be held for some other offense, the commitment should state its general nature,—in other words, describe it with reasonable certainty. The district attorney, in framing his information, must confine himself to the record. He is not justified in placing therein any element of the offense, the information of which he has obtained from outside sources. This principle is declared in People v. Parker, 91 Cal. 91, 27 Pac. 537, and again affirmed in People v. Wallace, 94 Cal. 497, 29 Pac. 950. Assuming the complaint in this case to have been made a part of the commitment, we then have the defendant committed for an assault upon one Magin, and we have an information filed against him for an assault upon one Massino. This is a variance as fatal as though it arose upon the trial of the case.

The information not being based upon the commitment, can it be supported upon the theory that the evidence taken at the preliminary examination disclosed that the defendant committed an assault upon George Massino, and that, therefore, the district attorney was authorized in filing an information upon material furnished by that evidence? In the case of People v. Vierra, 67 Cal. 231, 7 Pac. 640, the defendant, by complaint, was charged with the crime of murder, and upon examination was committed for manslaughter. Notwithstanding such commitment, the district attorney filed an information against him charging murder, and this court upheld that procedure. The same principle also arose in People v. Lee Ah Chuck, 66 Cal. 662, 6 Pac. 859, where the defendant was charged with an assault with intent to commit robbery, and committed for the offense of an attempt to commit robbery. The information was framed in line with the complaint, and alleged an assault with intent to commit robbery. While we have recognized the difference between the offense of assault with intent to commit a felony and the offense of an attempt to commit the same felony, (People v. Lee Kong, 95 Cal. 667, 30 Pac. 800,) yet the distinction is not a broad one, and they are so closely related that the evidence of one is usually sufficient to prove the other. Indeed, the attempt to commit a felony is always included in the assault with intent to commit the felony. In both of these cases the information charged the defendant with the offense alleged in the complaint upon which the preliminary examination was based, and there is no question but that they properly declare the law in that regard. There is also some general language found in People v. Staples, 91 Cal. 23, 27 Pac. 523, in line with the earlier cases we have quoted; but in that case the offense charged in the complaint and in the information was the same, and the opinion so states; consequently, the language used was obiter dicta. In People v. Wheeler, 73 Cal. 252, 14 Pac. 796, the defendant was charged with robbery, and committed for the crime of false imprisonment; and this case is the only one we find directly opposed to the views we entertain upon this question. The principle there declared is unsound, and must be cast out as no authority for future guidance. It is not law that a person may be charged by complaint with larceny, and held for trial for rape, even though the evidence taken at the preliminary examination indicates, to a certainty, that the defendant committed that offense. The case cited appears to go to the length of the illustration made, and cannot be sustained. It is violative of that provision of the constitution which does not allow a prosecution by information unless the defendant has previously had a preliminary examination upon the offense for which he is prosecuted. It is not only the right, but the legal duty, of the magistrate, to commit the defendant for a lower degree of the offense charged in the complaint whenever the evidence indicates his guilt of such lower degree; and, while it is properly held in the Vierra Case that the district attorney may file an information for murder against a defendant committed for manslaughter, yet, if the complaint upon which the defendant had been preliminarily examined had charged any other offense than that of murder, the action of the district attorney in filing the information would have been beyond the law. It may be laid down as an unquestioned proposition that the district attorney has no authority to disregard the commitment, and cull from the evidence taken at the preliminary examination some real or imaginary offense, not included in the complaint upon which the defendant was charged and examined.

In the case of People v. Giancoli, 74 Cal. 646, 16 Pac. 510, a case where the district attorney filed his information from data taken from the evidence at the examination, this court held that, if there was any evidence whatever in the record indicating the commission of the offense charged in the information, the district attorney's action in the premises was beyond review and conclusive. For this reason, among others, we are not disposed to expand the doctrine declared in the Vierra and Lee Chuck Cases. The language found there may be broader than the facts of those cases; but any language which might be construed as holding that a defendant may be informed against for any offense shown by the evidence, regardless of the charge upon which he was examined, is too broad, and we do not desire it crystallized into a principle of law. The district attorney is not only required to file the information for some offense included in the allegations of the complaint, but the magistrate, likewise, only has the power to commit for some offense included therein. If such were not the true rule, the whole procedure as to preliminary examinations would be absurd, and, as to the defendant, a mockery. Where a defendant is brought before a magistrate, charged with having committed a public offense, he must be informed of the charge against him, and advised as to his right to the aid of counsel in every stage of the proceeding. He is entitled to a certain time to prepare his defense. These provisions of the statute clearly contemplate that he shall be required to defend himself against the crime with which he is charged, and no other crime. He has not been notified of any other charge, and consequently is not prepared to defend himself against another charge. There is no provision of the statute by which a defendant may take advantage of the admission of immaterial or incompetent evidence by the magistrate. Hence, all manner of crimes may be proven against him, and thus the district attorney would have the privilege of selecting the most heinous upon which to frame his information. Such is not the law, and whenever a defendant is informed against for an offense different from that charged in the complaint upon which he was examined, or not included therein, he has had no examination for that offense, and is entitled to have the information set aside upon the ground that he has not been legally committed. In Ex parte Nicholas, 91 Cal. 640, 28 Pac. 47, the general language found in the Vierra Case as to the right of the district attorney to file an information for any offense disclosed by the evidence is reiterated; but the matter there before the court was purely a question of jurisdiction, involving the right to a writ of habeas corpus, and whatever may have been said upon these lines was not demanded upon a disposition of the merits of the question under discussion. We also refer to the views of Mr. Justice Paterson, as expressed in his concurring opinion in Ex parte Nicholas, as being in entire accord with what we deem the law to be upon the matter under discussion. It follows that the offense charged in this information is not the offense for which the defendant was examined, neither is it an offense included therein, and consequently not one upon which the district attorney was justified in filing an information based upon data found in the evidence taken upon the preliminary examination of the defendant. It is ordered that the judgment and order be reversed, and the cause remanded.

We concur: PATERSON, J.; HARRISON, J.

(103 Cal. 357)

DULIN v. PACIFIC WOOD & COAL CO. et al. (No. 19,251.)[1]

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 27, 1894.)

CORPORATIONS—AGREEMENT AMONG STOCKHOLDERS—ENFORCEMENT.

Since Civ. Code, §§ 307, 312, provide that in a corporation election every stockholder must vote his shares in person, or by proxy, in writing, a president of a corporation cannot enforce a verbal agreement by the other stockholders that he shall continue as president for two years longer, the agreement providing no way for its accomplishment.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county, W. L. Pierce, Judge.

Action by E. G. Dulin against the Pacific Wood & Coal Company and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

D. L. Withington and Works & Works, for appellants. V. E. Shaw and Conklin & Hughes, for respondent.

HAYNES, C. Plaintiff had judgment, and the defendants appeal therefrom upon the judgment roll. This proceeding was brought under section 315 of the Civil Code, to set aside the election of B. D. Clugston, one of the defendants, as a director of the defendant corporation, and to confirm the election of plaintiff as such director. Clugston answered, and also filed a cross complaint, to which plaintiff filed an answer. The findings cover eight or nine pages of the transcript, but may be summarized as follows: The Pacific Wood & Coal Company is a corporation, having a capital stock of $10,000, divided into 100 shares, of $100 each. G. A. Garretson and the members of his family owned 69 shares of said stock, all of which he controlled. Defendant B. D. Clugston owned 25 shares, J. S. Akerman 4 shares, and plaintiff 2 shares. That on June 17, 1892, defendant B. D. Clugston agreed verbally with G. A. Garretson to purchase the 69 shares owned and controlled by him, and to pay therefor $140 per share, which agreement, if carried out, would have given Clugston all of the stock except 6 shares. That on the following day, and before this sale was consummated, a verbal agreement was made between the defendant Clugston, George G. Garretson, the son of G. A. Garretson, J. S. Akerman, and the plaintiff, with the consent of all the stockholders of the corporation, that defendant Clugston should retain 21 shares of the stock agreed to be purchased, making him the owner of 46 shares; that George G. Garretson and the plaintiff should each take and pay for enough of said stock to give each 25 shares; and that Akerman should retain the 4 shares then owned by him. It was further agreed that defendant Clugston should lend to George Garretson $2,400, to be used to pay in part for his stock, to secure which loan he gave his note, and pledged 10 shares of his stock; and it was also agreed that the corporation should mortgage its property, and thereby raise the sum of $4,000, for the benefit of George G. Garretson and the plaintiff, to be used to pay for the stock purchased by them,—$2,000 to each,—and for which they gave their several notes. The defendant Clugston agreed to this division of the stock, loaned the $2,400 to George G. Garretson, and consented to the mortgaging of the property of the corporation, upon the verbal agreement of all the stockholders that defendant Clugston was to be president of the company for two years, at the expiration of which time the mortgage notes were to become due, and to receive a salary of $125 per month while he retained an interest in the corporation, the plaintiff to be treasurer at the same salary, and that Akerman should use his four shares to protect defendant Clugston; and on the same day the notes were executed, the stock delivered, and the salaries fixed as above stated, defendant Clugston being then president. The election for directors here in question was held on November 17, 1892. Prior to this election, B. D. Clugston transferred to his daughter, L. Clugston, and to James Wells, each, one share of his stock The board consisted of 5 directors, and 6 candidates were nominated, viz. the plaintiff, Dulin, the defendant B. D. Clugston, L. Clugston, Wells, Akerman, and Garretson. The plaintiff cumulated his votes for 3 candidates, viz. Akerman, Dulin, and Garretson, giving each 41⅔ votes. Garretson cumulated his votes for the same candidates, giving each 41⅔ votes. Akerman voted his 4 shares for 5 candidates, the 3 above named and Wells and L. Clugston, giving each 4 votes. Wells voted his 1 share cumulated for 3 candidates, viz. B. D. Clugston, L. Clugston, and himself, giving each 1⅔ votes. L. Clugston voted her share for the same candidates, and gave each 1⅔ votes. B. D. Clugston's 44 shares were cumulated, and gave himself 73½, to L. Clugston 73½, and to Wells 73 votes. If these votes had been counted as cast, Dulin, Akerman and Garretson would each have had 87⅓ votes, B. D. Clugston 76 5-6 votes, L. Clugston 80 5-6, and Wells 80⅔ votes. The defendant B. D. Clugston, the president of the corporation, presided at the election, and L. Clugston was appointed teller. The president objected to counting the 10 shares belonging to Garretson, which were pledged to him. These 10 shares, cumulated, gave 50 votes, and were tendered in equal proportions to the 3 candidates Dulin, Akerman, and Garretson, amounting to 16⅔ votes each, and, if thrown out as cast, would have left these 3 candidates each 70⅔ votes, and the result would have been the election of B. D. Clugston, L. Clugston, and James Wells, and the remaining 3 candidates tied. But, in counting the votes, the 50 votes, being the cumulation of the 10 shares of Garretson's stock pledged to B. D. Clugston, were not counted; 8⅓ votes thereof being deducted from Akerman, and 41⅔ from Dulin, thus defeating Dulin, and electing Akerman and Garretson. Clugston, the pledgee of said 10 shares, did not claim the right to vote them, nor is it claimed or found that Garretson had agreed in any manner not to vote them; and if counted as they were cast, it is found by the court, Dulin would have been elected, and Clugston defeated. The cross petition of B. D. Clugston, however, sets up the verbal agreement hereinbefore stated, to the effect that Clugston should be president for two years, and should receive a salary of $125 per month so long as he should retain an interest in the corporation, and that but for this agreement he would not have consented to part with a controlling interest in the stock, nor to the mortgage upon the company's property to aid Dulin and Garretson to purchase their stock, nor have loaned Garretson the $2,400, and charges a conspiracy to defeat his election, and prays that it be adjudged and decreed that he and the said L. Clugston, James Wells, George G. Garretson, and J. S. Akerman were duly elected directors, and that he is entitled to be elected president. The court also found that said agreement was not reduced to writing; that it was material, important, and necessary to the protection of Clugston's interests; but that neither Dulin, Garretson, nor Akerman at any time agreed in express terms to elect Clugston as a director. As conclusions of law, the court found that said agreement was void, because not to be performed within a year, and not in writing, and that the votes cast for the plaintiff, including the 10 shares of pledged stock, should have been counted, and that Dulin was duly elected a director. No different conclusion of law could possibly be reached, unless the verbal agreement found by the court to have been made can be specifically enforced, and this cannot be done.

---

[1] Rehearing granted.

The Code provides how elections shall be held; declares that every stockholder shall have the right to vote in person or by proxy "the number of shares standing in his name;" that votes may be cumulated, and given to one or more or all the candidates, not exceeding the number to be elected, and the candidates receiving the highest number of votes shall be declared elected; and these votes must be cast by the owner of the shares in person, or by proxy, in writing, and only a member of the corporation can be a proxy. Civ. Code, §§ 307, 308, 312. No proxy was given to the appellant to vote any of the stock held by Dulin, Garretson, or Akerman, nor was any required by the agreement to be given. The agreement provided no means for the accomplishment of the end or purpose to be accomplished. It does not seem to be questioned that Dulin and those co-operating with him had the right to vote their stock, but only that it should have been so voted as to elect appellant. But appellant had in his own hands enough stock to have elected himself and one other director, in the face of any combination that could have been made; and the court has no power to relieve him from his own error, or do that for him which he had the power to do for himself. If the objects sought to be accomplished by the agreement were lawful and proper,—a point not considered,—no means being provided for its accomplishment, the specific performance of it cannot be enforced. No legal obligation rested upon plaintiff to cast his vote for appellant, and, appellant having been defeated, the court cannot declare him elected; nor are the circumstances such as to justify the ordering of a new election. Section 315, Civ. Code, provides that the court may "confirm the election, order a new one, or direct such other relief in the premises as accords with right and justice." It is true, as contended by appellant, that the power given the court by this section is an equitable one; but it is obvious that, if the plaintiff was legally elected, the court can only affirm his election; and if appellant was defeated through his effort to elect his daughter and Wells, as well as himself, the court cannot declare him elected; and, if not elected, neither the board that was elected, nor the court, can make him president, since only a director is eligible to the office of president. But appellant suggests that the purpose of the agreement might have been consummated by waiving an election, and thus continuing the old board of directors with its officers. But that was not done, nor agreed to be done. The election was held without objection, and appellant freely participated, and undertook to carry out the agreement by and through such election, and must be held bound by its results, unless he can show that the election was illegal. The legal right of a stockholder to vote his stock as he pleases cannot be questioned, but he may confer upon another stockholder the right to vote his stock by giving a written proxy for that purpose; but the court cannot compel him to do so, in the absence of an agreement upon or for a valuable consideration that he would give such proxy. But the agreement was one absolutely incapable of enforcement, otherwise than by abstaining from an election, since any board that could be elected must be at liberty to choose its president, and its choice cannot be controlled by the court. It is conceded by counsel for appellant that a director cannot obligate himself to vote in a certain way, and, this being so, the courts must be powerless to direct his vote; nor can we see any ground upon which the holding of an election could be enjoined, even if it had been agreed that none should be held, and, if it could not be enjoined, it cannot be vacated. But counsel say that "this is not an action to enforce the performance of a contract; that it is an effort to uphold an election against the attacks of respondent." But, as we have seen, the result of the election, as declared by appellant, was by the arbitrary exclusion of votes legally cast; and, if it is not an action to enforce the performance of a contract, the allegation of the agreement in the cross complaint and the finding of the fact are wholly immaterial. That appellant loaned $2,400 to Garretson upon his promissory note, secured by a pledge of stock of that value, and that a mortgage was given by the corporation to aid him and respondent in the purchase of their stock, are not made the grounds of complaint because of any insufficiency of the security, but seem to be stated as constituting a consideration for the agreement. The stock sold, however, was not that of appellant. He parted with no stock. He simply took less than he intended to buy, and let the remainder be sold to plaintiff and Garretson. Whether, under these circumstances, there was any valuable consideration for the agreement, such as is necessary to authorize a specific performance, may well be questioned.

The question as to the statute of frauds is unimportant. As we have seen, appellant could not control respondent's stock, or any not owned by himself, otherwise than by a written proxy, (unless transferred to him upon the books,) and this by force of the statute regulating elections by corporations. The alleged performance of the agreement by appellant could not give him the control of stock not held by him, nor authorize him to reject votes based upon it, whether the contract was one that might be wholly performed within a year or not. The court found that the performance of this agreement was necessary for the protection of appellant, but no facts are alleged from which such conclusion could be drawn, unless it be the loss of $125 per month, which seems not to have been based upon services to be rendered, but which was to continue as long as he retained an interest in the corporation. Such agreement is void. It may be that appellant will suffer wrong and injustice, but the mere apprehension of it will not justify the court in granting the relief here demanded, or any other relief under the facts now existing. We cannot assume that plaintiff, and those acting with him upon the board, will not properly conduct the business of the corporation, or injuriously affect the interests of appellant as a stockholder. When they do so, or threaten to do so, a court of equity will hear his complaint. I think the judgment should be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C.; SEARLS, C.

McFARLAND and FITZGERALD, JJ. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

DE HAVEN, J. I concur in the judgment.

---

4 Cal. Unrep. 502

DIXON v. PLUNS. (No. 14,429.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 2, 1894.)

COSTS—ON APPEAL—REVERSAL IN PART.

On appeal from a judgment and order denying a new trial, where the court orders the submission set aside as to the appeal from the judgment, and the hearing thereon continued until further orders, but on the other appeal reverses the order denying new trial, appellant is entitled to his costs.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; Eugene R. Garber, Judge.

Action by Katie E. Dixon against William J. F. W. Pluns for damages for personal injuries. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. Reversed. See 31 Pac. 931; 33 Pac. 268. On motion to amend remittitur. Denied.

H. C. Firebaugh, for appellant. Nagle & Nagle, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The appeal in this case was taken from the judgment and order denying a motion for a new trial. After the case was submitted for decision, the court ordered the submission set aside as to the appeal from the judgment, and continued the hearing thereon until the further order of the court. The appeal from the order denying a motion for a new trial was successful, and that order was reversed, with certain directions to the trial court. The remittitur issued upon the judgment of reversal allowed costs of appeal to appellant. A motion is now made to recall the remittitur, and amend or modify the same by striking out that portion giving appellant his costs on appeal. The motion is denied. The order denying the motion for a new trial being reversed, the appellant is entitled to his costs on appeal, under rule 23 of this court.

101 Cal. 483

ANAHEIM UNION WATER CO. et al. v. PARKER et al. (No. 19,247.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 1, 1894.)

Action on Bond—Default by Corporate Officer—Extent of Liability — Evidence — Release of Sureties.

1. The sureties on an official bond are not liable for defaults committed by the principal before the execution of the bond, if this latter is not retrospective in its provisions.

2. A corporation cannot, as against the sureties on the bond of an officer thereof, apply payments made by the officer to the corporation, after the date of the bond, upon his indebtedness to the corporation prior thereto.

3. In an action on the bond of a corporate officer, required by the by-laws to turn in money as soon as collected by him, where it appears that he failed to turn in money collected six months before the execution of the bond, it is a question for the jury whether his default as to that amount did not occur before such execution.

4. Where, in an action on the bond of plaintiff's secretary, the complaint charged that he had a certain sum of money belonging to plaintiff, February 16, 1889, and thereafter, and before September 1, 1889, received from plaintiff certain other sums, of which he paid over a part, leaving due a certain balance on the date last named, evidence as to amounts received and paid in by him after that date were inadmissible.

5. The failure of the officers of plaintiff company to tell defendant sureties that the secretary had failed to pay over funds, though known to them, did not release them from liability on the bond, there being no actual intent to conceal or culpable negligence on their part.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Orange county; J. W. Towner, Judge.

Action by the Anaheim Union Water Company and others against one Parker and others. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Reversed.

W. T. Kendrick and Victor Montgomery, for appellants. Richard Melrose and Edwin A. Meserve, for respondents.

PATERSON, J. It would be necessary, if we were to state the facts upon which all the points made by appellants are based, practically to copy the statement on motion for a new trial, as there are 92 assignments of error and specifications of insufficiency of the evidence, based upon 65 pages of the record. With the exception of those hereinafter referred to, they are entirely without merit, although sufficiently plausible, as they are stated, to entail upon the court a great deal of unnecessary labor in passing upon them. Briefly stated, this is the case: The defendant Gardiner was secretary of the plaintiff (a corporation) from January 1, 1887, until February, 1891. On the 15th day of February, 1889, the defendants Kraemer and Parker as sureties, and Gardiner as principal, executed and delivered to plaintiff a bond for $1,000, conditioned as follows: "Whereas, the above-bound principal, J. S. Gardiner, was, at a meeting of the board of directors of the Anaheim Union Water Company, a corporation, held on the 2d day of February, 1889, duly elected to the office of secretary of said corporation, now, therefore, the condition of this obligation is such that if the said J. S. Gardiner shall well and faithfully perform all official duties now required of him by the by-laws of such corporation, and shall well and faithfully execute and perform all the duties of such office of secretary, as required by any law to be enacted by such corporation or its board of directors subsequently to the execution of this bond, then this obligation is to be void," etc. It is claimed by the plaintiff that, when this bond was executed, Gardiner held, of the moneys he had collected for the company, the sum of $880.37; that between the date of the execution of the bond and September 1, 1889, he held moneys of the plaintiff amounting to $16,073.52, including said $880.37; and that he paid in, during that period, $14,982.91, leaving a balance due the corporation of $1,091.61. Of this amount there is evidence tending to show that $1,000 was collected by Gardiner in August, 1889, on a note for that amount executed to one Beockman, but no record of the transaction appears in the books, except the order of the board authorizing the issuance of the note. Plaintiff recovered judgment in the court below against the sureties for $1,000 and costs of suit, and from that judgment, and an order denying their motion for a new trial, defendants have appealed.

The court gave to the jury the following instruction: "If you find from the evidence that defendant J. S. Gardiner, on the 16th day of February, 1889, had, or should have had, in his hands as secretary of plaintiff, any moneys of plaintiff, and that the subsequent deposits and payments made by him to plaintiff and the treasurer of plaintiff between said date and the 1st day of September, 1889, (not applied to the payment of other accounts, balances, and receipts,) equaled such amount so found in his hands on said date, then, and in that event, the court instructs you to add the amounts found in his hands February 16, 1889, to the amounts received by him as secretary of plaintiff between said 16th day of February, 1889, and September 1, 1889, and deduct from this total amount the amount of payments made by him to the plaintiff and plaintiff's treasurer, as shown by the evidence. The balance, if any, would be the balance in the hands of said Gardiner as secretary of plaintiff, and would be the amount owing by him to plaintiff on said date, and for which balance of said amount, the court instructs you, you will render a verdict for the plaintiff, unless you also find that the sum has been subsequently paid." This instruction was erroneous. It declared to the jury that the sureties were liable for all moneys collected by Gardiner, and not turned over to the company, prior to February 16, 1889, and assumes that he was not a defaulter in any sum prior to the time of the execution of the bond in suit. In this assumption the learned judge usurped the functions of the jury. It was for the latter to determine, upon all the circumstances of the case, whether Gardiner was a defaulter at the time the bond was executed; and, if he was, the sureties therein were not liable for his dereliction. Where a second bond is executed, the sureties are not liable for money converted by the officer prior to its execution, and the plaintiffs are bound to show a conversion after the execution of the bond sued upon. Williams v. State, 89 Ind. 570; Governor v. Robbins, 7 Ala. 82; Thompson v. Dickerson, 22 Iowa, 360. In the last case cited the court said: "This bond was not retrospective in its terms, and in such a case there can be no ground for claiming that it covered past delinquencies. * * * The money, as far as shown, was not, at the time, in fact in the principal's hands; and measuring the sureties' liability, as we are bound to do, by strict law, we cannot extend or alter the terms of their undertaking so as to cover past delinquencies." In Inhabitants of Rochester v. Randall, 105 Mass. 295, the court said: "The cause of action against him arose in 1862, when he rendered his account. * * * We cannot regard the defendants' bond as applying to it. * * * In Myers v. U. S., 1 McLean, 493, Fed. Cas. No. 9,996, it is said that it would be doing great injustice to a surety to hold him responsible for a default consummated before he became bound; and in Farrar v. U. S., 5 Pet. 373, it is said that the bond should be made retrospective in its language, if it is intended to cover past derelictions; and all the cases cited for the defendants sustain similar views." See, also, Potter v. Trustees, 11 Ill. App. 280; School Dist. v. McDonald, 39 Iowa, 564. In Board of Education v. Fonda, 77 N. Y. 358, the court said: "For any sum paid to a principal before the execution of a bond for official good conduct, there is but one ground on which the sureties can be held to answer, and that is that the principal still held the money in bank or otherwise. If still in his hands, he was, up to that time, bailee to the public; but, if he had become a debtor or defaulter thereto, his offense was already consummated." Farrar v. U. S., 5 Pet. 373. It was said there that, if it was meant to cover past deeds, the bond should have been made retrospective, and that the sureties had not undertaken against his past misconduct. In Vivian v. Otis, 24 Wis. 520, the court said: "For any moneys paid Otis prior to the execution of this bond, and in his hands at the commencement of the second term, the sureties therein became answerable to the county; but, if he had already appropriated to his own use any of those moneys, he had been guilty of a breach of duty; it was a past delinquency or default, for which they never became responsible. How does the fact that Otis was his own successor change the principle of law, or enlarge the liability of the sureties on the second bond? They did not undertake to make good any money which he had already misappropriated." In Buffalo Co. v. Van Sickle, 16 Neb. 363, 20 N. W. 261, the court said: "It is nowhere stated in the petition that the state treasurer, at any time during his said term covered by the bond sued on, had a dollar of the county money in his hands. * * * As I understand it, when it is sought to hold either securities or principal for moneys which the principal made default of within a certain term, although he may have made a report or an official statement which may estop him, either alone or with his sureties, to deny that he was chargeable with the moneys, it must be charged in the pleading directly, as a fact, that he had the money. Clearly, this must be so upon the theory of the above case, because we held that the sureties might deny that their principal had the money at the commencement of the term for which they were security, and that their liability would turn upon the proof of that fact, not upon the fact of their principal having stated, in a report or statement, that he had such an amount of the county's money in his hands; and, if it may be denied, and must be proved to enable the plaintiff to recover, it follows logically that it constitutes the material part of the cause of action to be alleged in the petition." In Paw Paw v. Eggleston, 25 Mich. 39, the court said: "Neither the principles involved in this case nor their proper application are in any way affected by the fact that the treasurer for the second year happened to be the same person who had held the office the year before." It will be found that there is not an entire agreement in the decided cases respecting the liabilities of sureties on second bonds; but the rule stated is deduced from the weight of authority, and is the more rational one.

It is claimed by respondents that it was shown conclusively that, the day after the giving of the bond, Gardiner had in his hands $880.37 belonging to the company; that thereafter $1,000 was paid to him for the company, the receipt of which is not shown on the books; that between February 15, 1889, and September 1, 1889, Gardiner frequently paid into the treasury of the company large sums of money, which must have been collected by him a long time prior thereto, and which was properly applied in payment of the first or oldest debt. It is true the record shows that Gardiner paid to the treasurer $718.78 more than he had received subsequent to February 16, and prior to September 1, 1889, so far as the books showed, but there is nothing to show the source from which these moneys were received. If they were, in fact, moneys collected by him prior to the execution of the bond, as claimed by the respondent, they would, to the extent stated,—$718.78,—have gone to pay off the prior indebtedness; and the same is true if they were taken from the private funds of Gardiner. This, however, would not cure the error of the instruction, which covers the whole amount of the defalcation. If the money referred to was actually collected subsequent to February 16, 1889, we cannot agree with respondent in his contention that the company, at least in the absence of direct instructions from the secretary to apply it to the prior indebtedness, could so appropriate the money, and render the defendant liable for the delinquency. The court, in allowing this, would be robbing Peter to pay Paul. In Porter v. Stanley, 47 Me. 515, it appeared that Stanley was collector of taxes for the years 1854, 1855, and 1856, and gave bonds with different sureties. As collector for the year 1854 he received moneys, and omitted to pay a portion of the same into the treasury. The selectmen appropriated, from moneys received on the assessments for the years 1855 and 1856, sufficient to balance the deficiency for the year 1854, without the request of Stanley, who nevertheless consented thereto. The court said: "The appropriations so made were manifestly inequitable, as respects the sureties, and, by the authorities cited for the plaintiffs, cannot be upheld. It is said in the opinion of the court in the case of U. S. v. January, 7 Cranch, 572: 'It will be generally admitted that moneys arising, due, and collected subsequently to the execution of the second bond cannot be applied to the discharge of the first bond without manifest injury to the surety in the second bond.'" See, also, Rogers v. State, 99 Ind. 224; Bryant v. Owen, 1 Kelly, 355. In Phipsburg v. Dickinson, 78 Me. 459, 7 Atl. 9, it was claimed that, it appearing that the collector had paid over, during the three years, more than he had collected on the assessment for the first year, the law presumes, in the absence of proof, that he performed his legal duty, and paid over all that he collected for that year. The court said: "But the legal presumption is just as strong as to each of the other years, and, as he could not legally appropriate, as against his sureties, what he received on one assessment in payment of what he received on another, the law will not apply the payments to the oldest debt." Speaking of presumptions in the absence of proof, the supreme court of Illinois, in Trustees v. Smith, 88 Ill. 185, said: "It is insisted that it is the presumption that the amount was then on hand at the expiration of the first term. We do not admit that. The defalcation is established, but the time at which it occurred—whether during the first term or subsequent to the reappointment—does not appear; and we do not see why it may not as well be presumed that the treasurer misappropriated the money during the time of his first term of office as during the time which elapsed after his reappointment." The question as to when the defalcation occurred is one of fact, to be determined by the jury upon all the circumstances of the case. In Bockenstedt v. Perkins, 73 Iowa, 25, 34 N. W. 488, the court held that evidence that a guardian had received money only six days previous to the giving of the bond was admissible, as tending to show, or raise a presumption, that he had it when the bond was executed. In the case at bar there is evidence tending to show that the $880.37 referred to was collected at least six months prior to the time of the execution of the bond. The by-laws required the secretary of the company to "keep an accurate record of the proceedings of such meetings, * * * receive and collect all moneys due or payable to the company, and pay the same to the treasurer forthwith, taking his receipt therefor." The jury might fairly have inferred, from this and all the circumstances, that he had converted the money to his own use prior to the giving of the bond; at least, we cannot say there is no evidence to induce such a conclusion. Cases cited in which the delinquent officers were public officials, and entitled to retain the moneys collected until the end of the term, are not in point. Here it was the duty of the secretary to turn the money over to the treasurer immediately, or within a reasonable time, at least, after he received it. The provision requiring the secretary to turn over the money forthwith was not an idle one, and the sureties had the right to assume that the board would enforce it. If it had been faithfully observed, the question in this case would never have arisen. In Street v. Laurens, 5 Rich. Eq. 251, the court said: "But admitting the construction of the decree of 1836 contended for on behalf of the appellants, and that the master was not ordered to invest this fund by that decree, this court is of the opinion that the master committed a default in not depositing the fund in bank, as required by the act of 1840; and, this default having been committed during those official terms for which Mrs. Laurens was his surety, she becomes, on that account, liable." We do not deem it necessary to indorse this proposition to the extent stated. A failure to pay over money to the treasurer forthwith, or at any other specific time, may be merely a breach of duty, not amounting to a default; but it is certainly an important element, in determining whether there has been a default, that there has been a long delay unaccounted for in the payment of the money, in violation of some statutory provision or by-law.

It is claimed by the appellants that the evidence does not support the verdict, and, as we understand the testimony of the experts and that of the plaintiff's treasurer, the secretary actually turned over to the plaintiff all of the moneys collected by him except $91.61. Assuming that he had in his hands, at the time of the execution of the bond, $880.37, he collected altogether "$15,073.52, and turned over $14.982.91, as shown by the books. This would leave a balance of $90.61, as stated before. But it is claimed that, as there is no record in the books of the Beockman check for $1,000, it is apparent that he failed to turn over $1,091.61. It is the fact, however, and not the condition of the books, which fixes the liability of these defendants. It is in evidence and undisputed, as we understand the record, that the check of Beockman was paid by the Bank of Anaheim, and credited to the account of the plaintiff. There is nothing to show that the secretary ever drew the money out. The $1,000 may still be on deposit in the bank. There is nothing to show the condition of the plaintiff's account at the bank. Furthermore, the secretary himself testified that, of the $1,152.40 receipted for by him on August 10, 1889, this identical $1,000 was a part. The defendants introduced a deposit tag for money deposited in the Bank of Anaheim, "by the Anaheim Union Water Company, per J. S. Gardiner, secretary, August 7, 1889," $1,000; and it was stipulated by counsel "that said tag was the original, showing the deposit of the Beockman check." Thereafter the treasurer was called in rebuttal, and testified, when shown said tag and his receipt for $1,152.40, of August 10th, that the $1,000 mentioned in the tag "was a portion of that receipt," and stated that, at the time the receipt was given, Dr. Gardiner handed him a piece of brown paper containing memoranda showing the several items which went to make up the $1,152.40 mentioned in the receipt. The court erred in admitting testimony as to the amounts actually received and paid in by Gardiner between September 1 and October 5, 1889. The complaint charges that the defendant Gardiner, as secretary, had in his hands $880.37 on the 16th day of February, 1889, the property of the plaintiff, and subsequently thereto, and prior to the 1st day of September, collected and received for plaintiff the sum of $15,193.15, aggregating the sum of $16,073.52, of which sum so received by him prior to said 1st day of September he turned over to plaintiff the total sum of $14,982.91, leaving a balance, on said 1st day of September, of $1,091.61. The inquiry, therefore, should have been confined to the period stated. The entries in the books made subsequent to September 1st might have been admissible in evidence to show how much was collected between the dates named, because the testimony shows that entries were made six months after the transactions; that the books did not balance; that the records were kept on loose papers, one entry of $14,000 having been made on the back of a photograph; and one of the witnesses testified that no one could tell from the books how much was received subsequent to February 16, 1889, and that the correct balance might be $1, or it might be $10,000. The records being in this condition, as stated before, the books may have been admissible as evidence of what had been collected prior to September 1st, but they were not admissible to show what was collected subsequently to that date.

We see no merit in any other exception. The exception to the refusal of the court to give instruction No. 11, which is the only one other than the one above referred to worthy of notice, is not well taken. The officers of the company may have had "reason to know and believe that the said Gardiner had failed in his duty to pay, in that he had failed to pay over the said sum to the treasurer of said company," and failed to communicate the fact to the sureties, yet, unless there was fraud,—an actual intent to conceal, or culpable negligence,—the sureties would not be released from their liability. Assurance Co. v. Thompson, 68 Cal. 208, 9 Pac. 1; Bostwick v. Van Voorhis, 91 N. Y. 357; Roper v. Trustees, 91 Ill. 519; Insurance Co. v. Mabbett, 18 Wis. 667; Railroad Co. v. Gow, 59 Ga. 694. The judgment and order are reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: HARRISON, J.; GAROUTTE, J.

---

101 Cal. 500

CHAPIN et al. v. BROWN. (No. 18,147.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 1, 1894.)

NOVATION—PARTNERSHIP—EVIDENCE TO ESTABLISH—ACCOUNTING—PARTIES.

1. The fact that a firm, which had contracted with one of its members to deliver him lumber, continued to deliver after such member had assigned part of his interest in the contract, does not show that the firm consented to accept the assignee for part of the assignor's obligation.

2. In an accounting on a contract between a firm and one of its members, one to whom such member had assigned part of his interest in the contract without the consent of the firm is not a necessary party.

3. Evidence that four persons associated themselves together to divide the profits arising from the carrying on of a certain business is sufficient to support a finding of a partnership between them.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county; M. K. Harris, Judge.

Action by J. E. Chapin and others against Albert Brown to dissolve a copartnership, and to compel an accounting between its members. From a judgment rendered, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial, defendant appeals. Reversed.

R. P. Davidson, for appellant. J. R. Webb and L. L. Cory, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. On August 15, 1887, the plaintiffs and the defendant were copartners, doing business in the firm name of Sugar

Pine Mill & Lumber Company. Their business was that of manufacturing and selling lumber. They owned 160 acres of timber land, upon or near which they had built a sawmill. On August 15, 1887, a written contract between the copartnership and two of its individual members, namely, Chapin and the defendant, Brown, was executed, by which the copartnership agreed to sell to Chapin and Brown, and the latter agreed to purchase, all the lumber to be sawed from the timber then standing or fallen on the said 160 acres of land, "or that may be sawed in the mill of the said parties of the first part [the copartnership] from other claims before finishing sawing the timber from the above-described claim," (the 160 acres,) at the price of $9 per thousand feet, to be delivered in the mill yard. The parties of the first part further agreed that after the year 1887 they would deliver, as aforesaid, "an annual amount of one million feet or more, at the option of the said second parties." The agreement contains other stipulations not relevant to the issues in this case. On the same day (August 15, 1887) another agreement was executed between the copartnership and two others of its members, namely, T. E. Peckinpagh and Charles Peckinpagh, by which the latter agreed to cut, haul, and saw into lumber all the timber on said 160 acres of land, and to stack the lumber in said mill yard, for which they were to be paid $6 per thousand feet. As to the amount of lumber to be sawed they agreed to be governed by the above-mentioned contract with Chapin and Brown. For the purpose of performing this contract, they were to have the use of said mill, but were to keep it in repair. This contract also contains matters not material to this case. Chapin and Brown assumed to constitute a distinct copartnership, under the firm name of North Fork Lumber Company, and transacted the business under their contract with the Sugar Pine Mill & Lumber Company in that name; but at some time prior to January 1, 1888, Chapin assigned his interest in their contract with the Sugar Pine Mill & Lumber Company to Brown, who agreed with him to perform all its obligations, and withdrew from the North Fork Lumber Company. Brown continued the business under the contract, in the name of North Fork Lumber Company, until January, 1888, when he assigned an interest in the contract to John Bartram, and on May 1, 1888, assigned another interest to B. F. Ellis. After these assignments, Brown, Bartram, and Ellis constituted the North Fork Lumber Company, and conducted the business with the Sugar Pine Mill & Lumber Company under the lumber contract in that name. In the fall of 1888, T. E. and Charles Peckinpagh assigned their contract with the Sugar Pine Mill & Lumber Company, of August 15, 1887, (above set out,) to the North Fork Lumber Company. By the performance of this contract on the part of the Peckinpaghs, the North Fork Lumber Company became entitled to receive from the Sugar Pine Mill & Lumber Company $6 per thousand feet for manufacturing the lumber which they were to purchase from the latter company at the price of $9 per thousand. From and after this assignment by the Peckinpaghs, Charles Peckinpagh was employed by the North Fork Lumber Company, at a salary, to do the sawing, and he continued in that position during the years 1890 and 1891. The object of this action is to dissolve the Sugar Pine Mill & Lumber Company, to compel an accounting between its members, and especially between the copartnership and the defendant, who, it is alleged, owes the concern a balance of $3,090 for lumber delivered to the North Fork Lumber Company during the year 1890, under the contract first above mentioned, called the "purchasing contract." The court found him to be individually responsible on that contract, and that he was indebted on that account to the other members of the company as follows: To Charles Peckinpagh, $427.45; to T. E. Peckinpagh, $471.85; to J. E. Chapin, $483.80,—amounting to $1,383.18; and consequently that he was indebted to the copartnership (of which he was an equal member) in the sum of $1,844.14. The judgment was in accordance with this finding. The defendant appeals from the judgment, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

1. The appellant contends that there was a novation of the purchasing contract by which the assignees of portions thereof were substituted for the original contractors (Brown and Chapin) by consent of the Sugar Pine Mill & Lumber Company, and therefore that appellant is not individually liable, as found by the court. It is not claimed, however, that there was any evidence of such novation, or consent thereto, by the Sugar Pine Mill & Lumber Company, other than the facts that the lumber was delivered to and paid for (so far as payments were made) by the North Fork Lumber Company, as constituted at the time of such delivery and payments. Brown never assigned all his interest in the purchasing contract, but remained a member of the North Fork Lumber Company during all its transactions with the Sugar Pine Mill & Lumber Company. Nor is there any evidence that the latter company ever agreed or consented to discharge him or Chapin from their obligation on that contract, or to accept Bartram or Ellis in their stead for any part of such obligation. No objection on the ground of misjoinder or nonjoinder of parties to the action was made by demurrer or answer, or otherwise, in the court below, nor is any point made here on this ground. All the parties to the purchasing contract, and all the members of the Sugar Pine Mill & Lumber Company, were before the court, and, as there is no novation of that contract, neither Bartram nor Ellis was a necessary party to the accounting. The state of accounts between the members of the North Fork Lumber Company is immaterial for any purpose of this action.

2. The only other point requiring special consideration arises on the following additional facts: During the year 1890, while Charles Peckinpagh was doing the sawing for the North Fork Lumber Company, as aforesaid, he and a Mrs. Bearden sold and delivered to the North Fork Lumber Company a lot of logs cut from other lands than the 160 acres belonging to the Sugar Pine Mill & Lumber Company, and to which the latter company held no title. These logs were sawed by Charles Peckinpagh during 1890, while employed by the North Fork Lumber Company, as aforesaid, and produced 683,923 feet of lumber, which was in the mill yard, and thence removed by the North Fork Lumber Company. The evidence tends to prove that these logs were sawed with the knowledge and consent of the plaintiffs, and with an understanding between plaintiffs and the North Fork Lumber Company that the latter were to pay the former, for the use of their mill in sawing those logs, only 50 cents per thousand. C. M. Peckinpagh testified that he and Mrs. Bearden sold those logs to the North Fork Lumber Company; that he, as an employe of the North Fork Lumber Company, sawed them; that he had a conversation with the North Fork Lumber Company with reference to the use of the mill to saw those logs; that he came to an understanding with them as to the price,—50 cents per thousand, —which was his own proposal, and that he considered 50 cents per thousand a fair price for the use of the mill. Chapin testified that he knew the North Fork Lumber Company were sawing the Bearden logs during the summer of 1890, and made no objection to their sawing those outside logs; and there is no evidence tending to prove that T. E. Peckinpagh did not know and acquiesce in that understanding between his brother and the North Fork Lumber Company, nor any evidence that the use of the mill in sawing those logs was worth more than 50 cents per thousand. Yet it appears that a considerable portion, if not all, of the lumber manufactured from those logs, must have entered into the estimate of the 1,030,000 feet alleged and found to have been sold and delivered to defendant under the purchasing contract of August 15, 1887, and charged to defendant at the rate of $3 per thousand, after deducting $6 per thousand for the sawing which was done by the North Fork Lumber Company. The appellant contends that the lumber produced from those logs purchased by the North Fork Lumber Company from the plaintiff Peckinpagh never was the property of the Sugar Pine Mill & Lumber Company, and therefore could not have been delivered as such to the defendant or the North Fork Lumber Company under the contract of August 15, 1887; and that the Sugar Pine Mill & Lumber Company were entitled to charge only for the use of the mill in sawing the logs so purchased by the North Fork Lumber Company at the rate of 50 cents per thousand, and not $3 per thousand, as per contract of 1887; and in this contention we think the appellant is clearly right.

It was stipulated at the trial that a certain written statement of the accounts between the Sugar Pine Mill & Lumber Company and the North Fork Lumber Company for the years 1890 and 1891 is correct. This account shows the amount of lumber sawed from the logs purchased by the North Fork Lumber Company during the year 1890 to have been 683,923 feet, and that the amount sawed from logs furnished by the Sugar Pine Mill & Lumber Company during 1890 and 1891 was only 735,121 feet, and also shows the amount of money paid by the North Fork Lumber Company to the Sugar Pine Mill & Lumber Company during those two years. The use of the mill in sawing the logs purchased by the North Fork Lumber Company would amount to nearly $342, and the lumber sawed from logs furnished by the Sugar Pine Mill & Lumber Company, at $3 per thousand, would amount to about $2,205.35; so that the whole amount properly chargeable to the North Fork Lumber Company would appear to be $2,547.35, to one-fourth part of which the defendant is entitled as the owner of one-fourth interest in the Sugar Pine Mill & Lumber Company, deducting which, the other partners (the plaintiffs) would be entitled to recover from defendant only $1,190.52. But said statement of accounts shows that during the years 1890 and 1891 the North Fork Lumber Company paid to the plaintiffs $1,313.63, leaving, according to the above calculation, a balance of only $596.89 due them; yet the judgment in their favor against the defendant is for $1,383.18. The statement of accounts, however, contains an interest account not carried into the above, which may change the result in favor of the plaintiffs, perhaps, to the extent of $50. Although it is stipulated that said statement is correct, yet it is not in a perspicuous form, and may not lead to a correct conclusion; but it is quite explicit as to the amount of lumber sawed in 1890 and 1891, and states the whole amount sawed in those two years to have been 1,419,044 feet, of which 683,923 feet were sawed from the logs purchased by the North Fork Lumber Company; and the testimony of the Peckinpaghs is that those logs were sawed in 1890, in which year the court finds that the Sugar Pine Mill & Lumber Company sold and delivered to defendant 1,030,000 feet of lumber "in accordance with and by virtue of said contract," (of August, 1887,) and that, during the year 1891, it sold and delivered to defendant, under said contract, 389,044 feet; thus finding that all the lumber manufactured at the mill during 1890 and 1891, (1,419,044 feet,) including that sawed from the logs of the North Fork Lumber Company, was sold and delivered to defendant under said contract of August 15, 1887, at $9 per thousand, but crediting the North Fork Lumber Company $6 per thousand for cutting the logs and sawing them under the Peckinpagh contract, which had been assigned to the North Fork Lumber Company. It therefore appears, from the stipulated statement of accounts and findings of the court, that the defendant was charged $3 per thousand for all the lumber manufactured from the logs purchased by the North Fork Lumber Company, whereas he should have been charged only for the use of the mill in sawing those logs at the rate of 50 cents per thousand. This is the only error shown by the record. The evidence was sufficient to justify the finding that the Sugar Pine Mill & Lumber Company is a partnership. It shows that company to be an association of four persons for the purpose of carrying on business together, and dividing the profits between them. Civ. Code, § 2395. Moreover, Mr. Chapin, in his testimony, designated the members of the company as partners, and there is no evidence to the contrary. The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

---

101 Cal. 532

LE MESNAGER et al. v. HAMILTON et ux.

(No. 14,903.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 3, 1894.)

Mortgage by Married Woman—Sufficiency of Acknowledgment—Evidence—Review on Appeal—Objections not Raised Below.

1. Under Civ. Code, § 1187, providing that a married woman's conveyance shall not be valid unless acknowledged on an examination without the hearing of the husband, and section 1093, providing that, unless so acknowledged, no estate in a married woman's lands shall pass, the certificate of acknowledgment is not conclusive, but may be impeached by parol evidence that she never appeared before the officer certifying thereto.

2. In an action to foreclose a mortgage, where the defense is that one of the mortgagors, a married woman, never appeared before the officer who certified to her acknowledgment thereof, she need not prove bad faith on the part of the mortgagee, or that he had notice of the falsity of the certificate.

3. Though the complaint alleged that defendant executed and delivered the mortgage, and the answer denied that she "executed" it, the failure to use the word "delivery" is not a failure to deny the "delivery" alleged; the word "execute," in its ordinary sense, importing delivery, and there being nothing in the answer to indicate that it was used in a restricted sense. Beatty, C. J., and McFarland, J., dissenting.

4. The objection that parol testimony was inadmissible to impeach the certificate of acknowledgment on the ground that the answer failed to deny delivery of the mortgage cannot be raised for the first time on appeal.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; Walter Van Dyke, Judge.

Action by Le Mesnager and others against Samuel Hamilton and Adelaide Hamilton, his wife. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying a new trial, defendant Adelaide Hamilton appeals. Reversed.

J. R. Dupuy, E. H. Bentley, and R. Dunnigan, for appellant. R. B. Carpenter, for respondents. Graves, O'Melveny & Shankland, for interveners.

DE HAVEN, J. The defendants, Samuel Hamilton and Adelaide E. Hamilton, were and are husband and wife, and this is an action to foreclose a mortgage alleged to have been executed by them on January 2, 1889, to secure a promissory note, also executed by them on the same day, for the sum of $7,000. The complaint contains a copy of the mortgage and of the certificate of acknowledgment attached thereto. The certificate is that of a notary public, and shows upon its face that the mortgage was duly acknowledged by the defendants upon the day of its date. The defendant Adelaide E. Hamilton filed an answer, in which she avers that the land described in the mortgage was and is her separate property, and in which she also denies that she ever executed or acknowledged the mortgage, and further "alleges that the statement in the certificate of said notary, appended to said pretended mortgage by said notary, reciting and stating that she * * * appeared before, or was in the presence of, said notary, * * * is untrue and false." The case was tried upon the issues thus presented, and resulted in a judgment for plaintiffs, in accordance with the demand of the complaint, and a decree of foreclosure directing the sale of the property mentioned in the mortgage to satisfy the amount adjudged to be due from defendants to plaintiffs on account of the note and mortgage. The defendant Adelaide E. Hamilton appeals.

Upon the trial of the action the appellant offered to prove that she never, in fact, appeared before the notary certifying to the acknowledgment attached to the mortgage, and that she did not acknowledge the mortgage, or know anything about its delivery to the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs objected to this evidence upon the general ground of irrelevancy, and particularly because "it made no difference whether the defendant Adelaide E. Hamilton was present and acknowledged the mortgage or not, as the certificate of said acknowledgment was conclusive." The objection was sustained, and the appellant was not permitted to prove the facts embraced in her offer. This ruling was clearly erroneous. At the date of the mortgage sought to be foreclosed, an acknowledgment was essential to the validity of a conveyance by a married woman. Section 1187 [1] of the Civil Code, as it then read, expressly declared that such a conveyance shall have no validity "until so acknowledged;" and section 1093 of the same Code also provided that "no estate in the real property of a married woman passes by any grant purporting to be executed or acknowledged by her unless the grant or instrument is acknowledged in the manner prescribed by sections 1186[2] and 1191."[3] Such being the law at the date of the mortgage in question, it is at once seen that the facts offered to be shown were material and relevant, and struck as directly at the existence of the mortgage as would an offer to show that the signatures thereto were forgeries; the acknowledgment of appellant being as necessary a part of the execution of the mortgage by her as her signature. The certificate of acknowledgment was not conclusive evidence of the fact of acknowledgment, and such a certificate may be impeached by parol evidence that the person named therein never, in fact, appeared before the officer certifying to the acknowledgment. In such a case the act of the officer is wholly void, and the certificate is nothing but a fabrication. Johnston v. Wallace, 53 Miss. 331; Pickens v. Knisely, 29 W. Va. 1, 11 S. E. 932; Donahue v. Mills, 41 Ark. 421; Meyer v. Gossett, 38 Ark. 377; Williamson v. Carskadden, 36 Ohio St. 664; Michener v. Cavender, 38 Pa. St. 334; Borland v. Walrath, 33 Iowa, 130. Of course, when it appears that a married woman has actually appeared before an officer for the purpose of acknowledging a conveyance, and has made some kind of an acknowledgment, the certificate of the officer in relation to the manner and terms, and as to the fact, of the acknowledgment, would be conclusive in favor of a purchaser in good faith, and who has relied upon the truth of the certificate.

---

[1] Civ. Code, § 1187, provides that a conveyance by a married woman has the same effect as if she were unmarried, and may be acknowledged in the same manner, except as mentioned in the last section; but such conveyance has no validity until so acknowledged.

The difference between such a case and one where the certificate is wholly void is very clearly pointed out by Campbell, J., in Johnston v. Wallace, 53 Miss. 331, in the following language: "When a married woman appears before an officer to acknowledge her deed, it is made, by law, his duty to inquire of her, separately and apart from her husband, as to her freedom from fear, threats, or compulsion of her husband in the execution of the deed; and it is his duty to decide upon this, and to certify the acknowledgment. His decision thus made, and duly certified, imports verity as to all persons acting on the faith of his official certificate in due form of law, and without any knowledge of any wrong or irregularity, or of any circumstance to excite inquiry, and point to such wrong or irregularity. The appearance of the person before him to acknowledge is the occasion for the performance of his duty by the officer; the proposal to acknowledge the deed before him is the circumstance which calls into exercise the legal power to examine as to the execution of the deed, and to decide the sufficiency of the statement made as to that; and then, in certifying, he is declaring his conclusion upon the fact he is called to decide. His official act, thus solemnly performed, must have sanctity, at least to the extent of being a safe reliance for every one who in good faith acts in the belief that it is true, as stated. But where the person never appeared before an officer to acknowledge the deed, but he falsely certifies that she did, his act is wholly without authority of law, and void in toto. All must be subject to the risk of an occasional forgery by officers authorized to take acknowledgments. Although liable to be deceived and imposed on by such an act, no one can claim that a married woman's estate should be divested by forgery; and when she did not in fact appear before the officer to acknowledge, although he may certify that she did, she may show she did not, for his act is wholly without authority, and she but rights herself, and wrongs no one, in proving the truth of the case, for no one can claim by virtue of a forgery." The cases of Banning v. Banning, 80 Cal. 274, 22 Pac. 210, and De Arnaz v. Escandon, 59 Cal. 486, cited by respondents, are not opposed to the principle declared in the case from which the foregoing quotation is made. In Banning v. Banning the wife acknowledged the deed through a telephone, and afterwards delivered the deed, apparently properly acknowledged, to the grantees, who were not shown to have had any notice of the manner in which the acknowledgment was taken. Under these circumstances, the court held that the certificate was conclusive, and that the married woman could not avoid her deed because of the fact that she did not personally appear in the actual presence of the officer certifying to the acknowledgment. That was all that was decided there, and that case is authority for nothing more. It is true that the court quotes with approval the following portion of section 538 of Jones on Mortgages: "As to statements of fact contained in a certificate of acknowledgment which is regular in form, such, for instance, as the fact that the grantor appeared and acknowledged the execution of the instrument, they can only be impeached for fraud. Evidence which is merely in contradiction of the facts certified to will not be received." This, however, was not necessary to be said in the decision of that case, and the attention of the court was not called to the particular question we are now discussing, and for that reason the language above quoted cannot be construed as an authoritative statement by the court of the law which governs a case like this. In De Arnaz v. Escandon, 59 Cal. 486, the facts were such as to bring it within the rule making the certificate of acknowledgment conclusive in favor of an innocent purchaser. In that case the wife actually appeared before the notary, and acknowledged the deed through an interpreter, and afterwards delivered the deed to the grantee, who had no notice of the matters relied upon to defeat the acknowledgment. The court held that upon that state of facts the certificate of the notary was conclusive of the facts which it recited. The cases of Heeter v. Glasgow, 79 Pa. St. 79; Cover v. Manaway, 115 Pa. St. 338, 8 Atl. 393; Manufacturing Co. v. Rook, 84 Pa. St. 442; and Baldwin v. Snowden, 11 Ohio St. 203,—also cited by plaintiffs,—were all cases in which the married woman had actually appeared before the acknowledging officer, and the attempt in each was to attack the certificate because of some defect in the manner of the acknowledgment; and neither of them can be considered as sustaining the proposition that a certificate cannot be impeached by evidence showing that the officer was entirely without authority to make it by reason of the fact that the person whose acknowledgment is certified never in fact appeared before the officer for that purpose. We think the distinction between the cases last referred to and the one at bar is a very broad one.

---

[2] Section 1186 provides that the acknowledgment of a married woman to an instrument purporting to be executed by her must not be taken, unless she is made acquainted by the officer with the contents of the instrument on an examination without the hearing of her husband; nor certified, unless she thereupon acknowledges to the officer that she executed the instrument, and that she does not wish to retract such execution.

[3] Section 1191 provides that the certificate of acknowledgment by a married woman must be substantially in the following form: "State of ——, County of —— ss.: On this —— day of ——, in the year ——, before me [here insert the name and quality of the officer] personally appeared ——, known to me [or proved to me on the oath of ——] to be the person whose name is subscribed to the within instrument, described as a married woman; and, upon an examination without the hearing of her husband, I made her acquainted with the contents of the instrument, and thereupon she acknowledged to me that she executed the same, and that she does not wish to retract such execution."

Nor was it necessary for the appellant to show, or offer to show, any fraud or bad faith upon the part of the mortgagee, or that he had notice of the falsity of the certificate. If the matters offered to be proven in this case are true, the appellant never executed the mortgage, and it has no more validity, as to her, than if her signature was forged thereto; and in such a case, if the wife has done nothing to estop her from showing the attempted fraud upon her rights, it is immaterial whether the persons claiming under the mortgage had notice of the matters affecting its validity or not. Their failure to ascertain that the mortgage was never in fact executed cannot be allowed to defeat the rights of appellant, if she was in fact without fault. The plaintiffs were not obliged to advance any money on the mortgage until after first satisfying themselves of its genuineness, and, if they failed to make the necessary inquiry, the loss is theirs, and not that of appellant. Edgerton v. Jones, 10 Minn. 427, (Gil. 341.)

It is also claimed by respondents that the answer of appellant admits that she delivered the mortgage to plaintiffs, and therefore that the error of the court, if any, in excluding the evidence referred to, is immaterial. The complaint alleges that defendants did "execute under their hands and seals, and deliver," the mortgage in suit; and appellant, in answering this particular allegation, denies that she executed the mortgage referred to, but does not supplement this with the further denial that she delivered it, thus negativing the precise language of the complaint. The plaintiffs contend that the failure to use the word "deliver" in the denial referred to was a failure to deny the delivery alleged; but we do not think so. The word "execute" when applied to a written instrument, unless the context indicates that in was used in a narrower sense, as in sections 1185, 1186, 1189, 1190, and 1191 of the Civil Code, imports the delivery of such instrument. Code Civ. Proc. § 1933; Joseph v. Dougherty, 60 Cal. 358; Clark v. Child, 66 Cal. 87, 4 Pac. 1058; Bagley v. McMickle, 9 Cal. 430. There is nothing in the answer to indicate that the word "execute" was there used in any restricted sense, and it must, therefore, be given its ordinary legal signification. The appellant denied that she executed the mortgage, and this put in issue the fact of the delivery, and every other fact necessary to its execution. The plaintiffs did not, in the language used by them, allege anything more than that the mortgage was executed; and, when this was denied, the allegation of the complaint upon this point, in its entire scope and meaning, was denied, notwithstanding the appellant did not see fit to notice the unnecessary verbiage contained in plaintiffs' complaint upon the subject of the delivery of the mortgage. But a complete answer to the contention of respondents on this point is that the objection to this offered evidence was not rested upon the ground that the answer admitted the delivery of the mortgage by appellant; nor is there anything in the record to suggest that the attention of the appellant was ever in any manner, during the trial in the court below, called to this alleged defect in her answer.

If it be assumed that the general objection to the effect that the offered testimony was "incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial," if it had stood alone, would have been sufficient to raise such a question,—a point which it is unnecessary to decide at this time,—still, such objection was obviously insufficient for that purpose, when the particular ground upon which it was claimed that such offered evidence was incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial was stated to be "for the reason that the certificate of the notary was conclusive as to all matters therein contained, and could not be contravened or contradicted by any oral testimony." There is certainly, in this statement, not even the most remote intimation that the offered evidence was then claimed to be inadmissible because of the failure of the answer to deny the delivery of the mortgage sued upon, and the respondents cannot successfully raise such an objection here for the first time. Judgment and order reversed.

We concur: FITZGERALD, J.; PATERSON, J.; HARRISON, J.; GAROUTTE, J.

McFARLAND, J. I concur in the judgment of reversal, because the objections to the evidence offered by appellant, and sustained by the court, were not based upon any defect in the denials of the answer. The objections, and ruling of the court, were made solely upon the broad ground that a notary's certificate of acknowledgment of a married woman is always, and under all conceivable circumstances, absolutely conclusive. Under this ruling the appellant, although she never appeared before the notary, and never knew that he had made a certificate of her acknowledgment, and although she never delivered the mortgage or knew of its delivery, or received any of the money, and never did any act of ratification whatever, would still be forever estopped by the certificate from showing the truth. This, in my opinion, is not the law. At the same time, I do not think that the delivery of the mortgage is denied in the answer. It is true that, in a general sense, "execution" may be said to include "delivery;" but it is quite frequently used in the limited sense of signing, and, where the law requires it, sealing, stamping, acknowledging, etc., a written instrument, so as to make it complete on its face and ready for delivery; and the sense in which it is used can generally be seen from the context. In the case at bar the complaint avers that the defendants "executed under their hands and seals, and delivered," the mortgage in question. Here "executed" was clearly used in the limited sense, and "delivered" intended as a distinct and additional averment. The answer denies that defendants "executed under their hands and seals," but either inadvertently or intentionally avoids any denial that they "delivered" the mortgage. Now, in answer to such an averment, a married woman might truthfully deny the execution in the sense as used in the complaint, if she believed that the acknowledgment was defective, while she might not be able at all to truthfully deny the delivery. And in the case at bar, as appellant refrained from denying the delivery, I apprehend that she could not be convicted on a prosecution for perjury, however clearly it might be proven that she did deliver the mortgage. But, as said before, the point was not made at the trial. If objection had been made to offered evidence on the ground that the answer did not deny the delivery, appellant would have been allowed to amend her pleading, if she was really prepared to deny such delivery.

BEATTY, C. J. I concur in the opinion of Justice McFARLAND.

CALIFORNIA REPORTER

36 PACIFIC REPORTER

CALIFORNIA REPORTER

36 PACIFIC REPORTER

---

101 Cal. 567

ABBOTT v. 76 LAND & WATER CO. (No. 18,117)

(Supreme Court of California. March 13, 1894.)

REVIEW ON APPEAL — CONFLICTING EVIDENCE — LEASE—OPTION TO BUY—EVIDENCE.

1. Findings will not be disturbed where the evidence is conflicting.

2. Defendant's circulars invited settlers on its lands to cultivate them with or without option to purchase. Its notices specified that the land was for sale or to rent. Its dealing with its tenants showed the practice of executing written leases either with or without option to purchase. Held that, there being no evidence of fraud or mistake, a written lease to plaintiff containing no option to purchase must be deemed to embody the final determination of the parties, and that no such option will be implied.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county; M. K. Harris, Judge.

Action by O. L. Abbott against the 76 Land & Water Company. From a judgment for defendant, and an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Thompson & Thompson, for appellant. W. S. Goodfellow, for respondent.

SEARLS, C. This is an action for the specific performance of an alleged contract to convey the E. ½ of section 31, in township 15 S. of range 24 E., Mt. D. B. and M., with certain appurtenant water rights, all situate in the county of Fresno. Defendant had judgment upon the findings of the court, from which judgment, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, plaintiff appeals.

It seems that five actions were brought by different persons against the same defendant, to enforce contracts for the conveyance of land under circumstances somewhat similar. In four of them the plaintiffs had judgment in the court below, which judgments were affirmed by this court. One of the four other cases was by this same plaintiff against the same defendant, and is reported in 87 Cal., at page 323, 25 Pac. 693. The allegations of the complaint in this case are, in substance, as stated in the report of that case, on pages 324 to 327, 87 Cal., and page 693, 25 Pac., and, being lengthy, will not be repeated here. The answer in the present case denies all the material allegations of the complaint upon which a right in the plaintiff, either legal or equitable, to purchase the land in question could be based. The court found that, on the 1st day of October, 1885, the plaintiff and defendant entered into the agreement set out in the complaint, marked "Exhibit A." This was a lease, or what may be termed a cropping contract, by which plaintiff was given possession of the land for one year, with the privilege of extending the term from year to year for two years, the plaintiff and defendant each to have a share of the crops. The lease varied from that under which the plaintiff held the land in Abbott v. Water Co., 87 Cal. 323, 25 Pac. 693, in one particular only. In the present case the lease gave to the tenant no option to purchase the land leased by him, while in that case it gave such option. The contract or lease was renewed on the 1st of October, 1886, for another year, upon the same terms as before, but including another 320 acres of land, and without any option of purchase being given to the plaintiff. The court further finds that there was never any oral agreement that plaintiff should purchase or have the option to purchase the land described in the complaint, and, without going into details, it may be said the findings are in favor of defendant, and negative all the facts relied upon by plaintiff as giving him a right, option, or privilege of buying the land.

Several of the findings are objected to as being unsupported by evidence, but a careful examination of the testimony shows that it involved a material conflict upon every fact assailed by appellant. There was testimony tending to show that plaintiff had leases for cropping purposes upon a large area of land, or had selected land of defendant for such purposes, and that, as a consequence, he did not desire an option to purchase the land described in the complaint. Be this as it may, the findings are not unsupported by evidence, and to analyze the objections in detail would subserve no useful purpose. The rule in cases of this character is stated in Boyd v. Brinckin, 55 Cal. 429, where Sharpstein, J., quotes from Pomeroy on Contracts, where it is said contracts of this kind are "created by representations made by one party, and acts done by the other party upon the faith of such representations. Where an absolute unconditional representation of something to be done in the future is made by one person, in order to accomplish a particular purpose, and the person to whom it is made, relying upon it, does the act by which the intended result is obtained, a contract is thereby concluded between the parties." In that case the Central Pacific Railroad Company had issued a circular, inviting settlers to locate upon its lands, promising that those who should do so should be preferred purchasers when the lands should be offered for sale. Plaintiff had settled upon the land, and offered to purchase in due time, was refused, and the court held the contract complete by the offer of the railroad company and acceptance of plaintiff. In the present case it is apparent from the testimony that defendant by its circulars invited settlers upon its land for the purposes of cultivation and improvement, as tenants, who should receive four-fifths of the crops, and turn over one-fifth thereof to defendant in lieu of rent, with or without the privilege of purchase, but with it if the tenants desired, or offered to sell outright, on a credit for a portion of the purchase price. Their notices specified that the land "was for sale or to rent in tracts to suit on easy terms. * * * Special inducements offered to renters. Terms for leasing, first year, * * * with privilege of buying. * * * To purchasers, the price of the land ranges from $15 to $35 per acre," etc. Their letterheads announced their lands as "for sale or lease on liberal terms, correspondence desired," etc.

I find nothing in defendant's circulars or notices to indicate a consent on its part that parties should locate upon its lands without first obtaining a lease or agreement authorizing them so to do. The whole course of dealing between defendant and its tenants indicates a steady adherence to the practice of executing written leases to all those who cultivated its lands, either with or without the option to purchase. This being so, and a written lease having in this case been executed, it must, in the absence of fraud or mistake, be deemed to embody the final determination of the parties. There is no inference of part performance of a verbal agreement to sell to plaintiff to be drawn from his possession and improvements under the lease, for that possession, and the improvements thereunder, are referable to his rights as a tenant. The findings negative all idea of fraud or mistake, and in such a case to raise an implication of an agreement or option in plaintiff to purchase would be to make for the parties an agreement which they did not make, and that, too, in the face of the statute of frauds. In the other case of Abbott v. This Defendant, cited supra, the original lease contained an option of purchase in favor of plaintiff, and it was only the renewal that omitted it, and that under circumstances sufficient to indicate that the option was to continue. The court in that case, in upholding plaintiff's right to purchase, may be said to have gone to the extreme limit of the rule under which a right to a specific performance of a contract to convey can be enforced in like cases. The judgment and order appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; VANCLIEF, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

COOPER et al. v. McCARTHY et al. (No. 19,264.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 28, 1894.)

Mortgages—Foreclosure—Attorney's Fees.

1. Where the mortgage secured the payment of principal and interest only, attorney's fees, for which the note provided, could not be made a lien on foreclosure. Clemens v. Luce (Cal.) 35 Pac. 1032, followed.

2. On foreclosure for default of an interest payment on the note, judgment could not include the attorney's fees, without proof that the mortgagee gave notice of his election to declare due the whole amount of the note, and demanded payment. Clemens v. Luce (Cal.) 35 Pac. 1032, followed.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; E. S. Torrance, Judge.

Action by Samuel Cooper and another against D. O. McCarthy and others. Judgment for plaintiffs. Defendants appeal. Modified.

Luce & McDonald, for appellants. Conklin & Hughes, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. On the authority of Clemens v. Luce (No. 19,234, this day decided, in department 1 of this court) 35 Pac. 1032, it is ordered that the judgment appealed from be modified by deducting therefrom the sum of $500, the amount of the attorney's fee therein allowed; and, as so modified, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

(4 Cal. Unrep. 503)

STEWART v. DUNLAP. (No. 18,183.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 2, 1894.)

Appeal—Review—Question not Raised Below.

A judgment in an action by the assignee of an insolvent will not be reversed on the ground, raised for the first time on appeal, that the complaint contained no averment showing that in the proceedings for plaintiff's appointment a copy of the petition filed by creditors was served on the insolvent, as required by statute, the record being silent on the subject.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Colusa county; E. A. Bridgford, Judge.

Trover by Malcolm Stewart, assignee of the estate of W. C. Baber, an insolvent debtor, against Herman Dunlap. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. Affirmed.

John T. Harrington, for appellant. W. G. Dyas and U. W. Brown, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. The plaintiff, as assignee of the estate of one W. C. Baber, an insolvent debtor, brought this action to recover the value of certain personal property alleged to have belonged to the said estate, and to have been converted by defendant to his own use. To show plaintiff's authority to sue, it is averred in the complaint that certain creditors of said Baber duly filed a petition in involuntary insolvency against him, and that upon the filing of the petition the court made an order that he appear at a time and place named, and show cause why he should not be adjudged an insolvent debtor, as prayed for in the petition, and that on the next day he was duly and personally served with a copy of the said order; that thereafter the court duly made and caused to be entered its order adjudging him to be, and to have been at the time of filing the petition, an insolvent debtor, and requiring him to file in court the schedule and inventory provided for in the insolvent act; that thereafter the insolvent filed the schedule and inventory, and thereupon the court made an order appointing the time and place for the meeting of the creditors to prove their debts, and choose one or more assignees of the estate; that thereafter, at the time and place appointed, the plaintiff was duly elected by the creditors assignee of the estate, and duly qualified as such, and afterwards the clerk of the court duly assigned and conveyed to him all the estate, real and personal, of said insolvent. No demurrer to the complaint was interposed, and the answer denied none of the averments above referred to. The case was tried by the court, and judgment given for the plaintiff, from which the defendant appeals on the judgment roll.

The only point made for a reversal is that it does not appear that the court ever acquired jurisdiction of the insolvent in the insolvency proceedings, for the reason that the complaint contains no averment showing that a copy of the petition filed by the creditors was served upon him, with a copy of the order to show cause, as required by section 10 of the insolvent act. This point is apparently made here for the first time, and a sufficient answer to it is that it does not appear that a copy of the petition was not served on the insolvent,—the record is simply silent on the subject,—and it does appear that he appeared and filed his schedule and inventory, and thereby voluntarily submitted himself to the jurisdiction of the court, and that the court duly adjudged him to be an insolvent debtor, and the clerk duly assigned and conveyed to the plaintiff all of his estate. The law presumes that a court or judge, acting as such, was acting in the lawful exercise of his jurisdiction. Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 16. Under the circumstances shown, it is too late to raise the question of the jurisdiction of the court here. The judgment should be affirmed.

We concur: TEMPLE, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

(4 Cal. Unrep. 505)

PEOPLE v. STRYBE et al. (No. 21,046.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 3, 1894.)

HOMICIDE—ACCOMPLICE—CONFESSIONS — INSTRUCTIONS.

1. On a murder trial, the court, on evidence fully authorizing it, submitted to the jury the question as to whether or not a certain witness for the state was an accomplice. The only corroborative evidence was given by the wife of such witness, who testified to certain oral confessions. Held, that it was error to refuse to charge that the testimony of an accomplice ought to be viewed with distrust, and the evidence of the oral admissions of defendants ought to be viewed with caution, under Code Civ. Proc. § 2061, which directs such instructions to be given "on all proper occasions."

2. It was also error to refuse to charge that, if the jury found such witness to be an accomplice, and did not believe the evidence of his wife, then there was no corroborating evidence of the accomplice, and it was their duty to acquit.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county; Matt. F. Johnson, Judge.

Manuel Strybe and Richard Strybe were jointly convicted of murder, and they appeal. Reversed.

Hiram W. Johnson and Johnson & Johnson, for appellants. Frank D. Ryan, Dist. Atty., and W. H. Hart, Atty. Gen., for the People.

BELCHER, C. The defendants were jointly charged by information with the murder of one A. G. Damon, in the county of Sacramento, on the —— day of March, 1888. The information was filed April 15, 1893, and the trial thereafter resulted in a verdict against both defendants of guilty of murder in the second degree, and in a judgment that they be imprisoned in the state prison at Folsom for the term of 30 years. From this judgment, and from an order denying their motion for a new trial, they have appealed.

The theory of the prosecution at the trial was that on the evening of March 6, 1888, Damon went into a disreputable house, known as the "Mobile House," situate at the southeast corner of Second street and the alley between L and M streets, in the city of Sacramento; that defendants were also in the house, and that, with the intent to rob Damon of his money, and with the aid of one Kate Cooper, who was with them, they induced him to drink some whisky, in which they had put a large quantity of morphine, and that the drinking of it caused his death. It was proved that, about 5 o'clock in the afternoon of the day named, Damon went to the Western House and ate his supper, and then went down to the corner of Second and K streets and took a cigar; that after standing there four or five minutes he walked down Second street, and turned into the Mobile House, and that he then appeared to be sober, and had in his possession about $200 in money; that a little after 8 o'clock in the same evening he was found groaning and in an unconscious condition, lying on the north side of the alley, about opposite the rear end of the Mobile House, and that he was then removed to the station house, and shortly thereafter died; that, when found, the only valuables about him were two silver dollars, a pair of spectacles, and a silver or plated watch; that a physician was called to see him at the station house, who testified that he found him lying in an unconscious condition, breathing heavily, and from his breathing and general appearance suspected poisoning; that in his opinion he was suffering from narcotic poisoning,—that is, some poison that produces insensibility, like opium or morphine; that on the next day a post mortem examination was made by the physician of the county hospital, who testified: "I examined all the principal vital organs. The cause of death was not determined by the autopsy. There was evidence of overfullness of the vessels of the brain. There was some evidence of disease in the lungs. Further than that, the organs were normal. The brain was found to be very much charged with blood. The purpose of the examination was to determine the cause of death. The cause of death was not determined by my report. It is possible that some narcotic drug caused death. It would be merely a surmise to say that the conditions that I found would lead to that conclusion. There was no positive evidence as to what was the cause of death. I made no examination of the stomach or its contents. * * * I arrived at no conclusion as to the cause of death."

To connect the defendants with the commission of the offense charged, the prosecution then called as a witness one Richard Reed, whose testimony, briefly stated, was in substance as follows: He had lived in Sacramento thirteen years, and had known defendants six or seven years, and had been familiar and running with them for a year or more prior to March 6, 1889. Knew Kate Cooper and Mollie Jones, and was familiar with the Mobile House. It was kept by Mollie Jones prior to March 6th, but she was then in jail, and Kate Cooper and Manuel Strybe were then living in it. It had four rooms, the front room opening on Second street, and the rear room having an entrance from the alley. About 5 o'clock on March 6th he went through the alley into the rear room without knocking, as he was accustomed to do, and found the two defendants sitting there at a table. Kate Cooper came in, and says: "We've got a sucker. He's got stuff." One of defendants said: "We are going to have it. Give him some whisky and morphine." Dick said: "Where are we going to get the morphine?" Manuel said: "It is in Mollie's bureau drawer." Kate said she would get the whisky, and she and Manuel went out, and shortly returned. She poured out two glasses of whisky, and he put in some morphine. She then took a tray, and, with the two glasses of whisky on it, went out of the room, and that was the last the witness saw of her for a day or two. He remained ten or fifteen minutes, and then went away. He met defendants at the corner of Second and K streets between 8 and half-past 8, and said, "What did you do, boys?" and one of them spoke up, "We doped him and drug him out in the alley, and left him." A few days later, witness had a conversation with Manuel. "He came and told me to go down under the cellar, and there was some cash buried there. I was to dig down and find two handkerchiefs. One had about $150, and the other about $100. I went there and made an examination, but I didn't find the money. He told me he went there a few days after, and found a handkerchief that contained the $100. He said the officers got away with the other." The witness knew that Damon was found in the alley and died, but never told any one what he knew about the matter until the fall of 1892. Then he had a falling out with defendants, and said: "I told him if he bothered me any more I would kill him." "I told Manuel he must recollect I knew something about the Mobile case. He says: 'Hell! you are as deep in the mire as we are in the mud.'" "The row I had with them was in Green's saloon. I might have said then: 'You son of a bitch, I will fix you.'" "After I had a falling out with them, I met Officer Gibson, and he wanted me to tell him about this matter, and I said 'No,' that I wouldn't say anything about it. Finally, I agreed to tell him, provided I could see the city attorney and the district attorney, so that I could be all right. I did not say a word before they promised that they would not prosecute me. I made an agreement first that I should not be prosecuted."

The only testimony introduced to corroborate the testimony of Reed was that of his wife, Helen Reed. She testified that in March, 1888, she was living with her husband in the Colusa House, in Sacramento, and had three rooms; that she knew the defendants, and remembered the occasion of Damon being found in the alley; that between 7 and 8 o'clock on that night defendants came to her house and asked for her husband, and she told them he was out, but would be in soon, and to come in and sit down; that they remained about ten minutes in the front room, and she was sitting six or eight feet from them in the same room; that they were talking between themselves, and she could hear them; that the first thing said was, Robert asked, "Where is he?" and Manuel replied, "The old stiff is in the alley," and Robert then asked about the money, and Manuel said, "It is all right." On cross-examination the witness testified: "Never had any conversation with my husband about it. Never told him anything about what I overheard. Never asked him what it meant. I knew, when the papers came out, about the killing of Damon. I understood then what it meant. * * * Never spoke a word to him about it. Lived with him as his wife ever since, continuously to the present time, and have never spoken to him about what I overheard. * * * I never talked to my husband on this subject at all. I know Mollie Jones. I told her I didn't know anything about this case, and I didn't want to know anything about it. I was talking then. I was not sworn. I tell a person anything. * * * It never occurred to me that I ought to notify the authorities about what occurred that night. I have never thought of what was said that night in 1888, until I have taken the stand here."

For the defense, 12 witnesses were called, and testified that they knew the reputation of Richard Reed for truth, honesty, and integrity, and that it was bad; and their testimony in this regard was in no way contradicted. It was proved by two police officers that shortly after the death of Damon they separately asked Reed if he knew anything about the matter, and he said he did not. It was also proved that after he had the falling out with the defendants in September, 1892, he said to one witness, speaking of them, "Those sons of bitches, I will have them in jail in twenty-four hours;" and to another witness he said, "They were a couple of sons of bitches that he was going to do up; that he was going to job them, and, if he could not do anything else, he would run them out of town." It was further shown that his testimony given at the preliminary examination was in many respects different from and contradictory of that given at the trial.

The defendant Richard was called as a witness in his own behalf, and denied that he was in Sacramento at the time of the alleged murder, or that he had anything to do with it, or knew anything about it, and said that he was in Davisville, Yolo county, at the time named; and in this he was supported by the testimony of his two brothers, Manuel and Stephen. The defendant Manuel was also called as a witness, and denied all the statements made by Reed; and he said: "Neither I alone, nor my brother and myself, called at Mrs. Reed's or Mr. Reed's house the night of the 6th of March, or had any conversation of any kind in that house then. Never at any time did we have any conversation about carrying a stiff in the alley, or about money. * * * I was not with Richard Reed that day or evening at all."

It is earnestly contended for appellants that, looking at all the evidence, a verdict of guilty was clearly not warranted, and also that numerous errors of law were committed by the court in its rulings upon the admission of evidence, which call for a reversal; but we do not deem it necessary to notice these points particularly. The court, of its own motion, instructed the jury at great length, and, among other things, told them that it was for them to determine whether or not Richard Reed was an accomplice; that to be an accomplice it was not necessary to actually participate in the crime; and that a conviction could not be had on the testimony of an accomplice, unless he was corroborated by other evidence, etc. The defendants asked and the court refused to give the following instructions: "I instruct you that the testimony of an accomplice ought to be viewed with distrust, and the evidence of the oral admissions of the defendants in this case ought to be viewed with caution." "I instruct you that if you find the witness Richard Reed to be an accomplice, and you do not believe the evidence of the witness Mrs. Richard Reed, then there is no corroborating evidence of the accomplice in this case, and it is your duty to acquit the defendants." In view of the testimony, these instructions, we think, should have been given. The first is substantially in the language of section 2061, subd. 4, of the Code of Civil Procedure, which directs that the jury are to be so "instructed by the court on all proper occasions;" and in People v. Bonney, 98 Cal. 278, 33 Pac. 98, the refusal to give such an instruction was held to be error. It is objected for the people that this was not a proper occasion for giving the instruction, because it was not proved that Reed was an accomplice; but the court expressly submitted to the jury the question of whether he was an accomplice or not, and the evidence was fully sufficient to authorize such a submission. "An accomplice is defined to be one who is in some way concerned in the commission of a crime, though not as a principal; and this includes all persons who have been concerned in its commission, whether they are considered, in strict legal propriety, as principals in the first or second degree, or merely as accessories before or after the fact." Cross v. People, 47 Ill. 152. The second instruction referred to stated the law correctly, and it was proper, under the circumstances shown, that such an instruction should be asked and given. The judgment and order should be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: SEARLS, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order are reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

(101 Cal. 542)

AUZERAIS et al. v. SUPERIOR COURT.

(No. 15,499.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 3, 1894.)

Judgment after Appeal—Remedies.

Where the trial court makes an order and finding in a case after an appeal, a petition to annul the same will be dismissed, as the petitioners have adequate remedy by presenting the findings as a part of the record on that appeal.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county; Matt. F. Johnson, Judge.

Petition by Auzerais et al. to have order and finding of superior court of Sacramento county annulled. Denied.

Johnson, Johnson & Johnson, for appellant. McKune & George, A. C. Freeman, and L. T. Hatfield, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. The petitioners seek by this proceeding to annul a certain order and finding made by the superior court of the county of Sacramento on July 29, 1893, in a certain proceeding then or before then pending in that court in the Matter of the Estate of Lewellyn Williams, deceased. The ground of the application is that the superior court was at the time without jurisdiction to make such an order and additional finding, because the cause in which it was made was then pending in this court on appeal. Conceding this to be so, the petitioners have a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in due course of law when the additional finding is presented here as a part of the record on that appeal. If the superior court was without authority to make the finding complained of, such finding will be entirely disregarded as a part of the record on the appeal referred to. The proceeding is dismissed.

(4 Cal. Unrep. 511)

In re WILLIAMS' ESTATE. (No. 18,247.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 3, 1894.)

Appeal—Dismissal—Striking Out Record.

1. A motion to dismiss appeals involving an inquiry into the merits will not be considered.

2. A motion to strike from the records a certain order and findings will not be considered until final hearing.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county; Matt. F. Johnson, Judge.

In re estate of Williams. Motions by respondents to dismiss appeals and strike matter from record. Denied.

Johnson, Johnson & Johnson, for appellants. McKune & George and L. T. Hatfield, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. The respondents have moved to dismiss the appeals in this case upon the ground that the appellants are not persons aggrieved by the order and decree appealed from. The determination of this motion involves an inquiry as to the merits of the case, and must, for that reason, be denied at this time.

Respondents have also moved to strike from the transcript, and disregard, a certain order and additional finding made July 29, 1893, on the ground that the same is not part of the record. The motion is premature. The question attempted to be presented by the motion is one which, if necessary to the decision of the case, will be considered in the final decision of the case. This motion will, therefore, be denied. The application to amend the record, in accordance with the certificate of the clerk accompanying the application, is granted.

(101 Cal. 529)

FAIRBANKS v. LAMPKIN. (No. 15,372.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 3, 1894.)

School Lands—Right to Purchase—False Affidavit.

Under Pol. Code, § 3500, providing that any false statement in the affidavit, required by section 3495, of an applicant to purchase school lands, defeats his right to purchase the land, a statement that the six quarter sections included in his application are suitable for cultivation, though false as to two, does not defeat his right to purchase the remaining four.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Mendocino county; R. McGarvey, Judge.

Action by Lewis H. Fairbanks against W. P. Lampkin. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. Affirmed.

T. L. Carothers and J. H. Seawell, for appellant. J. A. Cooper and J. M. Mannon, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. This is an action brought to determine a contest arising in the office of the surveyor general of the state of California as to the right of the respondent Fairbanks or the appellant Lampkin to purchase state school lands described as follows: The S. E. ¼ and E. ½ of S. W. ¼ of section 16, township 11 N., range 15 W., Mt. Diablo meridian. The cause was tried and judgment rendered, which decreed that the plaintiff was entitled to purchase from the state of California the E. ½ of S. E. ¼, the S. W. ¼ of S. E. ¼, and S. E. ¼ of S. W. ¼ of said section, and that a certificate of purchase issue to him for said land, and that neither party was entitled to purchase from the state the N. W. ¼ of S. E. ¼ and N. E. ¼ of S. W. ¼ of said section. From this judgment, Lampkin appeals to this court.

The provisions of the Political Code require that the affidavit of the applicant should state, among other things, the condition of the land,—as to whether it is or is not suitable for cultivation. In the affidavit accompanying respondent's application, he stated that this land was suitable for cultivation. At the trial the court found that only 160 acres thereof were suitable for cultivation, and gave judgment in his favor to that extent. It is now insisted that respondent's affidavit, wherein it stated that all the land applied for was suitable for cultivation, being declared untrue by the court, to the extent of 80 acres, his affidavit and application are valueless as a basis upon which to assert any claim for any portion of the land, and section 3500 of the Political Code is cited to support such contention. That section provides: "Any false statement contained in the affidavit provided for in section 3495 defeats the right of the applicant to purchase the land, or to receive any evidence of title thereto, and, if willfully false, subjects him also to punishment for perjury." As to whether or not a particular tract of land is suitable for cultivation is largely a matter of opinion. It remains to a great extent a matter of opinion, although section 3495 of the Political Code declares the meaning of the phrase "suitable for cultivation." It is a matter upon which honest men often differ, and we see no reason, either in law or sound public policy, why a party's application to purchase one quarter section of land should be denied because his affidavit does not state the true condition of another legal subdivision of land included in the same application. The false statement spoken of in section 3500 of the Political Code refers to a false statement made with reference to the particular tract of land. In this case there was no false statement made as to the 160 acres awarded to the applicant, but the statement was made as to the 80 acres which the court refused to award him. The construction given section 3500 by the trial court is the true one, and is in full consonance with justice. The cases relied upon to support the contrary view do not go to the lengths claimed for them by appellant. It is ordered that the judgment be affirmed.

We concur: PATERSON, J.; HARRISON, J.

---

101 Cal. 543

PEOPLE v. EDWARDS. (No. 21,055.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 6, 1894.)

JURY—IMPANELING—DIMINISHING NAMES IN JURY BOX.

Where, before the impaneling, the clerk has withdrawn from the box the names of jurors out on another case, but pending it these come in, and are discharged, the clerk should at once restore their names to the box; and if he has failed to do so until ten are impaneled, and the court's attention is called to the matter, and defendant then exhausts his peremptory challenges, and has to take one juror against his will, defendant is entitled to a new panel.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; William R. Daingerfield, Judge.

One Edwards, convicted of burglary in the second degree, appeals. Reversed.

Ben. B. Haskell, for appellant. Wm. S. Barnes, Dist. Atty., and Atty. Gen. Hart, for the People.

HARRISON, J. The defendant was convicted of burglary in the second degree, in entering a room of a building on Market street, in San Francisco, with intent to commit larceny, and was sentenced to the state prison for three years. When the court commenced to impanel the jury for the purpose of trying the defendant, 12 of the jurors who were in attendance upon the court had been impaneled to try another cause, and were then deliberating upon their verdict; and the slips upon which their names were written had been tied together by a rubber band, and placed by the clerk in the jury box. When 5 or 6 jurors had been drawn and sworn in the present case, this other jury came into court with their verdict, and were discharged. The clerk did not, however, remove the band from their names until after 10 jurors had been accepted and sworn to try the defendant, nor until after the defendant's counsel had called the attention of the court to this fact. The defendant's attorney then moved for the discharge of the jury upon the ground that it had been irregularly and illegally drawn and impaneled, and, after the completion of the jury, made another motion for its discharge upon the same grounds. These motions were denied by the court, and exceptions taken. It appears from the minutes of the trial, of which a copy is included in the judgment roll, that, out of the 12 jurors first drawn in the box, 4 were peremptorily challenged by the defendant, and 7 accepted and sworn in the case, and that, before 10 had been accepted and sworn, 3 others were peremptorily challenged by the defendant. Of the 4 next drawn, he challenged 3 peremptorily, and was compelled to accept the twelfth juror against his will.

It does not appear how many jurors were in attendance upon the court, whose names should have been in the jury box before the impaneling of the jury began; but the defendant had the right to have all the names of the jurors, from which were to be drawn the jury by which he was to be tried, in the jury box before the impaneling began. Code Civ. Proc. § 246. It is to be assumed that the defendant knew the names of the jurors in attendance upon the court, as it was a part of the records of the court, and also those to whom he might wish to take a peremptory challenge. The right of peremptory challenge is one of the chief safeguards of a defendant against an unjust conviction, and courts ought to permit the freest exercise of this right, within the limits fixed by the legislature. Any diminution in the number of names in the jury box would reduce the proportion of acceptable jurors, and to the same extent diminish the opportunity of the defendant to exclude from the jury those against whom he could assign no legal cause for challenge, but with whom, for some reason that he was not called upon to explain, he might be dissatisfied. If, therefore, when the other jury were discharged, their names had been placed in the jury box, this increase of the number of names from which the jurors to try him were to be drawn would have rendered it less probable that the names of those whom he wished to challenge peremptorily would be drawn, and consequently he would have had a better opportunity to be tried by a jury against whom he had no objection. While the other jurors were actually engaged in deliberating upon the verdict for which they had been impaneled, it would be immaterial to the defendant whether their names were in or out of the jury box, as it would be impracticable to have them impaneled in the case; but, when they were discharged from that verdict, it was the duty of the clerk to restore their names to the jury box, and, when the attention of the court was drawn to the fact, it should have granted the motion of the defendant to discharge those that had already been sworn, and impanel a jury anew. Its failure to do so wrought a prejudicial error to the defendant, and for this reason the judgment is reversed.

We concur: GAROUTTE, J.; PATERSON, J.

(4 Cal. Unrep. 521)

USHER v. USHER. (No. 18,236.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 7, 1894.)

CHANGE OF VENUE—ACTION FOR DIVORCE.

A motion by defendant in divorce to change the place of trial to a county other than that in which the action was brought, on the ground that defendant resides in the former county, should be granted, where the affidavit of plaintiff creates no substantial conflict with defendant's, as to his residence. Warner v. Warner, 34 Pac. 523, followed.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Tulare county; Wheaton A. Gray, Judge.

Action by Dora Usher against J. B. Usher for a divorce. From an order denying his motion to change the place of trial to Tuolumne county, defendant appeals. Reversed.

J. B. Curtin, for appellant. Rowen Irwin, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Respondent brought her action for divorce in the county of Tulare, alleging her residence therein as required by law. The summons was served upon the defendant in the county of Tuolumne; and he moved for a change of the place of trial to that county, upon the ground that he was a resident of said last-named county at the time the action was commenced. His motion was denied, and this appeal is from the order denying his motion. The motion should have been granted. The affidavit of plaintiff is not sufficient to create a substantial conflict with the affidavit of defendant as to his residence; and upon the authority of Warner v. Warner, 34 Pac. 523, the judgment is reversed.

(101 Cal. 459)

McKENZIE et al. v. BARLING et al. (No. 18,231.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 28, 1894.)

VENUE—PARTIES—REVIEW ON APPEAL—CONFLICTING EVIDENCE.

1. Where an action triable only in the county where defendants, or some of them, reside is brought in a county where one of them resides, a motion to change the venue to another county, where others of the defendants reside, will not be granted, unless joined in by all, or unless good cause is shown why they have not so joined.

2. A complaint in an action against several defendants, alleging that one of them has commenced proceedings in voluntary insolvency, that he has been adjudged insolvent, and that no decree of discharge has been made, does not show him to be an unnecessary party, for the purpose of a motion for a change of venue in which he does not join.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county; M. K. Harris, Judge.

Action by W. H. McKenzie and others against A. D. Barling, Edgar A. Cohen, and others. From an order denying a motion for change of venue, all the defendants except Barling appeal. Affirmed.

L. L. Cory, for appellants. Strother & Webb, for respondents.

McFARLAND, J. This is an appeal by some of the defendants from an order of the superior court denying their motion for a change of the place of trial. The action was brought against the defendants, Barling, Cohen, W. F. Beck, and Alfred Beck, to recover a money judgment. The complaint avers that the defendants were partners in the business of receiving raisins, preparing them for market, and selling them, the profits to be divided with those furnishing the raisins in the raw state; that plaintiffs furnished them certain raisins, which defendants prepared, and sold for a certain amount of money; and that defendants refuse to pay plaintiffs any part of said money, etc. The suit was commenced in Fresno county. The defendants Cohen and the two Becks moved the court for a change of venue to Alameda county, upon the ground that Alameda, and not Fresno, is the "proper" county for the trial, because said defendants Cohen and the Becks reside in Alameda county. It is admitted, however, that the residence of the defendant Barling is in Fresno county. We do not think that the court erred in denying the motion. In the first place, it cannot be said that, under the general provision of the statute, Fresno was "not the proper county for the trial," for the provision is that, in cases like the one at bar, "the action must be tried in the county in which the defendants, or some of them reside." Code Civ. Proc. § 395. Therefore, as defendant Barling resided in Fresno county, the latter is not an improper county for the trial. And it has been settled that where, in a case coming under section 395 of the Code, any of the defendants reside in the county in which the suit is brought, a motion to change the place of trial to a county in which others of the defendants reside will not be granted, unless all of the defendants join in the motion, or unless good reason is shown why they have not so joined. Pieper v. Land Co., 56 Cal. 173; Machine Co. v. Cole, 62 Cal. 311; Fickens v. Jones, Parker, Cal. Dig. 83, (not reported in California Reports, but cited in Pieper v. Land Co., supra.) See, also, Sailly v. Hutton, 6 Wend. 508; Legg v. Dorsheim, 19 Wend. 700; Simmons v. McDougall, 2 How. Pr. 77. This rule has not been overturned by any of the cases cited by appellant. In O'Neil v. O'Neil, 54 Cal. 187, the action was brought in San Francisco to determine the rights of the parties to certain land situated in Sacramento and Yolo counties. San Francisco was clearly not, in any sense, the proper county for the trial; and it was properly held that either defendant had the right to have the action tried in the county where the land was situated. In that case the rights of the defendant rested on section 392, Code Civ. Proc., as was stated by the court in Pieper v. Land Co., supra. As to the other cases cited by appellant on the point, Rathgeb v. Tiscornia, 66 Cal. 96, 4 Pac. 987; and McSherry v. Mining Co., 97 Cal. 637, 32 Pac. 711, were cases in which no one of the defendants resided in the county where the action was brought; and Sayward v. Houghton, 82 Cal. 628, 23 Pac. 120, was a case where it appeared from the complaint that the defendant residing in the county was not a necessary party to the action, and had no interest in its result. Where it sufficiently appears upon the face of the complaint that the defendant residing in the county where the suit was begun is not a proper and necessary party to the action, the other defendants may, no doubt, have the trial changed to the county where they reside, without the consent of the resident defendant; but such is not the fact here. The complaint states the same cause of action against all of the defendants. Appellants contend that Barling is a mere nominal defendant, because it appears that he has been declared an insolvent. With respect to that matter, the complaint does state that Barling had commenced proceedings in voluntary insolvency, and that an order had been made adjudging him an insolvent debtor, and in that connection it is averred that the said proceedings are still pending, and no decree of discharge has been made; that the indebtedness sued for in the case at bar was incurred in a fiduciary capacity, and cannot be discharged; and that this present action is prosecuted by leave and upon an express order of the court in which said insolvency proceedings are pending. But these averments do not show that Barling was an improper or unnecessary party to the action. We are not called upon to inquire, at this stage of the case, whether the indebtedness sued on was contracted by the defendants in a fiduciary capacity, or whether a general discharge of Barling from his debts would be a good defense to this action, because he, alone, could set up such a defense. There is in the record an affidavit on the part of appellants that certain averments of the complaint, to the effect that Barling was a partner of appellants, are false; that Barling has no interest in the suit; and that he was made a defendant merely to prevent appellants from getting a change of place of trial. There is also an affidavit on the part of respondents controverting all the statements of appellants' affidavit. These matters go mostly to the merits of the action, and it could hardly be expected that a court would dispose of them upon affidavits made on a motion for change of place of trial. At all events, we could not disturb the ruling of the court below in the premises, for the evidence was certainly conflicting in a marked degree. The order appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: FITZGERALD, J.; DE HAVEN, J.

101 Cal. 571

PEOPLE v. THOMAS. (No. 18,207.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 13, 1894.)

JUDGMENT—SERVICE BY PUBLICATION—MOTION TO VACATE.

1. The affidavit and order for service by publication under Code Civ. Proc. § 412, are no part of the judgment roll, and their absence does not show the judgment invalid.

2. The affidavit of publication required by Code Civ. Proc. § 415, to be made by "the printer or the foreman or principal clerk," is sufficient, as part of the judgment roll, if it purport to be made by the "publisher," he being presumably the printer.

3. A judgment foreclosing a certificate of purchase of state lands against the purchaser will not be opened 12 years later, on motion of his grantee by conveyance before suit begun, on the ground that such grantee was not served with summons, as against subsequent bona fide purchasers from the state, who allege, moreover, adverse possession, and notice to such grantee of their possession and improvements; the grantee's remedy, if any, being in equity.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, El Dorado county; N. D. Arnot, Judge.

Action by the people of the state of California against W. O. Thomas. Judgment was rendered for plaintiff. On motion by the El Dorado Slate Company to vacate the judgment. Motion denied, and said company appeals. Affirmed.

H. A. Powell, for appellant. Prentiss Carpenter and Chas. A. Swisler, for the People.

HAYNES, C. Appeal from an order refusing a motion to set aside and vacate a judgment. On October 12, 1880, the state commenced an action in the superior court of El Dorado county against the appellant, W. O. Thomas, to foreclose a certificate of purchase of certain state lands, issued to him in 1875, and in which action judgment was rendered against said Thomas on the 27th of December, 1880. Prior to the commencement of that action, Thomas conveyed the lands embraced in said certificate to the El Dorado Slate Company, a corporation; and on September 21, 1892, said corporation served notice of a motion to set aside and vacate the said judgment upon the ground that the said judgment is void, the court never having acquired jurisdiction of the defendant. Attached to the notice, an affidavit was served, which contained a copy of all the entries made upon the register of actions of said court in said cause, in which record no mention was made of any affidavit for an order of publication of the summons, nor of any order made by the court for such publication, and it is alleged that no such affidavit or order was ever made or filed. The affidavit further alleges that the defendant, Thomas, was, at the time of the commencement of the action, and for more than a year after the judgment was entered, a nonresident of this state. It is also contended that the service of summons was made under section 3549 of the Political Code, whereas it should have been made under the Code of Civil Procedure.

A judgment, however, is void upon its face only when that fact is made apparent by an inspection of the judgment roll. Hahn v. Kelly, 34 Cal. 404; Jacks v. Baldez, 97 Cal. 91, 31 Pac. 899. And, as these objections do not appear upon the judgment roll, they do not show that it is void upon its face. The affidavit required by section 412, Code Civ. Proc., and the order that the service be made by publication of the summons, if they had been made, constituted no part of the judgment roll; and their absence, therefore, does not show the invalidity of the judgment, when examined in the light of the judgment roll alone. In re Newman, 75 Cal. 220, 16 Pac. 887.

It is contended, however, that the affidavit showing the publication of the summons, which is part of the judgment roll, is insufficient, as it was made by the "publisher," and not by "the printer or the foreman or principal clerk," as required by section 415, Code Civ. Proc. We think this objection is not well taken. In Sharp v. Daugney, 33 Cal. 513, it is said: "And the further objection that the affidavit was made by a publisher and proprietor, and not by the printer, foreman, or principal clerk, is fully met by Bunce v. Reed, 16 Barb. 347. It was held in that case that, for the purposes of the question, printers and publishers might be considered synonymous, the latter being within the spirit of the statute. An affidavit which should fail to show that the affiant had any relations to the paper might demand, if unaided by other portions of the judgment roll, a different consideration." In Menard v. Crowe, 20 Minn. 452 (Gil. 402), upon this question, the court said: "Ordinarily, and therefore presumably, the publisher of a paper is a printer, in the sense of being the person for whom, as principal, and by whose servants the paper is printed. So that, without going as far as Bunce v. Reed, 16 Barb. 347, where it is held that 'publishers' and 'printers' are synonymous, it would be enough for this case to say that the ordinary presumption that the publisher of the paper is the printer, in the sense above, is not overcome by any showing to the contrary;" citing Sharp v. Daugney, supra. See, also, Kipp v. Cook, 46 Minn. 537, 49 N. W. 257, where the same authorities are followed. The proof of publication of the summons being sufficient, no ground is suggested by appellant upon which it can be said that the judgment is void upon its face.

Appellant contends that, even though the judgment roll does not disclose the invalidity of the judgment, his attack upon the judgment being direct, and not collateral, the motion should have been granted; and People v. Mullan, 65 Cal. 396, 4 Pac. 348, and People v. Greene, 74 Cal. 400, 16 Pac. 197, are cited in support of this contention. That a judgment void upon its face may be vacated at any time, upon motion, is well settled; and it is also clear that a judgment in fact void for want of jurisdiction over the person of the defendant, where its invalidity does not appear from the judgment roll (as where the summons was served upon a third person, and the return shows service upon the defendant), may be vacated upon motion, at least within a reasonable time after its entry. Norton v. Railroad Co., 97 Cal. 394, 30 Pac. 585, and 32 Pac. 452. The time within which a judgment, the invalidity of which does not appear upon its face, may be set aside upon motion, seems not to have been definitely determined, further than that it may be done within the time limited by section 473, Code Civ. Proc. See People v. Harrison, 84 Cal. 607, 24 Pac. 311, and concurring opinion of Mr. Justice McFarland, at page 610, 84 Cal., and at page 313, 24 Pac.; People v. Blake, 84 Cal. 611, 22 Pac. 1142, and 24 Pac. 313; Norton v. Railroad Co., 97 Cal. 394, 30 Pac. 585, and 32 Pac. 452. It is not necessary to decide, in this case, whether there is any limit to the time within which such motion may be sustained, or to fix such limit, if there is one, since the circumstances of the case point to another and more appropriate remedy, viz. an equitable action to vacate the judgment; and these circumstances, I think, should be held a sufficient justification of the denial of the motion, even if it be conceded that mere lapse of time should not defeat the motion.

The land sold by the state to Thomas was the W. ½ of section 36. On June 4, 1875, Thomas sold and conveyed the same lands to the El Dorado Slate Company; but this conveyance was not recorded until August, 1892, nor was the register of the state land office notified thereof. In January, 1887, the state sold the N. W. ¼ of the N. W. ¼ of said section to one Reeg, who afterwards, in February, 1888, conveyed the same to Mothersole and Perine, and their deed was recorded in April of the same year. Mothersole and Perine allege in their affidavit that they have been in the actual possession and occupation of said quarter section ever since their purchase; that they have expended more than $30,000 upon the property; that they had no knowledge or notice of any claim thereto by the El Dorado Slate Company, but that the slate company had knowledge during all that time of their possession and improvements, and claim title by adverse possession; and the slate company deny that they had such knowledge or notice. Under these circumstances, I think that the appellant should be left to its remedy by an equitable action; that, upon that ground, its motion was properly denied; and that the order appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C.; TEMPLE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the order appealed from is affirmed.

(101 Cal. 600)

EICHHOFF v. EICHHOFF. (No. 18,261.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 12, 1894.)

ANNULMENT OF MARRIAGE—DECREE—EFFECT.

1. Jurisdiction is presumed in favor of a decree of the superior court when offered as evidence in another proceeding within the state, though the record fail to show that defendant was served with summons or appeared in the suit.

2. A man may contract marriage before entry of a decree declaring his former marriage to have been void.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county; Thomas J. Bowers, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Gustave Eichhoff, deceased. Appeal of George Eichhoff from an order granting letters of administration to Magdalena Eichhoff. Affirmed.

J. J. Paulsell and Kile & Plummer, for appellant. James H. & J. E. Budd and Nicol & Orr, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. Upon the death of Gustave Eichhoff, Magdalena Eichhoff, claiming to be his widow, applied for letters of administration upon his estate. Her application was resisted by the appellant, a son of the deceased, who also made application that letters of administration be issued to himself. The court granted the application of Magdalena, and denied that of the appellant. The deceased and Magdalena were married May 25, 1882, and from that time lived together as husband and wife until his death in February, 1893. In 1863 he had been married to Milceon Winike, and they had lived in Stockton as husband and wife until 1876, during which time the appellant and five other children were born to them. In 1876 the wife was committed to the insane asylum at Stockton, and she is still living as an inmate of the insane asylum. In April, 1882, the deceased brought an action against her in the superior court of Marin county to procure a decree annulling his marriage with her upon the ground of fraud on her part in concealing the fact that she was insane at the time of their marriage, and a decree to that effect was rendered by that court in July, 1882. Upon the present application for letters of administration the judgment roll in that action was introduced in evidence, and it is claimed by respondent that by virtue of this judgment her marriage with the deceased constituted her his lawful wife, while the appellant maintains that it fails to show that the marriage between his mother and the deceased was ever annulled. The judgment roll shows that the complaint was filed April 21, 1882; that on the same day a summons was issued thereon, and that it was returned April 25, 1882, without any proof of service; that on the 17th of July, 1882, after hearing evidence upon the averments of the complaint, the court rendered its judgment "that the marriage between the plaintiff, Gustave Eichhoff, and the defendant, Milceon W. Eichhoff, be, and the same is hereby, annulled, and said parties are, and each of them is, restored to the status and position of unmarried persons." There is also in the record an affidavit of the plaintiff, filed on the same day with the return of the summons, to the effect that the defendant was then confined in the insane asylum at Stockton, and asking for the appointment of a guardian ad litem, together with the order of the same date making such appointment; but, as these documents do not form a part of the judgment roll, they cannot be considered in determining the effect of the judgment. There is no recital in the judgment, or in any part of the record, of any service upon the defendant, or appearance in her behalf; and the ground of the appellant's contention is that, as the evidence offered did not show affirmatively that the superior court had any jurisdiction over the defendant, the court was not authorized to determine therefrom that the marriage between her and the deceased had been annulled; while on the part of the respondent it is claimed that the record of the judgment and of its rendition raises the presumption that the court had acquired jurisdiction of the defendant, in some form authorized by law, before it entered upon the hearing of the cause, and exercised its judicial power. The appellant herein made no offer to show that the defendant in the former action had not in fact been served with the summons, so that we are not called upon to determine whether it would be competent to show by extrinsic evidence that the court did not in fact have jurisdiction over the defendant, or to contradict the presumption which arises when the record is silent upon that subject. The question sharply presented for determination is whether a domestic judgment, wherein both of the parties thereto are residents within the state, and where there is no proof of service, or appearance on the part of the defendant, and which is itself silent concerning the jurisdiction over the defendant, raises any presumption in reference thereto, when the same is offered in evidence in another proceeding. This question has not often arisen, and has not, we believe, been before presented in this state, although the principles applicable thereto have been often discussed in opinions upon cognate subjects, notably in Carpentier v. Oakland, 30 Cal. 439, and in Hahn v. Kelly, 34 Cal. 391, two leading cases thereon; but in the former of these cases there had been an appearance on the part of the defendant, and it was sought to show that it was unauthorized, while in the latter case the judgment roll itself contained a recital that service had been made upon the defendants, as was also the case in Sharp v. Brunnings, 33 Cal. 528, and in Reeve v. Kennedy, 43 Cal. 643; and in Mahoney v. Middleton, 41 Cal. 41, the judgment recited the appearance and answer of the defendants. In Drake v. Duvenick, 45 Cal. 455, there had been an attempted service upon the defendant, and it was contended that it was insufficient, for the reason that a copy of the complaint had not been served with a copy of the summons; but it was held that by such personal service, though defective, the defendant had received such notice as gave the court sufficient jurisdiction over him to prevent its judgment from being void. The same principle was repeated in Bank v. Spencer, 53 Cal. 737. More than 200 years ago it was said in Peacock v. Bell, 1 Wms. Saund. 74, that "the rule for jurisdiction is that nothing shall be intended to be out of the jurisdiction of a superior court but that which specially appears to be so, and, on the contrary, nothing shall be intended to be within the jurisdiction of an inferior court but that which is so expressly alleged;" and this rule has been so frequently repeated as to have become a maxim in the law. This presumption extends to everything necessary for the support of the judgment, as well those facts which are necessary to give the court jurisdiction of the defendant as those which are necessary to sustain its decision of fact or conclusions of law thereon. Every court is called upon to determine, in the first instance, whether it has jurisdiction to hear the cause before it; and its decision upon this point is entitled to the same presumption of verity as its decision upon any other point. It is also its duty, before it hears the complaint of the plaintiff, to determine whether the defendant has been properly brought before it; but to assume that the court has determined this question without making any inquiry, or without any evidence before it, involves the presumption that it has neglected to perform its official duty, whereas a presumption that an official duty has been neglected is never indulged. The fact that the court has rendered a judgment implies a determination by it, before it assumed to hear the controversy, that it had jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the action, and of the defendant against whom the complaint was directed. Its jurisdiction does not exist by virtue of its mere decision that it has jurisdiction, as that would be reasoning in a circle; but the presumption of its jurisdiction exists because it has been authorized to determine this question in the same mode as any other question of fact upon which its judgment is to rest, and its decision thereon is presumed to have been made upon evidence sufficient to sustain it. Its determination upon this question is to be made upon evidence of some nature, and, whether this evidence is sufficient or insufficient to support its conclusion thereon, it has the jurisdiction to make the determination; and if its conclusion is incorrect it is merely error, which can be reviewed only upon a direct appeal. Even though it should determine the question without any evidence before it, the same presumption of verity attends its decision upon this point as upon any other issue which it may determine without evidence. Nor does this presumption of its jurisdiction to make the decision depend upon the existence of any record of the decision. The existence of the jurisdiction antedates its exercise, and does not depend upon any subsequent record thereof. The facts must be brought to its notice before the decision is made, and the decision must be made before there can be any record of its action. If it makes a record of the facts giving it jurisdiction, or of its exercise of such jurisdiction, there is no occasion to invoke any presumption. It is only when the record is silent that the necessity for presumption arises. Freem. Judgm. § 124; Black, Judgm. § 271; Brittain v. Kinnaird, 1 Brod. & B. 432; Foot v. Stevens, 17 Wend. 483; Hart v. Seixas, 21 Wend. 40; Huntington v. Charlotte, 15 Vt. 46; Baker v. Chapline, 12 Iowa, 204; Pope v. Harrison, 16 Lea, 82; Benefield v. Albert, 132 Ill. 671, 24 N. E. 634; Horner v. Doe, 1 Ind. 130; Sims v. Gay, 109 Ind. 501, 9 N. E. 120; McClanahan v. West, 100 Mo. 309, 13 S. W. 674. The judgment roll in the present case is consistent with the fact that proper service was made upon the defendant before the hearing upon the complaint, and, as any condition of facts consistent with the validity of the judgment will be presumed to have existed, rather than one which will defeat the judgment, it must be presumed, in support of the action of the court, that such service was shown to it, although it has not preserved any record thereof. This presumption was sufficient to sustain the finding of the court in the matter appealed from herein, that the respondent was the wife of the deceased at the time of his death. The fact that the judgment annulling the marriage between the deceased and his wife was not entered until July did not invalidate his marriage with the respondent in the previous May. The decree annulling the marriage was a judicial determination of the status of the parties thereto. It did not render the marriage void, but simply declared that it had been void; and the marriage thereby annulled is to be regarded as never having, in fact, existed, except in so far as was necessary to protect the civil rights that others may have acquired in reliance upon its apparent validity. Stew. Mar. & Div. § 141; 2 Bish. Mar. Div. & Sep. § 1596 et seq.; Perry v. Perry, 2 Paige, 501. The order is affirmed.

We concur: PATERSON, J.; GAROUTTE, J.

(4 Cal. Unrep. 512)

PEOPLE v. KILVINGTON. (No. 21,033.)[1]

(Supreme Court of California. March 3, 1894.)

MANSLAUGHTER — SETTING ASIDE INFORMATION — NEW INFORMATION — CRIMINAL NEGLIGENCE — EVIDENCE — IMPEACHING WITNESS — POLICE OFFICER — SHOOTING TO EFFECT ARREST — PROBABLE CAUSE — IGNORANCE OF LAW.

1. Where it is apparent that a defendant has had a fair and full examination before an examining magistrate, and has been held to appear and answer on a criminal charge, and an information against him has been set aside for some technical error or irregularity, not going to the merits,—such as failure to certify the depositions in a homicide case,—the court may permit a correction to be made, and a new information filed, without a further examination before a committing magistrate.

2. In a homicide case, where defendant, a police officer, shot at—intending to frighten—deceased, who was running away from a person who was shouting "Stop thief!" the admission of evidence that deceased had gone to the place for a lawful purpose, though improper, is harmless, the real question being whether defendant acted with criminal negligence. De Haven and Harrison, JJ., dissenting.

3. On a prosecution of a police officer for killing deceased, who was being pursued by a person shouting "Stop thief!" such person, having testified for defendant, may be impeached by evidence that, a few days before, he had a quarrel with deceased, he having testified that he never saw him before the time of the shooting.

4. On a prosecution of a police officer for shooting deceased, who was running from a person who was shouting "Stop thief!" defendant having testified that he intended to shoot over him, an instruction that act and evil intent must combine to constitute crime is properly refused, the question being whether there was criminal negligence.

5. Where one shoots a person through criminal negligence, his ignorance of the law can form no basis for acquittal.

6. The fact that the person whom defendant (a police officer) shot was being pursued by a person shouting "Stop thief!" did not raise an implication that a felony had been committed, by reason of which he might shoot him to effect his arrest.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Santa Clara county; W. A. Lorigan, Judge.

George Kilvington was convicted of manslaughter, and appeals. Affirmed.

Wm. P. Veuve, for appellant. V. A. Scheller, Spencer & Burchard, E. E. Cothran, and W. H. H. Hart, Atty. Gen., for the People.

PER CURIAM. The defendant, George Kilvington, was informed against by the district attorney of the county of Santa Clara for the crime of murder, alleged to have been committed at said county on the 3d day of May, 1892, by the felonious killing of one Henry Schmidt. Upon a trial the defendant was convicted of manslaughter, and adjudged to be punished by imprisonment in the state prison of the state of California, at San Quentin, for the term of seven years. The appeal is from the final judgment, and from an order denying a new trial.

The first point made on behalf of appellant is that the court below erred in refusing a motion on his part to set aside the information. The facts essential to a correct understanding of the question involved are as follows: On the 25th day of May, 1892, defendant was examined before a justice of the peace of San Jose, in the county of Santa Clara, on a charge of having murdered Henry Schmidt, and was held by the magistrate on a charge of manslaughter, in the killing of said Schmidt. On the 7th day of June, 1892, the district attorney of said county filed an information for murder against defendant, for killing said Schmidt, which information was on the 14th day of June, 1892, on motion of counsel for defendant, and by consent of counsel for the people, set aside and dismissed, and a new information ordered by the court to be filed by the district attorney against the defendant, upon the ground that the testimony taken by the reporter at the preliminary examination, and by him written out in longhand and filed in the superior court, was not certified to by said reporter before filing with the county clerk; that the original notes of the reporter had not been filed with such clerk; and that neither were filed within 10 days after the close of such examination. At the time of the order of dismissal the court also ordered the testimony on file withdrawn to be certified to. Thereupon, the transcript of the testimony, duly certified, was filed, together with the original shorthand notes, and the order of the committing magistrate made May 26, 1892, holding defendant for manslaughter as aforesaid, but without any other or further examination before a magistrate. A new information, charging the defendant with the murder of said Schmidt, was thereupon, and on the 15th day of June, 1892, duly filed in the superior court, and defendant's motion to dismiss the same was denied. Appellant refers, as authority for his contention, to the case of Ex parte Baker, 88 Cal. 84, 25 Pac. 966, in which this court says: "And, if the information is set aside upon the ground that the defendant has not been legally committed, it can readily be seen that it would be idle for the court to order another information to be filed, for the same fatal defects would necessarily be present at any future hearing." The facts of that case no doubt warranted the expression there used. There, so far as appeared, no other or further cause was shown in support of the second information than the first. The facts here are quite different: (1) It does not appear from the record in this case that the commitment was filed prior to the presentation of the first information. (2) It does affirmatively appear that the reporter's notes were not filed, and that the depositions written out in longhand were not certified, at the time of filing the first information. If it was in fact filed, being for manslaughter, the district attorney was not authorized, in the absence of depositions duly certified, to present an information for any higher offense than that indicated in the commitment. Under these circumstances the information was properly and promptly set aside, upon the ground that, as to the offense with which the defendant stood charged, there was no evidence "that before the filing thereof [the information] the defendant had not been legally committed by a magistrate," as provided by section 995 of the Penal Code. The first information charging the defendant with murder was beyond and in excess of the jurisdiction of the district attorney, and utterly void. The second information, which was filed within 30 days after commitment, was not so filed until after the commitment, the notes of the reporter, and the depositions written out in longhand, and duly certified, were on file. We have no doubt of the correctness of the following propositions: (1) If A. has been properly examined before a magistrate, but no order holding him to appear before a proper court has in fact been made, an information filed against him before the commitment is entered and depositions are sent up is void. (2) In such a case, upon the filing of the order of commitment and depositions, the district attorney may, within the time provided by law, file a proper information; and the fact that the former information has been set aside by the court will not, in such a case, render a second examination and commitment necessary. Section 997 of the Penal Code provides that, if an indictment or information is set aside, the defendant, if in custody, shall be discharged, etc., unless the court directs that the case be resubmitted to the same or another grand jury, or that an information be filed by the district attorney. The evident object of the statute, in authorizing the court to direct the district attorney to file another information when the first had been set aside, was, it is believed, to provide for a class of cases in which a proper examination has been had, but yet, from some informality or omission, the evidence thereof is wanting, or defective, so that it cannot be said, judicially, that the defendant has been, before the filing of the information, legally committed by a magistrate. The case at bar affords a familiar example. The depositions on file brought to the court knowledge that depositions had been taken, and that an examination had been had before a magistrate, but not being duly certified, as required by section 869 of the Penal Code, they lacked the verity essential as a basis for an information for murder, which could only be founded upon them, because the order of probable cause, if it appeared upon the depositions, or was entered in the docket of the magistrate, or otherwise reduced to writing, as we know, only held the defendant to answer for manslaughter. In People v. Thompson, 84 Cal. 598, 24 Pac. 384, this court held that the court below properly set aside an information because the indorsement on the depositions returned was not in accordance with the statute, and that, having done so, there was no error in directing such depositions to be returned to the justice for proper indorsement, and that such indorsement could be made without a re-examination of the case. In People v. Wallace, 94 Cal., at page 500, 29 Pac. 950, the decision in People v. Thompson was approved, although some doubts may have been entertained as to the broad scope of the reasoning. From the consensus of opinion expressed by this court in different cases, and from the wording of the Penal Code, the conclusion is reached that, where it is apparent that a defendant has had a fair and full primary examination before a committing magistrate, and has been held to appear and answer before a superior court upon a criminal charge, and an information has been filed against him, which has been, upon his motion, set aside for some technical error, or irregularity, not going to the merits of the case, and which may be remedied and a new information filed, the superior court is authorized and empowered, under section 997 of the Penal Code, to permit a correction to be made, and to direct a new information to be filed, without a further or other examination before a committing magistrate, and that the reasoning in Ex parte Baker, 88 Cal. 84, 25 Pac. 966, should be confined to cases in which the information is set aside for causes other than merely technical, and susceptible of remedy without impairing the substantial rights of a defendant. It follows that the court did not err in refusing to set aside the second information filed against defendant.

---

[1] Reversed in banc. See 37 Pac. 799, 104 Cal. 86.

Louis Schloss was called as a witness on the part of the prosecution, and having identified the spot where deceased was killed, by a pool of blood which he found, and which other witnesses identified as the place of the homicide, was asked the following question: "Do you know of any business he [deceased] had there, on that particular locality, at that time?" Counsel for defendant objected to the question upon the ground that it is immaterial, irrelevant, and incompetent. The objection was overruled, to which ruling an exception was taken. The witness then testified, in substance, that on the 3d day of May, about 4 to 5 o'clock p. m., he negotiated with deceased, who was a butcher, in regard to the sale to the latter of a lot, situated about 100 feet from where he was killed, and that deceased said to him that he would go down and see the lot that night, when he closed his shop, as he could not get off before, and would see the witness the next morning. Deceased was shot that night by defendant at about 9 o'clock p. m. In view of testimony introduced later by the defense, this testimony is claimed to have been important. The witness was permitted, also, against the objection of defendant, to draw and exhibit to the jury a diagram of the surroundings, showing the location of the streets, the lot in question, the pool of blood, etc. Testimony of the witness Weisel was also admitted, over defendant's objection, tending to show that deceased was rightfully at the place when he was shot. This testimony as to the reasons why deceased was at the place at which he was killed was, we think, improperly admitted; for the real question was whether the defendant, under the circumstances as they appeared to him, acted recklessly and with criminal negligence; but we think that such testimony was unimportant and not prejudicial to appellant. The defendant was night watchman in Chinatown, San Jose, and was, as the court instructed the jury, "a police officer" of the city of San Jose. On the night of the 3d day of May, 1892, he had been at Chinatown with one Henry Burgess to show the latter through a cannery which defendant, as a carpenter, had erected, or had aided in erecting. On their return, and when on Taylor street, which seems to be a new street, and not fenced, at least on one side, they heard some one cry "Stop him!" or "Stop thief!" and two men were observed running across the open ground northerly, and diagonally to their course, in a direction which, if continued, would have taken them across defendant's line of travel, from 20 feet to 20 yards ahead of defendant and his companion. The two men running were not together, but one was in advance, and the other pursuing him, and crying out to stop him, or "Stop thief!" The night was dark, but the parties were visible at some distance. Defendant ordered the man in advance to stop, and, as he claims, repeated the order two or three times, until the stranger threw up his hands, when, as defendant claims, he saw something in the man's hands, drew his pistol, and fired, killing the man, who at the time was say 30 feet distant, and who fell upon his face, and who, upon examination, had no weapons, and was, as it proved, Henry Schmidt. Defendant did not, so far as appears, recognize deceased before firing the fatal shot, and, as he testifies, intended to shoot over his head; but the deceased being upon higher ground, by two or three feet, the ball entered his neck. The man in pursuit proved to be one William H. Howard. The testimony of the latter was lengthy, but may be epitomized as follows: He was passing the house of one Mrs. Hayford, when a man ran out of the back yard, who he thought was a criminal, and pursued, crying "Stop!" or "Stop thief!" for some distance, with the result as above stated. There were upon the face of Schmidt, when found dead, bruises and wounds, such as might have been made by a blow or blows of the fist or from a blunt instrument, and which a number of physicians testified must have been inflicted before death. Others were of the opinion these wounds might have been caused by contact with the earth when Schmidt was shot, and fell upon his face. Howard testified that he was not personally acquainted with Schmidt, and had never spoken to him; never had any trouble with him; did not have an altercation with him on the Monday preceding; was not in town that day, etc. In rebuttal, and for the purpose of impeaching the witness Howard, one Harrison was called by the prosecution, and testified that, on the Monday next preceding the Wednesday on which the homicide was committed, the witness Howard had a quarrel with Schmidt, during which he threatened the latter, and used vile and obscene language to him; and the admission of this testimony is assigned as error. The evidence was clearly admissible. The theory of the prosecution was that the contused wounds upon the face of deceased had been inflicted by Howard, and that deceased was fleeing from him, and not as a criminal, when shot; and, to the extent to which it contradicted the testimony of Howard, it was admissible. It tended in some degree to render the testimony of Howard improbable,—nothing more.

The court instructed the jury at length, on its own motion, and at the request of counsel for the prosecution and defense, which instructions were as to the right of defendant, as a police officer, to arrest, as provided by law, persons whom he has reasonable cause to believe have committed a felony, and where a felony has in fact been committed, and he has reasonable cause to believe the person arrested to have committed it; his right to arrest at night; his right to use all the force reasonably necessary to affect the arrest, etc. Defendant asked the court to instruct the jury as follows: (1) "The jury are instructed that an act and evil intent must combine, to constitute, in law, a crime, and that each of these elements, to wit, the act and evil intent, must be proven beyond reasonable doubt. The court refused the instruction as asked, and gave the following in lieu thereof: (1) "The jury are instructed that to constitute, in law, a crime, there must exist a union or joint operation of act and intent or criminal negligence." It will be observed that the instruction as asked was erroneous, in that it eliminated entirely what in this case was the important factor, viz. the question of criminal negligence. As given, it was proper. The question of reasonable doubt was properly expounded to the jury elsewhere in the instructions. Like considerations apply to the second and third instructions asked by defendant, and refused by the court. The third is liable to the further objection that it sought to make defendant's ignorance of the law a basis upon which to acquit the defendant. The few exceptional cases in which it is said ignorance of the law prevents the formation of an intent to commit crime are exceptions to a general rule, and have no application to a case where criminal negligence is the main question in issue. The exceptional doctrine found at section 297 of Bishop on Criminal Law has no application here. The length to which this opinion has extended precludes the propriety of noticing seriatim all the instructions given or refused. It is sufficient to say that the jury was fully instructed upon all the issues submitted; that the instructions asked by the defendant and refused by the court were either given in other portions of the charge, or in a modified and unexceptionable form, or properly refused as not embodying law applicable to the case.

One proposition further needs to be noticed. Defendant asked the court to give several instructions to the jury upon the subject of "probable cause," of which the following is a sample: "If the jury believes the evidence of the witness Burgess and the defendant, then the court instructs the jury, as a matter of law, that the defendant, at the time of the killing, had reasonable cause to believe that the deceased had committed a felony." And again: "The court instructs the jury that the uncontradicted evidence in this case shows that the defendant had reasonable cause to believe, at the time of the killing, that the deceased had committed a felony." The contention of appellant is that the question of probable cause is one of law, and that the court, upon the evidence, should have instructed the jury as indicated in the foregoing. Assuming for present purposes that the rule in criminal cases is the same as in actions for malicious prosecution, then we think the court should have instructed the jury that no probable cause was shown for believing that Schmidt had committed a felony. The evidence was sufficient to show probable cause to warrant defendant in making an arrest, and, in an action for false imprisonment for detaining Schmidt, would have been, we may assume, a justification of defendant therefor. But how a cry of "Stop him!" or "Stop thief!" raises an implication that a felony has been committed, any more than a misdemeanor, is not apparent. The term "thief" applies equally to one who has committed petty larceny, which is not a felony, as to one guilty of grand larceny, which is a felony; and as an officer may not go to the extreme of slaying one who is only guilty of a misdemeanor, in order to effect his arrest, there should be, even according to appellant's contention, evidence showing that a felony has been committed, not that it may have been, before the court can properly instruct the jury, as matter of law, that an officer has reasonable cause to believe that a felony has been committed. Under the testimony, the question whether defendant had reasonable cause to believe deceased had committed a felony was one of fact, to be determined by the jury, and not a question of law, to be arbitrarily passed upon by the court. The court so viewed it, and instructed the jury fully in that view, and therein committed no error. The instructions upon the question of reasonable doubt were all that were required. The case seems to have been fairly tried, the defendant well defended, and properly convicted of manslaughter. The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

DE HAVEN and HARRISON, JJ. We dissent. The evidence of Schloss and Weisel, referred to in the foregoing opinion, was clearly irrelevant; and we cannot say that it was not used upon the trial, and in the argument before the jury, to the prejudice of the defendant. In this case it was of the utmost importance to the defendant that the evidence should be confined to the single question before the jury, which was whether the defendant, upon the circumstances as actually presented to him, was guilty of criminal negligence in firing the shot which killed the deceased; and, as the evidence was not so confined, we are of the opinion that the judgment and order should be reversed.

---

101 Cal. 513

PEOPLE v. LANE. (No. 21,050.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 3, 1894.)

Homicide—Insanity—Evidence — Instruction—Information—Dismissal for Want of Proper Commitment — Second Information — When Proper—Remarks of Counsel.

1. Where, on a murder trial, defendant claims that he had become insane through fear that deceased was trying to debauch his daughter, evidence is admissible, in rebuttal, to show that defendant's relations with her were illicit.

2. Defendant asked the court to charge that, if defendant was insane at a period before the homicide, it is presumed to have continued. The court gave the instruction after adding the words, "up to the time of the homicide, provided the exciting cause of such insanity also exists up to the time of the homicide." Held that, where the evidence tended to show defendant insane a year before the killing, and it all showed that his condition gradually grew worse up to the homicide, such instruction, as modified, even if erroneous, was not prejudicial.

3. The rule as to privileged communications between physician and patient does not apply in criminal cases; and it is proper to permit the prosecution, in a murder case, to cross-examine defendant's physician as to the diseases for which he had treated defendant, where the defense is insanity.

4. Where there is evidence of joint preparations by defendant and another to kill deceased, evidence of the acts and declarations of such other person is competent.

5. Where an information charging defendant with murder is dismissed because the justice failed to make a proper indorsement of the commitment on the complaint, and the court orders the papers sent to the justice for indorsement, it is proper to permit a second information to be filed after the return of the papers by the justice properly indorsed.

6. Where the attention of the trial court is not called to objectionable remarks of counsel, made during the argument, no question in relation thereto can be considered on appeal.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Yuba county.

William R. Lane was convicted of murder in the first degree, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Grove L. Johnson, M. C. Barney, and C. A. Webb, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Hart, E. P. McDaniel, Dist. Atty., and E. A. Forbes, for the People.

PATERSON, J. An information was filed in the court below charging the defendant with the crime of murder, but the same was dismissed by the court on motion of the defendant, on the ground that the defendant had not been legally committed by a magistrate. It appears that the only irregularity in the proceedings before the justice of the peace consisted in the failure of the latter to make a proper indorsement of the commitment upon the complaint at the conclusion of the examination. The court, therefore, ordered that the papers be sent back to the justice of the peace for proper indorsement, and that upon return of the same to the superior court the district attorney should file another information. This was done by the district attorney, and we think the court properly denied the motion to set aside the second information. It was unnecessary to go into another examination upon the same charge. People v. Thompson, 84 Cal. 598, 24 Pac. 384; Pen. Code, § 997; People v. Kilvington (No. 21,033, this day filed), 36 Pac. 13.

The court did not err in permitting the witness Williams to give testimony relating to Flowers, who was killed at the same time and in the same affray which resulted in the killing of Foulk. The testimony of this witness, as well as that of Hawkins and Barricklo, was necessary, in order that the jury might understand the transaction. The affray occurred in the dark. Many shots were fired. Two persons were killed, and one wounded. Three pistols were introduced in evidence, of different calibers. Each contained a number of empty and a number of loaded cartridges. To determine whether or not the defendant killed Foulk, it was necessary that the jury should be put in possession of all the facts and circumstances; and, to do this, the condition of the ground, and the finding of the body of Flowers, were necessarily referred to.

It is urged that the court erred in allowing the prosecution to cross-examine Dr. Danforth as to the nature of the complaint for which he treated the defendant. It is claimed that the testimony was "irrelevant, immaterial, and incompetent, being a privileged communication between patient and physician." There is no merit in the contention. The rule as to privileged communications between patient and physician does not apply in criminal cases. The chapter on "Witnesses" in the Code of Civil Procedure limits the rule to civil actions (section 1881, subd. 4); and the Penal Code, which expressly preserves the rule as to husband and wife in the chapter determining "Who may be Witnesses in Criminal Actions," makes no mention of physician and patient. Freel v. Railway Co., 97 Cal. 40, 31 Pac. 730. At common law the rule as to physicians was not observed in either civil or criminal cases. 3 Rice, Ev. § 209. The statutory privilege was not conferred to shield a person charged with the murder of another (People v. Harris, 136 N. Y. 448, 33 N. E. 65), and it certainly was not intended to be used as a weapon against one charged with crime.

We do not think the court erred in permitting certain witnesses to give their opinions as to the mental condition of the defendant. It was shown that they were acquainted with the defendant, and had more or less opportunity for acquiring knowledge on which to base an opinion. As was said in Estate of Carpenter, 94 Cal. 416, 29 Pac. 1101: "A very large discretion must be conceded to the trial court." See, also, People v. Pico, 62 Cal. 53.

The evidence of acts and declarations of Dynelly was competent and material. There was evidence tending to show joint preparations on the part of the defendant and Dynelly to kill Foulk. The two met on the picnic grounds prior to the shooting, and approached the deceased together, with revolvers drawn. Proof of a conspiracy, like any other fact, may be accomplished by circumstantial evidence. Our attention has not been called to any act or declaration on the part of Dynelly which was inadmissible, if the jury believed, as they might well believe, under the evidence, that there was a conspiracy between him and the defendant to kill Foulk.

One of the points—perhaps the main point—relied upon by the defense for a reversal is that the court erroneously permitted the prosecution, in rebuttal, to prove that the defendant had committed the crime of incest. It is claimed that nothing brought out in the defense justified the introduction of such evidence; that it is an attempt to prejudice the jury against the defendant, by showing that he had committed other offenses, and not of the same nature as the one for which he was on trial. But we think that the evidence was relevant, material, and properly given in rebuttal. It was the claim of the defense that the defendant had become insane through fear that the deceased was trying to debauch his (defendant's) daughter. If the prosecution could show that, as a matter of fact, the defendant had committed the crime referred to, the jurors might fairly infer that he was of such a nature that, conceding it to be true that the deceased had illicit, or was trying to have illicit, intercourse with his daughter, the knowledge of the fact would not have the effect of unbalancing his mind; or the jury might have fairly inferred, if they believed the charge to be true, that the defendant's motive in attacking the deceased was not that, entirely, of a parent desirous of protecting the virtue of his daughter. Evidence which tends to show a material fact or motive, although it tends to prove the commission of another offense by the defendant, is relevant and admissible in a criminal action. People v. Harris, supra; 3 Rice, Ev. § 216; People v. McGilver, 67 Cal. 55, 7 Pac. 49; People v. Rogers, 71 Cal. 565, 12 Pac. 679.

The attention of the court was not called to the objectionable remarks of the prosecuting attorney in his argument to the jury. The learned judge was at the time engaged in examining the instructions, and, so far as the record shows, knew nothing about the fact. No opportunity was given the court, therefore, to prevent or correct the abuse.

The twenty-ninth instruction given by the court is not in conflict with the decision in People v. Bushton, 80 Cal. 167, 22 Pac. 127, 549, but, on the contrary, is in line therewith.

The court's modification of the eighteenth instruction asked by the defendant neither added anything thereto, nor did it take anything away; but if it rendered the instruction unintelligible, as appellant now insists, no prejudice resulted. The court fully instructed the jury that the plea of not guilty puts in issue every allegation, "and compels the prosecution to prove every element necessary to make up the crime charged."

The first instruction asked by the defendant, and refused, was fully covered by other instructions.

The only action of the court, upon which there can arise any serious question, we think, was its modification of the twenty-first instruction asked by the defendant. The instruction, as presented, reads: "I further instruct you, gentlemen of the jury, that if you find from the evidence that the defendant was insane at a period before the homicide in question, then, in that case, his insanity is presumed to have continued." To that the court added these words, "up to the time of the homicide, provided the exciting cause of such insanity also exists up to the time of the homicide." Whether insanity at a period before the homicide is presumed to have continued up to the time of the homicide is determined by the nature of the disease. If the insanity results from some temporary or transient cause, no such presumption arises. The rule does not apply to cases of occasional or intermittent insanity, but does apply to cases of confirmed insanity, of whatever nature. Physio-Medical College v. Wilkinson, 108 Ind. 319, 9 N. E. 167. In People v. Francis, 38 Cal. 188, it appears the court below had been requested to instruct the jury that "insanity once shown to exist is presumed to continue until the contrary is shown;" and the court held that if the term "insanity" referred to a general unsoundness of mind, and not to an aberration of a temporary nature, proceeding from some transient cause, the instruction correctly stated the law; that if the intellectual faculties were so impaired as to produce a general, habitual derangement of them, not traceable to some temporary cause, the law would presume the mind to have continued in the same condition until the contrary was shown. In the view which we take of the case, however, the instruction, if conceded to be erroneous in the abstract, could not possibly have prejudiced the defendant. There is evidence tending to show that the defendant was somewhat deranged a year or more prior to the time of the homicide, but the evidence all shows that the defendant became more excitable as time went on, and his family troubles increased. The jury must have believed, if they believed any of the evidence as to the condition of the defendant's mind, that his mind was in a worse condition at and just prior to the time of the homicide than ever before. Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: HARRISON, J.; GAROUTTE, J.

---

101 Cal. 522

GORDON v. CITY OF SAN DIEGO. (No. 19,031.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 3, 1894.)

QUIETING TITLE—EVIDENCE—ESTOPPEL.

1. By Act Jan. 30, 1852, organizing the city of San Diego, the board of trustees was authorized to sell as much city property as was necessary to pay certain debts. Section 11 provided that, "when the debts of the city are paid, no more of the city property shall be sold, except" as authorized by a vote of the inhabitants. Act Feb. 7, 1874, § 1, provided that no deed made prior to November 24, 1871, on behalf of the city of San Diego, for a valuable consideration, by the corporate authorities, should be invalid for want of a corporate seal. Held, in an action against the city by its grantee to quiet title to land under a deed made in 1869, which recited that the officers who executed it were authorized so to do by a vote of the inhabitants, such deed was admissible in evidence, though not attested by defendant's corporate seal. 32 Pac. 885, affirmed.

2. In an action to quiet title to the east half of a tract of land, it appeared that defendant, being the owner of the entire tract, conveyed to plaintiff the undivided half interest therein; that afterwards, but before plaintiff's deed was recorded, defendant conveyed to another the entire interest in the west half of the tract in fee. Held, that this last conveyance did not estop defendant to claim its undivided interest in the east half. 32 Pac. 885, affirmed.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; W. L. Pierce, Judge.

Action to quiet title, by H. C. Gordon against the city of San Diego, in which a judgment for plaintiff was reversed in department 1 (32 Pac. 885), and plaintiff appeals. Decision in department affirmed.

William H. Fuller, for appellant. Cassius Carter, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. In this case department 1 rendered the following opinion, which was prepared by Mr. Commissioner Searls. We still adhere to the views therein expressed:

"This is an action to quiet title to the east half of pueblo lot 1,215, containing about 45 acres of land, situated in the city of San Diego. The appeal is taken by defendant from a judgment in favor of plaintiff, adjudging him to be entitled to said east half of pueblo lot 1,215, according to the Poole map of the pueblo lands of the city of San Diego, made in 1856, and adjudging that defendant has no title thereto, etc.; also, from an order denying a motion for a new trial. The city of San Diego was a municipal corporation, organized under two acts of the legislature, approved January 30, 1852, and April 28, 1852, respectively. The title of respondent is derived from the appellant, the city of San Diego, through a conveyance executed by the trustees of said city on the 27th day of February, 1869, to one Thomas Whaley, and which conveys the 'undivided half of lot twelve hundred and fifteen (1,215) according to the official map of said city made by Charles F. Poole, A. D. 1856, and on file,' etc. The deed is executed by the president and trustees of the city, who attach their private seals, it being recited that no corporation seal had been 'as yet provided.' Among the recitals of the deed are the following: 'Whereas, the president and trustees aforesaid, by the vote of the duly-qualified electors of the said city of San Diego, at an election for the special purpose, held in said city on the 25th day of May, A. D. 1868, in pursuance of an act of the legislature of the state of California entitled "An act to repeal the charter of the city of San Diego, and to create a board of trustees," approved January 30, 1852, were directed, authorized, and empowered to sell pueblo or city lands, the property of said city; and whereas, on the twenty-seventh day of February, A. D. 1869, the said president and trustees, in compliance with said vote and said act of the legislature, sold to said party of the second part the land and premises hereinafter described for the sum of twenty dollars in gold coin of the United States of America, being at the price of twenty-five cents per acre, upon the conditions provided for and prescribed in a certain resolution or order of said board of trustees, made and entered on the 8th day of June, A. D. 1868, and said party of the second part has made and completed all the improvements upon said lands by said resolutions or order required to be made, and has fully paid said sum of twenty dollars into the treasury of said city.' The conveyance was duly acknowledged, and was recorded in the office of the county recorder of the county of San Diego, August 21, 1869. On the 28th day of February, 1869, the same trustees, by a like deed containing like recitals, conveyed the west half of the same lot (No. 1,215) to one J. C. Babcock, which deed was acknowledged and duly recorded March 1, 1869, viz. prior to the acknowledgment and recordation of Whaley's deed. At a special meeting of the board of trustees held June 8, 1868, it was resolved 'that the only way pueblo lands will be granted is as follows.' Then follow the conditions, which are, in substance, that one-half of the purchase price is to be paid on securing certificate; the land to be occupied and improved within six months after certificate is taken, and it must be taken out within one month after approval of the petition; $250 worth of improvements to be placed upon tracts of 40 acres or less, and $400 upon tracts of 80 acres, within one year, and, if not made, previous payment to be forfeited, and land to revert to the city. When the improvements were made, the petitioner became entitled, upon payment of the residue of the purchase price, to a deed, surveys to be made at expense of purchaser.

"It was conceded at the trial that title to the pueblo lands, of which lot 1,215 was a part, was, at the date of the execution of the Whaley deed, in the city of San Diego, and that whatever title passed by that conveyance was vested in H. C. Gordon, the respondent. Appellant objected at the trial to the introduction of the Whaley deed upon several grounds, the most important of which was that said deed was not executed on the part of the city as required by law. The specification of the reasons why not executed as required by law shows that there was no showing that the city ever passed a resolution authorizing the sale or transfer of the property described in the deed; that the property was not sold or conveyed in accordance with the charter of the city of San Diego. The Whaley deed recites the particular facts upon which the authority of the city trustees to convey is supposed to be founded.

"That particular recitals in a deed are binding upon parties and privies, and that this doctrine applies to the authorized acts of a corporation, does not seem to be disputed by appellant. It is essential to an estoppel by deed that the deed itself should be a valid instrument; and, if void, though under seal, it does not work an estoppel at law or in equity. Caffrey v. Dudgeon, 38 Ind. 512; Merriam v. Railroad Co., 117 Mass. 241. The contention of counsel for appellant is that, the deed to Whaley not being executed under the corporate seal of the city of San Diego, before it was admissible in evidence respondent should have been required to show that the corporate authorities possessed the power to sell the property, that it was sold under such power, and that the board of trustees, when assembled and acting as such, sold the property, and directed the execution of the deed to Whaley. The city of San Diego, as it existed at the date of the execution of the Whaley deed, as before stated, was organized under an act of the legislature of the state of California approved January 30, 1852, and by an act approved April 28, 1852. The first-named act provided for the election of three trustees, one of whom should be president, etc. The seventh section of the act authorized the board of trustees to sell as much of the property of the city as was necessary to pay its debts, 'giving at least ten days' notice of any property to be sold, and to continue the sale from time to time until said debt is paid.' Section 11 of the act provides that, 'when the debts of said city are paid, no more of the city property shall be sold except by a vote of the inhabitants of said city they shall be authorized to do so,' etc. It appears from the act that there had been a previous corporation of the same city, the charter of which was repealed by the act first above cited, and the provisions of section 7 were intended to apply to the payment of the debts thereof. The language of section 11, that after the debts were paid 'no more of the city property shall be sold, except by a vote of the inhabitants of said city they shall be authorized to do so,' must be construed to empower the trustees to sell upon a vote in favor thereof. When the debts were paid the power of the trustees under section 7 ceased, and thereafter their power of alienation came, if at all, from section 11 and the vote of the inhabitants. According to the recitals of the Whaley deed, the qualified electors, at an election for that purpose held, directed, authorized, and empowered the trustees to sell the land in question, and the board of trustees duly assembled, and acting as such by resolution, prescribed the terms and conditions upon which sales would be made. The recitals in the deed, coupled with the law, are sufficient evidence to bind the parties and show that title passed by the deed, provided it was properly executed. We have seen before that it was executed by the trustees, who purported to act for and in the name of the city, except that they signed their names as trustees, and affixed their private seals, etc. On the 7th day of February, 1874, an act of the legislature was approved in the following language: 'Section 1. No deed, conveyance, or grant of land in fee, made prior to the 24th day of November, A. D. 1871, for and on behalf of the city of San Diego and the inhabitants thereof, for a valuable consideration, by the corporate authorities of said city, shall be invalid by reason of the want of a corporate seal, but all of said deeds, conveyances and grants shall have the same force, effect and validity as if a corporate seal of said city had been regularly provided and properly affixed thereto by the proper corporate authorities of said city.'

"It is not deemed necessary to go to any great length in discussing the question of the power of the legislature to enact valid curative laws. The field is a broad one, often involving questions of constitutional law, vested rights, retroactive laws, etc., and giving rise to distinctions sometimes too subtle to be readily grasped by the ordinary mind. Judge Cooley, in his work on Constitutional Limitations, at page 457, states concisely the rule on this subject, thus: 'If the thing wanted or failed to be done, and which constitutes the defect in the proceedings, is something the necessity for which the legislature might have dispensed with by prior statute, then it is not beyond the power of the legislature to dispense with it by subsequent statute; and if the irregularity consists in doing some act, or in the manner or mode of doing some act, and which the legislature might have made immaterial by prior law, it is equally competent to make the same immaterial by a subsequent law.' Tested by this rule, all doubt must vanish as to the power of the legislature to enact the curative law above quoted. No question has ever been suggested, so far as known, of the power of the legislative branch of government to abolish the distinction between sealed and unsealed instruments, as was done by section 1629 of the Civil Code. That a like provision might be enacted in reference to corporate and official documents can scarcely admit of doubt. It is therefore held that the deed of conveyance to Whaley is to be taken, received, and interpreted between the parties to this action precisely as though sealed with a corporate seal of the city of San Diego at the date of its execution. Had vested rights in third parties accrued between the execution of the instrument and the passage of the curative act, a different question would have been presented. That question need not concern us in the present case. Treating the deed as duly executed in point of form, under a statute conferring power upon the officers to sell and convey the lands of the city upon a majority vote of the inhabitants, the recitals in the deed that an election had been held pursuant to the provisions of the statute, at which the trustees 'were directed, authorized, and empowered to sell pueblo or city lands, the property of said city,' etc., is prima facie evidence that an election had been held. It is not here a question of power, but of proof. Many of the authorities go much further in holding to the binding force of recitals in deeds executed by municipal corporations than is necessary to uphold the conveyance in this case. Jamison v. Fopiana, 43 Mo. 565; Devl. Deeds, § 348, and cases cited. I am certain the court did not err in the admission of the Whaley deed. Like considerations apply to the admission of the conveyance from the city to Babcock, provided, always, that it was material testimony in the case, relevant to the issues joined therein, all of which may properly be considered in connection with the findings.

"The point is made that the judgment is contrary to the findings, and not warranted by the facts as found in the case. The facts as found by the court may be epitomized as follows: (1) The city of San Diego, being the owner of pueblo lot 1,215, on the 7th day of February, 1869, conveyed in due form and by valid deed an undivided one-half thereof to one Thomas Whaley; that the plaintiff herein, H. C. Gordon, is the successor in interest, by proper mesne conveyance, of the land and interest conveyed to Whaley. (2) That on the 28th day of February, 1869, one day after the conveyance to Whaley, the city of San Diego executed to one J. C. Babcock a proper deed of conveyance of the entire west half of the same lot, viz. lot 1,215. (3) The deed to Babcock was first acknowledged and recorded. Upon this state of facts the court entered judgment quieting and confirming plaintiff's title to the entire east half of lot 1,215, and perpetually restraining defendant, the city of San Diego, from asserting title thereto, and that it be declared to have no title thereto. The position of respondent is: (1) That by the conveyance to Whaley of the undivided one-half of lot 1,215 he became tenant in common with the city therein. This, no doubt, is a correct conclusion. (2) That when, on the next day, the city conveyed the entire west half of the same lot to Babcock, it had conveyed the whole thereof, and, as a consequence, ceased to have any interest in any part of the lot. This second position is not readily apparent. No doubt two halves of a thing are equal to the whole of it; but the undivided one-half and the whole of one-half of a thing are not equal to the whole of it. When Whaley received a deed of an undivided one-half of lot 1,215 he was a tenant in common with the city, and when, on the next day, the city sold the whole of the west half of the same lot, it simply attempted to convey the whole of a parcel of the lot in which it owned but an undivided half. If a guarantor conveys lot A, which he does not own, I am at a loss to see how, in the absence of mistake or fraud, he can be deemed to have conveyed lot B, which he does own. If the title of Whaley failed to the west half of the lot, it was by a failure to have his deed acknowledged and recorded prior to the recordation of the Babcock conveyance.

"There is, however, another and distinct theory upon which respondent contends the judgment of the court below can be upheld. Section 764 of the Code of Civil Procedure, so far as material, is as follows: 'Whenever it shall appear, in an action for partition of lands, that one or more of the tenants in common, being an owner of an undivided interest in the tract of land sought to be partitioned, has sold to another person a specific tract by metes and bounds out of the common land, and executed to the purchaser a deed of conveyance, purporting to convey the whole title to such specific tract to the purchaser in fee and in severalty, the land described in such deed shall be allotted and set apart in partition to such purchaser, his heirs or assigns, or in such other manner as shall make such deed effectual as a conveyance of the whole title to such segregated parcel, if such tract or tracts of land can be allotted or set apart without material injury to the rights and interests of the other cotenants who may not have joined in such conveyance.' Under this section, or rather by analogy to it, respondent claims that where there are two tenants in common, each owning an undivided half of land, while neither can make a partition binding upon the other by assuming to convey either half specifically, yet if one does so convey, the other would be at liberty to acquiesce, and to accept the remaining half; and that where he has, as in the present case, done so by conveying such remaining half specifically, the two conveyances operate as a complete and binding partition. In support of this proposition we are referred to Freem. Coten. §§ 188, 535, and to the cases of Dall v. Brown, 5 Cush. 289, and Eaton v. Tallmadge, 24 Wis. 223. At section 188 of Freeman, supra, it is said: 'A deed of a specific parcel of land made by one cotenant is not binding on the others, nor can their rights be, to any extent, prejudiced by it. Such a conveyance is not void, but only voidable. It may, therefore, be approved and ratified by the cotenants, and thereby be made to operate as a conveyance in severalty.' Eaton v. Tallmadge, cited supra, is substantially to the same effect as the above quotation. The same may be said of many decisions upon the same question. A partial agreement for the partition of land is void under the statute of frauds, and cannot be enforced, but where consummated and ratified by the parties it will be upheld. In Borel v. Rollins, 30 Cal. 409, it was held that, where an attorney in fact exceeded his authority in executing a deed of partition, his principal, who had ratified the act of partition by his own acts and conduct of solemn significance, such as the execution of deeds of conveyance, which necessarily recognized the partition as of legal validity, was estopped from saying there had been no partition. If the city of San Diego is bound by its acts in the premises, it must be upon the ground of estoppel. But estoppels must be mutual. All the authorities are to the effect that a sale by a tenant in common by specific bounds of a portion of the land in common is not binding upon his cotenant unless ratified by him. I fail to find in the record any evidence of ratification by Whaley or those holding under him. It is true it appears that the deed to Babcock was first acknowledged and first recorded; but Babcock, for all that appears, may have taken with actual notice of the prior deed of Whaley. Had Whaley conveyed the whole of the east half of lot 1,215, an inference might be predicated, perhaps, on that act, as tending to show his acquiescence in a partition; but, so far as appears, he did not do so. It was stipulated at the trial 'that the plaintiff in this action succeeds, by proper mesne conveyances, to any title and interest in and to said pueblo lot No. 1,215 which was conveyed to Thomas Whaley by the deed dated February 27, 1869.' The finding of the court is in harmony with the stipulation. I fail to find in these points any basis for an estoppel in pais. Non constat but that Whaley or his grantees may still hold an undivided interest in the west half of lot No. 1,215." 32 Pac. 885.

It is ordered that the judgment and order be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

(104 Cal. 369)

CHURCHILL v. BAUMANN et al. (No. 18,164.)[1]

(Supreme Court of California. March 10, 1894.)

WATER RIGHTS—DIVERSION—CONSENT—JURY TRIAL.

1. In 1885 plaintiff bought an eleventh share in a dam and ditch, and in 1887 helped the coowners to repair them. In 1886 and 1887 he used his share of the water diverted, or so much as he needed for his land, bought with said water right. He had notice of the making of the dam and ditch, and acquiesced therein until he began suit in 1888. Held sufficient evidence that he consented to the diversion in derogation of his prior rights.

2. In an action for diversion, where defendants deny plaintiff's injury, the record showing no objection to defendants' proof that plaintiff consented to the diversion, waiver of the variance is presumed.

3. An action to enjoin diversion of water and abate defendants' dam and for damages is not an action to recover specific property, or for money due on contract, or for damages for breach of contract, or for injuries, such as, under Code Civ. Proc. § 592, gives the right to a trial by jury. McLaughlin v. Del Re, 2 Pac. 244, 64 Cal. 472, followed.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Modoc county; G. G. Clough, Judge.

Action by Jerome Churchill against H. Baumann and others for diversion of water. Judgment for defendants. Plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Spencer & Raker and C. A. Raker, for appellant. J. D. Goodwin and Jenks & Claffin, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. Action to enjoin the defendants perpetually from diverting water from a stream called "Pine Creek" by means of a dam across the same and a ditch leading therefrom, alleged to have been wrongfully constructed and maintained by the defendants; and also to abate the dam as a nuisance, and to recover damages alleged to have been suffered by plaintiff in consequence of such diversion of water during the years 1887 and 1888. The case was here on a former appeal from the judgment on the judgment roll. On that appeal the judgment was affirmed on the ground that the trial court found as a fact that the plaintiff had consented to all the acts complained of. 95 Cal. 541, 30 Pac. 770. The present appeal is from an order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial, and, in view of the judgment on the former appeal, raises only two questions which need be considered, namely: (1) Is the finding of plaintiff's consent to the acts complained of justified by the evidence? (2) Did the court err in refusing a trial by jury?

1. The evidence, without conflict, shows that in October, 1885, the plaintiff purchased an undivided share of the dam and ditch, which entitled him to the use of one-eleventh part of the water thereby diverted, and that he has owned the same ever since; that in May, 1887, he assisted the defendants in their work of repairing and tightening the dam so that it would divert 550 inches of water,—the largest quantity shown to have been diverted; that in the years 1886 and 1887 he used his proportion of the water diverted, or such part of it as he needed, to irrigate his land purchased with his interest in the ditch; that he had notice of the original construction of the dam and ditch, and of the diversion of the water thereby ever afterwards, and acquiesced therein without objection until he commenced this action. Surely this evidence strongly tends to prove that he consented to the acts in which he participated for his own benefit, and, in the absence of conflicting evidence, was amply sufficient to justify the finding that he did consent. On this appeal, as on the former, it is insisted that the consent of plaintiff was not pleaded as a defense, and, therefore, that the finding of consent has no foundation in the pleading. On the former appeal it is said that this finding was responsive to the issue as to whether plaintiff was damaged or injured by the acts to which he consented. From this Mr. Justice De Haven dissented, but said: "But this appeal is upon the judgment roll without any bill of exceptions, and upon this record the presumption is that the evidence by which this defense was established was received without objection, and that the case was tried by consent of the parties, as if such defense had been specially alleged. This being so, appellant should not be permitted to urge here for the first time that no such issue was made in the court below." Upon this ground Mr. Justice De Haven concurred in the former judgment. Since the record upon this appeal, including the statement on motion for new trial, shows no objection to the evidence of plaintiff's consent, the presumption must remain the same as on the former appeal; so that the former judgment is the law of this case, not only as to the effect of plaintiff's consent, but also as to the presumption that the issue was tried by consent of the parties, as if the defense had been specially alleged. It is the consent of the plaintiff to the acts complained of which constitutes the defense upon which the judgment on the former appeal rests, and not the fact that the plaintiff was a tenant in common with defendants in the dam and ditch, as counsel for appellant seems to understand. The tenancy in common is but a circumstance, connected with others, tending to prove such consent, and is not relied on as being equivalent to consent, nor even as being, of itself, sufficient evidence of consent. It may be conceded that plaintiff might have become a tenant in common with defendants in the dam and ditch in question, without prejudice to any prior rights he may have had to divert water from the same stream through other ditches, in which case his cotenants, without his consent, would be entitled to only the surplus water after supplying his prior rights. Yet his consent to the diversion by his cotenants to the extent found in this case (there being no pretense that it was greater than found) is a complete defense to this action, without regard to his alleged prior rights; and therefore it is unnecessary to consider any question as to priority of right independently of such consent.

---

[1] Rehearing granted.

2. The denial of plaintiff's demand for a trial by jury seems to be justified by section 592 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as construed and applied in the case of McLaughlin v. Del Re, 64 Cal. 472, 2 Pac. 244. So far as this question is concerned, that case cannot be distinguished from this.

All points made by appellant other than those above considered are deemed immaterial. The order is affirmed.

4 Cal. Unrep. 522

PEOPLE v. BELL. (No. 21,051.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 8, 1894.)

Criminal Law—Record on Appeal—Continuances.

Where the record fails to show that defendant objected to numerous continuances, a denial of motion to dismiss, made on the ground that he had not been brought to trial within the time required by the Penal Code, will be affirmed.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; D. J. Murphy, Judge.

Sidney Bell appeals from a conviction of robbery. Affirmed.

Henley & McSherry, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Hart and Wm. S. Barnes, Dist. Atty., for the People.

SEARLS, C. Defendant was informed against for the crime of robbery, and upon a trial had was convicted, and judgment of imprisonment in the state prison for a term of 10 years was entered, from which judgment this appeal is prosecuted.

One point only is made by appellant as cause for reversal. The information was filed in the superior court in and for the city and county of San Francisco, February 11, 1891. On the 13th day of the same month and year the cause was assigned to department 12 of said court, where, on the 14th day of February, the defendant was arraigned, and given until February 21st to plead, on which last-mentioned day, he having refused to plead, a plea of not guilty was, by order of the court, entered, and the cause continued until February 28th to be set for trial. On the day last mentioned the cause was by consent of parties set for trial on the 30th day of March, 1891. Between the date last mentioned and May 7, 1891, the cause was continued some 15 times; sometimes on motion of defendant, sometimes by consent of parties, and at others the record simply shows the cause to have been continued, without specifying the cause therefor, or upon whose motion the same was granted. On May 7, 1891, there is an entry in the record as follows: "Off calendar." On August 15, 1892, the cause was again continued on motion of defendant to August 22d, and thereafter was continued to September 3d, when, on motion of defendant, it was set down for trial on the 6th day of September, 1892. It was again continued by consent of parties to September 14th, when it was again set for trial on the 15th day of September, 1892. On that day, and before the trial commenced, defendant moved for a dismissal upon the ground that he had not been brought to trial within 60 days, as required by the Penal Code. The record fails to show that defendant ever at any time objected to any of the numerous continuances granted in the case. The case of People v. Douglass (decided by this court October 10, 1893) 34 Pac. 490, is in point, and conclusive against the contention of defendant here. In that case the court said: "It will be observed that it does not appear from the first entry that the defendant objected to the continuance, or that it was not granted with his full and free consent. And the rule is that, in the absence of any showing as to what took place when the order was made, the appellate court will presume, in support of the action of the court below, that the defendant assented to the order. People v. Swafford, 65 Cal. 223," 3 Pac. 809. It was further said, as it has been said in numerous other cases, "that on appeal all intendments are in favor of the regularity of the action of the court below, and that error will never be presumed, but must affirmatively appear;" and that "under this rule it was incumbent upon the defendant, if he claimed error, to set out in his bill of exceptions the facts showing it." There are other reasons which might be advanced in support of the propriety of the action of the court below, but the foregoing is deemed sufficient. The judgment appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; BELCHER, C.

McFARLAND and FITZGERALD, JJ. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

DE HAVEN, J. I concur in the judgment, not only for the reasons stated in the foregoing opinion, but also upon the ground stated in my concurring opinion in People v. Douglass, 34 Pac. 490.

(101 Cal. xviii)

PEOPLE v. BELL. (No. 21,052.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 8, 1894.)

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; D. J. Murphy, Judge.

Sidney Bell appeals from a conviction of robbery. Affirmed.

Henley & McSherry, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Hart and Wm. S. Barnes, Dist. Atty., for the People.

PER CURIAM. The appeal in this case involves the same question as that involved in People v. Bell (No. 21,051, this day decided) 36 Pac. 94, and the judgment herein is affirmed for the reasons given in said cause.

(101 Cal. xviii)

PEOPLE v. BELL. (No. 21,053.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 8, 1894.)

Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; D. J. Murphy, Judge.

Sidney Bell appeals from a conviction of robbery. Affirmed.

Henley & McSherry, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Hart and Wm. S. Barnes, Dist. Atty., for the People.

PER CURIAM. The appeal in this case involves the same question as that involved in People v. Bell (No. 21,051, this day decided) 36 Pac. 94, and the judgment herein is affirmed for the reasons given in said cause.

(101 Cal. 583)

FLAGG v. PUTERBAUGH, Judge. (No. 19,270.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 13, 1894.)

APPEAL—TIME OF TAKING — DISSOLUTION OF ATTACHMENT.

The fact that under Code Civ. Proc. § 946, one loses the lien of his attachment by not appealing from an order dissolving it within 5 days, does not destroy his right of appeal thereafter, as section 939 expressly authorizes an appeal from such order within 60 days.

Commissioners' decision. In bank.

Original application by O. J. Flagg for mandamus to compel George Puterbaugh, judge of the superior court, to certify and settle a bill of exceptions. Granted.

O. S. Flagg and Thos. F. Capps, for petitioner. Wellborn, Stephens & Wellborn, for respondent.

TEMPLE, C. This is an original proceeding in this court for a writ of mandamus to compel the respondent to settle and certify a bill of exceptions. The petition was demurred to on various grounds. The demurrer was sustained solely on the ground that more than 60 days had elapsed since the order was made, and the petition does not show that an appeal had been taken. All other objections were expressly overruled, and leave was given to amend in order that the defect might be supplied, if the facts would warrant it. An amended petition was filed from which it appears that an appeal to this court was perfected eight days after the order dissolving the attachment was made. The amended petition is now demurred to on the ground of insufficient statement of facts, and two points are made:

1. The appeal can serve no useful purpose, because it was not perfected within 5 days, and the undertaking on appeal was not for double the amount claimed. Therefore the lien of the attachment was not preserved. Code Civ. Proc. § 946. But the Code expressly authorizes an appeal from an order dissolving an attachment within 60 days (Id. § 939), and it is evident that the appellant is given the option either to take the steps which will preserve the lien of the attachment or not. We are not now called upon to say what effect a reversal of the order dissolving the attachment may have on the lien.

2. It is said that the respondent is not asked to settle and certify the bill of exceptions; that the proposed bill contains no such request. Landers v. Lawler, 84 Cal. 547, 24 Pac. 307, is relied upon as authority for this contention. I do not think that case is authority for this. The original proposed bill of exceptions here was signed by the attorneys, and opposing counsel were notified that it was proposed as a bill of exceptions, and the judge certifies that he was asked to settle and certify it, and that he refused simply because it was not in time. Besides, the bill, as amended, is the bill which respondent is now asked to settle. I think the demurrer should be overruled.

We concur: BELCHER, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, it is ordered that the demurrer be overruled; and under the provision of rule 26, subd. 30, a peremptory writ of mandate is ordered against the respondent, commanding him to settle and certify the bill of exceptions as prayed for in the petition herein.

---

101 Cal. 582

RICHTER v. FRESNO CANAL & IRRIGATION CO. (FRESNO MILLING CO., Intervener).

(No. 18,238.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 13, 1894.)

REVIEW ON APPEAL—PRESUMPTIONS.

On appeal, where respondent fails to file a brief or make oral argument, the court will assume that points made by appellant are well taken.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county; M. K. Harris, Judge.

Suit by J. A. Richter against the Fresno Canal & Irrigation Company, defendant, and Fresno Milling Company, intervener. From an order denying motion for new trial, intervener appeals. Reversed.

T. P. Ryan, for appellant. Firman Church, for respondent.

FITZGERALD, J. Action to abate an alleged public nuisance. Plaintiff had judgment, and the Fresno Milling Company, intervener, appeals from the judgment and the order denying its motion for a new trial. It appears that certain material findings in this case are attacked by the specifications, on the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence to support them. But as the respondent herein has not seen fit to file a brief, or to argue the case orally, we do not feel called upon to perform the duty of counsel by hunting through the record for the purpose of discovering evidence to support the findings, which it was his duty, if it existed, to point out to the court. Under such circumstances, this court will assume, without looking into the record, that the point urged by appellant, that the evidence is insufficient to justify the findings attacked, is well taken. Judgment and order reversed.

We concur: McFARLAND, J.; DE HAVEN, J.

---

4 Cal. Unrep. 524

PEOPLE v. DAVIS. (No. 21,035.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 13, 1894.)

JURY—QUALIFICATION—SECONDARY EVIDENCE.

1. A juror on his voir dire was asked by the defense if he had any special prejudice against offenses "committed during Sunday broils." The district attorney, objecting, remarked that no one broiled but defendant. The juror was accepted without challenge. Held no prejudice.

2. Where a juror understands English "pretty well," but will not say that he could always understand what any one might say in English, it is for the court to decide whether he is competent to comprehend all that might be said in his hearing.

3. A subpoena for the prosecuting witness, a farm laborer, issued more than two weeks before the trial, and like writs sent and specially commended to the sheriffs of four adjoining counties, were all returned unserved. The county officer testified that inquiry had been made of the farmers in the chief towns of the county, and all over the county. Held a predicate for a sworn stenographer's report of his evidence in the preliminary examination.

4. On error assigned to the admission of the reporter's record of evidence on preliminary examination, the certificate, if not set out in the record, is presumed to have been in proper form.

5. There is no objection to the district attorney's reading to the jury parts of the court's instructions, if the court permits.

6. In the absence of a plea of insanity, evidence that defendant had long ago been hit on the head, and mentally and physically injured, is immaterial.

7. An assault with a knife, where prosecutor is cut on the head and neck, is not a simple assault.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Tehama county; John F. Ellison, Judge.

David Davis, convicted of assault with a deadly weapon, appeals. Affirmed.

W. M. Gibson and H. P. Andrews, for appellant. L. V. Hitchcock, Dist. Atty., and Atty. Gen. Hart, for the People.

BELCHER, C. The defendant was convicted of an assault with a deadly weapon upon one Charles Schmidt, and this appeal is from the judgment and an order denying his motion for a new trial.

It is contended for appellant that he was prejudiced by the conduct of the district attorney, and by numerous alleged erroneous rulings of the court, during the progress of the trial, and hence that the judgment should be reversed. The matters complained of will be noticed briefly in their order.

When the juror first called was being examined on his voir dire, he was asked by counsel for defendant if he had any special prejudice against offenses "committed during Sunday broils." The district attorney objected to the question, and remarked: "Nobody broiled but the defendant." It is said that this remark was uncalled for, and tended to prejudice the juror against the defendant. The juror was accepted without challenge; and, conceding that the remark was uncalled for, and should not have been made, still we are unable to see how any prejudice necessarily did result, or could have resulted, therefrom.

Again, when the district attorney was making his opening argument, he read to the jury portions of the instructions of the court; and it is said that, conceding counsel in his argument may read the instructions of the court, still it is improper to read only portions thereof, "and those portions presumably the part bearing most strongly against the defendant; thus emphasizing that portion of the charge of the court most damaging to the defendant." The district attorney had the undoubted right to state to the jury the facts of the case and the law applicable thereto, and it must be presumed that, when he read portions of the charge, he was permitted by the court to do so, and that the portions read were applicable to the facts under discussion, and declared the law correctly. In this we fail to see any misconduct on the part of the attorney, or anything of which the defendant should be heard to complain.

One of the jurors called was a German. On his examination as to his fitness to serve, he was asked by counsel for defendant if he could speak and understand the English language with ease. He answered: "Well, I understand the English pretty well. Can talk it, but I can't write much. Can write a little. I can read pretty well." "Q. Can you always understand what any one says when they speak in English? A. I would not say I could always. In some cases I don't think I could." Other like questions were asked and answered, and the counsel then challenged the juror upon the ground that, according to his own statement, he did not understand the English language so as to comprehend all that might be said in his hearing. The challenge was denied, and an exception reserved. There was no error in this ruling. It was for the court to determine as to the qualifications of the juror, and, after seeing him and hearing him talk, it properly concluded, so far as we can see, that he was competent to act.

Another juror, on being called, was asked by counsel for defendant: "Do you think there are cases in which an aged and decrepit man might, on account of his physical infirmity, necessarily have to use a weapon to defend himself, whereas, in the same case, a younger and stouter man might be able to resist whatever force was used without weapons?" An objection that the question was irrelevant and immaterial was sustained, and this ruling is assigned as error. Undoubtedly a case may be supposed where an aged and decrepit man might be justified in using a weapon to defend himself when a young and vigorous man would not be. But to constitute justification in any case the circumstances shown must be such as are declared by the statute to have that effect; otherwise, neither age nor decrepitude, youth nor vigor, would cut any figure in the case. In this case the law bearing upon the subject in hand was clearly and fully stated by the court to the jury, and we fail to see, therefore, how the defendant could have been prejudiced by the ruling complained of.

The prosecuting witness, Charles Schmidt, was not present at the trial. The district attorney called the under sheriff of the county, and proved by him that a subpoena for Schmidt was placed in his hands for service more than two weeks before the trial, and that like subpoenas were sent to the sheriffs of the four adjoining counties, with directions to use every effort to find the witness; and that all of the subpoenas had been returned unserved. The said subpoenas, with the returns thereon, were offered in evidence, and the officer was then asked: "What other efforts, if any, have you made towards finding the whereabouts of the witness? A. We have made inquiry of every farmer of any prominence we could see in town, and Corning and Vina, and different parts of the county. Q. All over the county and different parts of it? A. Yes, sir. Q. Have you been able from any and all steps taken by you personally, or by the office, to ascertain and find the whereabouts of the man Chas. Schmidt? A. I have not been able to ascertain anything about where he went." One Grinnell was then called, and testified: "I am official court reporter of Tehama county, California, and was sworn to take the evidence in the preliminary examination of People vs. David Davis. The transcript shown me was the evidence of Chas. Schmidt, taken at said examination. The certificate shown me is my certificate. The evidence taken at that time was taken in shorthand, and written out in longhand by me." Thereupon the evidence of Schmidt given on the preliminary examination of defendant was offered and admitted in evidence, against the objection of defendant that no sufficient foundation for its admission had been laid, and that there was no proper certificate to the reporter's transcript. It is earnestly contended for appellant that the court erred in admitting the offered evidence, for the reason that there was no sufficient showing that the missing witness could not, with due diligence, be found within the state. We do not think this contention should be sustained. It appeared from other evidence given during the trial that the witness had been a laborer on farms in Tehama county for several years. He had disappeared, and we cannot say that the court abused its discretion in holding that due and reasonable diligence had been used to find him.

The objection that no proper certificate was attached by the reporter to the transcript cannot be entertained. The certificate is not set out in the record, and what was its form or character does not appear. If deemed insufficient, it should have been set out; and, not being so, it must be presumed to have been in proper form. The other objections to the transcript are without merit, and do not require special notice.

It was proved that, some 10 or 12 years before the trial, defendant received a violent blow on the head, which rendered him unconscious and kept him in bed 5 or 6 weeks, and that his physical condition was greatly impaired by the blow. Several witnesses were then called by the defendant to prove that his mental condition was also greatly impaired by the blow. The evidence was objected to as irrelevant and immaterial, and the court held that it was so, unless the plea of insanity was set up. No such plea being interposed, the evidence was excluded and exceptions reserved. It is not claimed that defendant was an idiot or lunatic when he committed the offense charged; and, this being so, the evidence sought to be introduced was clearly immaterial, since he was responsible for his willful acts, whether he was then a strong or weak minded man.

The instructions given to the jury were very full, covering the whole case, and stated the law correctly. The court properly modified one of the instructions asked by defendant. As presented, it was inaccurately drawn, and, as modified and given, it was clearly correct. The failure of the court to instruct the jury that, under the charge made, the defendant might be found guilty of a simple assault, was not error. The charge was an assault with intent to commit murder, and it was proved, without dispute, that defendant made the assault on Schmidt with a knife, and cut him on the head and neck. He was therefore, if guilty at all, guilty of more than a simple assault. People v. Madden, 76 Cal. 521, 18 Pac. 402; People v. Scott, 93 Cal. 516, 29 Pac. 123. The instructions asked by the district attorney, to which objection is made, have been given and approved in many cases, and do not require further discussion. See People v. Bruggy, 93 Cal. 483, 29 Pac. 26, where the authorities are reviewed.

Looking at the whole case, we find no prejudicial error, and therefore advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: SEARLS, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

(101 Cal. 349)

In re THOMPSON'S ESTATE. (No. 19,295.)[1]

(Supreme Court of California. March 17, 1894.)

APPEAL—AMENDMENT OF DECREE.

Where it appears after decision that, by inadvertence of the court, appellant was charged with the wrong amount, the decree will be corrected.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Luis Obispo county; V. A. Gregg, Judge.

Application to amend decree. 35 Pac. 991. Granted.

Wilcoxon & Bouldin and J. M. Wilcoxon, for appellant. Myrick & Deering and L. Lamy, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Since the decision in this case was filed, our attention has been called to the fact that the decree charges the appellant with $14,275.21. This is evidently a clerical mistake, because the court below decided, after hearing the evidence, that the appellant should be charged with $13,296.90. But, after a careful computation, we find that even the latter amount is too great. The error arose, doubtless, out of the failure to consider the fact that in all of the years except one the expenses allowed exceeded the income. Starting with the sum of $11,453.84, and computing the interest each year at 10 per cent., with allowances for the excess of expenses over income, the amount for which the appellant should be charged is $12,154.68. It is ordered, therefore, that, in addition to the modification heretofore directed, the court below change the figures of the decree to $12,154.68.

(101 Cal. 549)

LA POINT v. BLANCHARD. (No. 18,241.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 12, 1894.)

FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES — PREFERENCE — CONVEYANCE OF POSSIBLE HOMESTEAD.

The mere fact that property conveyed by an insolvent debtor to a creditor with intent to prefer him is of such a nature that it could, and probably would, have been set aside to the debtor as a homestead, does not render the conveyance any the less a fraud on the other creditors.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Butte county; John C. Gray, Judge.

Action by Moses La Point, assignee in insolvency of Thomas M. Boulware, against C. S. L. Blanchard, to set aside an alleged fraudulent conveyance. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

John Gale, for appellant. Reardan & White, for respondent.

TEMPLE, C. The complaint shows that on the 10th day of September, 1892, a petition was filed in the superior court of Butte county, under the insolvent act of 1880, praying that Thomas M. Boulware be adjudged an insolvent debtor; that thereafter such proceedings were had that on the 19th day of December, 1892, an order was duly given and entered, adjudging said Boulware to be an insolvent debtor; that plaintiff, having been duly elected assignee of said insolvent on the 23d day of January, 1893, duly qualified as such, and on the same day an assignment of the estate of the insolvent was executed by the clerk, as required by said act; that on the 1st day of September, 1892, and within one month before the filing of the petition in insolvency, the insolvent assigned, transferred, and conveyed to defendant certain real property, which is specifically described in the complaint; that at the time of said transfer said Boulware was, now is, and ever since has been indebted to a large number of persons in a large amount, and then was, ever since has been, and now is wholly insolvent; that at the time of the transfer said Boulware was also indebted to the defendant, and that the transfer was made with the intention of giving defendant a preference, and of preventing the property so transferred from coming to the assignee in insolvency, under the act, and to prevent the same from being ratably distributed among his creditors, and that defendant accepted said property as a preference as a payment of her indebtedness, and at the time had reasonable cause to believe, and did believe and know, that said property was transferred to her with the intention of giving her the preference, and of preventing the property from being divided ratably among the creditors of said insolvent debtor; that the transfer was not made in the usual course of business, but was made and accepted with the view of preventing the property from coming to the assignee of the insolvent, to prevent it from being distributed among the creditors of the insolvent, and to delay the operation of, and evade the provisions of, the insolvent act of 1880 of the state of California; that the property is of the value of $3,500,—wherefore he asks that the conveyance be canceled, etc. The answer denies some of the allegations of the complaint, and particularly that the transfer was made and received with intent alleged. The court finds that Boulware was an insolvent, as alleged, and that plaintiff was appointed and qualified as assignee, and that the assignment was made; also, that Boulware was, and still is, insolvent and unable to pay his debts from his own means; that, at the time of the transfer, Boulware was indebted to defendant, and that the transfer was made with a view of giving defendant a preference, and that defendant accepted it as a preference and in payment of an indebtedness due her from the insolvent, and then had cause to believe, and did believe and well knew, that the transfer to her was with the view and intention of giving her a preference, and with knowledge that Boulware was an insolvent and unable to pay his debts; that the property so transferred consisted of lots with a dwelling house thereon, in which the insolvent debtor then was, and long prior thereto had been, residing with his family, which consisted of a wife and two minor children; the premises were then worth $3,500; and that the debt due defendant, with certain incumbrances which were upon the premises, fully equaled the value of the premises. The court then found, as a conclusion of law, that the property involved was property which the court could and would have set apart as a homestead for the insolvent, and therefore it would not have been applied to the payment of the indebtedness of the insolvent, and therefore the conveyance did not prevent it from being ratably divided among the creditors, and the conveyance was therefore not a fraud upon the creditors or the insolvent law.

---

[1] For dissenting opinion, see 36 Pac. 508.

The premises had not been selected as a homestead by a declaration by either husband or wife at the time of the transfer, and might have been attached by the creditors. It was not, therefore, property exempt from execution. The sole reason why the court found that the transfer was not fraudulent was because it could and would have been set apart as a homestead for the family if it had not been transferred to defendant. All the facts are found to exist which, under section 55 of the insolvent act, are required to render the transfer fraudulent and void, except that it is not found that the transfer was with the view to prevent the ratable distribution of the property among the creditors of the insolvent; and the reason why this was not found is as above stated. But how can the court now know that this property would have been set apart for a homestead? It would have been done, if at all, as an act of judicial discretion,—a discretion which can now never be exercised. Whether the insolvent had other property suitable for a homestead does not appear. Can it now be determined that the court would have selected, designated, and set apart this precise property? And may not the insolvent still be entitled to a homestead from other property? And again, while it is the duty of the court, in a proper case, to set apart a homestead for the insolvent if he desires it, I do not think the court should do so if he does not desire it. It is not against public policy for one to relinquish his property to his creditors in payment of his honest debts. It cannot now be known whether the insolvent would have desired to retain a homestead. Surely, a creditor to whom land suitable for a homestead has been conveyed cannot insist upon having such property set apart as a homestead for the insolvent's benefit. Such, however, is the real effect of the judgment in this case. Admitting that it is the duty of the court, of its own motion, to set apart a homestead, defendant cannot complain of a failure to do so. Had the property, when conveyed, been exempt from execution, and therefore then beyond the reach of creditors, there would have been much force in the argument of the respondent; but I think it is going too far to hold that, when one is charged with taking property in violation of the insolvent act, he may defend by showing that the property was of such a nature that it might have been made exempt from execution. By conveying it to defendant, the insolvent put it beyond his power to have it declared a homestead. That could only be done for the benefit of the insolvent and his family. The complaint is sufficient. It contains all that the statute requires. I recommend that the judgment be reversed, and the court directed to enter judgment upon the findings for plaintiff, as prayed for in the complaint.

We concur: BELCHER, C.; VANCLIEF, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, it is ordered that the judgment be reversed, and the court below directed to enter judgment upon the findings for plaintiff, as prayed for in the complaint.

(4 Cal. Unrep. 529)

NATOMA WATER & MIN. CO. v. HANCOCK et al. (No. 14,624.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 13, 1894.)

APPEALABLE ORDERS.

No appeal lies from an order adjudging one guilty of contempt for violating a restraining order.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county; John W. Armstrong, Judge.

Action by the Natoma Water & Mining Company against John Hancock and Joseph Wild. An order was granted restraining defendants from doing certain things pending the litigation. From an order adjudging defendant Wild guilty of contempt for violating this order, he appeals. Appeal dismissed.

S. Solon Holl, for appellant. Daniel Titus, for respondent.

HAYNES, C. This is an appeal from an order adjudging the defendant Joseph Wild guilty of a contempt of court, and imposing a fine of $250 therefor. Upon the complaint filed by the plaintiff at the commencement of the above-entitled action an order was granted requiring the defendants to show cause, at a day named, why they should not be enjoined pending the litigation, or until the further order of the court, from doing certain things in the order mentioned; "and that, in the mean time, and until this order to show cause be heard and determined, the defendants be restrained," etc. It was for an alleged violation of this restraining order that appellant was adjudged guilty of contempt. A bill of exceptions was taken, and several errors of law and specifications wherein the evidence is insufficient to justify the decision appear therein. But these alleged errors cannot be examined, as the order is not appealable. See Code Civ. Proc. § 1222; Tyler v. Connolly, 65 Cal. 28; Sanchez v. Neuman, 70 Cal. 210, 11 Pac. 645; In re Vance, 88 Cal. 262, 26 Pac. 101; Ex parte Clancy, 90 Cal. 556, 27 Pac. 411. If the restraining order was invalid and without force for the want of an undertaking (a point not necessary to consider here), defendants had a remedy by motion to vacate it, or by appeal from an order refusing to vacate it. The court below had jurisdiction to determine that question in this proceeding, but, as an appeal from that order does not lie, this court has no jurisdiction to correct any errors of law or fact it may have committed. The appeal should be dismissed.

We concur: TEMPLE, C., SEARLS, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the appeal herein is dismissed.

(101 Cal. 594)

STEWART et al. v. SUPERIOR COURT OF SAN DIEGO COUNTY. (No. 15,482.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 14, 1894.)

CERTIORARI—HEARING ON APPLICATION.

Sup. Ct. Rule 26, relating to original writs from the supreme court, provides that on the return day of the alternative writ respondent may demur or answer, or both, but if he demur only, and his demurrer is not sustained, the writ will issue without further leave to answer. Held, that in certiorari, a hearing after notice of the application is equivalent to a hearing on return of the alternative writ in other proceedings, and calls for decision on the judgment attacked; so that, if the petition do not truly or fully state the judgment, it is better to allow the writ to issue, and try the merits on the formal return.

Department 1.

Certiorari on petition of Julia V. Stewart and W. B. Prentice to the superior court of San Diego county. Order annulled. For opinion on demurrer to petition, see 35 Pac. 156.

Gibson & Titus and V. E. Shaw, for petitioner. E. W. Britt, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. Certiorari. The application for the writ herein was made after notice to the respondent, and, after service upon it of a copy of the petition, a demurrer to the petition was filed on the part of the respondent upon the ground that the petition did not show that the superior court had exceeded its jurisdiction; and, at the hearing of the application, briefs were filed in behalf of the respective parties. The demurrer was also argued orally, and, after consideration thereof, an opinion was filed in which it was held that the court had exceeded its jurisdiction in its order adjudging the petitioners guilty of contempt, and the demurrer to the petition was overruled. 35 Pac. 156.

Rule 26 of this court contains provisions regarding the procedure to be observed when the original jurisdiction of this court is invoked in matters of this nature, and it is provided in subdivision 3 thereof that "upon the return day of the alternative writ the respondent may make return, either by demurrer or by answer, or both. If the return be by demurrer alone, and the demurrer is not sustained, the writ will be ordered to issue without further leave to answer." Although, technically speaking, there is no alternative writ of certiorari, the manifest object of the rule is applicable to petitions for that writ as fully as to those for the other original writs referred to in the rule. A hearing after notice for the application serves the same purpose as the hearing upon the return to an alternative writ of mandate or prohibition. One object of the rule is to enable the parties to the application to obtain a decision upon the sufficiency of the order or judgment sought to be annulled, without incurring the expense or the delay attendant upon waiting until there has been a return to the issuance of the writ. If the order or judgment is set out at length in the petition, and the respondent concedes that it is correctly set forth therein, no useful purpose is served by the issuance of the writ and a formal return thereto in which the same order or judgment would be merely repeated. It is only when the correctness of the order as set out is challenged, or when other portions of the record will qualify its terms, that it would seem necessary for the issuance of the writ before a hearing upon the merits, and in such case the better practice would be to allow the writ to issue, and have the hearing upon the merits await the return; but when the entire merits of the controversy are presented in the petition, and the only question for determination is one of law depending upon a consideration of the order or judgment itself, a demurrer to the petition calls for a decision upon the sufficiency of the order. If the parties prefer to adopt this course of procedure the decision thereon will be upon the merits, and, if the demurrer is overruled, the subsequent issuance of the writ and the judgment to be rendered after its return will be merely formal, and in accordance with the decision upon the demurrer.

After the decision upon the demurrer herein, upon the suggestion of the respondent that the import of this rule had been misconceived, and that the record to be certified under return to the writ might be different from that set forth in the petition, an order was made for the issuance of the writ. In response thereto, the clerk of the superior court has made a return in which he has certified to this court a transcript of the proceedings of the court below. The copies of the judgment of the superior court, and of the order adjudging the petitioners guilty of contempt, of which they ask a review, as contained in the return of the respondent, do not differ in terms from the copies of the same judgment and order which had been set out in the petition, and the other portions of the return are merely matters of inducement, leading up to the rendition of the judgment in the action and to the order sought to be annulled, but do not qualify or change the scope and effect of the order itself; and, as it was held in our decision upon the demurrer that the court had exceeded its jurisdiction in making that order, it follows that the judgment to be rendered upon the return of the writ is merely to apply the decision thus made, and direct a judgment to be entered annulling the order; and it is so ordered.

We concur: PATERSON, J.; DE HAVEN, J.

(101 Cal. 624)

In re BURRIS. (No. 21,036.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 14, 1894.)

DISBARMENT OF ATTORNEY.

An attorney of an administratrix, who obtains from her a receipt for money of the estate deposited in bank on the false representation that it was necessary to deposit the money with the probate court, and who draws and retains it, not intending to deposit it with the court, though repeatedly assuring her that he had done so, and refuses on demand, and on an order of the probate court, to pay her the money, should be disbarred.

In bank.

Information for the removal of John F. Burris from the office of attorney and counselor at law.

R. P. Tappan, for petitioner. John F. Burris, in pro. per.

PER CURIAM. This is a proceeding based upon the written and verified accusation of Mrs. Johanna Nelson, in which she alleges certain misconduct of John F. Burris, and prays that he be removed from the office which he has heretofore exercised of attorney and counselor at law. Answer was made by the respondent. The matter was referred to a commissioner, to take and report the evidence and findings of fact; and in due time he made his report. One of the specifications in the accusation is that respondent procured the name of one Fred. C. Smith to be signed to a certain affidavit to a bond, so that it falsely appeared that said Smith had appeared before a certain notary public and qualified as a surety, whereas he had never signed said affidavit or appeared before said notary, and that the judge of the superior court who approved the bond was thus fraudulently imposed upon. This averment is supported by the evidence and findings, and the conduct of the respondent in that matter was reprehensible; but, as Smith was really willing and ready to qualify as a surety on the bond, it is difficult to see what bad motive respondent could have had to insert his name in the affidavit, and it may possibly have been the result of mere carelessness.

But the other main charge in the accusation is of a most serious nature. Mrs. Nelson was administratrix of the estate of one David Johnson, deceased, and the respondent, Burris, was her attorney of record. A part of the estate of Johnson consisted of money deposited in a bank known as the "San Francisco Savings Union;" and the charge is that respondent secured possession of said money by false representations made by him to Mrs. Nelson, and that he kept said money, although he had represented to her that it was necessary to deposit it in another place.

This charge is fully sustained by the evidence. The finding of the commissioner upon this point is as follows: "May 8, 1893, Burris procured from the savings bank the form of a receipt which it was necessary for the administratrix to sign for the money, and took the same to Mrs. Nelson, telling her that it was necessary for him to draw the money from the bank, and send it to the judge of Solano county, who would keep it for four months, when, if there was anything left after paying the costs, she would get it. Confiding in these statements, Nelson signed the receipt, and acknowledged the same before a notary. Respondent thereupon drew the money from the bank, and retained it in his own possession. He did not intend to send the money to the judge or the clerk, although he repeatedly assured Mrs. Nelson afterwards that he had done so." It is further found that "such representations were made with the intention of deceiving Mrs. Nelson, and to induce her to consent that he should procure the money, and to enable him to retain it in his possession." In June, 1893, Mrs. Nelson discovered that the money had not been sent to the judge, and changed her attorney, and demanded the money from respondent; but he refused to pay her the money, and still refuses, although the probate court has made an order requiring him to do so. We think that this conduct on the part of respondent is an entirely inexcusable and most flagrant violation of the sworn duties of an attorney. He betrayed the confidence of his client; induced her by false representations and pretenses to consent to the wrongful appropriation to himself of trust funds which she held in a fiduciary capacity; and, presuming upon her want of knowledge of her legal responsibilities, misled her, for his own gain, into a position embarrassing to her reputation. His claim is that he wanted the money to secure a bondsman, and for his own fees and expenses. He would have had no right, under any circumstances, to have taken the money for that purpose; but for the duplicity and false statements by which he deceived his client there could, in the nature of things, be no excuse whatever. Let judgment be entered, ordering and adjudging that the name of the respondent, John F. Burris, be, and hereby is, stricken from the roll of attorneys and counselors of this court, and that he be perpetually precluded from practicing as an attorney or counselor at law in all the courts of the state of California. This judgment shall take effect on April 2, 1894.

---

101 Cal. 648

POLY et al. v. WILLIAMS. (No. 18,223.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 17, 1894.)

COUNTERCLAIM—WHEN ALLOWABLE.

A promise to pay a stated sum as damages for property destroyed by trespassing animals is matter arising on contract within Code Civ. Proc. § 438, providing that, in an action on contract, any other cause of action also arising on contract and existing at the commencement of the action may be counterclaimed.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county; M. K. Harris, Judge.

Action by Poly, Heilbron & Co. against W. M. Williams. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Reversed.

J. P. Strother, for appellant. H. H. Welsh, for respondents.

FITZGERALD, J. This action was brought by plaintiffs to recover on a certain promissory note executed to them by the defendant. Defendant, in his answer, set up a counterclaim, alleging "that the plaintiffs are indebted to the defendant in the sum of $1,200 upon an account for nursery stock, consisting of fruit trees and grape vines eaten up and destroyed by the hogs, cattle, and horses of the plaintiffs, during the year of 1892, prior to the commencement of this action, at the county of Fresno, and state of California, which the plaintiffs then and there promised and agreed to pay the defendant; that no part thereof has been paid, and that the said sum of $1,200 is now due and owing to the defendant from the plaintiffs." Plaintiffs demurred to that part of the answer pleading a counterclaim, and at the same time moved the court to strike it out. The demurrer was sustained, and the motion granted, and, upon defendant declining to amend, the case was tried by the court without a jury, and judgment given for plaintiffs. This appeal is taken by the defendant from the judgment and the order denying his motion for a new trial.

The only question necessary to be determined on this appeal is, did the counterclaim set out in the defendant's answer state a cause of action arising upon contract, and existing at the commencement of the action, within the meaning of the provisions of subdivision 2 of section 438 of the Code of Civil Procedure?[1] It is contended by respondents that the alleged counterclaim is based entirely upon an alleged trespass, from which no contractual liability can be implied. This contention cannot be sustained. While it is true that a counterclaim sounding in tort cannot be set up as a defense to an action arising upon contract, yet it is equally true that a promise or agreement to pay a stated sum of money in full satisfaction of damages resulting from a tort becomes a matter arising upon contract, and, as such, may be properly pleaded as a counterclaim to an action founded upon contract. The counterclaim herein, although somewhat informally pleaded, states a valid, express promise by plaintiffs to pay to the defendant the sum of $1,200 upon an account for nursery stock destroyed as alleged. It may be that the facts constituting the trespass were stated merely for the purpose of showing a consideration for the promise and agreement alleged, and not for the purpose of raising an implied promise therefrom, as claimed by respondents. "An implied promise is a mere conclusion of law, and the facts from which such a promise is implied must, under our system of pleading, be stated. But the rule is different in the case of an express promise, for such a promise is an ultimate fact, and must be pleaded as such. Nor is the word "express" necessary to be used in pleading a promise, for the reason that, when a promise is alleged in a pleading, it must be held to be express; and proof of an express promise or agreement is necessary in order to sustain the counterclaim pleaded herein. From these views it is clear that the court below erred in sustaining the demurrer and granting the motion to strike out that part of the answer setting up a counterclaim, for which error the judgment and order are reversed.

---

[1] Code Civ. Proc. § 438, provides that, in an action on contract, any other cause of action also arising on contract may be counterclaimed.

We concur: DE HAVEN, J.; McFARLAND, J.

---

101 Cal. 563

GWYNN v. DIERSSEN. (No. 18,244.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 13, 1894.)

HUSBAND AND WIFE — COMMUNITY PROPERTY — SALE UNDER DECREE RENDERED AGAINST WIFE —EFFECT.

1. A conveyance to a wife vests title in the community where the consideration was not paid out of her separate estate.

2. Under Pol. Code, § 3461, providing that a list of assessments against land must contain "the names of the owners of each tract if known, and, if unknown, that fact," an assessment of community land in the name of the wife is void, and a sale thereof under a decree in an action against the wife to foreclose the lien of the assessment does not affect the husband's title.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Yolo county; W. H. Grant, Judge.

Action by William Gwynn against D. Dierssen. There was judgment for defendant, and, from an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Johnson, Johnson & Johnson, for appellant. J. H. McKune and Robert T. Devlin, for respondent.

PATERSON, J. This is an action to quiet title. The plaintiff's title to the locus in quo is derived as follows: (1) A grant, no consideration being named, from W. B. Taylor, who was at the time the owner of the land, to Cornelia S. Gwynn, November 5, 1880; (2) deed, grant, bargain, and sale in form, expressing a consideration of $350, from Cornelia S. Gwynn to R. W. Bessinger, June 4, 1887; (3) deed from R. W. Bessinger to plaintiff, December, 1887; (4) deed from plaintiff to C. S. Gwynn, consideration of love and affection, dated September 6, 1888; (5) deed from C. S. Gwynn to plaintiff, February 21, 1889; (6) deed from William Gwynn, Sr., father of plaintiff, to the plaintiff, expressing consideration of $500, February 20, 1889; (7) deed from William Gwynn, Sr., to plaintiff, November 20, 1889. The defendant claims title under a certificate of sale by the sheriff of Yolo county, dated April 18, 1891. The sale was made pursuant to a decree rendered against Cornelia S. Gwynn, June 11, 1888, in an action brought to foreclose the lien of a delinquent swamp-land assessment upon the land in controversy. At the time of the conveyance by Taylor to Cornelia S. Gwynn, the latter and William Gwynn, Sr., were, and ever since have been, husband and wife. The court below rendered judgment for the defendant. The plaintiff moved for a new trial, and, from the order denying the same, he has appealed.

The deed from Taylor to Cornelia S. Gwynn vested the title in the marital community. It does not appear whether the purchase price was paid from separate or community funds. The presumption is that they were community funds. Such a presumption may be rebutted by showing that it was purchased with money belonging to the separate estate of the wife, but no attempt to do so was made in this case. The defendant could take no better title, under the decree foreclosing the swamp-land assessment lien, than he would have acquired if the plaintiff had conveyed directly to him, and all parties purchasing real estate standing in the name of a wife, where the deed presumptively or in fact was given for a money consideration during coverture, do so at their peril. Ramsdell v. Fuller, 28 Cal. 43. The rule stated in the case just cited has been approved over and over again in this state, and has become a settled rule of property. Whether a deed be taken in the name of one or the other of the spouses upon a valuable consideration, the presumption is the same. The fact that the property is taken in the name of the wife alone does not, of itself, give a purchaser notice of any separate claim or right to the property. It is otherwise where the deed, upon its face, shows an intention on the part of the husband to have the property conveyed to her as her separate estate. The fact that the deed from the plaintiff to his mother was a deed of gift is immaterial, it being shown that, at the time the deed was given, he had no title to convey. Section 164 of the Civil Code, as amended in 1889, is not retroactive in effect. Tolman v. Smith, 85 Cal. 280, 24 Pac. 743; Jordan v. Fay, 98 Cal. 267, 33 Pac. 95.

The sale of the land under the decree of foreclosure did not affect the title of William Gwynn, Sr. The assessment in the name of Cornelia S. Gwynn was void. It is a universal rule, applicable to all statutes upon the subject of taxation, that provisions for the assessment of property are in invitum, and must be strictly followed to divest title. Hearst v. Egglestone, 55 Cal. 365; Weyse v.

Crawford, 85 Cal. 199, 24 Pac. 735; Shipman v. Forbes, 97 Cal. 574, 32 Pac. 599. Where an assessment names a party as the owner, no liability is created against anybody else, and not against the party named, unless he is the owner of the property. Taylor v. Donner, 31 Cal. 483. The record does not show whether the property was assessed to Cornelia S. Gwynn, or to unknown owners. It must have been assessed to the former, however, as the suit was against her, and against her alone. She would not have been a party to the suit unless it had been assessed in her name, and, if it was assessed to her and to unknown owners, the assessment was void. Himmelmann v. Steiner, 38 Cal. 178; City of Stockton v. Dunham, 59 Cal. 608; Klumpke v. Baker, 68 Cal. 561, 10 Pac. 197; Jatunn v. O'Brien, 89 Cal. 61, 26 Pac. 635. Section 3461 of the Political Code provides that the list must contain the names of the owners of each tract, if known, "and, if unknown, that fact." In this respect the law applicable to swamp-land assessments is the same as former provisons with respect to taxation; and in Grotefend v. Ultz, 53 Cal. 666, the court said: "The first duty of the assessor, under these provisions, is to ascertain the name of the owner of each piece or parcel of property, and to assess it to him. His second, if he fails to ascertain the name of the owner, is to assess it to 'unknown owners.' It follows that the assessment to D. B. Matlock, and all owners and claimants, known or unknown, was void." See, also, Brady v. Dowden, 59 Cal. 51; Bosworth v. Webster, 64 Cal. 1, 27 Pac. 786. In Reclamation Dist. v. Evans, 61 Cal. 104, it was held that no assessment against any tract of land can be enforced, except by an action to which the owner of the tract has been made a party. He must be given an opportunity to contest the charge before it is declared a lien upon his land. Black, Tax Titles, § 57. We think that the deed from William Gwynn, Sr., to plaintiff conveyed the title to the latter, and that it was not divested by the judicial proceedings referred to. The order appealed from is reversed.

We concur: GAROUTTE, J.; HARRISON, J.

(4 Cal. Unrep. 539)

SPOONER v. CADY. (No. 18,191.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 15, 1894.)

AMENDMENT OF PLEADINGS.

1. A pleading may be amended without leave of court under Code Civ. Proc. § 472, providing that any pleading may be amended once as of course and without costs.

2. An amended pleading which is stricken out on motion does not supersede the original.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Lassen county.

Action by Clara Spooner against Frank P. Cady in claim and delivery. Plaintiff had judgment by default, from which, and from an order overruling a motion to set aside the default, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Goodwin & Dodge and Trenmor Coffin, for appellant. A. L. Shinn, for respondent.

SEARLS, C. This is an action in claim and delivery. Plaintiff had judgment, from which and from an order of the court made after final judgment, refusing a motion to set aside the default of defendant and the judgment rendered thereon, defendant appeals. The action was commenced October 3, 1892. On the 13th day of the same month defendant filed a demurrer to the complaint and answer. The demurrer was overruled, but at what date does not appear. On December 15, 1892, defendant served and filed an amended answer, which was not verified, and was filed without any leave of court first had or obtained. Plaintiff moved to strike out the amended answer upon the grounds that it was filed without permission of the court; without notice to plaintiff's attorneys; that it was not verified, and that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The motion was heard December 23, 1892. At the hearing, defendant asked leave to verify the amended answer, and in support thereof filed an affidavit showing, as cause for want of verification when filed, that defendant was absent from the county on official business, and his attorney was desirous of at once notifying plaintiff's counsel of the contents of the proposed answer before preparations should be made for trial of the cause, etc. Defendant was sheriff of the county of Lassen, and, as one of the defenses of the original answer, an attempt was made, although a defective one, to justify the taking of the personal property in question by virtue of two certain writs of attachment. The attempt of the amended answer was to make a more full and specific defense than that contained in the original answer. The court below denied the application of defendant to verify the amended answer, struck the same out, and ordered judgment in favor of plaintiff, which was entered.

The court erred in its rulings. Under section 472 of the Code of Civil Procedure, "any pleading may be amended once by the party, of course and without costs, at any time before answer or demurrer filed, or after demurrer and before the trial of the issue of law thereon, by filing the same as amended, and serving a copy on the adverse party, who may have ten days thereafter in which to answer or demur to the amended pleading." Any pleading which may be amended, once of course and without costs, may be so amended without application to the court or permission therefrom. It is a right conferred upon parties equally with that of pleading originally; a right which the court cannot take from a party to an action. It must be exercised within the time and in the manner specified in the Code, and is quite distinct from the numerous cases in which amendments to pleadings can only be made by leave of the court. The question whether an amendment to an answer as of course must be made within the 10 days given to demur thereto, where no demurrer has in fact been interposed, or whether in such a case it may be made at any time before trial, is an important one, and, as its decision is not necessary to the disposition of the present appeal, no opinion is expressed upon the question. The court treated the filing of the amended answer without leave as being improperly filed, and gave this as a reason for striking it out. Having stricken it out, it went further, and held that this amended answer had superseded the original answer, and hence that when it was stricken out there was no pleading on file on behalf of defendant, and gave judgment against him. It is true that "an amended pleading supersedes the original," but this must be taken with the limitation that, to perform that office or function, the amended pleading must be a valid, subsisting pleading, entitled to recognition as such, and legitimately in the place and stead of that which it supersedes. If it is a usurper, with no right to live or be of record, and only exists until the court can strike it out of existence because it was void ab initio, it fills no such office, and we cannot subscribe to the logic which treats a pleading as void because filed without leave of the court, and in the same breath asserts it to be valid and subsisting as a substitute for the original pleading. It follows that the court erred in entering judgment in favor of plaintiff, and against the defendant, with the original answer in the same cause standing of record, which answer, though defective, presented issues without the trial of which plaintiff was not entitled to judgment. Like considerations apply to the ruling made after judgment on the motion to set the same aside. The judgment and order appealed from should be reversed, with leave to the defendant, and respondent here, to amend his answer, if he shall be so advised.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; TEMPLE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order appealed from are reversed, with leave to the defendant, and respondent here, to amend his answer, if he shall be so advised.

---

101 Cal. 606

DAVIS v. McNEAR et al. (No. 18,121.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 14, 1894.)

REVIEW ON APPEAL—EVIDENCE—INSTRUCTIONS.

1. Where the evidence is conflicting, a verdict will not be disturbed on appeal.

2. Though, after a witness testified that he had been convicted of perjury, it was shown that the conviction was reversed and the prosecution dismissed, a refusal to instruct that a conviction which has been reversed is a mere nullity is not ground for reversal, it being a matter of common knowledge.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Stanislaus county; William O. Minor, Judge.

Action by J. T. Davis, substituted for C. E. Vancil, against G. W. McNear and others, to recover the value of certain wheat. Judgment for defendant McNear, and for plaintiff against the other defendants. From an order denying a motion for a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

P. J. Hazen, for appellant. Reinstein & Eisner, for respondents.

McFARLAND, J. This action was brought by E. C. Vancil against the defendants, McNear and E. W. Pierce and L. H. Day, to recover the value of certain wheat, alleged to have been the property of Vancil, and to have been wrongfully converted by said defendants. A certain corporation, called the Farmers' Co-operative Union, was also made a defendant, but as to it the action was dismissed. The jury found a verdict in favor of plaintiff, for $2,464.48, against Pierce & Day, but they found in favor of defendant McNear. Plaintiff appeals from an order denying a motion for a new trial.

There is a good deal of testimony in the record, and it appears in a disjointed way, so that it is rather hard to follow. Witnesses were frequently recalled; the testimony of one witness was frequently interrupted by the interjection into it of the testimony of another; and the evidence of each party was introduced at several different times during the trial. Respondents have filed no points or brief, and therefore give us no aid in examining the tangled mass. But, upon examination of the record, we see no reason for granting a new trial. Defendants Pierce & Day owned a warehouse in which they stored wheat of others, and also conducted the business of buying and selling wheat. Defendant McNear bought of them certain wheat, and paid them for it; and it is clear that the purchase of the wheat by McNear was a bona fide transaction on his part, and done under his belief that the wheat so purchased was owned by Pierce & Day. It was contended, however, by plaintiff, that this wheat purchased by McNear was the identical wheat raised on certain ranches of plaintiff, called the "Oswalt" and "Clark" ranches, and that it was merely stored with Pierce & Day, and not sold to them. On the other hand, it was contended by defendants that this wheat was sold by plaintiff to Pierce & Day, and that the latter had full title to it when they sold it to McNear; and the main question of fact in the case was whether the wheat had been sold to Pierce & Day by plaintiff, and upon this point there was ample evidence to warrant the jury in finding that Pierce &

Day were the owners of the wheat. Indeed, it was proved beyond controversy that plaintiff made a written sale of the wheat to Pierce & Day, and received a large part of the purchase money, although he contends that he afterwards canceled the sale, for certain reasons, after a large part of it had been delivered. But as to this matter, as well as to all matters concerning said sale, there was, to say the least, a material conflict of evidence. Therefore, plaintiff's contention that the evidence was not sufficient to sustain the verdict cannot be maintained.

There are a number of exceptions to rulings on the admissibility of evidence, but we see no errors committed by the court in such rulings, and deem it unnecessary to notice them in detail.

A great many instructions were given the jury at the request of both parties, and a few asked by plaintiff were refused. We think that the instructions given presented the case very fairly and fully to the jury, and that no material error was committed by the court on that score. It would be useless to review them all here. One of them, perhaps, calls for special notice. It appears in the record, in a narrative way, that when J. T. Davis, a witness for plaintiff, was on the stand, he, without any objection from plaintiff, made, on cross-examination, this statement: "I was tried once for perjury in this court, and found guilty, before a jury." It does not appear whether the statement was made voluntarily, or in answer to the question if he had ever been convicted of a felony. No objection was made at the time by plaintiff, and no effort was then made to explain the said statement made by the witness. But, at a subsequent stage of the trial, plaintiff introduced the deputy county clerk, and proved by him a minute order of the court, which was read to the jury, and showed that on the first trial of Davis for perjury the jury disagreed; that on a second trial the jury returned a verdict of guilty; that the case was appealed, and the appellate court reversed the judgment, and ordered a new trial; and that then, upon a statement of the district attorney "that the interests of justice would be subserved by a dismissal of said action," the court ordered the action dismissed, and the said Davis discharged. Plaintiff asked the court to give this instruction: "A judgment of conviction, which has been reversed, is a mere nullity, and has no vitality for any purpose." And said instruction is marked in the record "Refused." This instruction might well have been given, and, considering the multitude of instructions asked, may have been inadvertently marked "Refused." But we do not think its refusal is a good ground for granting a new trial. Jurors may be assumed to have ordinary intelligence and good sense, and neglect to instruct them on every commonplace matter is not a ground for reversal, when no erroneous instruction on the subject has been given. The order is affirmed.

I concur: DE HAVEN, J.

---

101 Cal. 545

SUTTON v. STEPHAN. (No. 18,201.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 7, 1894.)

CLAIM AND DELIVERY—LIEN OF DEFENDANT—EFFECT—RECORD ON APPEAL.

1. The court's ruling on a motion to strike out parts of an answer cannot be considered on appeal unless embodied in a statement or bill of exceptions.

2. Claim and delivery does not lie where defendant has a lien upon personal property, dependent upon possession, and he is in possession.

3. A refusal to give a specification of the amount due for which a lien is claimed is not a waiver of the lien.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Plumas county; G. G. Clough, Judge.

Action by J. B. Sutton against Jacob Stephan to recover possession of personal property. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

E. T. Hogan, for appellant. Goodwin & Goodwin, for respondent.

SEARLS, C. This was an action in claim and delivery. Defendant justified his right to retain possession of the property demanded (a horse, buggy, harness, etc.) as the keeper of a livery and feed stable, with whom the property had been left by plaintiff to be fed and cared for, and claimed as due him on account of such feed and care the sum of $359.75, for which sum he claimed a lien upon the property in his possession. The cause was tried by the court, and written findings filed in favor of defendant, upon which judgment was entered for costs of suit. The appeal is from the final judgment, and the cause comes up on the judgment roll, without any statement or bill of exceptions.

The record, as presented, contains a motion to strike out portions of defendant's answer, and what purports to be an order of the court denying such motion. These proceedings constitute no part of the judgment roll, and not being embodied in any statement or bill of exceptions cannot be considered. The only question in the case which we can consider arises upon the findings of the court to the effect that on the 22d day of November, 1892, plaintiff demanded possession of the horse and buggy; that defendant refused to deliver them; that thereupon plaintiff demanded of defendant a full and itemized account of all claims and charges for which the said defendant claimed to hold said goods and chattels, and to state the amount of his lien; and that defendant neglected and refused to render any account to plaintiff, or state the amount of his lien, or to surrender the property to plaintiff. The contention of appellant is that these refusals on the part of the defendant entitled him to recover possession of the property. There are various methods by which equitable and statutory liens may be waived. Thus, where one having a lien does not disclose it when the owner demands the property, but claims to be himself the owner, he is estopped from setting up a lien in defense of an action to recover possession by the owner. Maynard v. Anderson, 54 N. Y. 641. Retention upon any ground inconsistent with a lien usually amounts to a waiver. Jones, Liens, § 1019. Other cases might be specified in which the lien would be lost, but in the present instance it would seem to have been the duty of plaintiff to have redeemed from the lien in accordance with the provisions of section 2905, Civ. Code, or he might have brought an action to redeem from the lien. The action in claim and delivery is only proper where the plaintiff has a right to the immediate possession of the personal property. This he cannot have in a case where another has a lien thereon dependent upon possession, and is in actual possession. In New York, and perhaps in some other states, persons keeping any animals at livery or pasture are given a lien only upon giving to the owner, in writing, notice that a lien will be claimed, and the amount of the charges for which such lien is claimed. Where such statutes prevail, a compliance with their provisions is, of course, necessary to the validity of the lien. Our law contains no such provision, and, while it would be eminently proper to amend our Code so as to require parties claiming specific liens upon personal property dependent upon possession to give, upon reasonable demand, a specification of the amount or sum claimed to be due, and for which the lien is claimed, under penalty of a waiver of the lien for refusal, it cannot be said that such is the law in this state. The judgment appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

---

101 Cal. 553

LITTLE v. CALDWELL. (No. 18,208.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 12, 1894.)

Partnership — Accounting by Survivor — Suit by Decedent's Widow.

1. Two partners agreed to conduct a lawsuit for a certain per cent. of the amount recovered, and, the judgment being adverse, took an appeal, pending which one died. The survivor modified the contract, agreeing to pay the expense of further proceedings in consideration of an increased compensation if successful, and got judgment. Held, that decedent's estate was entitled to half the fee provided for by the original contract after deducting expenses chargeable to the partnership in conducting the litigation.

2. Though Code Civ. Proc. § 1585, provides that the surviving partner must settle the affairs of the partnership, and account with the executor or administrator of decedent, the widow of decedent, if entitled to all his estate, may sue such survivor for an accounting, it not appearing that an action has been brought for the purpose by the executor or administrator of her husband.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Nevada county; J. E. Prewitt, Judge.

Action by M. E. Little against John Caldwell, partner of her deceased husband, for an accounting. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

J. M. Walling, for appellant. A. D. Mason, for respondent.

DE HAVEN, J. This is an appeal by the plaintiff from a judgment rendered in favor of the defendant. The superior court sustained a demurrer to the complaint, and this ruling is assigned as error, and presents the general question as to whether or not the matters alleged in the complaint are sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to maintain the action. The plaintiff is the widow of L. B. Little, deceased, and in this connection the complaint alleges, in substance, that at and prior to the death of said Little he and the defendant were partners engaged in the practice of the law, and that during the existence of such partnership they entered into an agreement with certain persons claiming to be the heirs of one William Westerfield, deceased, by which the partners undertook to render their legal services to said claimants in the prosecution of an action to be brought for the purpose of establishing the heirship of said claimants, and recovering for them the property of said estate. This agreement was in writing, and by its terms the said Little and the defendant were to receive, as compensation for their legal services, in the event of a successful termination of the contemplated action, 15 per cent. of the amount of the property that should be recovered, the said heir claimants to pay all the expenses of the litigation. The complaint further alleges that under this agreement the said Little and defendant, "after performing all acts preparatory thereto," instituted an action in the superior court of Nevada county for the purpose of having the said claimants adjudged to be the lawful and only heirs of William Westerfield, deceased, which action was tried, and resulted in a judgment of the superior court adverse to such claimants, and thereupon the deceased, Little, and the defendant proceeded to perfect an appeal to this court from such judgment, pending which appeal, and upon March 2, 1890, the said Little died. The complaint then proceeds to allege that, after the death of Little, the plaintiff assigned to defendant her interest in the contract referred to, in consideration of his promise to pay her "what was right for her interest in the same," in the event of a recovery of the property for the claimants named in the contract; and "thereafter, said heir claimants, finding it difficult to procure sufficient funds with which to further prosecute said action and proceedings to recover said property, and still desiring to prosecute the same, paid to defendant the sum of two hundred dollars in part payment of said expense, and then and there entered into an additional contract and agreement with said defendant, by the terms of which * * * defendant was to furnish the balance of the money requisite to pay the expenses of such further proceedings in court or otherwise as might become necessary to recover said property of said William Westerfield, deceased, for said heir claimants," and to receive therefor 60 per cent. of the amount recovered, instead of 15 per cent., as provided in the original contract; and "thereafter, such proceedings were taken and had by said defendant, under said contracts, that said claimants were adjudged to be the sole heirs of said William Westerfield, deceased," and the defendant received from such claimants the full compensation provided for in the additional or modified contract, amounting to the net sum of $12,000, but refused to allow or account to the plaintiff for any greater sum than $100. The prayer of the complaint is for an accounting, and that plaintiff have judgment against defendant for the sum of $5,900.

We do not regard the averment that plaintiff assigned to defendant her interest in the original contract for the contingent fee, in consideration of his promise to pay her what was right for such interest in the event of the final recovery of the property to which the contract related, as adding any strength to the other averments. If that contract did not survive the death of Little, and nothing had then been earned under it, the plaintiff, as the successor to his estate, had no interest in the contract to assign. But, aside from this consideration, the promise of defendant as alleged was in effect only a promise to pay, upon the settlement of the business growing out of the contract, the amount to which she would be entitled as the successor of the deceased partner; and the question of the nature or value of that interest is to be determined upon the general principles underlying the law of partnership, and if, under such general rules, the estate of the deceased partner would have no right to any portion of the contingent fee earned under the circumstances stated in the complaint, the plaintiff ought not to recover.

It is urged here in behalf of defendant and in support of the judgment of the superior court that when Little died nothing had been earned under the contract made by the firm of Little & Caldwell with the Westerfield estate, and that, as the contract was one for the personal services of both defendant and Little, it terminated upon the death of the latter, and was in fact superseded by the subsequent agreement by which the defendant himself undertook to perform the legal services in the action then pending for the recovery of the Westerfield estate for the clients named in the original contract, and also to bear all the costs attending the litigation; and it is further contended that the fee in controversy was the result of the latter contract in which the estate of Little has no interest. It may be conceded that when a firm of attorneys is employed to conduct litigation, the client contracts for the services of all the members of the firm; and, while perhaps the spirit of such a contract does not require that all the partners shall personally participate in all the steps of the trial, if, in their judgment, it is not necessary so to do (Eggleston v. Boardman, 37 Mich. 14; Phillips v. Edsall, 127 Ill. 535, 20 N. E. 801), still such a contract is one so far for the personal services of all that upon the death of one member of the firm the client may elect to consider the employment as terminated (Wright v. McCampbell, 75 Tex. 644, 13 S. W. 293; McGill v. McGill, 2 Metc. [Ky.] 258). This would be the rule in controversies between the client and surviving members of the firm, where such election was properly made by the client; but the option to declare the contract terminated for such a cause is with the client, and if he does not do so, but is willing to intrust the survivor with the further management of the litigation in which the firm was employed, the survivor is bound to complete the unfinished contract for the benefit of the partnership; and, unless it was otherwise agreed upon between the partners, he would not be entitled to compensation from the partnership, or from the estate of the deceased partner, for his services in doing so. The rule is well settled in regard to commercial partnerships that the surviving partner must complete all executory contracts of the firm which remain in force after the death of a partner, and must settle the business of the partnership without charge against the partnership for his personal services; and in the case of Denver v. Roane, 99 U. S. 359, it was said that none of the adjudicated cases recognize any distinction in this respect between such partnerships and those entered into between attorneys for the practice of their profession; and we know of no such distinction. This obligation of the surviving partner is one of the risks assumed by him in entering into the partnership, unless otherwise specially agreed; and in discharge of this obligation or duty the surviving partner occupies the position of a trustee in relation to the unsettled and unfinished business of the firm, and, while he may compromise disputed claims, or modify an existing contract by releasing the other party thereto from some of its obligations, when, in the exercise of an honest judgment, the best interest of the partnership sems to him to require such action, still, in doing so, he is not permitted to make gain for himself at the expense of the estate of the deceased partner by consenting to the extinguishment of a contract belonging to the partnership, and the substitution therefor of another relating to the same subject-matter, and in the profits of which he alone is to participate. Whatever may be the effect of such new or substituted contract as between the immediate parties to it, a court of equity, in settling the accounts of the partnership, will not treat it as an entire extinguishment of the original contract, or deny the right of the representatives of the deceased partner to an equitable participation in the profits realized from the latter contract, and which may be regarded, so far as concerns the partnership, as only a modification of the former contract. This rule is particularly applicable in the settlement of the partnership accounts of attorneys at law, when the firm has been dissolved by the death of one member, and wherein contracts not fully performed often constitute a large part of the assets of the partnership, and which it is the duty of the survivor as far as possible to complete and preserve for the benefit of the firm. While it is certainly true that when a professional partnership between attorneys at law is dissolved by the death of one, the survivor is entitled to his own future earnings, and is not required to make an allowance in the settlement of the partnership accounts for what may be termed the good will of the partnership, or for the profits of such future business as may be intrusted to him by former clients of the firm, still, in regard to unfinished business intrusted to the firm, as in this case, under a contract making compensation contingent upon final success, and which the client permits the surviving partner to complete, such a contract, although not capable of assignment, is still to be viewed by a court of equity as an asset of the partnership.

Applying the foregoing general principles to the facts of this case as stated in the complaint, we have no difficulty in reaching the conclusion that the plaintiff is entitled to recover. The contract by which Little and defendant were employed to conduct the litigation referred to in the complaint did not ipso facto become extinguished upon the death of Little. The persons with whom it was made did not refuse to permit the defendant to complete it because death had deprived them of the personal services of his deceased partner, but they desired for other reasons to modify it in such a manner as to relieve themselves from some of its burdens, and in consideration of the assumption of such burdens by defendant offered him an increased compensation in the event of final success; and when the defendant consented to this modification of the contract the right of the estate of the deceased partner to share in the contingent fee to the extent given by the contract in its original form was not extinguished. The defendant was at liberty to consent to this modification, and, as the partnership loses no rights thereby, no principle of equity will be violated by permitting him to retain the increased compensation given in the modified contract by reason of the increased personal risk which he assumed. It follows from these views that upon the facts as stated in the complaint the plaintiff is entitled to recover one-half of the 15 per cent. provided for in the original contract, after deducting all proper expenses chargeable to the partnership in the matter of conducting the litigation.

The complaint alleges that the defendant has paid the sum of $2,500 as attorney's fees in the prosecution of the action in which the contingent fee was recovered. If this be so, the partnership is properly chargeable with its proportion of the sum thus paid, viz. one-fourth; but the defendant is personally chargeable with the costs of the litigation assumed by him, and in consideration of which he is entitled to retain the increased compensation of 45 per cent., given by the modified contract.

The further contention of respondent, that under section 1585 of the Code of Civil Procedure[1] the defendant cannot be required to account to the plaintiff, but only to the executor or administrator of his deceased partner, cannot be sustained. It is not alleged in the complaint that any other action for the same cause has been brought by the executor or administrator, and now pending; and, as the plaintiff is entitled to the entire estate of her deceased husband, she certainly has such an interest in the subject-matter as entitles her to maintain the action. Judgment reversed, with directions to the superior court to overrule the demurrer to the complaint.

We concur: McFARLAND, J.; FIZGERALD, J.

101 Cal. 597

PEOPLE v. WHITAKER. (No. 21,002.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 14, 1894.)

ESTABLISHMENT OF HIGHWAY—INSUFFICIENT DESCRIPTION.

An order for the laying out of a public highway, which describes it merely as the "Elam Route," and as "beginning at a certain section corner and extending to "Drum Valley," is void.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Tulare county; W. A. Gray, Judge.

Horace Whitaker was convicted of obstructing a public highway, and appeals. Reversed.

---

[1] The section provides that a surviving partner must settle the affairs of the partnership without delay, and account with the executor or administrator.

E. O. Larkins and R. F. Roth, for appellant. Maurice E. Power, Dist. Atty., and Atty. Gen. Hart, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. The appellant was convicted of obstructing a public highway, and sentenced to imprisonment in the county jail for the period of three months. He now appeals from the judgment and order denying his motion for a new trial. None of the counsel, in their briefs, have been kind enough to specify the particular provisions of the law under which this prosecution has been conducted; and it is only after considerable labor and inconvenience that we find certain provisions of the Political Code which appear to be applicable to the offense charged in this information. For the purpose of proving a public highway the prosecution introduced in evidence certain records of the board of supervisors. The prior proceedings before the board culminated in a majority report of the viewers of the proposed road, wherein it is said: "The undersigned, appointed by your honorable body to view and locate a public road, commencing at the one-quarter section corner between sections 7 and 18, T. 16 S., R. 25 E., Mount Diablo base and meridian, running thence to Drum Valley, respectfully report that we commenced to view and survey on the 8th day of April, 1878, from Drum Valley. The course of this proposed road is southwesterly from Drum Valley. The length of the road is ——. The cost of the construction will be as follows: * * * For grading the Elam route on the east side of the Campbell grade, not to exceed $500." After stating some other matters, not necessary to notice, the report concludes: "We therefore respectfully recommend to your honorable body that you declare the road known as the 'Elam Route' a public highway." This report was adopted by the board of supervisors, and the road master of district No. 4 ordered to open the same "on Elam route." The final order of the board in the matter of laying out this contemplated road is as follows: "In the matter of the viewers' report on public road from Sand Creek to Drum Valley, the viewers heretofore appointed by this board to view and locate said road have filed their report thereof, from which it appears that no damages are claimed by any person from the location thereof. It is therefore ordered that said road as reported by said viewers be, and the same is hereby, declared a public highway, and the road overseer of the district in which the road is located is hereby ordered to open the same." The order in itself does not purport to declare any particular described proposed line of road a public highway, but declares the road reported by the viewers a public highway. Upon examination of the report of the viewers it will be seen that their report in no way strengthens the effect of the order. The proposed line of road, as described in the report of the viewers, is a road running from a certain government corner to Drum Valley. It is also there referred to as the "Elam Route." These descriptions amount to nothing. They are so general and indefinite as to describe nothing. And, the existence of the alleged public highway depending upon this final order of the board of supervisors, we are satisfied that no public highway is shown by the evidence, and thus the most material element to constitute the offense charged in the information is not proven. Certain field notes of the county surveyor were offered in evidence, but they do not cure the fatal defects we have indicated in the proceedings. They are neither identified as being connected in any way with this proposed road, nor are they in any manner referred to or made a part of the viewers' report, or the final order of the board declaring the road a public highway. It is ordered that the judgment and order be reversed, and the cause remanded.

We concur: PATERSON, J.; HARRISON, J.

101 Cal. 661

CURTIS v. UNDERWOOD et al. (No. 18,229.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 21, 1894.)

PROBATE OF WILL—JURISDICTION—NOTICE.

Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1303, 1304, provide that the clerk must set the time for hearing the petition for probate of a will, and publish notice thereof in a newspaper for a specified time, and that copies of the notice of the time and place appointed for the probate of the will must be mailed to the heirs resident in the state, or personally served, 10 days before the hearing. Held that, where such notice was duly published by the clerk, but was not served on the resident heirs before the day set for hearing, it was not necessary to set a new day for the hearing and publish a new notice to give the court jurisdiction, but that it was sufficient to merely postpone the hearing for service on the heirs.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Calaveras county; C. V. Gottschalk, Judge.

Action by Addie E. Curtis against Abbie M. Underwood and E. B. Moore, guardian of Abbie M. Underwood, a minor, to quiet title to an undivided half interest in certain property devised to such minor by Weeden Underwood, deceased. From a judgment for defendants, and from an order denying her motion for a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Louttit, Woods & Levinsky, for appellant. Reddick & Solinsky, for respondents.

SEARLS, C. This is an appeal from a final judgment in favor of defendants, and from an order of the court denying the motion of plaintiff for a new trial. Plaintiff is the widow of Weeden Underwood, who, since the death of the latter, has intermarried with one J. F. Curtis. Plaintiff and said Weeden Underwood were married September 21, 1880. Weeden Underwood died October 3, 1885, leaving surviving him as heirs the plaintiff and the minor child, Abbie M. Underwood, the defendant herein. The object of the action is to quiet the title of plaintiff to an undivided one-half of all the interest of Weeden Underwood in and to the land and premises described in the complaint, upon the theory that it was the community property of herself and of her deceased husband, the said Weeden Underwood, to the one-half interest in which she succeeded upon his death. The answer denies all right and title of plaintiff in and to the property; as to a portion thereof pleads title in the infant defendant, acquired by her since the death of her father; and as to the residue avers it to have been the separate property of Weeden Underwood, that he died testate, and that by his last will said property was devised to his daughter, the infant defendant; that the will was duly admitted to probate, and such proceedings had thereunder that by a decree of distribution said property was by the decree of the court in probate duly distributed to the infant defendant. A copy of the will, the order admitting the same to probate, and the decree of distribution thereunder, are set out, and made a part of the answer. As a further and separate answer and defense to the action, for the purpose of invoking an estoppel against the plaintiff, defendant averred the execution of a last will by Weeden Underwood, by which he bequeathed to plaintiff the sum of $2,000, and a monthly allowance of $100 per month, not to exceed two years; declared all his property to be his separate property, and bequeathed and devised all the residue thereof to the infant defendant. The answer further avers the death of Underwood, the probate of the will, the payment to and acceptance by plaintiff of the legacy to her, etc., the distribution of the property under a decree of the probate court, etc. The findings are in favor of defendant. So far as these findings are to the effect that all the property involved in the action was separate property of the deceased, Weeden Underwood, acquired by him before his marriage to the plaintiff, or purchased and paid for thereafter with the proceeds of his separate property, the contention of appellant against the findings is unavailing, for the reason that the evidence is ample in support of such findings, and in the face of a substantial conflict in evidence the facts as found must stand.

The more important assignment of error by appellant is founded upon the claim that at the trial the court erred in admitting in evidence the record of the probate proceedings of the proof of the last will and administration of the estate of Weeden Underwood, deceased, in the superior court of the county of Calaveras. The facts essential to an understanding of the question at issue are as follows: What purported to be the last will of Weeden Underwood was filed with the clerk of the superior court in and for the county of Calaveras on the 6th day of October, 1885. At the same time Edgar B. Moore, named in said will as the executor thereof, filed the usual petition that said will be admitted to probate, and that letters testamentary issue to him. In said petition the next of kin and heirs of deceased were alleged to be the plaintiff herein and the minor defendant, the latter of whom was stated to be of the age of about four years, and both of whom were stated to be residents of Calaveras county. Both of said parties, as well as an Odd Fellows' lodge, were stated to be devisees under the will. On the same day an order was made by the superior judge, appointing October 24, 1885, at 10 o'clock a. m., at the court room, etc., as the time and place for proving said will, and hearing the application of Moore for letters testamentary, etc., and ordering notice to be given by the clerk by publication in, etc., for not less than 10 days before the hearing; that subpoenas issue to the subscribing witnesses, and that notice be served upon the heirs residing in the county, etc. A copy of this order of the superior judge, signed by the clerk, was published in the Calaveras Citizen from October 10th for five successive weeks. On the 24th day of October, the day set for the hearing, it appearing that notice had not been served upon the heirs, the hearing was, by an order of the court, postponed until 10 o'clock a. m. of Saturday, November 7, 1885, and it was ordered that notice be given to the heirs. On the same day a copy of the order and notice, with notice of the postponement, was served upon the plaintiff, who acknowledged service thereof in writing, and waived all further notice. A like copy was on the same day served upon the infant defendant by E. B. Moore. At the foot of the notice of hearing, as published in the newspaper, there was inserted a notice of the postponement of the hearing by order of the court until November 7, and it was so published until the hearing. Immediately under the notice of postponement as published was the name, "Ira Hill Reed, Attorney for Estate," but whether placed there as the author of the notice, or, as is sometimes done, as indicating him as an attorney in the case, does not appear, and is not, as I think, important.

The contention of appellant is that the statute has prescribed in explicit terms how jurisdiction may be acquired to probate a will, viz. by publication by the clerk, and by mailing copy of same notice to heirs resident in the state, or by personal service in lieu of such mailing; that both are necessary to confer jurisdiction; hence, that when, on October 24th, it was found that the notice had not been served upon the heirs, the only order the court could properly make was one fixing anew a day for the hearing, and requiring notice to be again published and served upon the heirs; and that, not having done so, the court acquired no jurisdiction in the case, and that all its subsequent acts in the premises were void, and of no effect. We regard this view of the case as more technical than the requirements of the statute. Jurisdiction of the subject-matter in the probate of wills is given by law to the superior courts. The statute prescribes the method by which the court may obtain jurisdiction of the persons interested in such probate proceedings. Section 1303 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that when the petition is filed and the will is produced, the clerk of the court must set the petition for hearing by the court upon some day not less than 10 or more than 30 days thereafter, and must publish a notice of the hearing in a newspaper of the county, if there is one published; that it shall be published at least 10 days, and, if in a weekly paper, it must appear therein at least on three different days of publication, etc. Section 1304 provides that copies of the notice of the time appointed for the probate of the will must be addressed to the heirs resident in the state, and forwarded by mail, etc., and then provides that "personal service of copies of the notice at least ten days before the day of hearing is equivalent to mailing." The order admitting the will to probate recites that, "due proof being made that notice has been duly given of the time appointed for proving said will, and for hearing said petition according to law, to all parties interested." The notice required to be given to absent and unknown heirs by publication was complete on the 24th day of October, 1885, the day upon which the cause was set for hearing. It had been published three times in a weekly newspaper, with more than 10 days between the first and last day of publication. This was a compliance with the requirement of the statute, and the continuance of the publication, and publication of postponement of the hearing, while eminently proper as calculated to impart notice to such absent heirs, is not required by any positive provision of the law. As to such absent heirs, this substituted service gave to the court jurisdiction over their persons as fully as is given by service of a summons in an ordinary civil action. That the court had power to continue the hearing for the purpose of procuring service upon the heirs within the state whose places of residence were known, we do not doubt. The jurisdiction to hear and determine a cause or proceeding involves the power to postpone for good cause the time of hearing, unless prohibited by positive law. The Code evidently anticipates the necessity for the exercise of such power, for section 1306 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that "at the time appointed for the hearing, or the time to which the hearing may have been postponed, the court, unless the parties appear, must require proof that the notice has been given." The clause quoted provides for cases in which a postponement has been had, and that proof of service is not necessary as to parties who appear, and in this latter respect is in line with the doctrine enunciated in Abila v. Padilla, 14 Cal. 103, where it was held that as to parties who appeared notice was waived. Plaintiff, as before stated, admitted service of notice of the hearing more than 10 days before such hearing, and is concluded thereby. The service upon the infant defendant was all that the statute requires, and was, therefore, sufficient. The fact that such service was made by Moore, the petitioner for letters under the will, did not invalidate it. "It is no objection that the service was made by an executor or legatee named in the will." Wetmore v. Parker, 52 N. Y. 450. In that case it was held (1) that there is no statute preventing such service by a party; (2) that the probate of the will by the surrogate is conclusive, unless reversed on appeal or revoked by himself. It cannot be attacked collaterally for such an irregularity. The last proposition is probably based upon the theory that there is a distinction between cases where there is a want of jurisdiction over the person, and that other class in which there is irregularity in obtaining such jurisdiction. Cardwell v. Sabichi, 59 Cal. 490; Drake v. Duvenick, 45 Cal. 463. The notices required by the Code having been given and served as therein provided for, the court acquired jurisdiction to hear and determine as to the probate of the will; and, having admitted the same to probate, and no appeal having been taken from the order, its actions became final as to plaintiff. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1333, 1908; State v. McGlynn, 20 Cal. 234. These views are conclusive of the case made by appellant. It may be said also in favor of the affirmance of the judgment of the court below that, the will having declared all the property of the testator to be his separate property, having bequeathed to plaintiff the sum of $2,000, as well as an allowance pending the closing of the estate, the property having been distributed by a decree to which plaintiff was a party, and she having received all the benefits provided in the will for her, is estopped from contesting its validity; but, as the disposition of the case does not necessarily turn upon this question, it need not be dwelt upon. The judgment and order appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; VANCLIEF, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

101 Cal. 627

GRIFFITH v. NEW YORK LIFE INS. CO.

(No. 18,180.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 15, 1894.)

Life Insurance—Consummation of Contract—Surrender—Failure to Pay Premium Note—Forfeiture.

1. Where a life insurance company does not authorize the taking of notes for premiums, and when they are taken by an agent the loss falls on him if they are not paid, a contract of insurance is not consummated by the sending of a policy to the agent on an application representing that the first annual premium had been paid in cash, and providing that the policy should not be in force till actual payment of the premium, where the agent had taken applicant's note for the first premium, and by agreement of the agent and applicant the note may be given up, and the policy returned to be canceled, the right of the beneficiary designated not having vested so as to prevent a surrender.

2. Where an agent of a life insurance company which authorizes the taking of nothing but cash for premiums takes a note for the first premium, thereby becoming liable to the company for the cash, and individually subject to loss in case the note is not paid, the nonpayment of the note does not forfeit the policy.

3. The benefit of a statutory provision that "no life insurance company doing business in this state [New York] shall have power" to declare a policy forfeited for nonpayment of premiums, except on notice that the amount was due, etc., cannot be waived by a provision in the policy.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county; M. K. Harris, Judge.

Action by Mary V. Griffith against the New York Life Insurance Company. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appeals. Reversed in part.

T. C. Van Ness and J. P. Meux (L. A. Redman, of counsel), for appellant. Wilson & McCutchen, for respondent.

SEARLS, C. This is an action by the appellant, as plaintiff, to recover from the defendant and respondent $20,000, interest and costs, upon two 20-year endowment policies of insurance averred to have been issued by the defendant, an insurance company, for $10,000 each, to and upon the life of E. J. Griffith; loss, if any, payable to his wife, Mary V. Griffith, or, in case of her death, to the representatives or assigns of the insured, and, in the event of his survival for the period of 20 years, to him, the said Griffith. Griffith died within two years after the policies issued, and his wife, the beneficiary named therein, is the plaintiff and appellant herein. The policies were issued, and all payments were to be made, at New York, in the state of New York, where defendant is organized. The cause was tried by the court without a jury, written findings filed, and a judgment rendered thereon in favor of defendant for costs, from which judgment, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, plaintiff appeals.

We are satisfied, after an examination of the evidence and findings of the court, that the alleged insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the several findings cannot be maintained. Technical criticism may be properly indulged as to the precise language used in some of them, but, taken together, they express fully and clearly the facts fairly deducible from the evidence. So, too, the two errors of law assigned upon the action of the court in overruling the objections of plaintiff's counsel to questions put to the witness J. D. Mouser are deemed of little importance, in our view of the case. We think the rulings of the court were correct, but, if otherwise, that the errors would not call for a reversal.

The questions involved are highly important, and are well presented by the facts, as found by the court, which are set out at length, and are as follows:

"(1) That at all the times mentioned in the complaint the defendant was a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the state of New York, with its principal office in the city of New York, and carrying on the business of life insurance in said state of New York and in the Pacific coast states and territories, including the state of California.

"(2) That at all the times in the complaint mentioned, and for many years prior thereto, Alexander G. Hawes was the general manager of the defendant for the Pacific coast, including the state of California; that the duties of the said Alexander G. Hawes, as such manager, were strictly confined to the securing of new business for the defendant on said Pacific coast, including the state of California, and the collection of renewal premiums; to receive all applications for life insurance made within said territory, and to forward the same to the home office of the defendant, in said city of New York; to receive the policies when issued by the defendant, and to deliver the same to the assured upon receiving the premium called for thereby.

"(3) That, at all the times mentioned in the complaint, Messrs. Walker & Cerf were the state agents of the defendant in the state of California, and as such state agents they were engaged in procuring applications for policies of insurance in said company, and were paid a commission on premiums paid upon policies issued upon applications obtained by them; and said Walker & Cerf employed various persons to solicit such applications for life insurance.

"(3½) That for many years prior to the application of E. J. Griffith for life insurance in the company defendant, as stated in finding five, it has been the custom of the company to forward policies procured for the company through Walker & Cerf to the company's manager, Hawes, to be by him delivered to Walker & Cerf, to be by them, in turn, delivered to the applicants for the policies; and the company charged said policies to the manager, Hawes, and the said Hawes, in turn, charged the said policies to the state agents, Walker & Cerf. The said Walker & Cerf, with the knowledge, consent, and approval of the said Hawes, frequently, upon the delivery of policies to the applicants therefor, accepted the promissory notes of the said applicants for the first year's premium due upon said policies; and in the cases in which this was done the said Walker & Cerf became responsible to the company for the amount of such premiums, and, in case of the surrender or cancellation of any of such policies without the payment of the note accepted for said premium, became and were liable for the earned premium upon such policies for the time they were in the possession of the applicant, and unsurrendered and uncanceled.

"(4) That at all the times mentioned in the complaint one J. D. Mouser was one of the persons employed by said Walker & Cerf to solicit for them applications for life insurance in defendant company, in the state of California. That, as such solicitor, said J. D. Mouser was to solicit life insurance in defendant company for said Walker & Cerf, and receive the applications therefor.

"(5) That on or about the 1st day of June, 1889, said J. D. Mouser, solicitor as aforesaid, did solicit one E. J. Griffith, in the complaint mentioned, and then the husband of plaintiff, to take insurance upon his life in the defendant company in the sum of twenty thousand dollars; and thereupon, on said last-mentioned date, the said E. J. Griffith did, in writing, make his application to the defendant company for insurance upon his life in said defendant company for the sum of twenty thousand dollars, to be issued in two policies, of ten thousand dollars each, being the same application, a true copy of which is attached to and made a part of the answer of the defendant on file herein, marked 'Exhibit A.' That the said E. J. Griffith then and there delivered said application to said J. D. Mouser, solicitor aforesaid, and at the same time delivered to said Mouser his two certain promissory notes for the sum of $449 each, payable to himself, or order, six months after date, and dated June 21, 1889, which notes were duly indorsed by said Griffith, and by him given for the first annual premium for said insurance, amounting in the aggregate to $898, in the event said application for insurance was accepted by the defendant company, and policies therefor issued by it.

"(6) That, after said application had been delivered to said Mouser, he, the said Mouser, delivered the same to the said Walker & Cerf, and the said Walker & Cerf thereafter delivered the same to the said A. G. Hawes, and the said A. G. Hawes thereupon forwarded the same to the home office of the defendant in the said city of New York; and the defendant, believing and relying upon the truth of the statements and representations made by the said Griffith in said application, and in consideration thereof, did, on the 3d day of July, 1889, by and through its officers, sign two policies of insurance, numbered, respectively, 323,792 and 323,793, for the sum of ten thousand dollars each, being the same policies of insurance, true copies of which are attached to and made part of the answer of the defendant on file herein, and marked, respectively, 'Exhibit B' and 'Exhibit D.' That said two policies of insurance were thereupon mailed to the said Alexander G. Hawes, manager as aforesaid, and then were by the said Hawes delivered to the said Walker & Cerf, state agents as aforesaid, and by them were then delivered to the said Mouser, solicitor as aforesaid, to be delivered to the said E. J. Griffith. That during the month of July, 1889, said Mouser did deliver to the said E. J. Griffith one of the before-mentioned policies, number 323,792. That the above-mentioned policy, number 323,793, was never delivered by the said Mouser, or anybody else, to the said Griffith, nor was said policy ever in the possession or under the control of the said E. J. Griffith.

"(7) That at or about the time said policy, number 323,792, was delivered as aforesaid to the said E. J. Griffith, the said Griffith, not being financially able to pay said note, requested the said Mouser to return said policy, number 323,793, to the defendant company, for cancellation, and that his said note be returned to him canceled. That thereupon said promissory note was returned to the said E. J. Griffith, and said policy of insurance, number 323,793, was returned by the said Mouser to said Walker & Cerf, with a report that the premium thereon could not be collected; and by the said Walker & Cerf said policy was returned to the said A. G. Hawes, with the same report; and by the said Hawes said policy was returned to the defendant company, with the same report. Whereupon on the 12th day of August, 1889, said policy was by said defendant company canceled.

"(8) That on or about the 30th day of January, 1890, and after the maturity of the hereinabove mentioned note, which he, the said Griffith, had given for the first annual premium on the policy so as aforesaid delivered (number 323,792), said E. J. Griffith stated and represented to the said Mouser that he could not pay said note or said premium, and requested the said Mouser to return said note to him, and asked to surrender said policy. Thereupon said note was returned to the said Griffith by said Mouser; and he, the said Griffith, surrendered and returned said policy to said Mouser. Thereupon, the said Mouser returned said policy to said Walker & Cerf, with a report that the premium thereon could not be collected; and thereupon the said Walker & Cerf returned said policy to said A. G. Hawes, with the same report; and thereupon the said Hawes returned said policy to the defendant company, with the same report. The defendant company received said policy, and on the 8th day of March, 1890, marked the same 'Canceled.'

"(9) That the said E. J. Griffith did not at any time ever pay unto the defendant company, or to any one on its behalf, any money whatever, as premiums on said policies, or either of them, or for any other purpose.

"(10) That neither of said promissory notes ever came into the possession or control of the defendant, except as above stated. Nor did defendant ever know that promissory notes had been given by said Griffith for the premium on said policies, except as above stated. Nor did defendant know, until the receipt by it from said Hawes of the policies as above found, that the premiums called for thereby had not been paid, except as above stated.

"(11) Except as herein stated, neither the said Hawes, nor the said Walker & Cerf, nor the said Mouser were ever authorized by the defendant company, or by any of its officers, to waive any of the stipulations or requirements contained in the applications signed by said Griffith, or contained in the policies of insurance signed by the defendant, nor to receive or accept notes in payment of premiums; but, on the contrary, they were instructed by said defendant company to take nothing in payment of premiums except money.

"(12) That neither the said E. J. Griffith nor the plaintiff paid the second year's premium for the insurance evidenced by said policies, but at the time said policies were issued, and at all times thereafter, the statute law of the state of New York provided that 'no life insurance company doing business in this state shall have power to declare forfeited or lapsed any policy thereafter issued by reason of nonpayment of premium, unless after it becomes due a notice stating the amount of such premium, the place where it should be paid, and the person to whom the same is payable, shall be duly addressed and mailed to the person whose life is assured at his last known post-office address, postage paid by the company;' and further stating that unless the premium then due shall be paid to the company or its agent, within thirty days after the mailing of such notice, the policy and all demands thereon will become forfeited and void, and that in case such payment should be made within the thirty days limited therefor, it should be deemed a full compliance with the requirements of the policy in respect to the payment of premium, and that no such policy should in any case be forfeited until the expiration of the thirty days after the mailing of such notice.

"(13) That at no time before or after the second annual premium became due did the defendant give or mail to the said E. J. Griffith, or to the plaintiff, a notice, as by the law of New York (as stated in finding twelve) provided, or any notice, stating the amount of premium, the place where it should be paid, or the person to whom the same was payable, or that unless the premium then due should be paid to the company or its agent within thirty days, or at any other time after the mailing of such notice, the policy and all payments thereon would become forfeited and void, or any similar notice, and did not give nor address nor mail to plaintiff such notice, nor any similar notice.

"(14) That on the 24th day of July, 1890, and in the city and county of San Francisco, state of California, the said E. J. Griffith died.

"(15) That subsequent to the death of the said E. J. Griffith the plaintiff furnished to the defendant notice and proof of the death of said E. J. Griffith, as and in the manner required by the provisions of the policies executed by the defendant, as stated in the foregoing findings."

The question is, was the defendant, upon this state of facts, entitled to the judgment rendered? For convenience of consideration, I change the order in which counsel for appellant formulate their propositions in negation of the question, and in favor of a reversal of the judgment, by stating their second proposition as the first, and their first as second. Thus transposed, they are as follows: First, that there was a perfect legal delivery of policy 793 (323,793), whereupon the right of the plaintiff, as beneficiary, so vested as to prevent the right of surrender upon the part of Griffith; second, that the surrender of the policies by Griffith without the knowledge and consent of the beneficiary, the plaintiff in this action, was void, and of no effect; third, that the nonpayment of the second annual premium does not defeat the right of plaintiff to recover.

The court finds that this policy "was never delivered by said Mouser, or anybody else, to the said Griffith, nor was said policy ever in the possession of, or under the control of, the said E. J. Griffith." Counsel for appellant do not claim that the policy was ever in the physical possession of plaintiff. Their contention is that there was, as appears by the other findings, a consummated contract, and that it was, in legal contemplation, delivered. This position is assumed upon the theory that the contract was consummated, and that thereupon an interest in the policy vested in the plaintiff, as beneficiary, which could not be divested by Griffith without her consent. As a general rule applicable to the ordinary policies of life insurance, "where the policy designates a person to whom the insurance money is to be paid, the person who procures the insurance and who continues to pay the premiums has no authority, by will or deed, to change the designation of title to the moneys. He is under no obligation to continue to pay the premiums, unless he has covenanted so to do, but if he does so the person originally designated in the policy will derive the benefit. The change of designation can only be made by the persons originally designated, and therefore all of such persons must concur in the change. If the policy is for the benefit of a woman and her children, the children as well as the woman must concur." Bliss, Ins. § 339; Gould v. Emerson, 99 Mass. 154; Chapin v. Fellowes, 36 Conn. 132; Insurance Co. v. Applegate, 7 Ohio St. 292; Ruppert v. Insurance Co., 7 Rob. (N. Y.) 155. As an apparent exception to this rule, it was held in Bowman v. Moore, 87 Cal. 306, 25 Pac. 409, that a change of beneficiary in a mutual benefit association, the by-laws of which provided therefor, made according to such by-laws, was a valid substitution. Another proposition which may be considered as established is this: An express provision in a policy of insurance that the company shall not be liable on the policy until the premium is actually paid is waived by the unconditional delivery of the policy to the assured, as a completed and executed contract, under an express or implied agreement that a credit shall be given for the premium, and in such a case the company insuring is liable for a loss which may occur during the period of credit. Farnum v. Insurance Co., 83 Cal. 246, 23 Pac. 869, and cases cited. These propositions are stated as prescribing limitations upon the insurers in cases where the contract is fully consummated, but do not go to the essential point in our present inquiry, viz. was it so consummated as to bind the insurer? Griffith desired two policies of $10,000 each. The solicitor of defendant was willing to procure them, and take his notes at three months for the premium for the first year. The applications were sent to defendant at New York, representing the premiums as paid in cash. The policies were forwarded to the manager in San Francisco, and by him, through the general agents, to the local agent at Fresno. This local agent has in the mean time become skeptical as to the solvency of Griffith; and, as he and the California agents will be held personally responsible to the company in case the notes are not paid, he delivers one of the policies, and, with the consent of Griffith, declines to deliver the other, surrenders the note for the premium therefor, and returns the policy in question, which is canceled by the company. Plaintiff's rights in the premises only vested when the contract was consummated. Griffith was under no legal obligation to procure the policy for her. He was to pay the premium from his own funds, and might stop short of doing so, or, having paid the first annual premium, might allow the policy to lapse for the want of payment of subsequent premiums. The most that can be said is that, had he consummated the contract, it would have inured to the benefit of the plaintiff; and, although his acts were purely voluntary, he would have been regarded as the agent of the plaintiff in their performance, and defendant would have been estopped from denying such agency. As long as the contract remained executory, Griffith and defendant, or its agents, could, by mutual consent, decline to complete it, without consulting the plaintiff, who could only become a beneficiary upon its completion. Griffith had not only represented in his statement that the first annual premium had been paid in cash, but he had also agreed, in the same statement, "that any policy which may be issued under this application shall not be in force until the actual payment to and acceptance of the premium by said company, or its authorized agent, during my lifetime and good health." We may concede that this agreement might have been waived by a delivery of the policy without such payment, but it by no means follows that the same result follows without a delivery, or that the agent would be legally bound to deliver without payment. In such a case it is the act of delivery, with intent that it shall take effect, that constitutes the waiver, and raises an estoppel against the insurer, and where the intent and act are wanting there is no waiver. Up to the time of delivery the agreement to give credit was a mere personal one on the part of the solicitor, without authority from defendant, which he might and did cancel, with the consent of Griffith, before consummation of the contract. It follows from these views that the finding of the court that policy No. 793 (323,793) was not delivered is one of fact, and not a conclusion of law, as claimed by appellant, and that the additional facts found by the court are in harmony therewith, and, as a sequence, that the first contention of the appellant cannot be maintained.

2. Was the surrender of the other policy, 323,792 (which we will designate as 792), by Griffith void, as against the plaintiff? It is conceded that this policy was delivered to Griffith, and retained by him from July, 1889, to January 30, 1890, when, being unable to pay the note given by him for the first year's premium when it fell due, he requested Mouser, the local agent of defendant, to return the note to him, and that he be permitted to surrender the policy, all of which was done, and the policy returned to defendant, and canceled, as for want of payment of the premium. So far as appears, defendant had no knowledge of the giving of the note, except what is to be inferred by the knowledge and acts of its agents in California. The findings are full upon this branch of the case. We think the doctrine is well settled that where a valid policy is regularly delivered, in pursuance of a consummated contract, to one who has procured insurance upon his own life, payable to another, the insured cannot surrender the policy without the consent of the beneficiary. Pilcher v. Insurance Co., 33 La. Ann. 322; Trager v. Insurance Co., 31 La. Ann. 235; Whitehead v. Insurance Co., 102 N. Y. 143, 6 N. E. 267; Schneider v. Insurance Co., 123 N. Y. 109, 25 N. E. 321; Garner v. Insurance Co., 110 N. Y. 266, 18 N. E. 130; Ricker v. Insurance

Co. (Minn.) 6 N. E. 771; Insurance Co. v. Haley (Me.) 4 Atl. 415; Harley v. Heist, 86 Ind. 196; Hubbard v. Stapp, 32 Ill. App. 541; Packard v. Insurance Co., 9 Mo. App. 469; Bank v. Hume, 128 U. S. 195, 9 Sup. Ct. 41. We do not understand counsel for respondent to seriously combat this proposition. Their theory is that the giving of a credit was, at most, an extension of time for payment, and that when the promissory note of Griffith fell due, and was not paid, the clause in the policy which provided that it should not take effect until payment of the premium became operative, and the policy lapsed for nonpayment. There are numerous cases reported, in which policies have been held to be forfeited for nonpayment of premium notes; but, so far as observed, they are all cases where the insurers might, under their charters,—or were accustomed to,—take such notes, and in which the policies provided for a forfeiture upon a nonpayment thereof. The agents of defendant were not authorized by defendant to take anything except money in payment of premiums. They did consent to take the note in question in lieu of money, the effect of which, according to the evidence, was that they became individually liable to defendant for so much money, less their commissions. It was, in effect, so far as defendant was concerned, a payment of the premium to the agents, who held the note in lieu of so much money with which they were chargeable. It was, as to defendant, a payment of the premium to the agents. and not an extension of the time of payment. The note was payable to order, duly indorsed, and, so far as appears, in no way referred to the premium or policy. Under such circumstances, its nonpayment at maturity did not work a forfeiture of the policy, or defeat its validity. Insurance Co. v. Hoover, 113 Pa. St. 591, 8 Atl. 163; Insurance Co. v. Block, 109 Pa. St. 535, 1 Atl. 523; Boehen v. Insurance Co., 35 N. Y. 131; Miller v. Insurance Co., 12 Wall. 285; Farnum v. Insurance Co., 83 Cal. 246, 23 Pac. 869.

3. Did the nonpayment of the second annual premium, which fell due June 1, 1890 (but upon the payment of which a grace of one month was, by the terms of the policy, allowed), work a forfeiture of the policy? The law of the state of New York, under which this policy issued, is set out in the twelfth finding of the court, and need not be repeated. It is also found that the defendant did not give the notice as required by said statute. In avoidance of this statute, and as a waiver of the notice there provided for, respondent relies upon the following clause in the policy: "Notice that each and every payment of premiums is due at the date named in the policy is given and accepted by the delivery and acceptance of this policy, and any further notice required by any statute is hereby expressly waived." The policy also provided as follows: "That if the premiums are not paid, as hereinafter provided, on or before the days when due, then this policy shall become void, and all payments previously made shall be forfeited to the company." Such provisions as the law prescribes for the advantage or protection of individuals may, as a rule, be waived by them, where not inhibited by public policy. "Where no principle of public policy is violated, parties are at liberty to forego the protection of the law." Sedg. St. & Const. Law, p. 109. Where, however, "the object of a statute is to promote great public interests, liberty, or morals, it cannot be defeated by any private stipulation." Id. p. 110; Civ. Code, § 3268; Code Civ. Proc. §§ 406, 434, 631; Bowen v. Aubrey, 22 Cal., at page 572, and cases there cited. In Caffery v. Insurance Co., 27 Fed. 25, it was held, in substance, that where an act of the legislature provided that, upon the payment of the first premium upon a policy of life insurance, the policy shall remain in force for a certain time, for the full amount thereof, "anything in the policy to the contrary notwithstanding," the statute might be waived, by the express agreement of the parties, by the substitution of a nonforfeitable policy, of a different character, and that, as the waiver was a part of the original contract, the beneficiary was bound by the waiver. In Desmazes v. Insurance Co., 7 Ins. Law J. 926, Fed. Cas. No. 3,821, a like question was discussed; Clifford, J., using the following language: "Nothing is contained in the statute to indicate that the legislature intended to withdraw the clear right which the insured had, outside the statute, to waive the nonforfeiture provisions, if the other party consented." The case passed off upon a different point, and is only useful as indicating the opinion of an able jurist. There are other cases, bearing more or less directly on the subject, tending to uphold the same general doctrine. It would seem, however, that the New York statute was intended to cut deeper, and, as a matter of public policy, to inhibit forfeitures by life insurance companies, except by the method therein provided. "No life insurance company doing business in this state shall have power to declare forfeited or lapsed any policy * * * by reason of nonpayment of premiums," etc., except as therein provided. The statute is a limitation on the power of the company to do a specified thing, except under prescribed conditions. That which a corporation has not the power to do, if attempted to be done by it, is ultra vires and void. Admit that Griffith attempted to waive all notice of nonpayment of premiums. If the power was lacking in the corporation to declare a forfeiture in consequence thereof, it is not perceived how it can be done. The very idea of a waiver involves the right of the contracting parties to make and accept such waiver. Consent never gives jurisdiction not otherwise possessed of the subject-matter to a court, for the reason that it lacks the power to adjudicate such subject-matter, except as conferred by law. A corporation, being the creature of the law, must confine its functions to the limits prescribed for its action; and, if the law expressly inhibits it from doing a given thing, it is powerless to do that thing, and if it can do it only in a given manner the prescribed method becomes the measure of its power. We are not met with any suggestion that the statute in question is violative of any chartered right of the defendant, and, in the absence of a showing to the contrary, must assume the New York statute to be in consonance with its constitutional and chartered rights. The statute in question is regarded as indicative of the legislative will that, as a matter of public policy, life insurance companies should be deprived of the power to declare policies forfeited for nonpayment of premiums, except in the prescribed mode, and that, being deprived of the power so to do, a waiver on the part of the insured cannot be construed to confer such power, in the face of the law which has taken it away. The reasons for such a policy are so numerous and obvious that it is not deemed necessary to occupy time and space in specifying them.

The conclusion is reached that, as no notice was given by defendant, the policy was not forfeited by failure to pay the annual premium which fell due June 1, 1890. It follows from these views that the judgment of the court below, so far as applicable to policy No. 323,793, was correct, and should be affirmed; that the judgment, so far as applicable to policy No. 323,792 is erroneous, and should be reversed. And, as the findings are full and complete, the court below should be directed to enter judgment in favor of plaintiff, and against the defendant, for the amount due upon policy No. 323,792, viz. for $10,000, and interest, less the amount of two annual premiums of $499 each, and interest thereon from the date when they, respectively, fell due, viz. June 1, 1889, and June 1, 1890, and without costs to either party on this appeal.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; BELCHER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment of the court below in favor of defendant upon policy of insurance No. 323,793 is affirmed. It is further adjudged that the judgment of the court below in favor of defendant upon policy No. 323,792 be, and the same is hereby, reversed, and the court below directed to enter judgment in favor of plaintiff, and against the defendant, for the amount due on said policy No. 323,792, to wit, $10,000, and interest thereon, less the amount of two annual premiums, of $449 each, and interest thereon from the date when they, respectively, fell due, viz. June 1, 1889, and June 1, 1890, and that the parties pay their own costs on this appeal.

101 Cal. 609

In re HICKMAN'S ESTATE. (No. 18,242.)

BRONNER v. JAHANT.

(Supreme Court of California. March 14, 1894.)

CONTEST OF WILL—EFFECT OF DEATH OF BENEFICIARY.

1. A public administrator cannot contest the probate of a will under Code Civ. Proc. § 1307, providing that any person interested may appear and contest the will.

2. The death of the sole benficiary under a will which nominates an executor does not render it void.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county; Matt. F. Johnson, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Richard Hickman, deceased, Victor Jahant filed a petition for the probate of the last will. George F. Bronner, as public administrator, filed a contest of the probate of said will, and also a petition that letters of administration be granted him. From a judgment denying his petition, as public administrator, for letters of administration, and admitting the will to probate and granting letters testamentary to Victor Jahant, Bronner appeals. Affirmed.

Armstrong, Bruner & Platnauer, for appellant. Charles H. Oatman, for respondent.

SEARLS, C. This is an appeal from a judgment of the superior court of Sacramento county, in probate, denying the petition of the appellant, as public administrator, for letters of administration, and granting the petition of Victor Jahant for the probate of the last will, and granting letters testamentary to him, the said Victor Jahant, as executor of the last will of Richard Hickman, deceased. Richard Hickman died on or about May 5, 1893, in the county of Sacramento, leaving what purported to be a last will, by which he devised and bequeathed all of his estate, real and personal, to his wife, Elizabeth Hickman, subject to the payment of his debts, and appointed Victor Jahant as the executor of such will, to serve without bonds. Jahant, the executor named, filed a petition for the probate of the will, showing, among other things, estate, real and personal, in the county of Sacramento; that Elizabeth Hickman, the wife, had died; that there were no heirs in Sacramento county; that the next of kin who are heirs, and their residence, were unknown, etc. Appellant, who is the public administrator of the county of Sacramento, filed a contest of the probate of the will, setting out, among other things, and as evidence of his right to make such contest: (1) That he was public administrator; (2) that the sole legatee and devisee under the will, who was the wife of testator, and not a relative, had died during the lifetime of the testator, whereby the devise and legacy lapsed, and the will became null and void. He also filed a petition praying to be appointed administrator of the estate. A demurrer was interposed to his contest, which was sustained by the court. The two applications were heard together, and upon due proof of the execution of the will it was admitted to probate, Victor Jahant appointed executor under the will, and the application of appellant as public administrator to be appointed administrator was denied.

The demurrer was properly sustained. Appellant, as public administrator, had no standing in court to contest the proof of the will. He was not interested in the sense of having an interest in the estate, within the purview of sections 1307-1312 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In Re Sanborn's Estate, 98 Cal. 103, 32 Pac. 865, McFarland, J., said: "If a public administrator could legally assume the character of a standing contestant of wills, notwithstanding the wishes of heirs and devisees, he would certainly enlarge the sphere of his activities; but the limitations of the statute do not allow such inflation." Sections 1726 to 1743 of the Code of Civil Procedure are not intended to define the cases in which the public administrator is entitled to letters of administration, but to provide for the preservation of the estates of deceased persons until a proper administrator is appointed, as will appear by section 1730, which requires him to deliver the estate over to any person to whom letters testamentary or of administration may be regularly appointed. The will in question was not invalidated by the death of the beneficiary. "The mere nomination of an executor, without making any disposition of one's estate, or giving any other directions whatever, will constitute a will, and render it necessary that the instrument be established in the probate court." 2 Redf. Wills, p. 59; Williams, Ex'rs (7th Ed.) pp. 267, 390; Schouler, Wills, § 297. The fact that a testator nominates an executor, but without giving a legacy or devising any part of his property, makes it none the less a will. It may often occur that, subject to the payment of his just debts, a testator is quite willing that his property shall be succeeded to as provided by law, while the selection of the minister through whom the settlement is to be made and the distribution is to be had is not only a matter of deep interest to him, but of vital interest to the estate; and, as the law accords to him the privilege of making the selection of his executor, it must be upheld, when duly made. The fact that the sole beneficiary under the will had departed this life prior to the death of the testator, if a fact, was not one to be determined as a preliminary question affecting the probate of the will. The fact that the document purported to appoint an executor, and provided for the payment of debts, was sufficient to stamp it as a will, and justify its probate as such. Jolliffe v. Fanning, 10 Rich. Law, 186. Again, if the will was valid when made, it could only be revoked or altered by a subsequent writing, duly executed, or by obliterating or destroying with intent to revoke. Civ. Code, § 1292; In re Tillman's Estate (Cal.) 31 Pac. 563. The court did not err in denying letters of administration to appellant or in granting letters testamentary to respondent. The judgment appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; VANCLIEF, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

---

101 Cal. 655

PEOPLE ex rel. BROWN v. UNION HIGH SCHOOL DIST. OF SOLANO COUNTY.

(No. 18,203.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 20, 1894.)

UNION HIGH SCHOOLS—ORGANIZATION—ELECTION—VALIDITY—MANNER OF CONDUCTING.

1. Act March 20, 1891, §§ 1, 2, authorizing two or more adjoining school districts to unite and form a union high school district, require "a majority of the trustees of two or more" of such districts to unite in a petition to the county superintendent for an election to determine such question. Held, that the signing of the petition by the trustees of the districts need not be authorized by the boards to which they severally belong.

2. Section 2 provides that the petition of the trustees shall be accompanied by a petition for the establishment of such high schools, signed by not less than 100 resident electors of "such school district." Held, that the phrase "such school district" relates to the proposed high school district, and not to each of the school districts of which it is to be composed.

3. Under the provision of the act that, if a majority of the votes be cast in favor of a high school, the superintendent shall call a meeting of the boards of school trustees to locate the high school, there need not be a majority of the votes cast in each district in favor of it, and the failure of one district to hold an election will not vitiate the organization of the high school.

4. Under Pol. Code, § 1596, as amended by Act March 20, 1891, relating to the election of school trustees, and providing that the trustees must appoint the inspectors, judges, and clerks of election, and if none are so appointed, or if they are not present at the time of opening the polls, the electors present may appoint them, where the required number of inspectors and other officers were not appointed by the trustees it will be presumed that the deficiency was supplied by appointment by the electors, in the absence of any showing to the contrary.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Solano county.

Proceeding in the nature of quo warranto by the people of the state of California, on the relation of W. B. Brown, against the union high school district of Solano county, to determine the validity of the organization of such district. From a judgment for defendant, entered on the refusal of plaintiff to amend the information after a demurrer thereto was sustained, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Atty. Gen. Hart (Crouch & Johnson, of counsel,) for appellant. George A. Lamont and John M. Gregory, for respondent.

VANCLIEF, C. Information in the nature of quo warranto, filed by the attorney general in the superior court of Solano county, charging that the defendant wrongfully claims and exercises the franchises of a duly-organized union high school district, under an act of the legislature passed March 20, 1891, entitled "An act to provide for the establishment of high schools in the state of California." St. 1891, p. 182. A demurrer to the information, on the ground that it does not state sufficient facts, was sustained by the court. The plaintiff declining to amend, judgment was rendered for defendant, from which plaintiff brings this appeal. The first section of the act provides that two or more adjoining school districts may "unite and form a union high school district, for the purpose of establishing and maintaining a high school therein." The second section enacts that "when * * * a majority of the trustees of two or more adjoining school districts, shall unite in a petition to the county superintendent, accompanied by a petition for the establishment of such high schools, signed by not less than one hundred resident electors of such * * * school district, it shall be the duty of the county school superintendent, within twenty days, to call an election, and appoint the officers to conduct the same, for the determination of such question. * * * Said election shall be conducted in the manner prescribed by law for conducting school elections." Section 3 provides: "If a majority of such votes be cast in favor of a high school, it shall be the duty of the county superintendent to call a meeting of the * * * boards of school trustees uniting, within fifteen days, ten days notice of which shall be given to each member of each board, in writing, by the county superintendent. At such meeting the question of locating the high school shall be determined." The defendant district is composed of eight adjoining school districts of Solano county. It is contended by appellant that the information shows noncompliance with some of the essential requirements of the act, expressed in the above extracts therefrom, by reason whereof the union district was never organized as a corporation, and, therefore, that the court erred in sustaining the demurrer.

1. While it is admitted that a majority of the trustees of each of the eight school districts signed the petition to the superintendent of schools for the formation of the union high school district, it appears that such signing was not authorized by any corporate act or resolution of any one of the boards of school trustees of which the signers were members; and it is claimed that this was a defect in the procedure which vitiates the organization of the union district. No corporate action of the boards of trustees of the several school districts was necessary. The act requires only "a majority of the trustees of two or more adjoining school districts" to unite in a petition. In this case a majority of the trustees in each of the eight school districts composing the proposed union district united in the petition, which was even more than is expressly required by the law, though the legislature probably intended that a majority of the trustees of each district should unite in the petition, as they did.

2. The second section provides that the petition of the trustees shall be accompanied by another petition "for the establishment of such high schools, signed by not less than one hundred resident electors of such school district." In this case the accompanying petition was signed by 107 resident electors of the proposed high school district, but appellant contends that this was not a compliance with the law, and that it should have been signed by 100 resident electors of each school district composing the proposed union district. The question is whether the phrase "such school district" relates to the proposed high school district, or to each of the common school districts of which the proposed high school district is composed. When the word "such" precedes a noun in the singular number, as in this case,—"such school district,"—it partakes of the nature of a pronoun as well as that of an adjective (pronominal adjective), and properly relates to the same noun in the same number as antecedently expressed and qualified, and especially to the antecedent qualification of that noun, and denotes that the noun which it precedes is to be understood as antecedently qualified. In the statute under consideration the singular compound noun "school-district" is found to follow the word "such" twice, but qualified in both instances by the words, "union high," —thus, "union high school-district;" and to this qualification it is that the pronominal adjective "such" relates as its antecedent, thus making it quite clear that the phrase "such school district" means the "union high school district," and not the school districts of which it is composed, and which are antecedently expressed in the plural only. And this conclusion is considerably strengthened by the improbability that the legislature assumed that each of the school districts entitled to unite in the formation of a high school district contained 100 resident electors, since a common school district may contain only 10 families and only 15 census school children. Pol. Code, § 1577.

3. The act requires the county school superintendent, within 20 days after receipt of the petitions, to call an election, and to appoint officers to conduct the same, and also to give notice of such election by posting not less than three notices "for each district concerned, one of which shall be upon the schoolhouse in each district at least ten days before said election," and that "said election shall be conducted in the manner prescribed by law for conducting school elections." The law further provides: "It shall be the duty of the officers of such elections to report the result of such elections to the county superintendent of schools. If a majority of such votes be cast in favor of a high school, it shall be the duty of the county superintendent to call a meeting * * * of the boards of school trustees uniting, within fifteen days, ten days notice of which shall be given to each member of each board, in writing, by the county superintendent. At such meeting the question of locating the high school shall be determined." An election was called, and notice thereof given, as required by the act. In each of six of the common school districts a majority of the votes cast was in favor of the high school. In one the majority of votes was opposed to the high school, and in one no election was held; but a majority of all the votes cast at the election was in favor of the high school. Counsel for appellant contend that, to authorize the organization of the high school, it was necessary that an election should have been held in each of the eight districts, and that a majority of the votes cast in each should have been in favor of the high school, although they admit that it is not so expressed in the statute. The statute provides that the superintendent shall "call an election * * * for the determination of such questions;" and, "if a majority of such votes be cast in favor of a high school," the superintendent must call a meeting of the boards of school trustees, and proceed to determine the question of locating the high school. I think the court below did not err in construing this to mean a majority of all the votes cast in the proposed high school district. The election having been regularly called, and all persons interested having been duly notified of the time and places at which they would have the privilege of voting, their neglect to hold the election at one of the eight places designated did not vitiate the election. Such neglect indicated only that the electors of the precinct at which no election was held were indifferent as to the result. It would hardly be contended that the neglect or failure of the electors to hold an election for county officers in one of the several election precincts of the county would vitiate the election, or that an illegal election in one precinct would have that effect.

4. It is contended that the election was not "conducted" in the manner prescribed by law for conducting school elections, in that it "was conducted by one inspector and two judges" appointed by the superintendent in each school district. For the election of school trustees, section 1596, Pol. Code, as amended March 20, 1891, in force when the election in question was held, provided: "The trustees must appoint the inspectors, judges and clerks of election; if none are so appointed, or if they are not present at the time of opening the polls, the electors present may appoint them." If the requisite number of inspectors, judges, or clerks was not appointed, the presumption is, nothing to the contrary being alleged in the information, that the deficiency was supplied by the electors present at the time of opening the polls.

5. As I think the foregoing properly disposes of all the points made by appellant, it is not necessary to consider the point made by respondent that, if there were any irregularities in the proceeding to organize the high school district, they were validated by the tenth subdivision of section 1671 of the Political Code, as amended by the act of March 23, 1893 (St. 1893, p. 276). My conclusion is that the judgment of the lower court should be affirmed.

We concur: SEARLS, C.; BELCHER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

---

4 Cal. Unrep. 531

BULLION & EXCHANGE BANK OF CARSON CITY v. SPOONER et ux.

(No. 18,192.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 14, 1894.)

MORTGAGES—FORECLOSURE—MATURITY OF DEBT.

When an overdraft account with a bank is secured by a note and mortgages payable on or before three years, and interest as due is charged in the account, the rules against parol evidence (Civ. Code, § 1625; Code Civ. Proc. § 1856) forbid proof of an oral agreement that the debt should be due at any time within the three years, at the bank's option.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Lassen county; W. T. Masten, Judge.

Action by the Bullion & Exchange Bank of Carson City against M. E. Spooner and Clara, his wife, to foreclose mortgages. Judgment for defendants. Plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Goodwin & Dodge and Trenmor Coffin, for appellant. A. L. Shinn, for respondents.

BELCHER, C. In 1890 the plaintiff was a corporation engaged in the business of banking at Carson City, in the state of Nevada. The defendant M. E. Spooner did business with the plaintiff, and on December 27, 1890, was indebted to it in the sum of $14,240.79, on an overdraft account. On that day he executed to the plaintiff a deed, absolute in form, of certain real property situated in Ash valley, Lassen county, Cal., and known as the "Spooner Ranch;" and at the same time he also executed to the plaintiff his promissory note for $20,000, payable "on or before three years after date," with interest, payable monthly, at the rate of 9 per cent. per annum from date until paid, and a chattel mortgage, to secure payment of the note, on certain personal property situated in said Ash valley, and described as 200 head of horses, more or less, including 3 thoroughbred stallions, and 600 head of cattle, more or less, with all the increase of such horses and cattle. The mortgage provided "that, if the mortgagor shall fail to make any payment as in the said promissory note provided, then the mortgagee may take possession of said property, using all the necessary force so to do, and may immediately proceed to sell the same in the manner provided by law," etc. These papers were all parts of one transaction, and were made to secure payment to the plaintiff of the said overdraft account. The deed and mortgage were thereafter, on January 9, 1891, duly recorded in the recorder's office of Lassen county. At the time of the execution of the above-mentioned papers, the plaintiff also executed to the defendant its written obligation to reconvey to him, "on or before the 27th day of December, A. D. 1893," all of the real property described in the said deed, provided the defendant shall, on or before the day named, have paid to the plaintiff the sum of $20,000, according to the terms and conditions of the said promissory note, a copy of which was set out in the undertaking. Thereafter the amount due on the overdraft account was carried forward in the general bank account of defendant, and from time to time up to October 1, 1892, defendant deposited with and paid to plaintiff various sums of money, aggregating, as the court below found, $64,046.83, which sums were credited generally upon said account. The defendant drew checks against the money so deposited, and his checks were paid up to the fall of 1892, when the plaintiff refused to pay any further drafts. Meantime, the plaintiff had computed interest monthly, at the rate of 9 per cent. per annum, on the amount due it, and had charged the same in the account. At the time of the commencement of the action, the amount claimed by plaintiff to be due on the account was $12,146.50. On the 12th of August, 1892, the plaintiff and defendant agreed upon and designated in writing one James Marshall as a pledge holder to go to Ash valley, and to immediately take possession of and hold all the personal property mentioned in the said chattel mortgage as security for the payment of the said indebtedness. Afterwards, the plaintiff, claiming that the value of the property which it held as security was insufficient to secure the balance due on the said account, and that defendant had fraudulently misrepresented the value of the property at the time of executing the deed and chattel mortgage as aforesaid, demanded of defendant that he give further security; and, this demand being refused, it commenced this action, on October 25, 1892, to foreclose its lien upon all of the real and personal property covered by the said deed and chattel mortgage.

One of the issues raised by the answer was as to whether the indebtedness from defendant to plaintiff was due at the time the complaint was filed; and upon this issue the court found "that it was not agreed nor intended that the principal sum of said indebtedness from said defendant M. E. Spooner to plaintiff should be paid whenever demanded by plaintiff, but it was agreed that said indebtedness should be paid on or before the 27th day of December, 1893, at the option of the said defendant M. E. Spooner; and the said indebtedness is not due, nor any part thereof." And as a conclusion of law the court found "that no cause of action exists for the recovery of the indebtedness from the defendant M. E. Spooner to plaintiff, nor for the foreclosure of any mortgage lien or security given to secure said indebtedness, and that plaintiff is not entitled to any judgment for said indebtedness, nor to any decree foreclosing any liens upon, or for the sale of any of, the property described in the complaint." Upon this branch of the case, judgment was accordingly entered in favor of the defendant, from which the plaintiff appeals.

Whether or not the finding above quoted was justified by the evidence is the principal question in the case. In our opinion, the finding was justified, and must be held controlling as to all other questions presented by the record. It is not controverted that the deed, agreement to reconvey, note, and chattel mortgage were all parts of one transaction, and were intended by the parties to operate simply and solely as security for the payment of defendant's overdraft account. These papers are, therefore, to be read together as one instrument; and when so read they express, in clear and unmistakable terms, the time when that indebtedness was to become due and collectible, namely, on December 27, 1893. Section 1856 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides: "When the terms of an agreement have been reduced to writing by the parties, it is to be considered as containing all those terms;" and that, as between the parties, there can be no other evidence of the terms of the agreement, except in certain cases, of which this is not one. And section 1625 of the Civil Code provides: "The execution of a contract in writing, whether the law requires it to be written or not, supersedes all the oral negotiations or stipulations concerning its matter which preceded or accompanied the execution of the instrument." Under the circumstances shown, the plaintiff was not entitled to prove that it was orally agreed that the debt should be due and collectible at any time at its option, and the court did not err in excluding the evidence offered upon that subject. Booth v. Hoskins, 75 Cal. 271, 17 Pac. 225. Section 2999 of the Civil Code has no bearing on the case. That section refers solely to a case where a debtor has obtained credit or an extension of time by a fraudulent misrepresentation of the value of property pledged. There is no evidence here that at the time defendant obtained credit, or at the time he obtained the extension of time to pay his debt, he made any fraudulent misrepresentation as to the value of his property; nor does it appear that at that time he made any pledge of property.

The other points discussed by counsel for appellant do not require special notice, for, conceding that the court erred in its rulings, as claimed, the errors were harmless. Where the record shows that the appellant is not entitled to recover in any event, error in the rulings of the court upon the admission of evidence cannot entitle him to a reversal of the judgment. McPhail v. Buell, 87 Cal. 115, 25 Pac. 266. And where evidence, admitted against objection, relates only to an issue which is rendered immaterial by the evidence and findings upon other issues, which are decisive of the case, any error in its admission is harmless, and is not ground for reversal of the judgment. Clavey v. Lord, 87 Cal. 413, 25 Pac. 493. So, the failure to find any fact, or an erroneous finding of any fact, unless the finding, if correctly made, would change the judgment, is immaterial. Dedmon v. Moffitt, 89 Cal. 211, 26 Pac. 800. It follows that the action was prematurely brought, and the judgment should be affirmed.

We concur: TEMPLE, C.; VANCLIEF, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is affirmed.

---

101 Cal. 614

MITCHELL v. FINNELL. (No. 18,226.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 14, 1894.)

SETTLEMENT BY AGENT—DURESS—LIABILITY OF PRINCIPAL—RATIFICATION.

1. Under authority to settle with a debtor, and take anything he can get, an agent has power to accept a promissory note.

2. Threats of unlawful imprisonment and criminal prosecution, made to procure a settlement, are within the scope of such agent's authority.

3. An indorsement, with full knowledge of the circumstances under which a note was procured, ratifies whatever an agent did in procuring it.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Tehama county; John F. Ellison, Judge.

Action by D. C. Mitchell against John Finnell to recover money paid on a note procured by duress. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

P. H. Coffman and J. T. Matlock, for appellant. Johnson & Chase, for respondent.

TEMPLE, C. The complaint in this action charges: That August 13, 1890, plaintiff executed to defendant his promissory note for $460, payable to defendant's order two months after date. That plaintiff received no consideration for the note, but was induced to execute it by threats of unlawful confinement and criminal prosecution, and injury to his character, which threats were made by one W. S. Knott, acting for said defendant; also, by false representations made by defendant's agent. That defendant, about September 1, 1890, transferred the note to the bank of Tehama county to secure the sum of $250, with interest. That subsequently plaintiff was compelled, by a judgment rendered against him in favor of said bank, to pay said note, with interest and costs, which, with an attorney's fee paid by him, amounted to $402.95, which sum has not been repaid. The answer consists of denials. The court found that the note was executed without consideration, and was procured by threats of criminal prosecution and of arrest, and through plaintiff's fear of the same, and through threats of unlawful confinement, and injury to the character of plaintiff. The court, however, finds that the threats were made by Knott, who, in making them, was not acting for the defendant or by his authority; that the note was executed and delivered to Knott; that defendant had no interest in it, and it was not executed by his authority or direction; that defendant did not, on or about September 1st, or at any other time, transfer the note to the bank of Tehama to secure the sum of $250, or any other sum, but that said Knott borrowed from the bank $250, and left the note there as collateral security; that at the time the note had not been indorsed by defendant, and was not indorsed by him until after it had become due; that defendant never received anything for said note, but indorsed it, at the request of the cashier of the bank, solely for the accommodation of the bank. A motion for a new trial was made by plaintiff, and, on the motion, plaintiff attacked, as not supported by the evidence, the findings that (1) the note was not taken by the authority, or under the direction, of defendant; (2) that the threats were not made by Knott while acting for defendant; and (3) that the note was not indorsed by defendant to the bank to secure the sum of $250 and interest, and that the defendant received nothing upon the note.

As to the authority of Knott to act for Finnell, Knott testified: "I understood that the note was given in payment for John Finnell's sheep,—the sheep that were supposed to have been stolen from Mr. Finnell. * * * Q. Did Mr. Finnell authorize you or tell you to take a note from Mr. Mitchell in payment for sheep, or for any purpose whatever? A. None at all. Told me to take nothing,—never told me to take note, or anything else, but told me to make some kind of a settlement with him. Mr. Finnell and I had a talk the morning before he started for Napa. I told him I was going to see Mitchell, and see what I could do with him. He said: 'All right. Go on, and do the best you can with him. * * * I don't want a cent. Whatever you make you shall have.' I told Finnell I was going to see Mitchell about the sheep that were stolen,—Finnell's sheep. I expected Mitchell to settle or pay for the sheep, because they were stolen from Finnell. * * * Q. Did he tell you to have Mitchell arrested, or to make any threats of that kind? A. No, sir; nothing was said at all by Mr. Finnell in regard to prosecuting Mitchell criminally— To do just what I thought best. I had it all in my own hands to settle it. * * * Q. Did Finnell tell you that Mitchell had stolen his sheep? A. Not of his own personal knowledge. I was a witness in the trial between Mitchell and the Bank of Tehama County. I testified in that trial as follows: 'Mr. Finnell came to me one day, and told me that Mitchell had stolen his sheep.' That is what I did,—from hearsay,—yes, sir. Then he went on, and told me who the witness was, and how he came by the testimony that led him to believe that he stole them. Finnell did not employ me at all. He directed me to go, and make whatever I could out of it. If I got nothing, I made nothing." The witness proceeded to testify that he saw Mitchell Saturday night, when Mitchell was in town attending a circus with his wife and children; that he talked with him about settling for the sheep; that he told him, or might have told him, he would be prosecuted if he did not. Did not tell him, in so many words, that Finnell would prosecute him, and send him to state's prison, if he did not, but took him to one side, and agreed to keep it quiet, and "I told him there must be something done about this matter." He also told him he had a warrant for his arrest. Tuesday, he saw Mitchell again, and told him Finnell had gone below, and had left the matter with him to settle. Mitchell then gave him the note in question. He had a warrant, which he said was handed to him by Judge Stratton, although he had never made a complaint against Mitchell, or asked Stratton to write out a complaint. He also testified that before Finnell left he told him of his first conversation with Mitchell, and before Finnell indorsed the note he had told him of the facts in regard to the taking of the note. At the time of the trial, Knott was dead. His evidence was read from a deposition taken at the instance of the defendant.

Defendant testified that he made no claim against Mitchell for the sheep. He had been told that Mitchell stole some sheep. He had lost about 500. Knott spoke to him about it; told him that Eaton said Mitchell had stolen a lot of sheep, and spoke about seeing Mitchell about it. "I told him, so far as I was concerned, I did not want anything to do in the matter. Whatever you can make out of it,—I have no interest in the matter whatever. I meant to say I had no claim, legally, against him; if he could get anything, he could have whatever he could get. * * * Knott came to me, and told me something about— He would see him or was going to see him. I told him I did not want anything to do with it. Whatever he could get out of Mitchell he could have. I had no claim against Mitchell. He could do as he pleased." He further stated that when he was asked to indorse the note the cashier told him Knott had brought it there, and had drawn $260 on it; that Knott had settled with Mitchell about some sheep which purported to have been taken from him, and again: "When I went into the bank, Mr. Cahoone presented me with the note. I was taken by surprise. I asked him how he came by the note, and he told me. When he presented me with the note, I understood; and I got all the information in regard to how the note had been obtained, and all about it. I refused to sign it. I told him, in fact, I had no interest in it; I had never authorized him to take any sum of money, only what Mitchell gave him freely and willingly in the way of settlement. If he had taken any sheep, and wanted to pay for any sheep, he could have whatever there was in it." He was then asked by his counsel what he found out, and he replied that Mitchell had given a note in payment of the sheep; that was all he knew about it.

I think this evidence establishes, without conflict, that Finnell authorized Knott to settle with Mitchell for the sheep, and take anything he could get. This, of course, includes a promissory note; and the finding that the note was taken without the authority or direction of defendant is not justified by the evidence. So far as they affect the validity of the note, Finnell must also be held responsible for the representations of Knott. They were, undoubtedly, made within the scope of the authority given to Knott to settle with Mitchell, and get what he could out of him, and that is the test. In such case the principal is bound, even though the agent disobeyed his positive directions. Chit. Cont. 866; Story, Ag. § 452; Wood, Mast. & Serv. § 284; Garretzen v. Duenckel, 50 Mo. 104. But, under the facts disclosed, the defendant would be held to have ratified whatever was done by Knott in procuring the note, from the very fact that he indorsed it, with the knowledge that it was given in settlement of a supposed claim that he had against Mitchell. It could only have been so taken by Knott acting for him, and, so far as concerned the validity of the note he was chargeable with knowledge, whether he had it or not. This would have been conceded by all, had Finnell sued upon the note. It was his indorsement that enabled the bank to collect. In the case of the bank against Mitchell it must have been held that Finnell's indorsement was a ratification of the act of Knott, as the agent of Finnell, in his attempt to transfer it. If this were so, the transfer was still the act of Finnell; and it does not matter, in this case, whether the money was paid to Finnell or to Knott, his agent. I think the evidence shows that when Finnell indorsed the note he had full knowledge of the practices through which it was procured; but I think, even without that, he took the note subject to all its infirmities. It was error, therefore, to hold that Finnell did not transfer the note as security, or that he received nothing for such transfer.

The respondent contends that Mitchell should have made his defense in the suit on the note brought by the bank. The record shows that he did, and, although in that case it was found, as in this, that the note was procured by menace and misrepresentations, it was also found that the assignment was made before the note was due, and that the bank took it for a valuable consideration, without notice. The defendant indorsed the note for the express purpose of enabling the bank to collect from Mitchell money which the bank had loaned to Knott. He cannot now complain that Mitchell paid this loan, when he might have defended a suit brought to collect it. He is responsible for the money, as much as he would be had it been paid to him.

Respondent also contends that the transaction between Finnell and Knott amounted to an assignment of Finnell's claim to Knott. I do not think it was an assignment, but, if it could be so held, it will not help Finnell. Mitchell was not informed of any assignment, and Knott settled with Mitchell; acting for Finnell, who, with the knowledge of that fact, ratified it, by indorsing the note to enable the bank to collect it. Knott could only have availed himself of such an assignment by acting as the agent of Finnell. I think the judgment and order should be reversed, and a new trial had.

We concur: SEARLS, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order are reversed, and a new trial granted.

---

101 Cal. 585

HEALY et ux. v. VISALIA & T. R. CO.
(No. 18,122.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 13, 1894.)

ACTION FOR PERSONAL INJURIES — OPINION EVIDENCE—EXPERTS—MISJOINDER OF CAUSES—REMEDY.

1. In an action for personal injuries caused by being thrown from the forward end of a hand car which left the track, a passenger on the car may testify whether it was possible for one, sitting in the position plaintiff was in, to stand the jars, and still retain her seat, and that he thought the car too narrow for the track.

2. A medical expert may state that his opinion as to the effect of an injury is based upon information derived from books.

3. Testimony that before the accident plaintiff was able to do her own housework, but since the accident she had not been able to do it, is competent to show the extent of the injury.

4. A demurrer on the ground that several causes of action have been improperly joined must specify the several causes of action.

5. In an action for personal injuries, a witness may testify as to the appearance of plaintiff immediately after the accident.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Tulare county; William W. Cross, Judge.

Action by D. L. Healy and wife against the Visalia & Tulare Railroad Company for damages for personal injuries. From a judgment for plaintiffs, and order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

N. O. Bradley and Bradley & Farnsworth, for appellant. Chas. G. Lamberson and S. J. Hinds, for respondents.

HARRISON, J. The plaintiffs are husband and wife, and on the 20th of May, 1890, took passage with the defendant, to be carried over its railroad from Visalia to the city of Tulare. At about a mile before reaching Tulare, there was a washout in the track of the defendant, and some passengers, including the plaintiffs, were transferred from the car in which they had been carried to a hand car, by which the defendant undertook to carry them to Tulare. Mrs. Healy took her seat upon the forward end of the hand car, with her feet hanging down towards the track, and, after they had gone some distance, the hand car left the track, and Mrs. Healy, falling to the ground, was run over by it, and received serious injuries, for which the present action was brought. The jury rendered a verdict in favor of the plaintiffs for $7,200, and the defendant has appealed.

1. One Ashmead was a passenger on the defendant's road upon the same trip, and was sitting on the rear of the hand car at the time it was thrown from the track. At the trial, his deposition was read in evidence by the plaintiffs, in which, after describing the accident, he was asked: "Under the circumstances, was it possible for an ordinary person, sitting in the position Mrs. Healy was sitting in, to stand the force of the jars, and still retain her seat upon the car?" To this question the defendant objected upon the ground that it was irrelevant, incompetent, and immaterial, and merely called for the opinion of the witness. The objection was overruled, and the defendant excepted. This question does not fall within the rule which excludes the opinion of a witness. The general rule is that the testimony of a witness shall be limited to the facts of which he has a personal knowledge, and that he shall not give his individual opinion thereon; but in many instances the opinion of a witness may be received in connection with his statement of the facts upon which it is based. The border line between fact and opinion is often very indistinct, and the statement of a fact is frequently only an opinion of the witness. Impressions or sensations caused by external objects are not susceptible of exact reproduction or description in words, nor do they affect every individual alike, and the judgment or opinion of the witness by whom they have been experienced is the only mode by which they can be presented to a jury. The question asked of the witness in the present case did not call for an opinion from him depending upon facts which he had subsequently learned, but he was asked to describe the effect of the concussion or jar caused by the car leaving the track, as one of the facts out of which the injury had arisen, and which he had personally observed and felt. The position of the plaintiff on the car, as well as his own position thereon, the jumping of the car from the track, the effect produced upon himself, and the sensation which he experienced thereby, were all facts which it was competent to show by his testimony, in order that the jury might get as clear an idea as possible of the circumstances under which the accident had occurred. The strength or force of this concussion was also a fact which it was proper to bring before the jury, and, as it was not capable of exact measurement by any recognized standard, it was competent for the witness to state its strength or force according to the opinion or judgment which he formed at the time that he felt it. His judgment or opinion of its effect upon an ordinary person would be the most efficient mode of enabling the jury to fully appreciate it, and to give to it its proper consideration in determining its influence in producing the injury. Such testimony is competent upon the same principle that permits evidence showing the strength or force of a blow, the distance at which a sound can be heard, or the direction from which it comes, the speed of a horse, the degree of cold or heat, or of light or darkness. In any such instance, a witness who had a personal experience or knowledge of the sensation is competent to testify, although his answer is only his opinion of the matter. The accuracy or strength of his testimony is to be tested by cross-examination. These observations apply also to the testimony of the witness that he thought that the car was too narrow for the track, and also to the testimony of another witness as to the appearance of the plaintiff immediately after the accident. Eyerman v. Sheehan, 52 Mo. 222; Kelley v. Richardson, 69 Mich. 430, 37 N. W. 514; Whart. Ev. 512; Rog. Exp. Test. § 4.

2. Dr. H. L. Pace, a witness on behalf of the plaintiffs, having testified that an injury to the skull or to the brow or forehead was likely to produce bad results in future years to the party injured, and having been asked what were likely to be the results of such injuries, replied: "Well, an injury to the brow, by cases on record, and by the profession, are considered—that is, we regard them—with a great deal of caution in diagnosis, because there are cases on record"— At this point the defendant's counsel stated: "We object as to cases on record, on the ground that it is irrelevant, incompetent, and immaterial to any of the issues in this case." The court overruled the objection, to which the defendant excepted, and the witness thereafter said: "Cases on record, just where such cases have produced, in future years, death. A blow upon the brow, if a nerve was bruised or severed, would be productive of neuralgia. As to the severing of that nerve just above the eye producing neuralgia I cannot say. An injury of the nose, such as this was, might produce catarrh. Catarrh would be one of its natural effects, and the injury would affect the lining. The injury to the mucous membrane would necessarily follow this breaking of the bones." It is now urged that this question was improper, because it was not adapted to the facts that had been shown in the case, or that it was not based upon an hypothesis consistent with those facts. No objection of this character was made at the trial. If it had been then made, the form of the question could have been varied so as to obviate the objection. It is, moreover, urged that it was erroneous to permit the witness to refer to "cases on record," as that, in effect, is permitting the introduction of medical books to the jury. A comparison of the question put to the witness with his answer will show, however, that the objection made by the defendant does not reach this point, even if it were tenable. The witness was asked as an expert what would be likely to be the result of certain injuries to the brow or forehead. This question sought to obtain from him his own opinion of those results; and the fact that he was called as an expert assumed that his opinion was based, not merely upon the empirical knowledge which he has gained through his own practice, but also that which he had acquired in the study of his profession, and from his intercourse with other members of the same profession. As an expert it was competent for him to give the grounds upon which he based his opinion, as well as the opinion itself; and the fact that his opinion was based upon information derived from his reading did not make it incompetent for him to so state. He was not asked to state, nor did he state, what the "cases on record" were, nor whether the facts of those cases corresponded with the facts of the case on trial, and the contents or statements of the medical books were not given to the jury. But in making his answer to the question of the plaintiffs he gave, as a reason for his opinion, "because" there are cases on record which have resulted in death,—an answer that was doubtless within the observation of each of the jurymen. This is entirely different from reading medical or scientific books to the jury, or seeking to influence them by opinions or theories contained in such books. The witness was only asked to give his own opinion, which he gave under the sanction of his oath, and which must be assumed to have been a conclusion reached by him after a judicious comparison of all that he had read or learned upon the subject; and upon this opinion, as well as its source, he could be subjected to the most rigid cross-examination. In the Sussex Peerage Case, 11 Clark & F. 117, it was held that an expert who was called to prove a foreign law "may state what it is from his own knowledge, or assist his own knowledge by reference to books and authorities that are within his reach; he may refer to text-books, or to books of decisions, and so render his knowledge more accurate than before." In Collier v. Simpson, 5 Car. & P. 74, it was held that medical books themselves could not be read, but that the witness, who was the presiden of the college of physicians, could state, no only his judgment, but the grounds of it, which were in some degree founded on books, as a part of his general knowledge. See, also, State v. Baldwin, 36 Kan. 17, 12 Pac. 318; Rog. Exp. Test. § 177; Whart. Ev. § 438.

3. Mrs. Healy testified at the trial that prior to the time of the accident she was able to do all of her household work, and that since the accident occurred she had not been able to do this work. The defendant objected to this testimony upon the ground that it was irrelevant, incompetent, and immaterial, and excepted to the ruling of the court in admitting it. The testimony was, however, competent for the purpose of showing the extent of the injury she had sustained, and it was also material for that purpose, and relevant to the issues in the case. There was no evidence presented of any special damage resulting from this particular effect of the injury, and indeed no evidence was introduced at the trial of the amount of damage that had been sustained; nor did the plaintiffs seek to recover damages for any loss of services. If the defendant had made a special objection to this testimony, that the plaintiffs could not recover in this action for any loss of service caused by the injury to the wife, it could have been made apparent to the jury that the plaintiffs were seeking only to show the extent and character of the physical injury which she had sustained. The decision in Tell v. Gibson, 66 Cal. 247, 5 Pac. 223, was made upon the demurrer to the complaint; but in the present case the demurrer was insufficient to present this objection, as it failed to "distinctly specify" this ground. A demurrer to a complaint upon the ground that several causes of action have been improperly united should specify the several causes of action. It is not sufficient to merely state that several causes of action have been improperly united in the complaint, without at the same time pointing out those to which the demurrer is intended to refer. Moreover, in Tell v. Gibson the loss of the wife's services to the husband was distinctly made one of the elements of damage upon which the judgment was sought, and was presented to the witnesses as the basis of their estimate of the damage which she had sustained.

Certain other exceptions were taken to the rulings of the court upon the admission of evidence, but none of these rulings are such as to merit particular notice. The court did not err in refusing the instructions to the jury asked by the defendant, and the instructions to which the defendant has taken objection in its brief were correct. The damages allowed by the jury cannot be deemed excessive, nor can their verdict upon the sufficiency of the evidence be reviewed. The judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; GAROUTTE, J.; PATERSON, J.; DE HAVEN, J.

---

4 Cal. Unrep. 535

CHADBOURNE et al. v. STOCKTON SAV. & LOAN SOC. (No. 18,173.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 14, 1894.)

EXECUTION—WHAT SUBJECT TO—INTEREST OF POSSIBLE VENDEE—BANK PRESIDENT — AUTHORITY.

1. One to whom an offer for the sale of land is made—the offer to be kept open only on certain conditions—has not, in the absence both of a compliance with such conditions and an acceptance of the offer, an interest in the land, which is subject to sale on execution.

2. In the absence of authority by charter, resolution, or by-law, it will not be presumed that the president of a bank is authorized to waive conditions of a contract for the sale of land.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county; Ansel Smith, Judge.

Action by Joshua Chadbourne and others against the Stockton Savings & Loan Society. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying motion for new trial, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Baldwin & Campbell and James H. Budd, for appellant. J. B. Webster and L. W. Elliott, for respondents.

TEMPLE, C. This is an appeal by defendant from the judgment, and an order refusing a new trial. The case has been here before, and is reported. 88 Cal. 636, 26 Pac. 529. The action is based upon an offer on the part of the defendant to sell certain land, which offer is set out in full in the report of the last appeal. On that appeal it was held that the complaint was defective, and that a demurrer interposed to it should have been sustained, because, it is said, the offer had not been accepted within a reasonable time, nor was there any excuse shown for delay. It is then said: "As there is no allegation in the complaint showing that the agreement of Hart to keep the buildings insured, and to assign to the defendant the policies of insurance, as provided by the terms of said instrument,—which was the only consideration of the offer to sell,—was ever performed or excused, we advise that the judgment and order be reversed, with directions to the court below to sustain the demurrer." The judgment was reversed, therefore, partly because it was not averred that Hart had insured the buildings. The point was certainly presented by the demurrer. It now appears in the proof that the buildings were not insured by Hart, or any one else. Respondents say the agreement to insure was not a condition precedent. If it was not, it had no binding force whatever. The writing was merely an offer to sell, and imposed no obligation upon Hart. He simply could not avail himself of the offer unless he complied with the conditions. But, whether right or wrong, since the facts in reference to this matter are precisely as they appeared to be on the last appeal, the conclusion has become the law of the case. The offer of William Hart was contemporaneous with a demise of the premises, and was attached to the lease. The lease, however, was not to William Hart, nor is it shown in any way that William Hart had any previous relation to the premises, or any interest in the leasehold estate, or control over the tenants. It does not appear, therefore, that he had an insurable interest in the buildings. He must have procured the insurance, if at all, in the name of the defendant. Furthermore, the offer was conditioned that the first year's rent should be paid by August 16, 1888. Hart was not liable for such payment, so far as appears. This rent was not paid at that time. While it was in default, an execution was sued out at the instance of a creditor of William Hart, and levied upon the land, and the interest of said Hart in the same was sold as real estate.

It is claimed and admitted that defendant, through its president, at the sale under the execution, forbade the sale, and notified those intending to bid that William Hart had no interest in the premises, because the conditions upon which the offer was made had not been complied with. Nevertheless, plaintiff's grantors bought in the premises, and plaintiffs are not the assignees of William Hart, as to his interest in the offer to sell, unless they acquired such interest through such sale. It is evident that the conditions upon which such offer was made did not transpire, and there would seem to be no doubt that the defendant was thereby relieved of its obligation to keep the offer open. Subsequently, however, to the execution sale, the rent was paid and accepted. Now, Hart had no interest in the premises, was not in possession, and had expended no money because of the option. He had not accepted the offer, and has never done so. After plaintiffs received their deed from the sheriff, six months after the sale, they tendered to defendant the money for the land, which tender was refused. In its answer, defendant denies that it made the offer to Hart, or that Hart accepted any such offer, or acquired or had any interest in the premises, or that plaintiffs have acquired the rights of Hart under said option. It admits the payment of rent, but avers that the rent was paid long after August 16, 1888. It avers that the buildings were not insured, and denies that the defendant ever waived that condition of the option. It also denies that defendant ever agreed to convey the land, notwithstanding the failure of Hart or of plaintiffs to comply with its conditions. There is evidence tending to show that, soon after plaintiffs received the sheriff's deed to the land, they called upon Shippee, the president of the defendant corporation, and proposed to complete the purchase according to the offer; that Shippee replied that, when they purchased, Hart had no interest in the land, because the rents had not been paid, but since then the rents had been paid, and Hart had an interest, and the bank would convey it to plaintiffs, if Hart's son, to whom he understood Hart had assigned his right, did not wish to purchase, and that it would be necessary to wait till the time was up, when, if no one else claimed the privilege, he would be glad to accept the plaintiffs' offer; that afterwards, when the time was about to expire, and plaintiffs made the formal tender, it was declined solely because Hart was still claiming the right, and had also made a tender, and Shippee said the courts must settle the question as to who had the better right. If it be conceded that Shippee, in making these statements, acted for the corporation, they do not prove a waiver of the conditions of the offer. It must be remembered that there was no contract of purchase. Hart was not in possession, and had no interest in the property, save such as he acquired under the offer. That was conditioned, and, so far as payments of rent are concerned, not upon any performance or default on the part of Hart. Payment of rent was an indifferent circumstance, except as made material by the terms of the offer making it a condition. There was no forfeiture of an estate in land. It was merely that the event did not happen upon which the offer was conditioned. That being so, plaintiffs acquired nothing by their execution sale. If the corporation was still willing to convey, it was not in pursuance of the offer, which by its own terms was no longer open, but because it was still ready to sell for the price named. It is not necessary to determine whether a mere offer to sell land, while it is unaccepted, constitutes an interest in the land, which will pass under an execution sale. There was here no such offer outstanding when the sale was made. But it was not shown that Shippee had any authority to bind the corporation by such waiver, conceding that such waiver could have been made. It was not shown that he had such authority, as president, through a by-law or by resolution, nor that he had been accustomed to transact such business, and that his authority to do similar acts had been recognized by the directors. The authorities are agreed that, as president, he had no such authority, unless it is so ordained in the charter, by-laws, or by resolution. It has sometimes been held, however, that, when the president assumes to act for the corporation in a matter pertaining to the usual business of the corporation, authority will be presumed, in the absence of proof. This was a transaction for the sale of land, and such corporations are prohibited from dealing in land, except within quite narrow limits. It may be true that, when they do violate the law in this respect, no one can object, or take advantage of the fact, except the state. Still, such prohibited business cannot be held to be the customary business of the bank, and authority will not be presumed in the president merely by virtue of his office. I recommend that the judgment and order be reversed, and a new trial had.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; BELCHER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order appealed from are reversed, and a new trial granted.

---

101 Cal. 645

PEOPLE v. ABBOTT. (No. 20,985.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 16, 1894.)

REVIEW ON APPEAL — REMARKS BY COURT — POSSESSION OF STOLEN PROPERTY — EFFECT — INSTRUCTIONS.

1. The court's action in remarking, in the presence of the jury, on the conduct of appellant's attorney as to the bribery of a witness, is not reviewable on appeal, in the absence of exceptions thereto.

2. It is not error to instruct that the unexplained possession of stolen property by defendant is a "guilty circumstance," and that defendant is bound to explain such possession, in order to remove its effect as a circumstance to be considered with other suspicious facts disclosed by the evidence.

3. Where there is direct evidence that accused was in possession of the stolen property soon after the theft, it is proper, though such evidence is contradicted, to charge on the effect of the possession of stolen property.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; B. N. Smith, Judge.

George Abbott was convicted of burglary, and appeals. Affirmed.

O. C. Stephens, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Hart, for the People.

GAROUTTE, J. The appellant was convicted of burglary, and appeals from the judgment and order denying his motion for a new trial. A very large number of exceptions were taken by appellant during the progress of the trial, which are barely alluded to in his brief. We have received no aid from that source, in the examination of them; and, after giving them more consideration than appellant's counsel appears to have done, measured by his brief, we find nothing justifying a reversal of the judgment.

Complaint is made of certain remarks made by the trial court, in the presence of the jury, touching the conduct of appellant's attorney in regard to the bribery of a witness. If the circumstances were such as to impress the court with a suspicion that the witness had been tampered with, the investigation of the matter should have been conducted in the absence of the jury, in order that the jurors might not have been influenced in their verdict by any developments arising from such investigation; but no exception was noted to the course pursued by the court, and for that reason we are not authorized to pass upon the merits of the controversy. People v. Shen Ah Fook, 64 Cal. 382, 1 Pac. 347.

The court gave the jury the following instructions, which, it is claimed, do not state the true rule of law: "The mere possession of stolen property, unexplained by the defendant, however soon after the taking, is not sufficient to justify a conviction. It is merely a guilty circumstance, which, taken in connection with other testimony, is to determine the question of guilt." And again: "If the jury believe from the evidence that the property mentioned in evidence was stolen from the premises described in evidence, and received into possession of the defendant shortly after being stolen, the failure of the defendant to account for such possession, or to show that such possession was honestly obtained, is a circumstance tending to show his guilt; and the accused is bound to explain the possession, in order to remove the effect of the possession as a circumstance to be considered in connection with other suspicious facts, if the evidence disclose any such." These two instructions are in effect the same. The principle embodied therein covers the same ground, and we think the law is correctly declared. People v. Etting, 99 Cal. 577, 34 Pac. 237. "A circumstance tending to show guilt" would be a more appropriate expression than the phrase "a guilty circumstance," yet their manifest meaning is the same. The one is the equivalent of the other, and this court has so declared in People v. Rodundo, 44 Cal. 541. It is further claimed that these instructions, conceding them to be sound law, were not apropos to the case disclosed by the evidence. We think the circumstances of the case justified them. There was some direct evidence to the effect that the appellant was in possession of the property stolen from the house burglarized, at about the time the burglary was committed; and the mere fact that this evidence may have been contradicted by the defendant or other witnesses would not defeat the right of the people to have an instruction bearing upon the question of the possession of stolen property given to the jury. Of course, before the jury could apply that principle of law to the defendant, they should be satisfied that he in fact had possession of the stolen property; but, when so satisfied from the evidence, the legal principle should weigh against him.

There is nothing further in the record demanding our attention. It is ordered that the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: PATERSON, J.; McFARLAND, J.; FITZGERALD, J.

101 Cal. 651

HICKS et al. v. MASTEN, Judge. (No. 15,075.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 20, 1894.)

BILL OF EXCEPTIONS — SETTLEMENT—WAIVER OF NOTICE—MANDAMUS—WHEN LIES.

1. Where appellants took steps to have the bill of exceptions settled in time; the judge, in open court, in the presence of attorneys for both parties, fixed a date for settlement; and the attorney for appellee consented thereto, and stated he would "be on hand,"—such assent and statement were a waiver of the five-days written notice required by Code Civ. Proc. § 650.

2. A writ of mandamus is the proper remedy to compel a judge to settle a bill of exceptions, in a case not requiring the exercise of judicial discretion.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1.

Petition by L. Hicks and S. Hoffman for a writ of mandamus to compel W. T. Masten, udge of the superior court of Lassen county, o settle a bill of exceptions. Writ granted.

Goodwin & Goodwin, for petitioners. Spencer & Raker, for respondent.

HAYNES, C. This is an original application to this court for a writ of mandate requiring the respondent to settle a bill of exceptions. Petitioners were defendants in an action tried before respondent and a jury in said superior court, wherein one J. F. Sharp was plaintiff. A verdict was rendered against etitioners, and a judgment was entered hereon. Petitioners served upon Sharp's atorneys a proposed bill of exceptions, and on April 5, 1892, amendments thereto were served upon petitioners' attorneys. On April 9th the original proposed bill was left with the judge, at his chambers, and on the following day the proposed amendments and certain objections, which were served by Sharp's attorneys, were also left in the judge's chambers. On the 11th, in open court, one of Sharp's attorneys being present, counsel for etitioners requested the court to fix a time for the settlement of the bill of exceptions; "and the judge, from the bench, stated that the bill of exceptions, and objections to setlement, and proposed amendments to the ill, in the case of Sharp v. Hoffman et al., ad been left with him for settlement, and were in his chambers, and that he would proceed to settle the same on the 12th day of April, 1892, at 10 o'clock a. m., at his chambers, and requested both parties to be present at that time;" and Sharp's attorney then stated he would be "on hand." No written notice of the presentation of the proposed bill and amendments was served by the moving party. An inquiry was made by counsel for petitioners, of Sharp's attorney, at the time the amendments were served, whether they could settle the same some day that week, to which the reply was made by Sharp's attorney that "he didn't see how they could." At the time fixed by the court the attorneys of both parties were present, and Sharp's attorney then presented written objections to settling the bill, upon several grounds therein stated, but which in fact covered but two points, viz.: (1) That the proposed bill of exceptions was not prepared and served in time; and (2) that the five-days notice in writing required by the Code, of the presentation to the judge for settlement, had not been given. And upon the latter ground the judge made a written ruling or order sustaining the last objection, and refused to settle the bill. The attorney for the moving party then requested the judge to shorten the time of written notice to three days, so that the settlement of the bill might be had within the ten days named in the statute. This the judge refused to do, upon the ground "that he had no power to do so, and because he had no jurisdiction." The attorney for the moving party on the same day served a written notice that he would present said proposed bill and amendments to the judge on the 18th of the same month for settlement, and then asked the judge to continue the matter until that day, which request was also denied; and on the 18th, counsel for both parties being present, and the objections renewed, the judge refused to settle the bill. And hence this application for a writ of mandate.

It is clear that petitioners, within the time required, took steps, though irregularly, to have their bill of exceptions settled. Their fault was not delay, or an utter neglect to do anything towards securing the settlement, but in not taking the proper step. The written notice provided for in section 650, Code Civ. Proc., is for the benefit of the adverse party, and may be waived by him. No one would assert that if he appeared, and, without objection, participated in the settlement of the bill, he could be permitted afterwards to say that it was not properly settled, because written notice was not given; and therefore, if he consents to a time designated by the court or judge for the settlement, he should not be permitted, when that time arrives, to say that the bill should not be settled because a written notice had not been served. When the judge announced that he would proceed to settle the bill on the 12th, at an hour and place named, and requested counsel for both parties to attend, counsel for Sharp said he would be "on hand." It is true that, in the agreed statement of facts upon which the case is submitted to this court, it is said "that the attorneys for said Sharp did not appear before the said judge pursuant to said or any notice," but appeared specially to object to said settlement. The time at which the want of notice should have been urged was when the court fixed the time for the settlement, and requested him to be present; and his failure to object then, and his assent implied in the statement that he would "be on hand," should have been held a waiver of any other or different notice. Objections of this character should be made at the earliest opportunity, or at least when the party is first required to speak in relation to it. If he intended not to waive the notice, he should have objected to the judge proceeding to fix the time, and stated the grounds of his objection, and left the moving party to his application to the judge to shorten the time of notice, or such other course as he saw proper to adopt. The court should have proceeded to the settlement of the bill at the time designated. The party or attorney who seeks to avail himself of a technicality not affecting a substantial right must himself be held to a prompt, consistent, and exact assertion of such technical right. Counsel for respondent cites Wills v. Rhen Kong, 70 Cal. 548, 11 Pac. 780, to the proposition that, "the judge having once refused to settle the statement, the matter was ended, so far as that officer was empowered to settle it." What was there said was upon facts which justified it. It was said of a statement presented long after the time for the service of a statement had passed, and after the court had refused to settle a prior statement, no complaint as to the refusal to settle the first statement appearing in the case.

It is further said that mandamus is not the proper remedy, as the remedy is by appeal; citing Stonesifer v. Armstrong, 86 Cal. 594, 25 Pac. 50, and Stonesifer v. Kilburn, 94 Cal. 33, 29 Pac. 332. In those cases the bill of exceptions was confessedly not prepared in time, and the moving party applied to the court below to be relieved upon the ground of mistake and excusable neglect; and, as that question was one requiring the exercise of judicial discretion, it is obvious that mandamus would not lie, requiring the court to relieve against the mistake or neglect, and that an appeal was the proper remedy. The circumstances requiring the one remedy rather than the other are quite clearly indicated in Careaga v. Fernald, 66 Cal. 351, 353, 5 Pac. 615. A writ of mandate should be issued, as prayed for.

We concur: VANCLIEF, C.; SEARLS, C.

PER CURIAM. This cause having been regularly heard and fully considered, it is ordered that a peremptory writ of mandate do issue against the respondent, commanding him to proceed, and settle and certify the bill of exceptions, as prayed for in the petition herein.

(101 Cal. 576)

SHAFFER v. McCLOSKEY et al. (No. 18,219.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 13, 1894.)

Payment of Mortgage—Merger—Subrogation.

1. Where, before one joint tenant deeded his interest to the other, who then paid a mortgage against the land, he had deeded it to a trustee, without the other joint tenant's knowledge, the mortgage did not merge, and will be revived.

2. The joint tenant satisfying the mortgage will be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Merced county; J. K. Law, Judge.

Action by R. Shaffer against H. H. McCloskey and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

James F. Peck, for appellants. Farrar & Ostrander, for respondent.

